7. But when evidence of other acts is admitted in corroboration of the more direct evidence of the offense charged, the court should, by instructions to the jury, limit such evidence to its proper purpose and thereby guard against the conviction of the defendant for such acts instead of the act charged. Funderburg v. State, 23 Tex. App. 392. See State v. Henderson, 84 Iowa 161.

Improper Familiarities.—Thus, after evidence tending to prove the sexual intercourse for which the defendant is on trial has been offered, or in connection with such evidence, evidence of prior improper familiarities between the same persons may be introduced as corroborative proof, to render it not improbable that the offense might have been committed.¹

Sexual Intercourse.—And it has been contended by eminent authority that if recognition is to be given to the rule that previous familiarities, not amounting to actual sexual intercourse, but tending in that direction, may be shown because they tend to corroborate other evidence of actual intercourse, proof of previous acts of sexual intercourse is competent for a like purpose,² and it has been so held.³

After the Offense Charged.—It has even been held competent to show a continuation of the relation of intimacy between the parties to the crime after the commission of the particular act for which the defendant is prosecuted.⁴ Thus it has been held that evidence of improper familiarity between the parties subsequent to the time of the offense charged may be received as corroborating proof, after evidence has been introduced tending to prove the offense charged, or in connection with such evidence.⁵

Sexual Intercourse.—Indeed, it seems that where presumptive evidence of an act of adulterous intercourse within the period alleged has been given evidence of a subsequent act may be given.⁶

Must be Connected with the Offense Charged.—But while the general rule seems to be that evidence of improper familiarity, and even of other acts of sexual intercourse, between the same parties, whether prior or subsequent to the act charged, is admissible in connection with or subsequent to the introduction of evidence tending to establish the particular act of which the defendant is accused,⁷ yet it must appear that such acts of familiarity or adultery are con-

Prior Familiarity.—So testimony that the defendant and the person with whom it was alleged that the adultery had been committed had been "walking and sitting together many times at various places" on the witness's farm, "when no other person was with them," was said to be competent. Com. v. Durfee, 100 Mass. 146.

3. In prosecutions for adultery evidence of prior acts of adultery is admissible after or in connection with evidence of the particular carnal act charged. Brevaldo v. State, 21 Fla. 789; State v. Pippin, 88 N. Car. 646; Com. v. Bell (Pa., 1895), 166 Pa. St. 405, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.), p. 214; State v. Bridgman, 49 Vt. 202, 24 Am. Rep. 124; State v. Potter, 52 Vt. 33. See also Lawson v. State, 20 Ala. 65, 56 Am. Dec. 182; State v. Markins, 95 Ind. 464, 48 Am. Rep. 733; State v. Henderson, 84 Iowa 161; People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305. But see Com. v. Thrasher, 11 Gray (Mass.) 450, and criticism of these cases in Thayer v. Thayer, 101 Mass. 111, 100 Am. Dec. 110.

In State v. Bates, 10 Conn. 372, where, under an information for adultery, charging but one offense and that in a single count, the public prosecutor, having given evidence of one act of adultery, was held to be confined to that act, it is clear that the evidence of other acts of adultery was not understood as being offered merely to corroborate the evidence adduced to prove the act charged. Thus the court said that the effect of admitting such evidence would be to permit the prosecuting attorney to prove "any number of offenses, and then elect upon which to claim a conviction."

Evidence tending to show illicit intercourse by the defendant with the same person charged in the indictment, both before and after the day laid, is competent to prove the relation and mutual disposition of the parties. State v. Williams, 76 Me. 480.

Acts of adultery between the defendant and the same woman, near the time of the adultery for which he was indicted (it not appearing whether before or after), though committed in another place, were held competent to be proved. Com. v. Nichols, 114 Mass. 285, 19 Am. Rep. 346.

nected with the act charged; mere isolated acts of familiarity or adultery which occurred long before or after the act charged may not be given in evidence.¹

When One Witness Sufficient.—If there is no statutory provision to the contrary, the evidence of one credible witness may be sufficient to authorize a conviction for adultery.²

c. THE TIME AND PLACE.—It seems that, although a day is alleged in the indictment, it is not so far material that it will be variance if the proof does not show that the crime was committed on the very day alleged.³ It has been held that if the proof shows that the act was committed on any day within the period fixed by the statute of limitations, it is sufficient.⁴ The adulterous act charged must be shown to have been committed within the county of the indictment.⁵

d. NAME OF PARTICES CRIMINIS.—It seems that in a prosecution for adultery the name of the person with whom the act is alleged to have been committed need not always be proved.⁶ But if the indictment states the crime to have been committed with one person, evidence will not be admitted to show that it was committed with another.⁷

e. DEFENDANT'S SEX.—The sex of the defendant, he being personally present in court, may be inferred from his dress and general appearance, in connection with all the evidence in the case.⁸

Super. Ct.) 307, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) p. 214. Such evidence is only admissible when proposed in connection with, or subsequent to, the introduction of evidence tending to establish the fact of the act charged. And it is not alone sufficient to justify conviction. Breveldo v. State, 21 Fla. 789.

1. State v. Crowley, 13 Ala. 172.

In Michigan, when adultery is charged, the previous acquaintance, conduct, and familiarity are, it seems, considered to be material subjects of inquiry, and pertinent to the issue, if not too remote. See People v. Girdler, 65 Mich. 68. But it is held that to allow guilt to be established by the aid of proof of acts committed earlier, it ought to be made to appear that they were not isolated acts separated by a considerable interval of apparently proper conduct from the act relied upon for conviction. People v. Davis, 52 Mich. 569. Acts of familiarity and intimacy, occurring two years before the criminal act charged, have been held too remote. People v. Hendrickson, 53 Mich. 525.

3. Com. v. Cobb, 14 Gray (Mass.) 57; State v. Brecht, 41 Minn. 50.

Adulterous Cohabitation.—In Bailey v. State, 36 Neb. 808, it is held that where a defendant is charged with adulterous cohabitation while living with his wife, proof of such adulterous cohabitation, during any portion of the period laid in the information, is sufficient to sustain the charge.

4. State v. Williams, 76 Me. 480; Com. v. Cobb, 14 Gray (Mass.) 57. See State v. Briggs, 68 Iowa 416.

5. Com. v. Horton, 2 Gray (Mass.) 354; Com. v. Call, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 509, 32 Am. Dec. 284.

But this rule does not preclude proof of other acts in a different county or state, as corroborative evidence to show the nature of the relation between the parties. State v.

Briggs, 68 Iowa 416; Com. v. Nichols, 114 Mass. 285, 19 Am. Rep. 346; Funderburg v. State, 23 Tex. App. 392. See supra, this title, CORROBORATIVE EVIDENCE.

6. Com. v. Tompson, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 551. See 1 ENCYC. PL. AND PR. 306. But in the case of a prosecution of a man for adultery, and where the crime, as is the case in some states, can only be committed with a married woman, it may become necessary to state the name of the woman with a view to showing that she was married.

7. In State v. Vittum, 9 N. H. 519, where the indictment alleged that the defendant committed adultery with one L. W., without any further designation, and it appeared that there were in the same town two individuals of that name, father and son, and that the latter used the addition "junior" to his name, and was thereby well known and distinguished from his father, it was held that evidence of adultery with L. W., junior, was not admissible under the indictment.

So where the indictment alleged that the adultery was committed with "Adaline Winders" and the proofs showed that it was committed with "Mary Adaline Winders" the variance was held fatal. State v. Dudley, 7 Wis. 664.

Same Person Known by Different Names.—An instruction that if the person with whom the adultery was alleged to have been committed was as well known by the name of Vesta Brown as by that of Vesta A. Brown, the jury would be warranted in finding that the offense, if committed, was committed with Vesta Brown, was held correct. State v. Libby, 44 Me. 469, 69 Am. Dec. 115. Likewise, on an indictment for adultery committed with Margaretha Schlichthaber, proof of adultery with Anna Margaretha Schlichthaber was held not to be a material variance, the woman being equally well known by both names. State v. Brecht, 41 Minn. 50.

f. THE MAN'S VIRILITY.—It is a matter of legal presumption that a mature male of the human species has normal powers of virility unless the contrary appears.¹

3. Of the Marriage.—Since the marriage of at least one of the parties to a person other than the participant in the carnal act is an essential element of the crime of adultery,² it is necessary that such marriage be proved.³

What Proof Necessary.—It has been said that there must be strict proof of the fact of marriage.⁴

Actual Marriage.—And it has been held that to sustain a charge of adultery there must be proof of actual marriage; reputation and cohabitation are not sufficient.⁵

How Proved.—The marriage may be proved⁶ by the testimony of a person who was present at the marriage ceremony,⁷ as by the testimony of the defendant's husband or wife,⁸ or it may be proved by the confessions of the defendant.⁹ And the marriage record and certificate is held competent evidence of the marriage when accompanied by proof of the identity of the parties.¹⁰

Marriage to Woman under Age of Legal Consent.—Proof of the defendant's marriage to a girl within the age of legal consent is not sufficient without showing that she continued to cohabit with him after arriving at that age. People v. Bennett, 39 Mich. 208.

Name of Person to Whom Married.—It has been held that the state need not allege or prove the name of the person to whom one of the adulterers is married, Hildreth v. State, 19 Tex. App. 196; and if the name is alleged, the allegation is not a descriptive one, but is surplusage, and need not be proved, Collum v. State, 10 Tex. App. 708.

In a prosecution for adultery, where the defendant's alleged prior marriage to the complaining witness was denied, it was held that parol evidence of the contents of a letter read to such witness by another was not competent to prove the death of her former husband prior to the alleged marriage with the defendant. *State v. A marriage certificate made in another state has been held not competent evidence of the marriage in a criminal trial where the accused is entitled to confront witnesses. Com. v. Morris, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 391; People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 349, 72 Am. Dec. 49.

In Maine a copy of the record is admissible, but it is not sufficient to prove the marriage. Proof of identity of person, not of name merely, must be produced, Wedgwood's Case, 8 Me. 75; but if the marriage was in another state or county, proof of the defendant's confession that he was married is sufficient proof of the fact, Cayford's Case, 7 Me. 57.

Where the defendant, twenty years before the alleged adultery, on hiring a house, said he had a wife and child, and moved into the house with a woman whom he called "Miss Ham," with whom he lived as his wife for several years and then deserted her, it was held that there was not sufficient proof of the

4. Sufficiency of Proof.—Where the evidence submitted by the state is consistent with the defendant's innocence, it will not sustain a verdict of guilty.¹

Question for the Jury.—The sufficiency of the evidence is exclusively a question for the jury.²

5. Evidence Admissible against One Only of Two Joint Defendants.—Evidence which is admissible against one of two defendants jointly indicted and tried cannot be excluded from the jury on motion. The remedy of the other is to request proper instructions limiting its effect, so as to confine its influence to his codefendant, against whom alone it is admissible.³

VI. PUNISHMENT—In General.—In some states the offense is punishable as a felony,⁴ in others as a misdemeanor.⁵

When Committed between Whites and Blacks.—A statute prescribing a heavier punishment for adultery or fornication between whites and blacks than between persons of one race is not unconstitutional.⁶

AD VALOREM.—See note 7.

ADVANCE—ADVANCES.—The verb "advance," as applied to commerce, means to supply beforehand, to furnish on credit, or before goods are delivered or work done; or to furnish as a part of stock or fund, as to advance money on loan or contract, or towards a purchase or establishment.⁸ "Advances" ordinarily indicate money paid before or in "advance" of the proper time of payment.⁹

marriage. Ham's Case, 11 Me. 391. Compare State v. Wallace, 9 N. H. 515.

1. Weaver v. State, 74 Ga. 376.

For cases where the evidence was held insufficient see State v. Waller, 80 N. Car. 401; State v. Pope, 109 N. Car. 849; Breveldo v. State, 21 Fla. 789.

In State v. Chancy, 110 N. Car. 507, on an indictment for adultery against a negress and a white man, the evidence showed that the former, since her separation from her husband, had given birth to two children, of whom the white man was very fond. On several occasions he was seen taking care of them and playing with them, and was heard teaching them to sing. He had his picture taken with them, and was seen riding several times with the negress. He ate with her at the same table, employed servants to cook for them both, and had their clothes washed together. These circumstances were held sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty.

2. Hence, where the court overruled a motion to exclude all the testimony tending to establish the carnal act, on the ground that it was "weak and inconclusive," there was held to be no error. Alsabrooks v. State, 52 Ala. 24.

4. See State v. Avery, 7 Conn. 266, 18 Am. Dec. 105.

5. See State v. Cooper, 16 Vt. 551.

In a prosecution under a statute against the offense of fornication and adultery which declared that it should be a misdemeanor, but did not prescribe any particular punishment, the defendants were each sentenced to be imprisoned in the common jail of the county for the period of four months. There was a statute providing that in the case of misdemeanor, or where no special punishment was prescribed, the offense should be punishable as misdemeanor at common law. Hence it was held that punishment by imprisonment in the common jail for a period in the discretion of the court was allowable. State v. Manly, 95 N. Car. 661.

Excessive Punishment.—Where the defendant was guilty of long-continued adulterous intercourse with the twin sister of his wife, sixteen years of age, and the statutes limited the punishment for the crime of adultery to imprisonment for three years, it was held that a sentence of the extreme penalty—three years' imprisonment—was not excessive. State v. Hazen, 39 Iowa 648. See the title CRIMINAL LAW.

7. Ad Valorem Tax.—The term ad valorem tax is as well defined and fixed as any other used in political economy or legislation, and simply means a tax or duty upon the value of the article or thing subject to taxation. Bailey v. Fuqua, 24 Miss. 501. See also the title TAXATION.

8. Webster's Dict., quoted in Hartje v. Collins, 46 Pa. St. 273; Bates v. State Bank, 2 Ala. 479.

To advance is to "supply beforehand;" "to loan before the work is done or the goods made." Lafin, etc.; Powder Co. v. Burkhardt, 97 U. S. 117.

The word advance implies an act which by anticipation puts money or money's worth into the hands of a party who would otherwise not receive it. Cooper v. Cooper, L. R. 8 Ch. 824.

9. Vail v. Vail, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 69.

An advance of money on contract, strictly speaking, is payment made before an equivalent is received. Gibbons v. U. S., Dev. Ct. of Cl. 51.

Distinguished from Advancements.—See also the title ADVANCEMENTS.

The word advances when taken in its strict legal sense does not mean gifts—advancements—and does mean a sort of loan; and when taken in its ordinary and usual sense includes both loans and gifts—loans more readily, perhaps, than gifts. Nolan v. Bolton, 25 Ga. 355.

"Advancement" and "advancements" are the terms used in the law dictionaries, and in the New York statutes, to designate money or property given by a father to his children, as a portion of his estate, and to be taken into account in the final partition or distribution thereof. Advances is not the appropriate term for money or property thus furnished. The latter phrase, in legal parlance, has a different and far broader signification. It may characterize a loan or a gift, or money advanced, to be repaid conditionally. "Lent and advanced" was the language of the old common count, in assumpsit, for money loaned or advanced, to be repaid. Chase v. Ewing, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 612.

It was rightly ruled that the word advances, as used in one clause of the will, was not restricted to advancements. Barker v. Comins, 110 Mass. 488.

But for the use of advances in the technical sense of "advancement" in a will, see Wheeler's Appeals, 70 Pa. St. 429. See also Wright's Appeal, 89 Pa. St. 67, and 93 Pa. St. 87.

Expenses for the Support of Minor Children.—In Vail v. Vail, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 69, a testator directed that his executors should appropriate from the income of his estate sufficient sums to support and educate his minor children, and that they should pay certain specific legacies to his adult children and to his minor children upon their coming of age or marriage, and provided that the rest of his estate should be set aside for the use and benefit of his children, in such proportions as to equalize with interest the previous advances. It was held in the settlement of the estate that the children were not to be charged with the sums applied for their support and maintenance, those sums not being included in previous advances. The court said: "The term advances does not, even in ordinary cases, include money thus expended. Its etymological and its ordinary use indicate moneys paid before, or in advance of, the proper time of payment. Thus it is used as to moneys paid before the completion of work under a contract, and as to property given to a child at his full age or marriage, and which is received in anticipation of the share which he will have in his parent's estate at the parent's decease."

Whether the Word Imports a Loan.—In Morrow v. Turney, 35 Ala. 137, the question was whether a transaction was a mortgage or a conditional sale. The court said: "The parties certainly meant, by an advance of money, a loan. It was either a loan or a payment. The import of the word advance is such as rather to indicate that there was a loan than a payment of purchase money."

Loan and Advance.—In Wright's Appeal, 93 Pa. St. 87, "loan" and advance were held to have been used interchangeably. See also Nolan v. Bolton, 25 Ga. 352; Wright's Appeal, 89 Pa. St. 67; Oxford Bank v. Bobbitt, 108 N. Car. 538; Rogers v. Oxford Bank, 108 N. Car. 580; Chase v. Ewing, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 612.

Same—Advance to an Agent.—In North-Western Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mooney, 108 N. Y. 125, the court construed an agreement that a principal was to advance money to an agent to be used in advancing the interest of the principal, saying: "Thus the principal is to advance, i. e., put forward to the agent, money, and in its turn the money is to be used in advancing, that is, 'putting forward,' the interests of the company. The first advance is not more a loan to the agent than the last advance is a loan by the agent to the company. He is responsible to them for its use, and may be called on to account for, or show that it has been used for the purpose for which he received it. And for his failure to account the sureties would be bound, by the express terms of the bond. They undertake that he shall 'discharge his duties as agent,' and they undertake that he 'shall pay over all moneys belonging to the company.' Money loaned ceases to be the money of the lender and becomes the property of the borrower. If the money in question was loaned, it was not in his hands as money belonging to the company."

Marine Insurance.—As to the admission of expert evidence upon the meaning of the term advances, and as to whether it includes "outfits" in a policy of marine insurance, see Burnham v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 139 Mass. 399. And see the title MARINE INSURANCE.

Rent.—Within the meaning of a Nevada statute providing for the payment of claims against the state for services and advances, it was held that the word advances included the rent of premises occupied by the state. Ormsby County v. State, 6 Nev. 287.

Whether They must be of a Pecuniary Nature.—An equity decree declared that H. had made advances for the improvement of the estate described in the bill, and that such estate was chargeable for the sums so advanced. It was held that this language imported only a pecuniary advance, and could not be construed, in the absence of anything in the context favoring such a construction, to import also an advance in the shape of personal services. Hodges v. Hodges, 9 R. I. 32. Compare M'Keene v. Joynson, 5 C. B. N. S. 230, 94 E. C. L. 230, where it is said by Byles, J.: "I think the word advance in this document does not necessarily or even prima facie mean an advance in money only. The expression used is not 'pay,' or 'lend,' or 'lend to me through Reuben Hill,' nor even 'advance in cash,' but it is simply 'who shall advance to Reuben Hill on this agreement the sum of six pounds.' Prima facie, that seems to me to import such an advance as shall, as between the sailor and the man who deals with him, be an advance of six pounds; and therefore I think any advance to that amount, whether in money or in money's worth, is an advance within this contract."

Lien upon Crops for Advances. (See also the title CROPS.)—A landlord lent corn to his tenant to be used in making the crop, the corn to be returned or paid for upon the close of the year. At the expiration of the year the tenant asked to be allowed to pay for the corn at the end of the ensuing year, and the landlord consented. This was held not to constitute advance for the second year within the lien law. The court said: "To constitute advance the landlord must furnish, or cause to be furnished, something not before the tenant's, and mere forbearance to demand something due him from the tenant in one year does not give him a lien on the agricultural products of the leased premises for the next year, as against one who has a deed of trust embracing them, whatever may be his right as against the tenant." Lumblay v. Gilruth, 65 Miss. 26.

Same.—A mule was held not to be an advance. McCullough v. Kibler, 5 S. Car. 468. Here the court said: "In no wise can a mule be considered an advance to be expended upon the soil which produces the crop. The labor of a mule might very properly be considered a necessary supply for the production of a crop, but a mule, instead of being worn out and rendered useless in producing a crop, may be in much better condition and more valuable after the crop is made than before."

Factors. (See also the title COMMISSION MERCHANTS OR FACTORS.)—In Balderston v. National Rubber Co. (R. I., 1893), 27 Atl. Rep. 510, it is said: "What are advances? They are moneys paid by the factor to his principal, on the credit of the goods consigned, and in anticipation of the debt which will become due to the principal upon the sale of such goods. The ordinary use of the term indicates moneys paid before or in advance of the proper time of payment. To advance is to supply beforehand, 'to loan before the work is done or the goods are made.' Lafin, etc., Powder Co. v. Burkhardt, 97 U. S. 110."

In Hoy v. Reade, 1 Sweeny (N. Y.) 626, the court, in speaking of an advance, said: "It is in fact a prepayment on account of a debt anticipated by both parties to arise to that or a greater amount from the consignor [consignee?] to the consignee [consignor?] out of the performance by the consignee of a contract existing between them. It necessarily results that, before the consignee can call on the consignor to pay back any portion of this prepayment, he must show the performance of this contract, and that his indebtedness arising thereout did not, as was anticipated, amount to the prepayment."

In Gihon v. Stanton, 9 N. Y. 476, it is said: "An advance is something which precedes; and, of course, there is something to follow. As applied to the payment of money, the term implies that the parties look forward to a time when the money will be due to the recipient. A debtor who voluntarily pays his debt before it is due is said to advance it. Can he recover it back? An advance by a factor is a transaction somewhat similar. It is a prepayment—a mere anticipation of the avails of the goods consigned; and no more creates a debt in the first instance than an advancement of a father to his son, in anticipation of his expected inheritance, creates a debt. It is true that if the property proves insufficient to reimburse the factor for his advances, the law, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, implies an undertaking to make up the deficiency."

Under the Louisiana Code the term advances has been construed to include acceptances not paid. Turpin v. Reynolds, 14 La. 477.

Disbursements from Party's Own Funds.—In Lee v. Byrne, 75 Ala. 132, plaintiff and defendants entered into a written contract, whereby the former agreed to deliver to the latter logs at a stated price per thousand feet, and the latter agreed to pay, at the end of each month, for the logs delivered during that month, "after deducting for all advances" and commissions thereon at a specified rate. It was held that defendants were not entitled to commissions on disbursements made by them from plaintiff's money, or when they were indebted to him for logs delivered under the contract; nor on an old indebtedness owing by the plaintiff, and incurred prior to the execution of the contract.

I DEFINITION.—An advancement is a transfer of property from a person standing in loco parentis toward another, to that other, in anticipation of the share of the donor's estate which the donee would receive in the event of the donor's dying intestate.¹

1. Advancement Defined.—The term is defined in Cawthon v. Coppedge, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 487, to be "a gift by a parent to his child, by anticipation, in whole or part, of what it is supposed the child would be entitled to on the death of the parent."

On the question of the meaning of the term "advancement," the court, in Rickenbacker v.

Distinguished from Gift, Debt, and Ademption.—An advancement differs from a gift inasmuch as it is charged against the child; and from a debt, in that there is no enforceable liability on the part of the child to repay during the lifetime of the donor, or after his death, except in the way of suffering a deduction from his portion in the estate.¹ Unlike an ademption, it has to do with intestate estates only.²

II. ORIGIN.—The doctrine of advancements rests upon the English statute of distributions, which is generally recognized in this country as a part of the common law.³ Its provisions are similar to certain particular customs

Zimmerman, 10 S. Car. 110, 30 Am. Rep. 37, said: "In 1 Bouvier Law Dict. 76 the term 'advancement' is defined to be 'that which is given by a father to his child or presumptive heir by anticipation of what he might inherit.' In M'Caw v. Blewit, 2 McCord Eq. (S. Car.) 91, the leading case on the subject of advancements in this state, no definition of the term is given in the decision of the Court of Appeals, but in the circuit decree it is defined to be 'such a part of a man's estate as he gives to a child on marriage, or on setting out in life, which may be necessary for its settling in the world.' In the argument of this case the counsel for the appellant, who afterwards became one of the most eminent chancellors of this state, questions the correctness of this definition, and says: 'If a definition may be ventured, an advancement is the gift of a parent to a child beyond what by law he is bound to provide, from which a substantial benefit is to be derived by the child.' But, after long experience on the bench, this distinguished judge seems to have reached the conclusion that it was not an easy matter to frame an accurate definition of the term. Murrell v. Murrell, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 151, 49 Am. Dec. 664. While, however, it is a difficult matter to frame such a definition as will cover every possible case, there are certain essential elements which every advancement must possess; one of which is that it must once have been a part of the ancestor's estate, which, upon his death, would descend to his heirs but for the fact that it has, by the act of the ancestor in making the gift, been separated from or taken out of his estate, or it must be something which is purchased with the funds of the father in the name and for the benefit of the child." See also Nolan v. Bolton, 25 Ga. 352.

In Clark v. Willson, 27 Md. 693, the court, by Weisel, J., said: "An advancement is a giving by anticipation the whole or a part of what it is supposed a child will be entitled to on the death of the parent making it and dying intestate."

Advancement is "a pure and irrevocable gift by a parent, in his lifetime, to his child, on account of such child's share of the estate after the parent's decease." Brightly's Eq., § 389, quoted approvingly in Miller's Appeal, 31 Pa. St. 337.

In Yundt's Appeal, 13 Pa. St. 575, 53 Am. Dec. 496, the term is defined as an irrevocable gift by a parent to a child in anticipation of such child's future share of the parent's estate. See also Greene v. Brown (Ind., 1894), 38 N. E. Rep. 519, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.), p. 216.

In Dillman v. Cox, 23 Ind. 440, it was said by the court, speaking by Frazer, J.: "The true notion of an advancement is a giving by anticipation of the whole or a part of what it is supposed a child will be entitled to on the death of the parent or party making the advancement."

Other Definitions are given in Weatherhead v. Field, 26 Vt. 665; Cazassa v. Cazassa, 92 Tenn. 573; Yancy v. Yancy, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 357, 13 Am. Rep. 5; Morris v. Morris, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 814; Osgood v. Breed, 17 Mass. 356; Holliday v. White, 33 Tex. 460; Wallace v. Reddick, 119 Ill. 156; Darne v. Lloyd, 82 Va. 859, 3 Am. St. Rep. 123.

How the Doctrine is Applied.—"The donee * * * in order to share in the remainder of the estate, is required to bring what he has received into hotchpot. He is not necessarily required to return the property or thing received, but must submit to having its value charged against him." Olds, J., in Herkimer v. McGregor, 126 Ind. 254. See also Stone v. Halley, 1 Dana (Ky.) 197; Grattan v. Grattan, 18 Ill. 167, 65 Am. Dec. 726.

The one advanced cannot be required to bring his advancement into hotchpot. Marston v. Lord, 65 N. H. 4; Phillips v. McLaughlin, 26 Miss. 592; Hawley v. James, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 318; Hamer v. Hamer, 4 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 124. But his refusal is a bar to all claims. Taylor v. Reese, 4 Ala. 121.

"An Advancement is neither a Loan or Debt to be repaid, nor an absolute gift. It is a bestowment of property by a parent on a child, on condition that if the donee claims to share in the intestate estate of the donor, he shall bring in this property for the purposes of equal distribution." In re Hall, 14 Ont. 557.

If the Donee So Wishes He may Elect to claim no interest under the distribution, in which case he cannot be compelled to bring the property into hotchpot. Phillips v. McLaughlin, 26 Miss. 592.

Distinguished from Advances.—The term "advancement" is to be distinguished from "advances." The latter strictly signifies a kind of loan. Nolan v. Bolton, 25 Ga. 352. See ADVANCE—ADVANCES.

It is Also Used Loosely to include debts, gifts, and advancements, when the meaning is to be determined largely from the context. Chase v. Ewing, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 612; Barker v. Comins, 110 Mass. 477; Whelen's Appeal, 70 Pa. St. 410.

3. Doctrine Rests upon English Statute of Distributions.—Thornton on Gifts and Advance- of England¹ and the rules of the Roman law.²

The Basis of the Doctrine of advancements is the equality with which it is presumed a parent desires all his children to share in his estate.³

III. REQUISITES—1. Must be a Completed Transfer.—An advancement must be a completed transfer of property, and as such must be perfected during the donor's lifetime.⁴

If Such is Not the Case the transaction is ineffectual as an advancement, and a court of equity can grant no relief.⁵

ments, § 523. The provisions on the subject of advancement are contained in section 5, and are as follows: That "all the residue" shall be divided "by equal portions, to and amongst the children of such persons dying intestate as legally represent such children. In case any of the said children be then dead, other than such child or children (not being heirs at law) who shall have any estate by the settlement of the intestate, or shall be advanced by the intestate in his lifetime, by portion or portions equal to the share which shall by such distribution be allotted to the other children to whom such distribution is to be made; and in case any child, other than the heir at law, shall have any estate by a settlement from the said intestate, or shall be advanced by the said intestate in his lifetime by portion not equal to the share which will be due to the other children by such distribution aforesaid, then so much of the surplusage of the estate of such intestate to be distributed to such child or children as shall have any land by settlement from the intestate, or were advanced in the lifetime of the intestate, as shall make the estate of all the said children to be equal as near as can be estimated; but the heir at law is to have an equal part in the distribution with the rest of the children, without any consideration of the value of the land which he hath by descent or otherwise from the intestate." 22 and 23 Car. II., c. 10.

1. Provisions of Statute Similar to Certain Particular Customs.—The custom of London and the province of York; also of Scotland, 2 Blackstone's Commentaries, p. 517; Twisden v. Twisden, 9 Ves. Jr. 413; Elliot v. Collier, 3 Atk. 526, 1 Ves. 15; Blundell v. Barker, cited in 1 Atk. 403; Pusey v. Desbouvrie, 3 P. Wms. 315; Cevill v. Rich, 1 Vern. 181; Tomkyns v. Ladbroke, 2 Ves. 591; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 8 Ala. 414; Terry v. Dayton, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 522. As to the present effect of the custom of London see Kintz v. Friday, 4 Dem. (N. Y.) 540.

2. Roman Law.—The doctrine of advancements is by some believed to be derived from the collatio honorum of the imperial law (Dig. 376), hence the equalizing of advancements is sometimes called their collation, especially in Louisiana, where this branch of the law forms the subject of minute regulation. See Louisiana Rev. Civil Code of 1875, arts. 1227, 1228; Destrehan v. Destrehan, 4 Martin N. S. (La.) 557; Sohm's Institutes of the Roman Law (Leslie's Translation), p. 439.

3. Equality of Distribution the Basis.—Boyd v. Boyd, L. R. 4 Eq. 305; Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. Wms. 413; Greene v. Speer, 37 Ala. 532; Condell v. Glover, 56 Ill. App. 107; Herkimer v. McGregor, 126 Ind. 254; Shawhan v. Shawhan, 10 Bush (Ky.) 600; Parks v. Parks, 19 Md. 323; Clark v. Willson, 27 Md. 700.

Where a testator directed that amounts advanced to his children should be equalized from his estate, it was held that this should be done from the principal and not from the profits accrued since his death. White v. White, 3 Dana (Ky.) 374.

"Equality is Equity amongst Heirs, and the doctrine of advancement has for its object the furtherance of this end." Thompson, J., in Miller's Appeal, 31 Pa. St. 337.

Hence the Presumption of the Law is in favor of advancements as against gifts or loans. Patterson's Appeal, 128 Pa. St. 280.

4. Transfer must be Completed in Donor's Lifetime.—Herkimer v. McGregor, 126 Ind. 247; Crosby v. Covington, 24 Miss. 619; Yancy v. Yancy, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 353, 13 Am. Rep. 5.

In Ison v. Ison, 5 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 15, the court, by Johnson, J., said: "An advancement always embraces the idea that the parent has parted from his title in the subject advanced."

Where, by the direction of the owner of land, the owner's daughter and her husband entered into possession, it being the intention of the father that they should reside thereon during his life, make repairs, pay the taxes, and receive the proceeds, and that at his death the daughter should take a life estate with remainder to her children, it was held that there had been no advancement, the court, by Niblack, J., saying: "To constitute an advancement the ancestor must, in his lifetime, divest himself of all interest in the property set apart to the heir." Joyce v. Hamilton, 111 Ind. 166.

Delivery of Personal Property Necessary.—In case of personal property there must be an actual delivery and change of possession. Meadows v. Meadows, 11 Ired. (N. Car.) 148.

Promise to Release Debt.—A promise to release a debt is not a good advancement. Denman v. McMahon, 37 Ind. 241.

Notes.—It has been held, however, that a note from father to son is. Shotwell v. Struble, 21 N. J. Eq. 31.

Parol Gift of Land.—An estate passed as an advancement and was held not to be revocable, where a father by parol gave his daughter, in contemplation of her marriage, and with the knowledge of her intended husband, a house and tract of land, and the daughter after marriage entered into possession, which possession she retained until her death. Dugan v. Gittings, 3 Gill (Md.) 138, 43 Am. Dec. 306.

Equitable Title at Least must Pass.—Where a man purchased land with money of his mother-in-law, as a home for her and himself, taking title in his own name without her knowledge, it was held to be a case of agency, not of advancement. Girault v. A. P. Hotaling Co., 7 Wash. 90.

5. Williams v. Mears, 2 Disney (Ohio) 604.

Donor Himself must Act.—The transfer must be perfected by the donor himself.¹

Property at the Risk of Donee.—After it has taken place, the property is at the risk of the donee.²

The Right of the Donor is Gone, and no act of his, without the concurrence of the donee, can affect it.³

Legal Title or Immediate Possession of Donee Unnecessary.—It is not necessary, however, that the donee have the legal title or the immediate possession, so long as his estate is fully created.⁴

Testamentary Provision.—A testamentary provision cannot constitute an advancement.⁵

2. The Donor must Die Intestate—In General—Wills.—If the donor disposes of his whole estate by will, the doctrine of advancements has no application,⁶ unless the will specifically refers to advancements and defines what previous gifts shall be so considered.⁷ Even if the will expressly states that the property is to be distributed according to law as in cases of intestacy, it is still a will, and the doctrine of advancements does not apply.⁸ The courts are very liberal in that connection in regarding informal instruments as wills.⁹

Partial Intestacy.—In order that the child may be compelled to account for advancements, the ancestor must, according to the common-law doctrine, have died wholly intestate.¹⁰ That rule is generally recognized in this country, both in states which have tacitly adopted the common law, and in those which use the word "intestate" in the statute, which term is construed to mean wholly intestate.¹¹ If the principle of advancements in case of partial

1. The Donor's Wife and Sons Have No Authority to make a transfer after he has become insane, although he had the intention of making it prior thereto. Bailey v. Bailey, 6 Conn. 308.

2. When Completed, the Property at Risk of Donee.—In re Young's Estate, 3 Md. Ch. 461; West v. Jones, 85 Va. 616.

He must account for it in the distribution, even though its value is gone through no fault of his, as in case of the emancipation of a slave. Fennell v. Henry, 70 Ala. 484, 45 Am. Rep. 88.

3. Thereafter Not Affected by Any Act of Donor.—Phillips v. McLaughlin, 26 Miss. 592; Haverstock v. Sarbach, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 390; Black v. Whitall, 9 N. J. Eq. 572, 59 Am. Dec. 423. This last case holds that the property advanced is no part of the estate of the decedent.

4. Donee need Not Have Legal Title or Immediate Possession.—Clark v. Willson, 27 Md. 697. In this case it was held that a deed of trust duly executed for the benefit of the donee, after the donor's death, is a sufficient conveyance.

Title Bond.—In Thompson v. Thompson, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 97, it is held that if a father obtain a title bond in favor of himself and his son there is an advancement of the half interest, even if the deed is made to the father alone.

A Binding Covenant to Settle Lands upon the child attaining a certain age, or upon marriage, will be treated as an advancement. Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. Wms. 435, 2 Eng. Rul. Cas. 252.

So would a Gift of a Slave, a life use in the grantor being reserved. Wilks v. Greer, 14 Ala. 437.

And so will an Oral Gift of Land accompanied by a transfer of possession. Ford v. Ellingwood, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 359.

5. Testamentary Provision Not Advancement. Twisden v. Twisden, 9 Ves. Jr. 425; Nettleton v. Nettleton, 17 Conn. 542; Snelgrove v. Snel- grove, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 274; Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. Wms. 439; Reed v. Crocker, 12 La. Ann. 436.

7. Coleman v. Smith, 55 Ala. 368. See also infra, this title, How Advancements may be Determined.

8. De Caumont v. Bogert, 36 Hun (N. Y.) 382.

It has been held that where the will says that the property is to be "disposed of as the law directs," this is a sufficient disposition to prevent intestacy, and advancements need not be brought into hotchpot. Brown v. Brown, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 309.

9. Hayden v. Burch, 9 Gill (Md.) 79.

10. Ancestor must Die Wholly Intestate.—Twisden v. Twisden, 9 Ves. Jr. 426; Walton v. Walton, 14 Ves. Jr. 324; Cowper v. Scott, 3 P. Wms. 124; Vachell v. Jeffereys, Pre. Ch. 170.

11. Alabama.—Cawfield v. Brown, 45 Ala. 552; Coleman v. Smith, 55 Ala. 368; Greene v. Speer, 37 Ala. 532. In this last case the reasons for the rule are clearly stated by the court, speaking through Stone, J.: "The doctrine of hotchpot rests for its justification, on the presumed desire of decedents to equalize the portions of all distributees standing in the same relation to them. In cases of intestacy it operates with justice and equality, for it bears alike on all who have been advanced. This would rarely be the case where there is a will. In a majority of cases, parents during their lifetime have made gifts by way of advancement to their older children, and when they come to make a will they usually attempt to make up to the children not advanced, what they, in their discretion, intend as the equivalent of the advancements previously given off. In other words, the advancements given off and the beintestacy is recognized, it applies only to property not covered by the will, and not to that falling to residuary legatees.¹

IV. OF WHAT ADVANCEMENTS MAY CONSIST—1. In General.—Under the English System of Primogeniture, all the real estate went to the eldest son, who was, as to his inheritance of land, expressly excepted from the operation of the statute.

Coparceners—Hotchpot.—Land descended to more than one in the case only of coparceners, who were subject to the operation of the rule of hotchpot which required that gifts of land only be accounted for.²

It was Only to the Distribution of the Personal Effects of the testator that the terms of the statute of distribution having to do with advancements applied.³

Realty or Personality.—Such advancements might be of either real or personal property, or both.⁴

Statutory Regulation.—In this country the matter is regulated by statute; and whether advancements shall be of either real or personal property exclusively, or may be of both, and whether one can be set off against the other, are matters in regard to which the terms of the statute must be followed.⁵

quests contained in the will are collectively the distribution which the testator desires to make."

Delaware.—Marshall v. Rensch, 3 Del. Ch. 239. Here the court, by Bates, J., said: "Both in England and in the United States the law of advancements has been applied only in cases of intestacy. Never where there is a will, not even, as held in many cases, though there may be a surplus undisposed of by the will, is a gift in the testator's lifetime required to be brought into the distribution of such surplus."

Georgia.—Walker v. Williamson, 25 Ga. 549; Brewton v. Brewton, 30 Ga. 416; McNeil v. Hammond, 87 Ga. 618; Huggins v. Huggins, 71 Ga. 66, which construed the word "intestate" occurring in section 2582 of the code of 1882, in the manner stated in the text.

Maryland.—Stewart v. Pattison, 8 Gill (Md.) 46; Hayden v. Burch, 9 Gill (Md.) 79; Pole v. Simmons, 45 Md. 246; Manning v. Thruston, 59 Md. 218.

Missouri.—Turpin v. Turpin, 88 Mo. 337, which holds that the term "intestate" in the statute means wholly intestate.

New York.—De Caumont v. Bogert, 36 Hun (N. Y.) 382; Clark v. Kingsley, 37 Hun (N. Y.) 246; Arnold v. Haronn, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 278; Camp v. Camp, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 219; *Thompson v. Y.) 24. But see Hays v. Hibbard, 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 28.

North Carolina.—Richmond v. Vanhook, 3 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 581 (holding in accordance with the text where the statute used the term "intestate"); Hurdle v. Elliott, 1 Ired. (N. Car.) 176; Jenkins v. Mitchell, 4 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 207; Donnell v. Mateer, 5 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 7; Johnston v. Johnston, 4 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 9; Brown v. Brown, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 309; Croom v. Herring, 4 Hawks (N. Car.) 393.

Ohio.—In Needles v. Needles, 7 Ohio St. 435, 70 Am. Dec. 85, it was decided that when the decedent manifestly intended to dispose of all his property by will, the fact that he had unknowingly died intestate as to part, was not enough to warrant the application of the doctrine of advancements.

Pennsylvania.—Newell's Will, 1 Browne

5. Effect of Statute Specifying Personality Only.—If the statute specifies only advancements of personal property, those of real estate are to be disregarded. Putnam v. Putnam, 18 Ohio 347; Myers v. Warner, 18 Ohio 519.

Statute Embracing both Real and Personal Property.—So, if the statute provides that advancements of both real and personal property shall be brought into hotchpot in the distribution of the personal effects, but that in the division of the land, advancements of land only shall be regarded, it must be followed. Havens v. Thompson, 23 N. J. Eq. 321.

Real Property.—So also if it provides for the application of only real estate advancements in the division of the land. Marshall v. Rensch, 3 Del. Ch. 239 (under § 279 of Delaware Revised Code).

Virginia Statute.—In Williams v. Stonestreet, 3 Rand. (Va.) 559, it is held that where the statute provides that real estate received by way of advancement shall be brought into hotchpot with "estate descended," and personal estate

Where the Common Law has been Adopted, and a statute subsequently enacted provides for advancements in the case of the descent of real estate, it has been held that in equity advancements of real estate are to be charged upon the shares of the heirs, and of personal property on those of the next of kin.¹ It has been held in this country that under the common law the heir stood in the same position as under the English system and did not have to account for gifts of land,² but the rule is now generally otherwise by virtue of statute.³

2. Real Property—Voluntary Conveyance from Father to Child—Presumption.—A voluntary conveyance of land from father to child, expressed in the deed to be in consideration of love and affection, is presumed to be an advancement.⁴

with "distributable surplus," the two kinds of property must be kept separate, the real being applied in the distribution of the realty and the personal in the distribution of the personalty. See also Fleming's Appeal, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 351.

New York.—As to the effect of substituting the word "deceased" for "intestate" in the statute of New York providing for the distribution of the personal estate, and retaining the latter word in that regulating the descent of lands (N. Y. Rev. Stat. 1882, pp. 2213, 2304), see Hawley v. James, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 450.

1. Statute Providing for Advancements in Case of Descent of Realty.—Terry v. Dayton, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 522, where the court, by Emott, J., gives the following historical account of the origin of the rule: "1. At common law there was no notice taken of advancements except in the case of estates in coparcenary, as to lands, and by the custom of London, of York, and of Scotland, as to goods. The case of lands held in coparcenary was the only instance of a title acquired by a number of persons jointly by inheritance, except under the custom of gavelkind in Kent. I do not find that the law of hotchpot or of advancements was ever applied to this species of estate. As to coparceners, the only application of the law of hotchpot was in the case of lands given in frank marriage, which was the only gift which was looked upon as an advancement in respect to lands. So that the only case in which, by the general law of England, lands descended to more than one person in equal shares—i. e., in the case of a man dying intestate and leaving daughters only—in which event they took as coparceners; in that case the law compelled any one of the daughters who had been advanced by a gift of land to bring her advancement into hotchpot if she would take any share of the lands descended. The law of hotchpot was not precisely like the present law of advancements, but what is material to the present question is, that in the case of lands descended the law did not regard any gifts as advancements, except gifts of lands; for estates in frank marriage were such exclusively. These advancements of land were accounted for in the division of an estate descended. 2. When the rights of children and relatives were firmly established against the claims of the administrator, and the statute of distribution was passed (Statutes of 22, 23, and 29 Charles II.), the same provision was introduced in substance which we now have, and which prevailed in certain parts of the realm by custom before. This extended to all advancements whether of lands or goods; and it included, of course, as well the heir as the other children. The law of primogeniture forbade any interference with the inheritance where there was an heir entitled to the whole. But where the estate went into coparcenary, then these advancements of lands had to be accounted for, and when there was personal estate all advancements, whether they had been made by lands, or goods, or money, were taken into the account in the distribution of the personal estate. 3. When primogeniture was abolished in this country after the revolution, although all the heirs at law took in the same manner as coparceners did at common law, there was no rule or provision for deducting advancements from the share of an heir in real estate. As to personal estate the statute of distributions contained a provision similar to the English. But there was no such provision in the statute of descents. If, therefore, a child had been advanced to any amount, and the father died leaving only real estate, the advancement was not taken into account. 4. When the revised statutes were passed, the legislature introduced sections 23, 24, 25, 26, to remedy what they considered an injustice in this particular, and to provide for an accounting and adjustment of all advancements against the shares of the heirs at law in the real estate which descended to them."

true of a conveyance to the child by an outside party, the consideration being paid by the father.¹

Presumption Rebuttable.—But this presumption is rebuttable.²

Lands in Another State.—Under some of the statutes the rules as to advancements apply only to the division of lands situate within the state.³

Recital of Nominal Consideration.—The presumption of an advancement is not affected by the recital of a nominal consideration, as one dollar or five dollars, in case of the conveyance of a valuable interest.⁴

Substantial Consideration—Presumption.—Where a substantial consideration is recited the transaction is presumed to be a purchase,⁵ but this presumption may be rebutted.⁶

Gifts of Mortgage Interests are not within the statutes of advancements, unless expressly included.⁷

Invalid Gifts of Lands—Receipt of Rents by Donee.—Where the donor made an invalid gift of lands, from which the donee received the rents, it was held that the land was not an advancement, nor were the rents that were received.⁸

Remainder—Reversion—Contingent Interest—Life Estate—Lease—Rents.—A remainder or a reversion may be the subject of an advancement;⁹ and so may a contingent interest,¹⁰ a life estate,¹¹ a lease,¹² or a settlement of rents.¹³

Parol Evidence is Admissible for This Purpose.—Bruce v. Slemp, 82 Va. 352. Compare Newell v. Newell, 13 Vt. 24.

A statement in a deed of land from father to son, of a consideration of one thousand dollars, was held not sufficient to warrant the setting aside of a decree of the probate court treating the deed as an advancement, where there was evidence of an admission of the son to the effect that there was a gift of the tract of land from his father, and evidence that through a long series of years the land was understood to be a gift, and statements of members of the family that such a gift had been made. Pate v. Johnson, 15 Ark. 275.

Services of the Child as a Consideration.—The services of a child, for which the parent was under a moral obligation to pay, constitute a consideration sufficient to rebut the presumption of advancement. Murrell v. Murrell, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 148, 49 Am. Dec. 664.

And parol evidence is admissible to show that a consideration in a deed to a daughter, stated nominally to be one dollar, was really a service sufficient to constitute a substantial consideration, and thus to rebut the presumption of an advancement. Hattersley v. Bissett, 50 N. J. Eq. 577.

3. Personal Property — Not Every Casual Gift an Advancement.—An advancement being a gift by anticipation of a part of that which would ultimately come to the child, it follows that not every casual gift is to be classed under that head.¹

Presents of Inconsiderable Value.—Trifling or small presents are not prima facie advancements.²

Presents of Considerable Value.—In some instances it is held that presents of considerable value are presumed to be advancements and not absolute gifts;³ in others it is held that there is no such presumption, but that there must be corroborative evidence in order to treat them as advancements.⁴

Question Dependent Largely upon Parent's Means and the Surrounding Circumstances.—Whether any particular gift is an advancement or not, will depend largely on the parent's means⁵ and the circumstances accompanying it.⁶

Will Specifying What to be Considered as Advancements.—Where a will defines what gifts of personal property are to be considered advancements in the distribution of the estate, only payments coming under such definition can be so treated.⁷

Money Expended for Child's Education, Maintenance, and Travels.—It may be laid down as a general principle that money expended by a father on his son's education will not, in the absence of clear evidence of such intention, be construed to be an advancement,⁸ and likewise of a sum required for his maintenance,⁹

2. Small Presents Not Prima Facie Advancements.—2 Williams Executors (9th ed.) 1355; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 8 Ala. 414; Cooner v. May, 3 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 185; Note to Pusey v. Desbouvrie, 3 P. Wms. 317; Taylor v. Taylor, L. R. 20 Eq. 155, 44 L. J. Ch. 718.

In Sanford v. Sanford, 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 293, 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 486, it was held that money to pay for small presents should be regarded as having been given "without a view to a portion or settlement in life."

In Meadows v. Meadows, 11 Ired. (N. Car.) 148, it was decided that money to supply a child with clothing and ordinary amusements and pleasures suitable to his rank in life is not an advancement.

3. Presents of Large Value.—Grattan v. Grattan, 18 Ill. 167, 65 Am. Dec. 726; Jackson v. Matsdorf, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 91; 6 Am. Dec. 355. See also Watkins v. Young, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 84.

4. In Johnson v. Belden, 20 Conn. 322, it was held that neither the mere relationship between parent and child, nor the fact that the parent had delivered property to his child, nor equality in the estate ("as in many families a judicious discrimination is equitable") was enough, without evidence of the intention, to establish an advancement. See also Partridge v. Havens, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 618.

5. Elliot v. Collier, 1 Ves. 16, 3 Atk. 528. In this case the gift of a gold watch and forty or fifty pounds, the donor being "a man of means," was held not to be an advancement. Other cases supporting the text are Fennell v. Henry, 70 Ala. 484, 45 Am. Rep. 88; King's Estate, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 373.

Insolvency of Donor.—The insolvency of the donor, however, has been held not enough to prevent the gift from being considered as an advancement, and it may be brought into hotchpot. In re Young's Estate, 3 Md. Ch. 461.

Transfer in Fraud of Creditors.—Unless it can be shown that the transfer was made to defraud creditors. Creed v. Lancaster Bank, 1 Ohio St. 1.

Mere Inadequacy in the Purchase Price, where the person advanced is a nominal vendee, is not enough to raise a presumption of an advancement. Merriman v. Lacefield, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 209.

7. McNeill v. Hammond, 87 Ga. 618; Loring v. Blake, 106 Mass. 592; Sayre v. Sayre, 32 N. J. Eq. 61; Noel v. Noel, 86 Va. 109.

8. Education of Child.—Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. Wms. 435, 2 Eng. Rul. Cas. 261; Taylor v. Taylor, L. R. 20 Eq. 155, 44 L. J. Ch. 718, which held that payment to a special pleader for services in the case of a child intended for the bar, being in the nature of payment for a preliminary education, need not be accounted for, and was to be distinguished from entry money at an Inn of Court.

This is not affected by the fact that the parent made entries in his account books at the time for the amount so paid, Miller's Appeal, 40 Pa. St. 57, 80 Am. Dec. 555; or took security, Richardson v. Sinkler, 2 Desaus. (S. Car.) 127; Riddle's Estate, 19 Pa. St. 431; Bradsher v. Cannady, 76 N. Car. 445.

General and Professional Education.—In Cooner v. May, 3 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 185, it was held that there should be no distinction between moneys paid for a child's general and professional education, and that neither is properly an advancement. See also White v. Moore, 23 S. Car. 456.

Elder and Younger Children.—But it has been held that when elder children have been educated out of the parent's estate, and distribution is made before the younger ones have had this advantage, these payments should be charged against the elder children as advancements. State v. Stephenson, 12 Mo. 178.

9. Money Expended for Child's Maintenance.—Taylor v. Taylor, L. R. 20 Eq. 155, 44 L. J. Ch. 718, which held that sums of money given to a child to aid in his maintenance did not tend to establish him in life and were not to be treated as advancements; neither were gifts to a son for his apprenticeships, or his travels.¹ Such expenses are incurred in the discharge of ordinary parental duty.

Establishing Child in Business.—If, however, the parent goes further, and, instead of merely supplying the needs of the hour, makes a substantial provision for his son's establishment in life, as by setting him up in business or in his profession, the presumption of an advancement arises.²

Payments for Child's Pleasure.—Thus payments made for the pleasure of a child are not advancements.³

Provisions for Child's Permanent Good—Intention.—If the provision, however, is for his permanent good, or if the intention to advance affirmatively appears, it is immaterial what form it takes.

Accordingly an Annuity given for the purpose of settling a son in life will be construed as an advancement.⁴

Life Insurance Policy.—The provision may consist of a life-insurance policy.⁵

Stock Purchased in Child's Name—Father Receiving Dividends—Payment of Debt.—It may also consist of stock purchased in the son's name, even though the father received the dividends;⁶ or of the payment of a debt.⁷

an outfit and passage money to India for himself and his wife, nor sums paid for debts subsequently contracted in India, these being by way of temporary assistance only.

By a deed of separation, a husband covenanted to pay an annuity of two hundred pounds to each of his daughters during her life. It was held that so much of the annuity as was paid during his life was not an advancement, but that the balance at the time of his death was. Hatfield v. Minet, 8 Ch. Div. 136, 47 L. J. Ch. 612.

1. Apprenticeships and Travels.—Cooner v. May, 3 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 185; Bowles v. Winchester, 13 Bush (Ky.) 1; Bruce v. Griscom, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 280, 70 N. Y. 612; Sanford v. Sanford, 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 293. But the rule is otherwise when the amount paid is considerable. 2 Wms. Exrs. (9th ed.) 1355.

2. Setting Child up in Business or Profession.—Dwight on Persons and Personal Property, p. 640; Norton v. Norton, in note to Pusey v. Desbouverie, 3 P. Wms. 317; Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. Wms. 435; Boyd v. Boyd, L. R. 4 Eq. 305, 36 L. J. Ch. 877; Shiver v. Brock, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 137; Fellows v. Little, 46 N. H. 27; McRae v. McRae, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 199; Chase v. Ewing, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 597; Meadows v. Meadows, 11 Ired. (N. Car.) 148.

In Taylor v. Taylor, L. R. 20 Eq. 155, 44 L. J. Ch. 718, it was held that the following payments were advancements: First, the payment of the admission fee to one of the Inns of Court in the case of a child intended for the bar; second, the price of a commission and outfit of a child entering the army; third, the price of plant and machinery, and other payments for the purpose of starting a child in business. The court, by Jessel, M. R., said: "I have always understood that an advancement by way of portion is something given by the parent to establish the child in life, or to make what is called a provision for him, not a mere casual payment. You may make the provision by way of marriage portion on the marriage of the child. You may make it on putting him into a profession or business in a variety of ways; you may pay for a commission; you may buy for him the good-will of a business and give him stock in trade; all these things I understand to be portions or provisions."

In Boyd v. Boyd, L. R. 4 Eq. 305, 36 L. J. Ch. 877, it was held that a premium paid upon the occasion of a son being articulated to an attorney was an advancement, although the profession was afterwards relinquished; and so was the purchase price of a commission in the army, and sums paid for debts of honor thereafter contracted, non-payment of which would have compelled the son to leave the army.

6. Stock Bought in Son's Name—Receipt of Dividends by Father—Advancement.—Sidmouth v. Sidmouth, 2 Beav. 447.

Charging Child with Stock from Which She Derived No Benefit.—But merely charging a daughter with stock over which she had no control and from which she derived no benefit, the stock being afterwards sold and the proceeds used by the father, was held not to be an advancement. Herkimer v. McGregor, 126 Ind. 247.

Purchase in Joint Names of Parent and Child.—A purchase by a mother in the joint names of herself and child was held to be an advancement. Sayre v. Hughes, 37 L. J. Ch. 401, L. R. 5 Eq. 376, 16 W. R. 662.

Subscription to Stock in Child's Name.—It has been held that a mere subscription to stock in the daughter's name was not enough to constitute an advancement. Butler v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 14 Ala. 777. Compare Batstone v. Salter, L. R. 19 Eq. 250.

7. Payment of Debts.—Taylor v. Taylor, L. R. 20 Eq. 155, 44 L. J. Ch. 718; Johnson v. Hoyle, 3 Head (Tenn.) 56; Steele v. Frierson, 85 Tenn. 430.

Father Taking Security in Child's Name for Money Loaned.—Where a father lends money, taking security in the name of the child, there is prima facie an advancement.¹

Omission of Father to Collect Interest on Son's Note in His Favor.—The omission to collect interest on the child's note in favor of the father may constitute an advancement.²

Failure of Father to Collect of Son Rent of Land Leased.—And so may the failure of the father to collect the rent of property leased to the child.³

V. BETWEEN WHOM ADVANCEMENTS MAY BE MADE—1. General Principles—Property Purchased in Name of One for Whom Vendee is under Obligation to Provide—Presumption.—Where one purchases property, taking title in the name of another for whom he is under a legal, natural, or moral obligation to provide, the usual presumption of a resulting trust does not arise, but, on the contrary, a presumption of an advancement or gift arises.⁴

The Payment of Gaming Debts may constitute an advancement. Carter v. Cutting, 5 Munf. (Va.) 223.

Promise of Reimbursement.—But where a mother paid a son's debt, and he acknowledged his indebtedness to her and promised to reimburse her, there was held not to be an advancement. Wolsner v. Wells (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 28 S. W. Rep. 247, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.), p. 219.

3. Thus, in Ridley v. McNairy, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 174, where the donee put in a claim for improvements made, it was held that the value of what he enjoyed was a necessary element of the adjustment.

In Shawhan v. Shawhan, 10 Bush (Ky.) 600, where the decedent kept an account, charging all his children except one with rents of the lands occupied by them as advancements, it was held that this one should also be charged with rents.

In Wakefield v. Gilleland, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 845, where the donor made an invalid gift of land, from which the donee received the rents, it was held that though the land was not an advancement, the rents received were. See also Robinson v. Robinson, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 392.

sumptive intention of the parent, but will not be applied in opposition to the obvious purpose and design of the transaction. Halton v. Landman, 28 Ala. 127, cited with approval in Kelly v. Karsner, 72 Ala. 106.

In Clements v. Hood, 57 Ala. 463, the court by Stone, J., said: "It is settled by an unbroken current of authorities that money or property given by a parent to a child will be presumed to be intended as an advancement, unless such presumption is repelled by the nature of the gift, or by other evidence showing that it was an absolute gift. But such presumption is not conclusive. It may be overturned by proof."

The same judge in Kelly v. Karsner, 72 Ala. 111, said: "The doctrine of resulting trust is one of sheer implication, and that implication may be easily overturned. If a husband or father purchase lands with his own means, and have title made to his wife or child, the presumption of a resulting trust is overturned, and the contrary presumption arises. (Perry on Trusts, §§ 143-4.)"

In Butler v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 14 Ala. 777, the court by Chilton, J., said: "This presumption of a trust, however, may be and is rebutted in cases where it may be fairly inferred the purchase was made in the name of another from considerations of natural love and affection. Thus it is laid down generally in the books that if a parent purchase in the name of his son it will be deemed prima facie an advancement, so as to rebut the presumption of a trust resulting in favor of the parent. * * * This evidence may consist in the contemporaneous acts and declarations of the parent. * * * 'The moral obligation,' says Judge Story, 'of a parent to provide for his children, is the foundation of this exception, or rather this rebutter of the presumption' that the purchase in the name of the child was intended for the father's benefit. The presumption of an advancement should not therefore be frittered away by nice refinements.' 2 Story Eq. Juris., § 1203; Finch v. Finch, 15 Ves. Jr. 50."

Arkansas.—So in James v. James, 41 Ark. 301, the transaction was regarded as an advancement, and not a resulting trust, where the purchase was made by a father in the name of his child.

In White v. White, 52 Ark. 188, it was held that the presumption was not overcome by the fact that the father held possession of the land for seven years, made improvements, paid the taxes, and claimed that it was his, with the knowledge and acquiescence of his son, the son being a minor, and the father at the time of the purchase saying that it was made for the son.

When Presumption of Advancement Strongest.—The presumption of advancement is

Connecticut.—This presumption is rebuttable. Clark v. Warner, 6 Conn. 355.

Georgia.—Brown v. Burke, 22 Ga. 574.

Illinois.—Grattan v. Grattan, 18 Ill. 167, 65 Am. Dec. 726; Wormley v. Wormley, 98 Ill. 544.

Where land is purchased by a parent in the name of his children, if not explained by circumstances it will be presumed to be intended as an advancement or gift. Taylor v. Taylor, 9 Ill. 303.

Purchase by a parent in the name of a child is generally considered an advancement, but it is competent to rebut the presumption by proof from circumstances of a different intentment. Bay v. Cook, 31 Ill. 336.

In the last-named case it was also held that an advancement differs only in form from a voluntary settlement; also that fraud would repel the presumption.

Indiana.—Stanley v. Brannon, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 193; Baker v. Leathers, 3 Ind. 558; Hodgson v. Macy, 8 Ind. 121; Dillman v. Cox, 23 Ind. 440; Woolery v. Woolery, 29 Ind. 249, 95 Am. Dec. 630.

Iowa.—A resulting trust is created in favor of one who buys real estate, taking the legal title in the name of another, unless such other be one for whom the former is under some natural or moral obligation to provide, when the transaction will be treated prima facie as an advancement. Cotton v. Wood, 25 Iowa 43.

Maryland.—In Hayden v. Burch, 9 Gill (Md.) 79, where a father purchased land with his own money for the son, and the son entered into possession and disposed of it as his own property, it was held that the money advanced for the purchase of land must be treated as land, and the transaction regarded as an advancement of real estate.

Lands given by a parent to his son by bonds for conveyance and lease were presumed to be an advancement, and the services of the son, who worked the land upon shares, were not considered sufficient evidence of a contrary intention to rebut the presumption. Graves v. Spedden, 46 Md. 527.

In Parks v. Parks, 19 Md. 323, it was held that where the property advanced consists of real estate the presumption in favor of an advancement is strengthened, as it is then more in accordance with a permanent settlement.

Mississippi.—Gee v. Gee, 32 Miss. 190; Wilson v. Beauchamp, 50 Miss. 24; Lisloff v. Hart, 25 Miss. 245, 57 Am. Dec. 203, which held that a conveyance of land to a son by voluntary settlement of the father vests a title in the son not to be divested by a subsequent destruction of the deed. It must be considered as an advance, and is not revocable.

Missouri.—Darrier v. Darrier, 58 Mo. 226.

In Allen v. DeGroodt, 98 Mo. 159, it was held that where a father, being the holder of a life estate in a piece of real property with remainder to his son, bought the land at a foreclosure sale, the purchase was presumed to be an advancement to the son.

New Hampshire.—Page v. Page, 8 N. H. 187; Hill v. Pine River Bank, 45 N. H. 300.

New Jersey.—Gordon v. Barkeley, 6 N. J. Eq. 94.

New York.—Partridge v. Havens, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 618; Astreen v. Flanagan, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 279, which held that the same presumption was applicable in the case of an adopted child.

North Carolina.—Melvin v. Bullard, 82 N. Car. 33.

In Hollister v. Attmore, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 373, it was held that where a brother and sister joined in a deed to the brother's children, of property intended for them by another sister, who had failed from accident to leave a will, the brother and sister being sole distributees of the deceased sister, upon a distribution of the brother's estate the children were not required to bring in the property as an advancement.

Ohio.—Tremper v. Barton, 18 Ohio 418.

It is an abstract presumption merely, and will be overcome by proof of a manifest intention to the contrary. Creed v. Lancaster Bank, 1 Ohio St. 1.

Oregon.—Before a court of equity will be warranted in making a decree contrary to this presumption the evidence must be clear, definite, and free from doubt. Parker v. Newitt, 18 Oregon 274.

But when made for the purpose of hindering or delaying creditors, it will be regarded as a resulting trust. Taylor v. Miles, 19 Oregon 550.

Pennsylvania.—Phillips v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Pa.) 158, 36 Am. Dec. 158; Dutch's Appeal, 57 Pa. St. 461.

Acts of ownership on the part of the father may be shown in evidence to rebut this presumption; also his declarations to explain those acts. Sampson v. Sampson, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 329.

In Weaver's Appeal, 63 Pa. St. 309, it was held that in determining whether a gift presumably is an advancement or not, the size of the estate and the number of children are to be considered.

South Carolina.—Douglass v. Brice, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 322.

Tennessee.—Dudley v. Bosworth, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 9, 51 Am. Dec. 690; Gaugh v. Henderson, 2 Head (Tenn.) 628; Johnson v. Patterson, 13 Lea (Tenn.) 626.

Texas.—Lott v. Kaiser, 61 Tex. 665.

In Shepherd v. White, 10 Tex. 72, 11 Tex. 346, it was held that where the donee died leaving a will in which he spoke of the gift as a trust the presumption of an advancement was rebutted.

Virginia.—Watkins v. Young, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 84.

West Virginia.—In order to rebut the presumption the heirs will not be permitted to show that such a conveyance was made for a fraudulent purpose. McClintock v. Loisseau, 31 W. Va. 865.

strongest when the donee is just starting out in life,¹ and living apart from the parent after marriage.²

Indebtedness of Parent to Child.—An existing indebtedness of the parent to the child raises a presumption of an intention to pay the debt rather than to make an advancement.³

2. Parent and Child—General Rule—Presumption in Favor of Advancement.—The doctrine of advancements is most frequently applied in the case of transactions between parent and child. A presumption of advancement arises whenever a father makes to a child a transfer of property,⁴ either real or personal,⁵ or wherever he furnishes the purchase price of property, title to which is taken in the name of the child.⁶

This Presumption may be Rebutted by evidence of a different intention.⁷

Such a deed may be impeached, as being within the statute against fraudulent conveyances, if made to defraud, hinder, or delay creditors; and such fraud may legally be inferred from the facts and circumstances of the case. Lockhard v. Beckley, 10 W. Va. 87.

If No Presumption, a Question of Fact.—When there is no such presumption, whether or not a payment is an advancement is a question of evidence. Bennet v. Bennet, 10 Ch. Div. 474, 27 W. R. 573, 40 L. T. 378; Holt v. Frederick, 2 P. Wms. 357.

May be Shown to be a Gift.—It may be shown in evidence that a transfer of property prima facie an advancement is really a gift. Duling v. Johnson, 32 Ind. 155; Stokesberry v. Reynolds, 57 Ind. 425; Dille v. Webb, 61 Ind. 85.

Or it may be Shown to be a Sale.—Stewart v. State, 2 Har. & G. (Md.) 114.

But Slight Evidence is Not Enough to rebut this presumption. Parker v. Parker (Ky., 1889), 11 S. W. Rep. 97.

Burden of Proof.—The burden of proof lies on the party alleging a gift or trust, to rebut this presumption of advancement. Christy v. Courtenay, 13 Beav. 96; Ruch v. Biery, 110 Ind. 444; Higham v. Vanosdol, 125 Ind. 74; Scott v. Harris, 127 Ind. 520; Burton v. Baldwin, 61 Iowa 283; Dutch's Appeal, 57 Pa. St. 461.

Statutes.—It is declared in New York that every estate or interest given by a parent to a descendant by virtue of a beneficial power, or of a power in trust with a right of selection, shall be deemed an advancement. Beebe v. Estabrook, 79 N. Y. 246; N. Y. Rev. Stat. 1882, §§ 2213, 2305. In Ohio the provision applies when children of their descendants have thus been advanced. Ohio Stat. 1884, §§ 4169 et seq. The New Jersey statute uses the word "issue." N. J. Stat. (Revision of 1877) 297. The Code of North Carolina says "children." N. Car. Code 1883, vol. 1, § 1483. In Vermont the provision applies to children or other lineal descendants. Vt. Rev. Laws 1880, §§ 2246 et seq.

As by evidence showing that the transfer was probably made in satisfaction of a moral obligation. Beakhusht v. Crumby (R. I., 1894), 30 Atl. Rep. 453, 31 Atl. Rep. 753.

Slight circumstances are not enough to rebut the presumption of an advancement. Finch v. Finch, 15 Ves. Jr. 43.

The question is one of intention, however, and proof that it was not so intended is always admissible. Bay v. Cook, 31 Ill. 336; Watkins v. Young, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 84.

What Not Sufficient to Overcome the Presumption.—The mere fact, however, that the parent remains in possession of property after he has conveyed it to the son is not sufficient for that purpose, nor that he receives the rent or leases or devises it.¹

Purchase by Parent in Joint Names of Son and Stranger.—An advancement is presumed in the case of a purchase by a parent in the joint names of a son and a stranger.²

Title in Joint Names of Parent and Child.—The same result follows where title is taken in the joint names of the son and father.³

And parol evidence is admissible to show this, though declarations, to be admitted, must be contemporaneous. Williams v. Williams, 32 Beav. 370; Woolery v. Woolery, 29 Ind. 249, 95 Am. Dec. 630.

Illustrations.—Such as the exacting by the father of an agreement on the part of the son to pay the principal and interest of a sum of money transferred from the former to the latter. Kintz v. Friday, 4 Dem. (N. Y.) 540.

Where a son admitted that there was no advancement of property standing in his name, it has been decided that it was held in trust by him for the father. Scawin v. Scawin, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 65.

Where the father pays a large part of the purchase price, there is an advancement pro tanto. Sweet v. Northrup, 12 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 377.

Or where the father sells land which the son has occupied for some time, and the son receives the money therefor, there is an advancement. Gordon v. Barkelew, 6 N. J. Eq. 94.

Where land was purchased by the father in the name of his son, it was held that improvements made thereon by the father while in his (the father's) possession are to be included as advancements. Kemp v. Cossart, 47 Ark. 62.

Under the English law a purchase of real property in the name of a younger son is an advancement to him where the eldest son waives a trust and no creditors interpose. Grey v. Grey, 2 Swanst. 600.

And it has been held that it is not always necessary for the heir to so waive. Stileman v. Ashdown, 2 Atk. 480.

Where a child purchased property with his parent's money, which he held with his parent's consent, there was held to be an advancement. Peer v. Peer, 11 N. J. Eq. 432; Gregory v. Winston, 23 Gratt. (Va.) 102; Mullen v. Mullen, 2 Am. L. Rec. 611.

Where A made a title bond of eighty acres of land to B, which bond B assigned to C, and subsequently, at C's request, A made the deed to C and his son, whereupon the father and son entered into possession and the next year made a settlement by which the former was to have ten acres and the latter seventy acres, it was held that these circumstances characterized the transaction as one of debt, not advancement. Hodgson v. Macy, 8 Ind. 121.

Restrictions and Reservations.—Neither a restriction upon alienation, nor the reservation of a life estate, nor a reservation of the right to revoke the gift conclusively indicates an intention that the gift shall be otherwise than an advancement. Graves v. Spedden, 46 Md. 527; Hughey v. Eichelberger, 11 S. Car. 36; Hook v. Hook, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 526; Barber v. Taylor, 9 Dana (Ky.) 85.

Payment of Taxes.—That the father pays all the taxes, is competent evidence on the question of advancement. Tuggle v. Tuggle, 57 Ga. 520.

Child Living Apart.—As is the fact that the son lived apart from the father. Holliday v. Wingfield, 59 Ga. 206; Smith v. Smith, 21 Ala. 761.

So held in cases of conveyance to a son eighteen years of age. Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Atk. 386.

Where a deed was executed to a father and son as joint grantees and found among the father's papers after his death, he having during his lifetime made leases, collected the rents, and given powers of attorney for that purpose, it was nevertheless held an advancement. Aleyne v. Aleyne, 8 Ir. Eq. Rep. 493, 2 J. & L. 544. But it has been held that the general proposition is not true in the case of a formal and unmistakable taking of possession, Stock v. McAvoy, L. R. 15 Eq. 55, 42 L. J. Ch. 230; and the fact that the father retains possession is always evidence against the advancement, Woodman v. Morrell, 2 Freem. 33.

2. Purchase by Father in Joint Names of Son and Stranger—Presumption.—Crabb v. Crabb, 1 Myl. & K. 511.

Where one holding a copyhold for the joint lives of himself and brother released this and took a new title for the joint lives of himself, his son, and his brother, it was held that the son, where he survived both father and uncle, took the land as an advancement. Skeats v. Skeats, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 9, 12 L. J. Ch., N. S. 22, 6 Jur. 942.

A Purchase in the Name of a Son and a Trustee. by a father, is an advancement to the son. Lamplugh v. Lamplugh, 1 P. Wms. 111.

3. Presumption of Advancement when Title is Taken in Joint Names of Father and Son.—Windham v. Windham, 1 Ch. Cas. 27; Grey v. Grey, 2 Swanst. 594; Strode v. Strode, 1 Ch. Cas. 27; Back v. Andrew, 2 Vern. 120.

It was held that under the Rhode Island Pub. Stat., c. 187, § 20, where the deceased father had deposited money in the savings bank in the children's names and his own name as trustee, tell-

Transfer to Daughter and Child or to Daughter and Husband.—A transfer to a daughter and her child, or to a daughter and her husband, jointly, is an advancement to the daughter.¹

Dealings between Mother and Child.—The same presumption is, in this country, generally considered to arise in the case of dealings between mother and child as in the case of those between father and child,² but the English rule was otherwise.³

3. Husband and Wife.—Where a wife receives property from her husband, or from another, the husband paying the consideration, it is often said that a presumption of advancement arises,⁴ although this is doubted by excellent authority.⁵

It is immaterial whether title be taken in the name of the wife alone, the wife and her husband jointly,⁶ the two and a child jointly,⁷ or all three jointly with a stranger.⁸

4. Parent-in-law and Son-in-law—Personalty.—A gift of personal property to a son-in-law is prima facie an advancement to the daughter.⁹

1. Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. Wms. 435; Weyland v. Weyland, 2 Atk. 632; Kyle v. Conrad, 25 W. Va. 774, which holds that in case of a transfer to a daughter for life, remainder to her child, the value of the fee simple should be charged as an advancement to the mother.

It has been held that where a mother-in-law had stock put in the joint names of herself, her daughter, and her son-in-law, and the dividends were received by the son-in-law and paid to the mother during her life, there was an advancement. Batstone v. Salter, L. R. 19 Eq. 250, 44 L. J. Ch. 209, 23 W. R. 289, 31 L. T. N. S. 600, affirmed in L. R. 10 Ch. 431, 44 L. J. Ch. 760.

Vermont.—In Wallace v. Bowen, 28 Vt. 638, it was held that though there is a presumption of an advancement, it is rebuttable.

Marriage must be Legal.—The marriage must be a legal one, however. Soar v. Foster, 4 Kay & J. 152; Taylor v. Miles, 19 Oregon 550.

Strength of the Presumption.—In Wilson v. Beauchamp, 50 Miss. 24, it was held that where a conveyance was made to a wife, the presumption of an advancement is stronger than if made to a child, as a wife cannot be a trustee for her husband.

Realty.—In case of real estate, the authorities are at variance, some applying the same rule as in case of personalty,¹ others holding such transfers absolute gifts or loans according to the circumstances, but not advancements in the absence of evidence of intention.²

Time of Transaction—Consent of Wife.—The fact that the transaction took place soon after marriage is always material as tending to show an advancement,³ as is also the presence or absence of the consent of the wife.⁴

5. Grandparent and Grandchild.—Under the English statute of distributions a grandchild must account for advancements to his parent, but nothing is said as to advancements to the grandchild himself.⁵ It was early decided, however, that in gifts to grandchildren no trust resulted.⁶

The Term "Child" in the Statutes Generally Held to Include "Grandchild."—Under the English statutes and similar enactments the word "child" is generally construed to cover "grandchild," and gifts between persons in this relationship are liable to be considered advancements.⁷ The opposite conclusion has been reached, however, in some states.⁸

Transfer must be Made after Death of Parent.—In any case transfers to a grandchild,

Knowledge of Daughter.—A payment to a daughter's husband will be regarded as an advancement to her when she knew the fact of the gift, and that the intention of the donor was that it should be an advancement. Dittoe v. Cluney, 22 Ohio St. 436; Ex p. Oakey, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 281.

Partnership between Father-in-law and Son-in-law.—But where a father was in partnership with his son-in-law, though he provided all the capital and the son-in-law shared the profits, it was held that there was no advancement to the daughter. Wilks v. Greer, 14 Ala. 437.

Where a Father Gave Money to His Son-in-law, taking his note, which was to be void if his wife survived him, and not to be collected for the benefit of his children, there was held to be an advancement. Wanmaker v. Van Buskirk, 1 N. J. Eq. 685.

1. Gifts of Realty—Authorities Not Agreed.—Barber v. Taylor, 9 Dana (Ky.) 84; Stevenson v. Martin, 11 Bush (Ky.) 485; Groom v. Thompson (Ky., 1891), 16 S. W. Rep. 369; Rains v. Hays, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 303, 40 Am. Rep. 39 (affirming 2 Tenn. Ch. 668); Bruce v. Slemph, 82 Va. 352.

Where a father by way of advancement to his daughter placed a deed of land in her husband's name, this was decided to be an advancement to her. Baker v. Leathers, 3 Ind. 558.

2. Banks v. Shannonhouse, Phil. (N. Car.) 284, where the court, by Pearson, J., said with reference to gifts of personalty and realty: "In our opinion there is a very essential difference. If personal property be given to a wife it instantly jure mariti belongs to the husband, so it is immaterial whether the gift be made to the wife or to the husband; but if land be given to the wife it remains hers, and the husband can only become entitled to a life estate as tenant by the courtesy, whereas if it be conveyed to the husband the wife takes nothing, save a collateral right to have dower in case she survives. So it cannot be said in any sense that she has received of her father any land by way of advancement."

A moiety only of lands conveyed by a father to his daughter and her husband jointly can be considered an advancement. Jones v. Spaight, 2 Murph. (N. Car.) 89.

3. Rogers v. Mayer, 59 Miss. 524; Farrel v. Perry, 1 Hayw. (N. Car.) 2; Carter v. Rutland, 1 Hayw. (N. Car.) 97; Parker v. Phillips, 1 Hayw. (N. Car.) 451.

4. Wilson v. Wilson, 18 Ala. 176; James v. James, 41 Ark. 301; Dilley v. Love, 61 Md. 603; Bridgers v. Hutchins, 11 Ired. (N. Car.) 68; Lindsay v. Platt, 9 Fla. 150; Towles v. Roundtree, 10 Fla. 299.

5. 22 and 23 Car. II., c. 10, § 5; Parsons v. Parsons (Ohio, 1895), 40 N. E. Rep. 165.

6. Ebrand v. Dancer, 2 Ch. Cas. 26. Compare Smith v. Smith, 5 Ves. Jr. 721.

7. Wyth v. Blackman, 1 Ves. 196; Royle v. Hamilton, 4 Ves. Jr. 437; Beebe v. Estabrook, 79 N. Y. 246 (affirming 11 Hun (N. Y.) 523); Dickinson v. Lee, 4 Watts (Pa.) 82, 28 Am. Dec. 684; Eshleman's Appeal, 74 Pa. St. 42; Storey's Appeal, 83 Pa. St. 89; Dilley v. Love, 61 Md. 603. Compare Earnest v. Earnest, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 220.

Illegitimate Grandchild.—It has been held that there can be no advancement to an illegitimate grandchild. Tucker v. Burrow, 2 H. & M. 515.

8. Knight v. Oliver, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 44; Law v. Smith, 2 R. I. 244.

Where a statute provided that "in case any one of the children shall have been advanced in personal estate of greater value than an equal share thereof which shall have come to the other children, he or his legal representative shall be charged in the division of the real estate, if there be any, with the excess in value which he may have received as aforesaid, over and above an equal distributive share of the personal estate" (Rev. Code of North Carolina, 1854, p. 249, § 1, rule 2), it was held that grandchildren must account for property advanced by their grandparents to their parents, but need not account for property given to themselves after the death of such parents. Headen v. Headen, 7 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 159; Daves v. Haywood, 1 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 253; Arrington v. Dortch, 77 N. Car. 367. See also Tournillon's Succession, 15 La. Ann. 263; Destrehan v. Destrehan, 4 Martin N. S. (La.) 557.

to have the effect of advancements, must be made after the death of the parent.¹

Advancements Made to the Parent.—It has been held that where a statute exists under which, if grandchildren alone are left and they take per capita, they do not have to account for advancements made to their parents;² it is otherwise if they take per stirpes.³

Presumption.—Some cases hold that the presumption in any case of a gift to a grandchild is against an advancement, and that it will be construed to be such only if from the surrounding circumstances the intention to advance appears.⁴

6. Other Relations.—The doctrine of advancements has been extended to cover transactions between uncle and nephew,⁵ aunt and niece,⁶ and older and younger brothers,⁷ but not those between father-in-law and daughter-in-law.⁸

VI. HOW ADVANCEMENTS MAY BE DETERMINED—1. A Question of Intention.—Whether a gift is absolute or by way of advancement, depends upon the intention of the donor,⁹ which is to be determined as a question of fact.¹⁰

Time of the Intention.—This intention must exist at the time of the transfer; if it does not, there is no advancement,¹¹ and no subsequent consent of the donee will be of any avail.¹²

Transfer must be Voluntary.—As the character of the transaction is determined by the intention of the donor, it follows that a transfer, to be an advancement, must be voluntary.¹³

1. Must be Made after Death of Parent.—Mason v. Mason, 12 La. 589; Stevenson v. Martin, 11 Bush (Ky.) 485, which so held under a statute (Kentucky Rev. Stat., c. 30, § 17) which provided that "any real or personal property or money given or devised by a parent or grandparent to a descendant shall be charged to the descendant or those claiming through him in the division and distribution of the undivided estate of the parent or grandparent, and such party shall receive nothing further therefrom until the other descendants are made proportionately equal with him according to his descendible and distributable share of the whole estate, real and personal, devised and undevise."

2. Grandchildren Taking per Capita—Advancements to Their Parents.—Brown v. Taylor, 62 Ind. 295; Person's Appeal, 74 Pa. St. 121; Storey's Appeal, 83 Pa. St. 89.

3. Grandchildren Taking per Stirpes—Advancements to Their Parents.—Proud v. Turner, 2 P. Wms. 560; McRea v. McRea, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 199; McLure v. Steele, 14 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 105; Nelson v. Bush, 9 Dana (Ky.) 104; Hughes' Appeal, 57 Pa. St. 179; Eshleman's Appeal, 74 Pa. St. 42; Storey's Appeal, 83 Pa. St. 89; Daves v. Haywood, 1 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 253. This is provided expressly by statute in some states; e.g., see Mass. Gen. Stat., c. 91, § 10.

4. Soar v. Foster. 4 Kay & J. 152; Ebrand v. Dancer, 2 Ch. Cas. 26. Contra, Dart on Vendor and Purchaser, p. 437.

5. Uncle and Nephew.—Currant v. Jago, 1 Colly 261, 8 Jur. 610.

6. Aunt and Niece.—Beecher v. Major, 13 W. R. 1054.

7. Older and Younger Brothers.—Forrest v. Forrest, 34 L. J. Ch. 428.

8. Father-in-law and Daughter-in-law.—Ex p. Middleton, 42 S. Car. 178.

9. Intention.—Boone on Real Property, § 274.

England.—Loyd v. Read, 1 P. Wms. 607.

Canada.—Owen v. Kennedy, 20 Grant's Ch. (Ont.) 163.

Connecticut.—Johnson v. Belden, 20 Conn. 322; Hart v. Chase, 46 Conn. 207.

Georgia.—Weems v. Andrews, 22 Ga. 43; Holliday v. Wingfield, 59 Ga. 206.

Mississippi.—Wilson v. Beauchamp 50 Miss. 24.

New York.—Jackson v. Matsdorf, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 91, 6 Am. Dec. 355; Matter of Morgan, 104 N. Y. 74.

Ohio.—Fels v. Fels, 1 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 420.

Pennsylvania.—Riddle's Estate, 19 Pa. St. 431; Lawson's Appeal, 23 Pa. St. 85.

Tennessee.—Dudley v. Bosworth, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 9, 51 Am. Dec. 690; Johnson v. Patterson, 13 Lea (Tenn.) 627.

10. Shaw v. Kent, 11 Ind. 80.

11. Lawson's Appeal, 23 Pa. St. 85.

12. Subsequent Consent of Donee.—Dunham v. Averill, 45 Conn. 61, 29 Am. Rep. 642; Graves v. Spedden, 46 Md. 527; Bradsher v. Cannady, 76 N. Car. 445; Rains v. Hays, 2 Tenn. Ch. 674, affirmed in 6 Lea (Tenn.) 303, 40 Am. Rep. 39, which cites and comments on most of the then leading cases.

13. To Constitute an Advancement the Transfer must be Voluntary.—In Hart v. Chase, 46 Conn. 207, it was held, where a mortgagor was required to pay and did pay the mortgage debt on land formerly his, but at the time belonging to his wife's heirs at law, although he was in possession as tenant by the curtesy, that the payment did not constitute an advancement, the court by Carpenter, J., saying: "The circumstances pretty effectually repel the presumption of an advancement. At the very threshold of the inquiry we find that the payment was an involuntary one. Advancements are ordinarily, if not always, voluntary, and when a man makes a payment in response to a legal demand, and in discharge of a legal obligation, it is a little difficult to extract from such payment any evi-

2. How Intention may be Shown—Preponderance of Evidence.—This intention may be established by a preponderance of evidence in its favor.¹

Parol Evidence.—It may be shown by parol evidence² unless the statute requires a writing.³

Circumstances—Declarations.—It may be shown by circumstances⁴ or by the declarations of the donor prior to the transfer or contemporaneous with it.⁵

deed of an intention to make an advancement."

A Forced Payment by a surety for the husband of a daughter is not an advancement. Rains v. Hays, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 303, 40 Am. Rep. 39, affirming 2 Tenn. Ch. 668.

1. Middleton v. Middleton, 31 Iowa 151.

The Recollection of a Witness of a Verbal Agreement after the lapse of twenty-five years was held not sufficient to rebut the prima facie presumption of an advancement. Parker v. Parker (Ky., 1889), 11 S. W. Rep. 91.

2. Parol.—Smith v. Smith, 21 Ala. 761; Phillips v. Chappell, 16 Ga. 16; Clendening v. Clymer, 17 Ind. 155; Dillman v. Cox, 23 Ind. 440; Thomas v. Capps, 5 Bush (Ky.) 273; Langdon v. Astor, 16 N. Y. 9.

A Conveyance of Land may be shown by parol evidence to be an advancement. Kingsbury's Appeal, 44 Pa. St. 460; Bruce v. Slemp, 82 Va. 352.

Although the Effect of the Deed is Thereby Changed.—Rockhill v. Spraggs, 9 Ind. 30, 68 Am. Dec. 607.

Or it may be Shown that it is a Gift.—Dumper v. Dumper, 3 Giff. 583.

Parol Evidence Disproving Statement in Deed.—But a statement in a deed that it is intended as an advancement cannot be disproved by parol evidence. Kershaw v. Kershaw, 102 Ill. 307.

A Statement that it is a Gift is Final.—James v. James, 76 N. Car. 331.

Even though a Subsequent Will says that such deeded property is to be taken into final account in order that all the children may share equally. Aden v. Aden, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 453.

Burden of Proof.—Where there is an ordinary deed reciting a consideration of full value, the burden of proof is on the one claiming it to have been an advancement. Miller's Appeal, 107 Pa. St. 221.

3. Statute Requiring Writing.—Filman v. Filman, 15 Grant's Ch. (Ont.) 643; Shepherd v. White, 10 Tex. 72, affirmed in 11 Tex. 346.

The statutes in Massachusetts, Maine, and Vermont require as evidence of an advancement that there shall be a declaration to that effect in the gift or grant of the parent, or a charge to that effect by the intestate, or an acknowledgment in writing by the child. See Mass. Gen. Stat. c. 91, § 8; Hartwell v. Rice, 1 Gray (Mass.) 587; Bigelow v. Poole, 10 Gray (Mass.) 104; Barton v. Rice, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 508; Ashley, Appellant, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 24; Osgood v. Breed, 17 Mass. 358; Bullard v. Bullard, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 527; Bulkeley v. Noble, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 340; Porter v. Porter, 51 Me. 376; Brown v. Brown, 16 Vt. 197; Adams v. Adams, 22 Vt. 50; Weatherhead v. Field, 26 Vt. 665.

4. The effect of a gift is to be decided by the intention of the donor, determined from all the circumstances of the case. Youngblood v. Norton, 1 Strobh. Eq. (S. Car.) 122.

5. Declarations of Donor Prior to, or Contemporaneous with, Transfer—England.—Williams v.

Williams, 32 Beav. 370; Dumper v. Dumper, 3 Giff. 583; Fowkes v. Pascoe, L. R. 10 Ch. 343.

Alabama.—Mitchell v. Mitchell, 8 Ala. 414; O'Neil v. Teague, 8 Ala. 345; Butler v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 14 Ala. 777; Smith v. Smith, 21 Ala. 761; Autrey v. Autrey, 37 Ala. 614; Fennell v. Henry, 70 Ala. 484, 45 Am. Rep. 88.

In Merrill v. Rhodes, 37 Ala. 449, it was held that a parent's declarations in reference to other gifts not in issue are admissible as tending to show his general policy in reference thereto.

Georgia.—Phillips v. Chappell, 16 Ga. 16. In Nolan v. Bolton, 25 Ga. 352, it was held that declarations at the time of making a will, in which certain payments were declared advancements, were admissible as being part of the res gestæ at the time the advancement was made.

Iowa.—In Middleton v. Middleton, 31 Iowa 151, it was held that declarations of an ancestor made about the time of the conveyance of a piece of land, to the effect that the heir had paid him for it, are admissible to rebut the presumption of an advancement.

Indiana.—In Duling v. Johnson, 32 Ind. 155, the court by Ray, J., said: "It is certainly proper that all declarations of intent made by a parent during the execution of a settlement of property among a set of his children should be admitted in evidence to aid in determining whether such purpose was to make an advancement or gift to each of such children." See also Woolery v. Woolery, 29 Ind. 249, 95 Am. Dec. 630.

In Baker v. Leathers, 3 Ind. 558, the court said: "Such evidence [parol declarations at the time of the conveyance] is most unsatisfactory, on account of the facility with which it may be fabricated, the impossibility of contradiction, and the consequences which the slightest mistake or failure of memory may produce. Yet if plain, consistent, and especially if corroborated by circumstances, it is competent ground for a decree."

In Joyce v. Hamilton, 111 Ind. 163, it was held that declarations of a parent previous to the time his daughter took possession of the land advanced are admissible.

Illinois.—Cline v. Jones, 111 Ill. 563.

Kentucky.—But mere declarations of intention cannot make that an advancement which is not such under the law. Cleaver v. Kirk, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 273.

Mississippi.—Wilson v. Beauchamp, 50 Miss. 24.

Missouri.—Declarations are of no avail unless the transfer of property be shown. Nelson v. Nelson, 90 Mo. 464.

Pennsylvania.—Christy's Appeal, 1 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 369; Oller v. Bonebrake, 65 Pa. St. 338, which held that declarations of a parent contemporaneous with entries of advancements in a book are admissible.

Contemporaneous declarations that the property was intended to compensate the child, who

Subsequent Declarations are inadmissible¹ unless part of the res gesta,² or against interest; that is, to the effect that a certain transaction was a gift or advancement rather than a resulting trust. They are not admissible in determining which of the two former it was, or to disprove either in favor of the trust.³

Contemporaneous Memoranda and Charges are likewise competent evidence.⁴

Dying Declarations.—Declarations of the intestate, otherwise incompetent, are not made admissible by the fact that they were made upon his deathbed.⁵

3. Intention as Determined by Will.—While the doctrine of advancements proper is applied in the case of intestacy only,⁶ it is frequently necessary in settling a testate estate to construe the term "advancements" as used in the will. The term is not, when thus employed, taken in its technical sense.⁷

When Will Directs Gifts to be Considered Advancements.—It is a general rule that where was in the parent's employ, for loss of wages while in Europe, are admissible to show that it was not intended as an advancement. Stern's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. Ct. Rep. 369, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 4.

Virginia.—Arnold v. Barrow, 2 Patt. & H. (Va.) 1; Watkins v. Young, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 84; McDearman v. Hodnett, 83 Va. 281; Bruce v. Slemp, 82 Va. 352, which held that the acts and declarations of both parties are admissible to show the nature and character of the consideration and the real design of the donor in making an advancement.

1. General Rule as to Subsequent Declarations.—Williams v. Williams, 32 Beav. 370; Dumper v. Dumper, 3 Giff. 583; Hatch v. Straight, 3 Conn. 31, 8 Am. Dec. 152; Ray v. Loper, 65 Mo. 470; Merkel's Appeal, 89 Pa. St. 340; House v. Woodard, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 201; Merriman v. Lacefield, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 215; Rains v. Hays, 2 Tenn. Ch. 672. Compare Mason v. Holman, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 318.

In Batton v. Allen, 5 N. J. Eq. 99, 43 Am. Dec. 630, it was held that proof of the declarations of a parent that he had fully advanced a child is not sufficient to make an advancement of a debt due from the child which was released only after the death of the child.

In Autrey v. Autrey, 37 Ala. 614, the court by Walker, J., said: "Where the question arises between distributees, whether property received by one of them was intended as an advancement or as a pure gift, there is much reason as well as authority in support of the proposition that the declarations of the intestate, made subsequent to the delivery, expressive of his intention in parting with the property, are admissible." Compare Parks v. Parks, 19 Md. 323, cited with approval in Cecil v. Cecil, 20 Md. 153.

2. When Subsequent Declarations Part of the Res Gestæ.—Johnson v. Belden, 20 Conn. 322; Phillips v. Chappell, 16 Ga. 16; Wallace v. Owen, 71 Ga. 544; Harness v. Harness, 49 Ind. 384; Nelson v. Nelson, 90 Mo. 460; Lawson's Appeal, 23 Pa. St. 85; Wheeler v. Wheeler, 47 Vt. 637; Wilson v. Beauchamp, 50 Miss. 24, which held that "any acts or facts so immediately after the purchase as to be fairly considered a part of the transaction" are admissible.

But this rule is liberally applied. It is sufficient if the declarations are sufficiently close to the transaction to indicate its character. Graves v. Spedden, 46 Md. 527; McDearman v. Hod- nett, 83 Va. 284; Watkins v. Young, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 84.

In Thistlewaite v. Thistlewaite, 132 Ind. 355, it was held that such acts and declarations made several years after the transaction were not admissible as a part of the res gesta, because too remote, and not as declarations against interest, because immaterial in that regard. Citing Harness v. Harness, 49 Ind. 384, and Joyce v. Hamilton, 111 Ind. 163. See the titles ADMISSIONS; RES GESTÆ.

3. Thornton on Gifts and Advancements, § 587; Thistlewaite v. Thistlewaite, 132 Ind. 355; Abbott's Trial Evidence, p. 155.

4. Contemporaneous Memoranda and Charges.—Contemporaneous memoranda and charges in the form of accounts are admissible. Nelson v. Nelson, 90 Mo. 460.

In Pole v. Simmons, 45 Md. 246, a memorandum of calculations made with reference to the property by the donor before executing the paper were held admissible to show intention.

In Law v. Smith, 2 R. I. 244, it was held that proof of declarations alone without charge or memorandum or other proof showing a delivery at the time was not proof of an advancement.

Subsequent Memoranda.—Memoranda and accounts made subsequent to the transfer are not admissible. Nelson v. Nelson, 90 Mo. 464.

5. Duling v. Johnson, 32 Ind. 155; Middleton v. Middleton, 31 Iowa 151.

But in Gilbert v. Wetherell, 2 Sim. & S. 259, where a father furnished a son with ten thousand pounds to engage in trade and took his demand note in return, and on his deathbed the father called for and destroyed the note, the court held that the presumption of a debt was repelled, and that the money was an advancement.

6. Lyon's Estate, 70 Iowa 375. Here it was held that where a testator leaves his property in equal shares to his children, and makes no mention of advancements received, they cannot be charged with advancements, and a contrary intention cannot be proved by parol.

Advancements should not be charged against the distributee where there is a will disposing of the entire estate, unless the will so directs. Coleman v. Smith, 55 Ala. 369; Arnold v. Haronn, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 278.

7. Barker v. Comins, 110 Mass. 477; Eisner v. Koehler, 1 Dem. (N. Y.) 277; Hammett v. Hammett, 38 S. Car. 50.

the will specifies that certain gifts are advancements, they are to be treated as such regardless of their true nature, evidence to prove them otherwise being inadmissible.¹ But the will must be valid² and unrevoked.³

No Reference in Will to Advancements Received.—If property is expressly given as an advancement, but no reference is made to it in the will of the parent, the child will take under the will, and need not account for the property received during the parent's lifetime.⁴

4. Effect of Evidence of Indebtedness—Prima Facie Loan.—The giving of any of the ordinary evidences of indebtedness is prima facie proof that the transaction was a loan, and not an advancement.⁵ Such is the effect of notes,⁶

1. Direction in Will Controlling.—Fox v. Fox, L. R. 11 Eq. 142; Chapman v. Allen, 56 Conn. 152; Blackstone's Appeal, 64 Conn. 415; Hall v. Davis, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 450; Bacon v. Gassett, 13 Allen (Mass.) 334; Lewis v. Lundy (N. J., 1887), 9 Atl. Rep. 883; Watson v. Watson, 6 Watts (Pa.) 254; Green v. Howell, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 203; Hufsmith's Estate, 65 Pa. St. 141; Porter's Appeal, 94 Pa. St. 332; Darne v. Lloyd, 82 Va. 559, 3 Am. St. Rep. 123.

When a specific amount is stated as the amount of the advancement, this is the amount to be deducted. In re Goble's Will (Surrogate Ct.), 10 N. Y. Supp. 19.

Where a will provided that "all notes or other evidences of indebtedness which may be held by me at the time of my death against any of my children or sons-in-law shall be treated by my executors as advancements and deducted from the shares of the respective beneficiaries under this my will," it was decided that where a son received no share of the estate a note of his held by the estate was canceled. Snider v. Snider, 149 Pa. St. 362.

Where the testator provides that his property shall be distributed as though he died intestate, prior advancements are to be reckoned in making the distribution. Raiford v. Raiford, 6 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 490; Stewart v. Stewart, 15 Ch. Div. 544.

In Ex p. Middleton, 42 S. Car. 178, where the will provided: "I do further will that what money I may have advanced from time to time to either of my children shall be deducted from their share of the estate, that all may share equal," money loaned by the testator to a son, secured by a mortgage from the son's wife, which mortgage the testator held until it was barred by the statute of limitations and then satisfied without consideration, was held not to be an advancement. The court cites 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.), p. 219. See infra, this title, Effect of Evidence of Indebtedness.

But in Aden v. Aden, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 453, it was held that when a deed expressly stated that under no consideration was the conveyance to be deemed an advancement, a subsequent will could not make it so.

2. Will must be Valid.—Douglass v. Brice, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 322.

3. Will must be Unrevoked.—Hartwell v. Rice, 1 Gray (Mass.) 587.

4. Property Given as Advancement—No Reference Thereto in Will.—Turner's Appeal, 52 Mich. 398; Chapman v. Allen, 56 Conn. 152.

In this latter case it was held that where a father gave his daughter one thousand dollars and took a receipt which read as follows: "Received of my father $1000 as a part of my portion of his estate at his decease; refer to will," and three years afterwards made a will giving her "$1400 in addition to what I have given her before," the daughter took the fourteen hundred dollars without accounting for the one thousand already received.

Where a will is silent on the subject of advancements, parol evidence is not admissible to show that an advancement made prior to the execution of the will was a satisfaction in whole or in part of a legacy. The rule is otherwise when the advancement was subsequent to the will. In re Peacock's Estate, L. R. 14 Eq. 236; Jones v. Richardson, 5 Met. (Mass.) 247; Turpin v. Turpin, 88 Mo. 337; Van Houten v. Post, 32 N. J. Eq. 709; Camp v. Camp, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 217; Zeiter v. Zeiter, 4 Watts (Pa.) 212, 28 Am. Dec. 698; Kreider v. Boyer, 10 Watts (Pa.) 54.

Receipt.—In Overholser v. Wright, 17 Ohio St. 157, the father conveyed real estate to his son at the price of twelve hundred dollars, and took from the son his note for two hundred dollars, payable to the father with interest, and for the residue a receipt in this form: "Received of B. O. [the father] one thousand dollars for the use without interest received by me, D. O. [the son]." It was held that the sum named in the receipt would not be regarded an advancement, but merely a part of the consideration of the conveyance, payable to the father, but in the hands of the son to use without interest until the father saw fit to demand its payment.

6. Notes—Prima Facie Debt.—Grey v. Grey, 22 Ala. 233; Robinson v. Meseley, 93 Ala. 70; Denman v. McMahan, 37 Ind. 241. See also Stock's Estate, 158 Pa. St. 355.

In Seagrist's Appeal, 10 Pa. St. 424, where a mother said in her will that all moneys advanced to a child were to be deducted from the child's share, and the only thing sought to be charged as an advancement was a note from the child's husband to the mother for which security had been taken, it was held that this was a mere debt of the husband.

In Vaden v. Hance, 1 Head (Tenn.) 300, it was held that notes are prima facie evidence or bonds and mortgages in the ordinary form.¹

Declarations of the Donor made to a third party are not sufficient to overcome this presumption.²

A Statement Signed by the Donee at the time of the receipt of property, that it is taken as an advancement, is binding on him.³

Gifts Intended and Accepted as Advancements will be so considered.⁴

of a debt unless it can be proved that they were given simply as memoranda of advancements or gifts, or that the father did not intend to collect them. See also Johnson v. Ghost, 11 Neb. 414, where it was held that the fact that the son gave his father a statement of the several sums advanced to him did not weaken the presumption of an advancement; and Brook v. Latimer, 44 Kan. 431, 21 Am. St. Rep. 292, which holds that parole evidence is admissible to show that a promissory note was intended merely as a receipt or memorandum.

In House v. Woodard, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 196, a note of a child given for a purchase from a parent was held a debt, not an advancement.

A loan by a mother for which a note is taken, signed by a daughter and her husband, on which interest is payable, has been held not to be an advancement, Ruiz v. Campbell, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 714; but money lent to a daughter to purchase land, for which her husband's note was taken, but of which neither interest nor principal was collected, was held an advancement, Spires v. Langford (Ky., 1894), 25 S. W. Rep. 597.

Where payments made by a father, as surety on a son's notes, are not treated as advancements by the father, they will not be considered such, Reynolds v. Reynolds, 92 Ky. 565; but when a son signs as surety a note given to the father for the purchase of land, which he afterwards conveys to the son, it has been held that the land was not an advancement, White v. Moore, 23 S. Car. 456. Where a father furnished money to a son to start in business, taking the son's demand note in return, and the father afterwards on his deathbed called for and destroyed the note, it was held to be an advancement, and not a debt. Gilbert v. Wetherell, 2 Sim. & S. 259.

Outlawed Note.—In Batton v. Allen, 5 N. J. Eq. 99, 43 Am. Dec. 630, it was held that the mere fact that the notes of a son are outlawed is not enough in itself to show an advancement. But statements of a parent before his decease that outlawed notes are advancements, being admissions against his interest, are admissible as evidence. West v. Bolton, 23 Ga. 531.

Presumption Rebuttable.—The presumption that it is a debt may be rebutted, however. Cutliff v. Boyd, 72 Ga. 302; Peabody v. Peabody, 59 Ind. 556; Harris v. Harris, 69 Ind. 181; Bragg v. Stanford, 82 Ind. 234; Scobee v. Bridges, 87 Ky. 427; Dille v. Love, 61 Md. 603. But it has been held that loose verbal declarations of the parent, unsustained by writing, that money for which he held a bond or note against a child was intended as an advancement or gift, are insufficient to establish it as such. Roland v. Schrack, 29 Pa. St. 125; Yundt's Appeal, 13 Pa. St. 575, 53 Am. Dec. 496; Merkel's Appeal, 39 Pa. St. 340; Harley v. Harley, 57 Md. 340; Levering v. Rittenhouse, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 130.

Where a son's note twenty-four years old was found among the parent's effects, it was held that the presumption of payment rebutted any presumption of an advancement. White v. Moore, 23 S. Car. 456.

1. Bond and Mortgage Prima Facie Debt.—Dawson v. Macknet, 42 N. J. Eq. 633.

In High's Appeal, 21 Pa. St. 283, where a father took a bond from his son, a memorandum found among the father's papers after his death, indicating an intention at the time it was made to release the bond after his decease, was held not enough to change the presumption of a debt.

Where a father paid off a mortgage of his daughter's and took an assignment in blank of the mortgage and note, and held the same until his decease, it was held that this was an advancement. Johnson v. Eaton, 51 Kan. 708.

Declarations of the parent introduced as evidence to rebut the presumption of a debt must be part of the res gestæ, or in corroboration thereof, to be admissible. Frey v. Heydt, 116 Pa. St. 601.

Where the Mortgage of the Child is Invalid, a court of equity will regard the money loaned him as an advancement. Re Willocks' Estate (Pa. O. Ct.), 24 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 446.

Chattel Mortgage.—In Bruce v. Griscom, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 280, 70 N. Y. 612, where a parent advanced money to his child to purchase an interest in a patent right, taking a chattel mortgage on the entire patent as security, it was held a debt, and not an advancement.

2. Declarations of Donor to Third Party.—Harley v. Harley, 57 Md. 340; Porter v. Allen, 3 Pa. St. 390; Miller's Appeal, 107 Pa. St. 221; Homiller's Estate, 17 W. N. C. (Pa.) 238.

3. Statement Signed by Donor that Property is Advancement.—Lockyer v. Savage, 2 Stra. 947; Barham v. McKneely, 89 Ga. 812; Galbraith v. McLain, 84 Ill. 379; Curtis v. Curtis, 40 Me. 24, 63 Am. Dec. 651; Havens v. Thompson, 26 N. J. Eq. 383; Brands v. DeWitt, 44 N. J. Eq. 545, 6 Am. St. Rep. 909; Stover v. Eycleshimer, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 84; *McDonald v. Thus a statement signed by a son-in-law reading as follows: "Received of J. S. $500, it being part of my wife's portion," found among the notes held by the intestate after his decease, was held binding. Hartwell v. Rice, 1 Gray (Mass.) 587.

Release of All Claims against Ancestor's Estate.—A release in full of all claims against the ancestor's estate, given on the receipt of advancements by the heir sui juris, is binding and bars any future claim.¹

5. Entries in Books—Insufficient to Show an Advancement.—Mere entries of the transfer of property or payment of money, in the account books of the parent, are not sufficient in themselves to show an advancement, but evidence aliunde is required for that purpose.²

It is otherwise if they expressly state that the transfer or payments were by way of advancement,³ or if made in a family book kept for entries of advancements.⁴

Evidence of Intention.—Evidence of the parent's intention in making unambiguous entries is inadmissible.⁵

Entries may be Shown to be False or Excessive.—The entries may be shown to be false or excessive, however.⁶

Amounts may be Shown to have been Repaid.—Or the amounts so entered may be shown to have been repaid during the lifetime of the intestate, and so discharged.⁷

VII CHANGE OF GIFT TO ADVANCEMENT, AND VICE VERSA—Donor may Change Advancement to Gift without Donee's Consent.—A donor may change an advancement to an absolute gift without the knowledge or consent of the donee.⁸

May Not Change Gift to Advancement.—He cannot, however, reverse the process and deprive the donee of property already his, by changing a gift to an advancement.⁹

Changing Debts to Advancements.—As the proceeding is necessarily advantageous to the donee, it has been held that the donor may of his own motion change debts into advancements,¹⁰ while other authorities take the contrary view, on the theory that both parties to a contract must assent to any change in its

3. Payments Expressly Stated to be Advancements.—Clark v. Warner, 6 Conn. 355. In this case the account began: "A, my son, Dr. The following articles that may be charged are to go towards his portion." The court held that the articles charged were to be treated as advancements, and that the condition of affairs was not changed by a subsequent entry: "To the contrary, by a gift, I balance my son A's account."

4. Entries in Family Books Wherein Record of Advancements is Kept.—Bulkeley v. Noble, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 337.

The book must be one other than one used for the ordinary accounts of debit and credit. Brown v. Brown, 16 Vt. 197.

It is immaterial that the child had no knowledge of the entry. Hengst's Estate, 6 Watts (Pa.) 86.

Where a testator provides in his will that all entries in his books are to be considered advancements, and two years afterwards makes in his books an entry that all accounts of advancements have been settled in full, no such advancements are chargeable. Webster v. Gray (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 266.

terms, and that it is the right of every debtor to pay his obligation according to the original agreement.¹

Advancement Irrevocable without Donee's Consent.—An advancement once made cannot be recalled without the donee's consent.²

Will Referring to Gift or Debt as Advancement.—Where a will refers to a previous gift or debt as an advancement, its terms will, as a general rule, prevail.³

VIII. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF PARTIES TO ADVANCEMENTS—Resettling Terms of Advancements.—By mutual agreement the parties in interest may resettle the terms of an advancement after the death of the donor.⁴

Release by Donee of Interest in Ancestor's Estate.—It is generally held that the one advanced can by a release executed during the lifetime of the donor bar all his rights in the estate,⁵ although this has been doubted.⁶

Donee need Not Accept Advancement—Effect of Acceptance.—A donee is not obliged to accept an advancement, but having enjoyed the benefits he cannot deny that he took it as such.⁷

Grandchildren Account for Advancements to Their Parent.—Any one inheriting from the donor through the donee takes subject to advancements made to the donee.⁸

Where a will provided that advancements were to be deducted, and a subsequent codicil revoked the devise to one son and gave his share to the daughter-in-law, the wife of said son, it was held that she took it charged with the advancements to the son. Buehler's Appeal, 100 Pa. St. 385.

Where a will said that a daughter might take a legacy if her husband would pay to the estate certain sums, it was held that the daughter might consider these sums advance-ments, and that the executor could not re-cover them by suit. Darne v. Lloyd, 82 Va. 859, 3 Am. St. Rep. 123.

In Nolan v. Bolton, 25 Ga. 352, where the testator said: "It is my will * * * that each one shall be charged with * * * all money or property they have received from me," it was held that the legatees must account for everything received, whether it was a loan or an advancement. And in McAlister v. Butterfield, 31 Ind. 25, where the testator stated in his will that one was to be charged with a certain amount as an advancement, and he denied that he had ever received any sum at all, it was held that the will was to be followed, and evidence was not admissible to contradict it.

A Purchaser of an Heir's Interest after his ancestor's decease takes the property subject to all advancements to the heir.¹

Purchaser of Expectancy.—And the same is true in the case of the purchaser of an expectancy.²

They may Likewise Compel the Other Heirs to account for advancements received, in the same way as the heir could have done.³

Transfer in Fraud of Creditors.—If a transfer was made to defraud creditors, it will not stand as an advancement, even though, had such not been the case, there would have been a presumption in its favor;⁴ property received by way of advancement being acquired subject to the donor's debts.⁵

No Right of Dower.—The widow has no dower in the property advanced,⁶ the donor having, by the act of advancing, divested himself of all interest in the property.

Right of Administrator.—It being, therefore, no part of the estate of the intestate, the administrator is not entitled to it as such;⁷ neither is he a party in who has accepted a provision in full of his share of the estate. Simpson v. Simpson, 114 Ill. 603.

Younger Children Otherwise Unprovided for.—But it has been held that where there is a defective advancement to younger children, otherwise unprovided for, a court of equity will supply the defects. Ward v. Webber, 1 Wash. (Va.) 274.

Rhode Island.—Law v. Smith, 2 R. I. 244.

Tennessee.—Burton v. Dickinson, 3 Verg. (Tenn.) 112; Moore v. Burrow, 89 Tenn. 101.

Texas.—Scooby v. Sweatt, 28 Tex. 713.

Virginia.—Knight v. Yarborough, 4 Rand. (Va.) 566.

West Virginia.—Kyle v. Conrad, 25 W. Va. 760.

The Value of a Life Estate reserved by a father should not be deducted in determining its value under New York Stat., pt. 2, c. 2, § 25, which provides that the value of property shall be reckoned at its worth when the gift is made. Palmer v. Culbertson (Ct. App.), 62 N. Y. St. Rep. 164.

In South Carolina, under the statutes, it is held that the value at the time of the death of the donor is the value to be taken. See Wilson v. Kelly, 21 S. Car. 537, with cases cited therein.

As to the value of advancements under the Alabama Code, § 2265, see Turner v. Kelly, 67 Ala. 173.

Worthless Property.—Where stocks advanced to a child were worthless at the time of the advancement, they are not to be charged as of any value, even though the donor makes an entry in his account book giving them a value. Marsh v. Gilbert, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 465.

Price Paid by Parent.—Where a parent purchases land in the name of a child, the purchase price paid is the value of the ad-be reckoned at its value at the time the donee came into actual possession and enjoyment.¹

Value Fixed by Will.—When the value is fixed by the will, this controls in the absence of fraud.²

Rents and Profits.—Rents and profits cannot be charged as part of the advancement;³ nor improvements, whether made by the donor himself⁴ or by the donee.⁵

But Property Destroyed or Made Valueless previous to the donor's death, while in the donee's possession, is so chargeable.⁶

Life Insurance Policy.—Where a father has his life insured for his child's benefit, or for the benefit of his estate, and subsequently assigns it to the child, it has been held in one instance that the value of the policy at the time it was taken out, with the amount of premiums paid added, should be taken as the vancement. Phillips v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Pa.) 158, 36 Am. Dec. 158.

Annuities.—Annuities brought into hotchpot as advancements are valued at the date when granted. Hatfield v. Minet, 46 L. J. Ch. 812. See generally the title ANNUITIES.

Life Estates.—As to the rule for computing the value of life estates, see Brown v. Dortch, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 740; Bowles v. Winchester, 13 Bush (Ky.) 1.

Consideration in Deed.—The consideration mentioned in a deed by a father to a daughter-in-law, intended as an advancement to a son, was held final as to the worth of the property in estimating the value of the advancement. Palmer v. Culbertson (Ct. App.), 62 N. Y. St. Rep. 164.

1. Advancement in Future—Valued at Time of Possession.—Hook v. Hook, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 526; Stevenson v. Martin, 11 Bush (Ky.) 485; Clark v. Willson, 27 Md. 693; Andrews v. Andrews, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 234; Chinn v. Murray, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 379.

Thus in Wilks v. Greer, 14 Ala. 437, where a father conveyed some slaves by deed to his daughter, reserving a life estate therein to himself and wife, it was held that the daughter was not chargeable with the value of the slaves until the time they were delivered to her, and their value was their value at that time.

In Barber v. Taylor, 9 Dana (Ky.) 84, it was held that the value was to be taken at the time when the gift became complete and irrevocable in law and equity. See also Shiver v. Brock, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 137; Haynes v. Jones, 2 Head (Tenn.) 372; Pigg v. Carroll, 89 Ill. 206; Meadows v. Meadows, 11 Ired. (N. Car.) 148; Puryear v. Cabell, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 260.

Donee Enjoying the Benefit before Advancement Perfected.—But when the donee enjoyed the benefits of the gift before it was perfected, he was chargeable with the value at the time he began to enjoy the same. Pigg v. Carroll, 89 Ill. 206; Hook v. Hook, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 528; O'Neal v. Breecheen, 5 Baxt. (Tenn.) 605.

When a child's debt to her father was evidenced by her note, and the father's will directed that previous advancements, as evidenced by notes, should be deducted from the child's share, and she, subsequently to the making of the will, reduced the amount of such advancement by payments on the note, it was held that she was not chargeable with the full amount of the note. Spires v. Langford, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 792.

3. Rents and Profits Not Chargeable.—Ison v. Ison, 5 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 15; Hughey v. Eichelberger, 11 S. Car. 36; Ridley v. McNairy, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 174; Williams v. Stonestreet, 3 Rand. (Va.) 559; Kyle v. Conrad, 25 W. Va. 760.

But the Use of Land may be considered as an advancement. Robinson v. Robinson, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 392; Biehn v. Biehn, 18 Grant's Ch. (Ont.) 497; Hovey v. Ferguson, 18 Grant's Ch. (Ont.) 499.

Equalizing Shares According to Direction of Will.—Rents and profits may be charged when it is necessary to make shares equal by direction of the will. Jordan v. Miller, 47 Ga. 346; Wakefield v. Gilleland, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 845.

The Accrued Value of an Estate could not be charged against the donee. Beckwith v. Butler, 1 Wash. (Va.) 224.

Use of Slaves.—It has been held in South Carolina that the use of slaves could not be charged as an advancement, since, after they had been given, their use belonged exclusively to the donee. Wilson v. Kelly, 21 S. Car. 535.

Where a Life Estate in Slaves was Given, only the reasonable value of the life estate could be treated as an advancement, not the use and profits of their labor. Cawthon v. Copledge, 1 Swan. (Tenn.) 487.

4. Improvements Made by the Donor.—Powell v. Powell, 9 Dana (Ky.) 12; Knight v. Yarrowborough, 4 Rand. (Va.) 569.

value of the advancement,¹ and in another that the true value is the net amount received after the death.²

2. Interest.—Interest is not chargeable on advancements up to the date of the donor's death,³ even though the advancement consisted of a debt due from the donee.⁴ It is to be charged, however, for the period between the death of the testator and the distribution.⁵

A testator in a will which provides for the charging of advancements may prescribe that interest be charged.⁶

X. APPLICATION OF THE DOCTRINE OF ADVANCEMENTS—Hotchpot.—While one advanced cannot be compelled to bring the property into hotchpot, he must do so if he would share in the distribution.⁷

Intention—Agreement.—A mere intention to elect to retain advancements and not to claim under the distribution, especially when not acted on to the prejudice of another, will not prevent one advanced from claiming his distributive share;⁸ but an agreement to do so is binding.⁹

When Donee must Act.—And the one advanced must exercise his rights within a reasonable time.¹⁰

If He is under Disability, a court of equity will appoint a guardian,¹¹ and the course most beneficial to his interests will be taken.¹²

And even where a receipt given by the donee stated that the payments were to bear interest from a period earlier than the donor's death, it was held that interest could be reckoned only from the date of the death of the donor. Roberson v. Nail, 85 Tenn. 124.

In Pennsylvania interest is chargeable on advancements from the time of filing the executor's account to the time of distribution. Ford's Estate, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 97. Land Sold by Parent to Child for Less than its Value.—Proof that the land sold by a parent to a child was worth more than the price paid therefor is not alone reason enough to order the child to bring it as advancement into hotchpot. Merriman v. Lacefield, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 209.

Refusing to Come in at Original Division.—Even though the one advanced refuses to come in at the original division, he may do so at a subsequent division, as of dower lands.¹

Effect of Bringing Property into Hotchpot.—A donee does not give up his title to property by bringing it into hotchpot. It is brought in only for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not it amounts to his full share in the estate.² Whether or not it is equal is a question of fact for the jury.³ An adjudication by a proper probate court is binding upon the parties in subsequent proceedings.⁴

ADVANTAGE.—See note 5.

ADVANTAGEOUSLY.—The term “advantageously” means beneficially, conveniently, profitably and gainfully.⁶

ADVENTURE. (See also the title MARINE INSURANCE.)—In marine insurance an adventure means “either one of the perils insured against, as in the clause in a policy commencing ‘Touching the adventures and perils’; or the liability or risk undertaken by the insurers, as in the clause in a policy commencing, ‘Beginning the adventure upon the said goods and merchandise’; or the speculation or undertaking to protect which the assured effected the insurance;”⁷ or a subject of insurance which has been exposed to the risks insured against.”⁸

A widow who under her husband's will held land and slaves, which were to be divided equally between herself and her children, but with a power to advance to the children the property at such times and in such kinds of property as her judgment might dictate, advanced to two of the children some slaves and more than their aliquot share of land, intending to give them a balance still due from the slave property. It was held that the unexpected circumstance of the destruction of the slave property by the war did not entitle the children not advanced to a redistribution of the land, or an account of the slave property which went into the hands of the children advanced. 5. Advantage in the Sense of Priority.—A United States statute gives to the surety who has discharged a bond for duty to the United States the advantage secured to the United States. It was held that the word advantage was used as synonymous with “preference and priority,” and that the surety was not entitled to other advantages to which the United States would have been entitled in a suit against the principal. U. S. v. Preston, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 451. See, generally, the titles REVENUE LAWS; SUBROGATION; SURETSHIP.

6. Garman v. Potts, 135 Pa. St. 521. In this case a lessee agreed to mine so much ore at a certain rate, provided the ore could be advantageously mined. The plaintiff contended that the only effect of this clause was to release the lessee from hidden defects. The trial court instructed that the lessee was not liable under the lease unless the ore could be advantageously—that is, beneficially, conveniently, profitably and gainfully—mined. The appellate court said: “The court below gave to the word advantageously its common and popular meaning. It is not a technical word or term of art, and the parties must be presumed to have used it in its known sense.”

I. DEFINITION.—An adverse and hostile possession is one held for the possessor as distinguished from one held in subordination to the right of another; in other words, it is a possession inconsistent with the possession, or right of possession, by another.¹ As applied to real estate, it is an actual, visible, and exclusive appropriation of land, commenced and continued under a claim of right, with the intent to assert such claim against the true owner, and accompanied by such an invasion of the rights of the opposite party as to give him a cause of action.²

Adverse User.—An adverse user means such a use of property as the owner himself would make, asking permission of no one, and disregarding all other claims to it so far as they conflict with this use.³

II. WHAT CONSTITUTES ADVERSE POSSESSION—1. General Principles—a. OUSTER—CLAIM OF TITLE.—In order to constitute an effective adverse possession there must be an ouster of the real owner, followed by an actual, notorious, and continuous possession by the adverse claimant, with an intention on his part to claim in hostility to the title of the real owner.⁴

b. INTENT.—The intention with which possession is taken or held is re-

Other Definitions.—In Magee v. Magee, 37 Miss. 152, Smith, C.J., quoting Angell on Limitations 410, said: "A disseisin and adverse holding is an actual, visible, and exclusive appropriation of land, commenced and continued under a claim of right; either under an openly avowed claim or under a constructive claim, arising from the acts and circumstances attending the appropriation, to hold the land against him who was seised." And see Gildehaus v. Whiting, 39 Kan. 711.

"It is a possession not under the legal proprietor, but entered into without his consent, either directly or indirectly given. It is a possession by which he is disseised and ousted of the lands so possessed." Ingersoll, J., in Bryan v. Atwater, 5 Day (Conn.) 181, 5 Am. Dec. 136, quoted in French v. Pearce, 8 Conn. 443, 21 Am. Dec. 680.

The term designates a possession in opposition to the true title and real owner, and implies that it commenced in wrong—by ouster or disseisin—and is maintained against right. It must be openly and notoriously in defiance of the actual title, and such as converts the estate into a mere right of entry or action. Alexander v. Polk, 39 Miss. 755.

It is the enjoyment of land or such estate as lies in grant, under circumstances which indicate that such enjoyment has been commenced and continued under assertion or color of right on the part of the possessor. Wallace v. Duffield, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 527, 7 Am. Dec. 660; Omaha, etc., Smelting, etc., Co. v. Tabor, 13 Colo. 53; Smith v. Burtis, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 174.

Adverse possession is a possession inconsistent with the right of the true owner. In other words, where a person possesses property in a manner in which he is not entitled to possess it, and without anything to show that he possesses it otherwise than as owner, that is, with the intention of excluding all persons from it, including the rightful owner, he is in adverse possession of it. For example, if a person is in possession of a tract of land of another, his possession thereof is adverse unless there is something to show that it is consistent with a recognition of such other person's title. Sweet Law Dict., tit. Possession; Morse v. Seibold, 147 Ill. 318, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.), 225.

2. Parker v. Banks, 79 N. Car. 480; Buswell on Lim. and Adv. Poss., § 237. And see Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U. S. 524.

Adverse possession of land may be said to be founded in trespass, but it must be a trespass constantly continued by acts on the premises. It must challenge the right to all the world. Olewine v. Messmore, 128 Pa. St. 484.

3. Blanchard v. Moulton, 63 Me. 434; Cox v. Forrest, 60 Md. 74. See also French v. Marstin, 24 N. H. 440, 57 Am. Dec. 294.

4. Must be Ouster of True Owner and Claim of Right.—Jackson v. Huntington, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 439; Pickett v. Doe, 74 Ala. 131; Davis v. Bowmar, 55 Miss. 765.

When the possession is without color of title there must be an actual occupancy. Dothard v. Denson, 75 Ala. 482.

In Dixon v. Cook, 47 Miss. 220, it is said: "To constitute adverse possession, two facts must concur: First, there must be an entry under color of right, claiming title, hostile to the true owner and the world; second, that entry must be followed by possession and appropriation of the premises, to use publicly and notoriously, so that the other claimants may take notice and others may be cognizant of the fact." See also Huntington v. Allen, 44 Miss. 668; Dean v. Tucker, 58 Miss. 487.

It is the occupation with intent to claim against the true owner which renders the entry and occupation adverse. Magee v. Magee, 37 Miss. 138.

Must be Some One to Dispute Right.—Adverse possession cannot arise until there is some one to dispute the right claimed, and the mere occupancy by an abutting owner of the space designed for an alley, without claim or color of title, does not establish an adverse possession until the interests of some one else are affected by it. Marble v. Price, 54 Mich. 466.

garded as a controlling factor in determining whether or not it is adverse.¹ There must be an intention to claim the title as owner, and in derogation of the rights of the true owner.²

1. Intention Controlling—Alabama.—Brown v. Cockerell, 33 Ala. 45; Alexander v. Wheeler, 69 Ala. 332.

Illinois.—McNamara v. Seaton, 82 Ill. 498. Indiana.—Doe v. Hearick, 14 Ind. 242; Price v. Hall (Ind., 1895), 39 N. E. Rep. 941, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 227.

Texas.—Schleicher v. Gatlin, 85 Tex. 270; Norton v. Collins, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 272.

Vermont.—Morse v. Churchill, 41 Vt. 649; Spaulding v. Warren, 25 Vt. 316.

West Virginia.—Flynn v. Lee, 31 W. Va. 487.

An adverse possession depends upon the intention with which the possession was taken and held. Hudson v. Putney, 14 W. Va. 561.

The quo animo must be established as well as the fact. Jackson v. Huntington, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 439.

An entry by one man on the land of another is an ouster of the legal possession arising from the title, or is not, according to the intention with which it is done: if made under claim and color of right, it is an ouster; otherwise it is a mere trespass. The intention guides the entry and fixes its character. Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 41.

Time of Intention to Claim Title.—The intention to acquire title by adverse possession must be entertained at the time the statute commences to run. Larwell v. Stevens, 2 McCrary (U. S.) 311.

The Acts and Declarations of the Parties Owning the Estate, made after thirty years, which have a tendency to show their motives and views during the time of their occupancy, are proper to show the nature of the occupancy, and rebut the inference which would otherwise follow from the fact of possession. Church v. Burghardt, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 327.

2. Intention to Claim as Owner.—Clemens v. Meyer, 44 La. Ann. 390; Stille v. Shull, 41 La. Ann. 816; Ringo v. Woodruff, 43 Ark. 486; East Hampton v. Kirk, 84 N. Y. 220, 38 Am. Rep. 505; Casey v. Dunn, 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 381; Doherty v. Matsell, 119 N. Y. 646; Grube v. Wells, 34 Iowa 148; Abbott v. Abbott, 51 Me. 584; Pharis v. Jones, 122 Mo. 125; Bradley v. West, 60 Mo. 33; Knowlton v. Smith, 36 Mo. 507, 88 Am. Dec. 152; McDonald v. Fox, 20 Nev. 364; Shaw v. Schoonover, 130 Ill. 448; Forsod v. Golson, 77 Tex. 666.

Occupation in Belief that Land is Vacant.—Occupation with the belief that the land is vacant, and with intent to acquire title from the state, is not adverse possession. Schleicher v. Gatlin, 85 Tex. 270; Mhoon v. Cain, 77 Tex. 316. But see Converse v. Ringer, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 51.

Intention to Hold until the True Owner Makes Claim.—Nor is it adverse where the possession is taken with intent to hold until the true owner claims it. Smeberg v. Cunningham, 96 Mich. 378, 35 Am. St. Rep. 613.

Ignorance of Adverse Rights.—In Silver v. Hansen, 77 Cal. 579, it is held that the fact that one in exclusive possession under a claim of title does not suppose that he is interfering with anybody's rights does not defeat his right to claim by adverse possession.

Animus Furandi Not Essential.—It is not necessary, to constitute a disseisin, that the intention of the disseisor must in all cases be to wrongfully possess himself of property known to him to belong to another. The animus furandi is not essential. Cases not infrequently arise where a disseisin is innocently committed under a mistake as to the validity of the title, but the title must be asserted. Cases may arise where a man may be under a mistake as to the true extent of his domain, yet if he intentionally claims title to all of which he has possession, his neighbors may be barred by lapse of time from asserting their rights. Worcester v. Lord, 56 Me. 273, 96 Am. Dec. 456.

Presumption of Intent.—A survey unaccompanied by any other act of user and occupation will not justify a presumption that the party went upon the land with the palpable intent to claim the possession as his own. Beatty v. Mason, 30 Md. 409.

Motive.—But the motive of the one in possession claiming title is immaterial. Omaha, etc., Land, etc., Co. v. Hansen, 32 Neb. 449.

The Intention must be Manifest.—Culver v. Rhodes, 87 N. Y. 348; Marcy v. Marcy, 6 Met. (Mass.) 360; Hart v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Pa.) 185, 36 Am. Dec. 166; Prescott v. Nevers, 4 Mason (U. S.) 330.

But it need Not be Expressed; it may be in-

Occupation by Mistake—Boundaries.—If one, though by mistake, encloses the land of another and claims it as his own, his actual possession will work a disseisin;¹ but if through inadvertence or ignorance of the division line, he includes part of an adjoining tract within his enclosure, making no claim, however, of the land to the fence, but with the intent only to claim to the true line, his possession is not adverse.² If, however, there is an intent to claim ferred from the manner of occupancy. Conyers v. Kenan, 4 Ga. 308, 48 Am. Dec. 226; Dean v. Goddard, 55 Minn. 290.

Evidence—Improvements.—Permanent and valuable improvements made upon the land and used by the claimant would tend to show an intention to hold adversely. Hamilton v. West, 63 Mo. 93.

Taking Possession by Mistake of Lot Adjoining That Named in Deed.—Where a party received a deed to a lot of land, but took possession of an adjoining lot by mistake and claimed it as his own, a possession continued by him and his successors for more than twenty years was held to have ripened into a title. Ricker v. Hibbard, 73 Me. 105.

Taking Possession by Fraud or Mistake of Another Lot of Same Vendor.—But where a purchaser, through fraud or mistake, enters upon another tract of the same vendor, the entry is under a claim of title assumed to have been derived from the vendor, and is in subordination to the latter's title. Farish v. Coon, 40 Cal. 33.

Tenant of Two Lessors Erecting Division Fence for Convenience—Subsequent Purchase and Adverse Claim.—Where a tenant of two adjoining lots, owned by different lessors, divides them, for convenience in cultivation, by a fence not on the true division line, and afterwards purchases the lot thus enlarged, his occupancy of the ground taken from the other lot cannot be set up as an adverse possession. *Betts v. One Claiming Title Only to a Specified Line, Capable of being Ascertained, cannot, by ignorantly having possession up to another line, acquire a title by disseisin to land lying between the two, which he does not intentionally claim. Worcester v. Lord, 56 Me. 274, 96 Am. Dec. 456; Politt v. Bland (Ky., 1893), 22 S. W. Rep. 842.

Where the Proprietors of a Township Surveyed through Mistake a portion of land without the limits of their grant, and conveyed the same, describing it as within their limits, a grantee entering and occupying such premises with a claim of ownership, and adversely to all others, will acquire a title by disseisin by lapse of time. The rule that occupation by mistake does not give right, is not applicable as against the grantee, who is not supposed to be familiar with the rights of his grantor, and who must be considered as intending to claim what he has purchased. Otis v. Moulton, 20 Me. 205.

Adjoining Owners, for Convenience in Making Fence, Depart from True Line.—Where adjoining owners, having a well defined and recognized straight line between their lands, built together a zigzag fence wherever they could build the cheapest and easiest, following rocks and ledges where they could do so, and not pretending to build on the true line, the possession to the fence was held not to be available to either owner to gain title beyond the true line. Morse v. Churchill, 41 Vt. 649.

Intention to Remove Fence Back to Another Line.—Where an adjoining proprietor more than once said that he intended to move his fence back to another line, his possession was not adverse. Crutchlow v. Beatty (Ky., 1893), 23 S. W. Rep. 960.

A Temporary Fence, built merely as an enclosure until the true line can be ascertained, will not make the possession adverse. Hockmoth v. Des Grand Champs, 71 Mich. 520; Bird v. Stark, 66 Mich. 654.

Estoppel.—Where the fence on the old line has been always disputed and the possessor has twice insisted on a resurvey of the line, he is estopped from claiming beyond the true boundary. Fairfield v. Barrette, 73 Wis. 463.

Unintentional Encroachment of House.—Where the owner of a city lot undertook to erect a building upon his own ground, but by inadvertence and ignorance of the true line of his lot placed a portion of the wall four inches over the dividing line and upon the adjoining lot, but with no intention then or afterward to claim any portion of such adjoining lot as his own, and the adjoining lot-owner had no knowledge of such encroachment, the possession thus taken was held not to be adverse. Winn v. Abeles, 35 Kan. 85, 57 Am. Rep. 138.

Centre of Wall—Entry.—Where a stone wall separating the lands of adjoining-owners, A and B, was wholly upon the land of A, while B held possession of his land up to the wall, believing the centre of the wall to be the dividing line, but with no knowledge of a similar claim on the part of A, and no other possession of the ground covered by the wall, it was held that there was not sufficient adverse possession to vest in B a title to the centre of the wall. *Huntington v. Where the Division Line between Two Adjoining Estates is Indefinite or Unascertained, the owners may effectually agree upon the true boundary, and the line thus ascertained will control their deeds. A jury may infer a practical location of a disputed boundary line by agreement, from long acquiescence less than the period necessary to constitute adverse possession, and from acts and declarations of the parties. Turner v. Baker, 64 Mo. 218, 27 Am. Rep. 226, and note. See Hayes v. Livingston, 34 Mich. 384, 22 Am. Rep. 533; Baldwin v. Brown, 16 N. Y. 363.

Where Owners of Adjoining Lots Open an Alley, lying one half on each lot, and build barns and fences thereon, and acquiesce in deeds describing the alley, etc., it constitutes an adverse possession under a claim of right, and by user for twenty years each acquires an easement in the premises of the other which neither can lawfully disturb, and an injunction forbidding the obstruction of such alley by one of the adjoining owners against the other will be granted. Nicholls v. Wentworth, 100 N. Y. 455.

Fence within the Line.—Adjoining owners orally agreed that one of them should keep up a division fence, but should keep it entirely within his own bounds. After twenty years the fence was moved to the boundary, and ejectment was brought for the strip of land cut off by its removal. It was held that the action would not lie. As the oral agreement was void and the owner might have withdrawn from it, the strip was never held adversely to the owner, whose title was recognized in the agreement and always afterward. White v. Hapeman, 43 Mich. 267, 38 Am. Rep. 178; Hagey v. Detweiler, 35 Pa. St. 409.

Evidence of Agreement.—In Jones v. Smith, 64 N. Y. 180, where it appeared that the adjoining owners for more than fifty years had occupied each on his own side up to an old fence, which fence had been put up and maintained as a division fence for more than twenty years by an agreement, each owner keeping up one half, it was held that this was sufficient evidence of a practical location and an acquiescence in the fence as a boundary line, and of a possession of more than twenty years in pursuance of such location, to require the submission of that question to the jury.

A License to Occupy the land in dispute is not equivalent to an agreement upon the boundary line. Wright v. Lassiter, 71 Tex. 640.

Estoppel.—An adjoining owner acquiescing for sixteen years in a boundary line is estopped from disputing it. Burris v. Fitch, 76 Cal. 395.

Mistake—No Intent to Claim.—But if by mistake adjoining owners agree upon a line with no intent to claim beyond the true line, they will not hold adversely to each other. Houx v. Batteen, 68 Mo. 84; Majors v. Rice, 57 Mo. 384; Devyr v. Schaefer, 55 N. Y. 446; Irvine v. Adler, 44 Cal. 559; White v. Hapeman, 43 Mich. 267, 38 Am. Rep. 178; Gaude v. Williams, 47 La. Ann. 1325; Heinz v. Cramer, 84 Iowa 497. And see Bunce v. Bidwell, 43 Mich. 542.

Where a line or corner is in fact certain, and an erroneous line or corner is by mistake made, the acts of the parties in making such mistake, and the fencing by both parties, in accordance with such mistake, do not operate in the nature of an estoppel in pais to forfeit the estate. What subsequent acquiescence after the mistake is discovered, or what gross neglect afterward to assert a right to correct it, amounting to fraud, will conclude the owner, is another question. McAfferty v. Conover, 7 Ohio St. 99, 70 Am. Dec. 57; Bobo v. Richmond, 25 Ohio St. 115.

Question for Jury.—The question of the nature of the possession, and of the claims of the respective parties, is one of fact for the jury exclusively. Bunce v. Bidwell, 43 Mich. 542.

2. Essential Elements—a. IN GENERAL.—There are five essential elements necessary to constitute an effective adverse possession: first, the possession must be hostile and under a claim of right; second, it must be actual; third, it must be open and notorious; fourth, it must be exclusive; and fifth, it must be continuous. If any of these constituents is wanting, the possession will not effect a bar of the legal title.¹

judges, if a possession which was permissive and entirely consistent with the title of another, should silently bar that title." Marshall, C.J., in Kirk v. Smith, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 241.

If the original entry be not with the intention of claiming the premises, and the possession is continued by the permission of the owner and with the understanding that he is at all times to be regarded as the proprietor, notwithstanding such possession, it is not adverse, and can never ripen into title. Chance v. Branch, 58 Tex. 493.

And the same is true of the possession of one claiming under such a party. Butler v. Bertrand, 97 Mich. 59.

In Murphy v. Reynaud, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 470, it is said: "Consent of the owner of land to its occupancy by another does not of itself prevent such occupancy from being adverse, if the other essentials of an adverse holding appear. It is the absence of claim or recognition of the true owner on the part of the possessor which prevents an occupancy which would otherwise be adverse from assuming that character. Such recognition does not necessarily result from an acquiescence in the use by the owner, but it is to be inferred from the conduct of the possessor." See also Cooper v. McBride, 4 Houst. (Del.) 461.

Instances of Permissive Possession.—When there is a gradual subsidence of the water in a mill-pond because of the want of repair of the dam, and the owner of a pasture contiguous to the pond turns his cattle in, and they wander from the pasture over the bottom of the old pond, such possession of the land made dry by the water receding as the dam lowered would indicate that it was not adverse, but permissive. Eddy v. St. Mars, 53 Vt. 462, 38 Am. Rep. 695.

Where one who is in possession of land is present at its sale by another, and makes no claim to it, such possession continued after the sale will be deemed to be subordinate and friendly to the purchaser. Wikieron v. Thompson, 82 Mo. 317.

Where adjoining land-owners cultivate and occupy a part of the right of way granted by Congress as an easement to a railroad company, such possession must be regarded as permissive only, and not hostile or adverse so as to confer title. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Kindred, 43 Kan. 134.

A licensee's possession is permissive. Dean v. Tucker, 58 Miss. 487; Devyr v. Schaefer, 55 N. Y. 446. And the possession of a transferee of a licensee is not adverse unless so declared and brought to the knowledge of the licensor. Cameron v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. (Minn., 1895), 61 N. W. Rep. 814.

The possession of a care-taker of the land is permissive. Heward v. O'Donohoe, 19 Can. Supreme Ct. 341.

Possession as to Strangers.—But permissive possession, with parol executory conditions attached, may be adverse as against third persons or strangers. Dean v. Goddard, 55 Minn. 290.

The claim must be asserted as a matter of right, so as to be notice to the true owner. Glencoe v. Wadsworth (Minn., 1892), 51 N. W. Rep. 377; Sharon v. Tucker, 144 U. S. 533.

Hence an occupant of land, who enters upon it under no claim of right, and ignorant of the true owner, cannot avail himself of the statute of limitations during any portion of the period in which he is seeking the owner with a view of purchasing title. Mhoon v. Cain, 77 Tex. 316.

The possession of a mere trespasser, entering and holding without claim of right, is not adverse to the rightful owner, and does not ripen into a title by lapse of time, nor invalidate a conveyance by the owner to another person. Bernstein v. Humes, 78 Ala. 134; Clarke v. Courtney, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 320.

A possession is not shown to be adverse if it does not clearly appear under what claim, whether of title or otherwise, the party was in possession. McCabe v. Kenny, 52 Hun (N. Y.) 514.

To constitute the foundation of an adverse possession, the entry must be accompanied by a claim of title. It does not matter how defective the claim or color may be, if that is the right under which the disseisin is made, and if the possession is hostile to the real owner. Gladney v. Barton, 51 Miss. 220; Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 51; Green v. Neal, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 291.

Mere naked possession, no matter how long, without a claim of right, never ripens into a good title, but is regarded as being held for the true owners. Creekmur v. Creekmur, 75 Va. 130; Maple v. Stevenson, 122 Ind. 368.

Taking possession to hold until the land is put upon the market is not adverse. Warren v. Frederichs, 83 Tex. 380. Or so long as the party can do so without the payment of rent. Smeberg v. Cunningham, 96 Mich. 378.

Enlargement of Claim.—The claim of title with which entry is made cannot be afterwards enlarged, except by acts equivalent to a new entry and new claim of adverse possession. Furlong v. Garrett, 44 Wis. 111; Pepper v. O'Dowd, 39 Wis. 538. But if the acts of the party are sufficient, he may, although entering in privity with the true owner, dis sever such relation, and claim by adverse title without first surrendering the possession. Creekmur v. Creekmur, 75 Va. 430.

Possession under Parol Gift.—Possession taken under a parol gift is adverse in the donee against the donor, and if continued for the necessary period, perfects the title of the former as against the latter. The donor in such case not only knows that the possession is adverse, but intends it to be so; and there is no occasion for any notoriety. Clark v. Gilbert, 39 Conn. 94; Lee v. Thompson, 99 Ala. 95, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 280.

Purchase at Sheriff's Sale.—The possession of a purchaser at a sheriff's sale claiming under his deed, which purports to convey the interest of the judgment debtor, is only adverse as to the interest conveyed, and will not bar the wife's dower. Cowan v. Lindsay, 30 Wis. 586.

Verbal Assertion of Claim.—Verbal statements as to how one claims are not essential when all his acts are such as to indicate ownership. Kockemann v. Bickel, 92 Cal. 665; Barnes v. Light, 116 N. Y. 34; Sherry v. Frecking, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 452; Faloon v. Simshauser, 130 Ill. 649; James v. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co., 91 Ill. 554; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Houghton, 126 Ill. 233, 9 Am. St. Rep. 581; Magee v. Magee, 37 Miss. 138; Kohlheim v. Harrison, 34 Miss. 457.

As against a Stranger, mere possession is sufficient. Fugate v. Pierce, 49 Mo. 441.

1. Must be No Recognition of Title in Another.—Tomlinson v. Lynch, 32 Mo. 160; Roggenkamp v. Converse, 15 Neb. 105; Mhoon v. Cain, 77 Tex. 316; Smith v. Lee, 82 Tex. 124.

So long as the possession is consistent with or in submission to the title of the real owner, it is not adverse. Morse v. Seibold, 147 Ill. 318, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 225.

Attempt to Condemn the Land.—A railroad company's possession is not adverse where, both prior and subsequent to its entry, it attempted to condemn the land, such efforts being a recognition of the owner's title. Hull v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 21 Neb. 371, 24 Neb. 740; Nebraska R. Co. v. Culver, 35 Neb. 143.

Accepting a Lease from Another is evidence tending to show that the claim is not adverse, Baldwin v. Temple, 101 Cal. 396; or writing to his agent offering to accept a lease, Horton v. Davidson, 135 Pa. St. 186.

Recognition by Fraud or under Mistake of One's Rights.—But a party in possession of lands, recognizing the title of the claimant and agreeing to purchase, may subsequently deny such title, set up title in himself, and show that his acknowledgment was produced by imposition or made under a misapprehension of his rights. Jackson v. Spear, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 401.

Admission that Possession is Not Adverse to Certain Person.—And an acknowledgment that possession is not held adversely to one peradmissible to show the real character of the possession.¹

Hostility.—The possession must be hostile in its inception and continue hostile.²

Where Originally Subordinate.—If originally held and acquired in subordination to the title of the true owner, there must be, in order to constitute the possession adverse, a disclaimer of the title of him from whom the possession was acquired, and actual hostile possession of which he has notice, or which is so open and notorious as to raise the presumption of notice.³

son does not preclude the claim of adverse possession as to all others. Portis v. Hill, 14 Tex. 69, 65 Am. Dec. 99. And see Northwestern Pac. R. Co. v. Kranich, 52 Fed. Rep. 911.

Acceptance of a Deed is not such a recognition of the title as to estop the vendee from setting up a previous adverse possession to that title. Blair v. Smith, 16 Mo. 273.

Entertaining Doubts as to Title.—In Hoffman v. White, 90 Ala. 354, it is held that the possession of one who erects a fence intending to place it on the true line, and, honestly believing that he has done so, holds up to it under a claim of right, is adverse; and if the other essentials exist, will vest in him a perfect title, notwithstanding that before the expiration of the statutory period he entertains doubts as to his title, or a belief that the strip next the fence is not his.

Recognition of Superior Title after Statute has Run.—In Trufant v. White, 99 Ala. 526, it was held that if, after adverse possession has matured into a title, the holder thereof admits that his possession is in recognition of a paramount title, and after the admission he continues in possession permissively under this confessed superior title for ten years, the title to the land thereby divests out of him and reverts in the admitted owner.

Unseated Lands.—Where, in Pennsylvania, one entered on unseated land with the intention "to leave when the real owner came, but not until then," the owner being unknown, and continued in possession for twenty-one years, it was held that he acquired a perfect title against the former owner, which was not affected by his endeavoring to find the real owner and purchase the title, or by his declaration to strangers of his want of title, and his desire and intention to buy the land or be paid for his improvements when the real owner appeared. Patterson v. Reigle, 4 Pa. St. 201, 45 Am. Dec. 684.

1. Declarations.—Warren v. Frederichs, 83 Tex. 383. And see Colvin v. Burnet, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 564; and infra, this title, Evidence.

Declarations of the party in possession are always admissible to show the extent and nature of the interest claimed. Jackson v. Porter, 1 Paine (U. S.) 457; Dothard v. Denison, 72 Ala. 541; Calhoun v. Cook, 9 Pa. St. 226; Whiting v. Taylor, 8 Dana (Ky.) 403; Human v. Pettett, 5 B. & Ald. 223, 7 E. C. L. 75. See Carrol v. Gillion, 33 Ga. 539; Hall v. Mathias, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 331.

Such declarations are admissible against him, and all persons claiming under him. Jackson v. Bard, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 230. But see Jackson v. Miller, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 756.

The character of the possession may be shown by parol. Blaisdell v. Martin, 9 N. H. 253.

Evidence that the defendant, during the period of the running of the statute of limitations, offered to pay the adverse claimant for the land, tends to disprove the defense, and an instruction which in effect withdraws such evidence from the consideration of the jury is erroneous. Liggett v. Morgan, 98 Mo. 39.

Pennsylvania.—Jones v. Porter, 3 P. & W. (Pa.) 132.

The word "hostile" does not imply ill-will, but merely a holding as owner and against all other claimants. Ballard v. Hansen, 33 Neb. 861.

Acts of Exclusive Ownership and Control are proof of the hostility of the claim. Dikeman v. Parrish, 6 Pa. St. 210, 47 Am. Dec. 455.

Government Title.—Possession held in subordination to the title of the United States may be adverse as to another claimant. Francœur v. Newhouse, 14 Sawy. (U. S.) 601; Hayes v. Martin, 45 Cal. 559; McManus v. O'Sullivan, 48 Cal. 7.

Possession Necessary to Easement.—A possession necessary to the enjoyment of an easement is not hostile. Pinkum v. Eau Claire (Wis., 1892), 51 N. W. Rep. 550.

3. When Possession Originally in Recognition of True Title.—United States.—Heermans v.

(2) Executory Contracts of Purchase—Before Payment of Purchase Money.—The possession of lands under an executory contract of purchase is not adverse to the vendor so long as the purchase money is not paid, or until by the terms of the agreement the vendee is entitled to demand a conveyance of the legal estate.¹

Vermont.—Adams v. Fullam, 43 Vt. 592, 47 Vt. 558.

Estoppel.—The vendee, though not strictly a tenant of the vendor, is estopped from denying his title,¹ and this estoppel applies to whomever acquires possession under him.²

As to Third Parties.—But such vendee holds adversely as to the claims of third parties other than his vendor.³

Sub-purchasers.—And where one in possession under an executory contract of sale sells and conveys the land to a third party, who pays the stipulated price and is placed in possession, the possession of such sub-purchaser has been held to be adverse to the original vendor.⁴

Wisconsin.—Furlong v. Garrett, 44 Wis. 111; Pepper v. O'Dowd, 39 Wis. 538.

A Party Entering into Possession under an Agreement to Purchase cannot dispute the title of him under whom he enters, until after a surrender of the possession. Jackson v. Spear, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 401; Heermans v. Schmaltz, 10 Biss. (U. S.) 335.

There must be Some Unequivocal and Positive Action to indicate the purpose to hold adversely, and the usual acts of ownership consistent with the position of a vendee in possession under a contract of purchase are not evidence of such adverse claim. Hannibal, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 115 Mo. 158.

But Acquiescence by a Vendor, for the statutory period, in the possession of land by the vendee in a contract of purchase, under a claim that the contract has been surrendered and that the land belongs to the vendee, will bar a recovery by the vendor. Trenton v. Miller, 94 Mich. 204.

Vendee by Title Bond.—The possession of the vendee by title bond is not adverse, and the statute will not commence running to protect him until there is an open and notorious denial on his part of the vendor's title. Coldcleugh v. Johnson, 34 Ark. 312.

The possession of a purchaser of land by title bond, who goes into possession and holds for himself, is not the possession of his vendor who has color of title, so as to perfect the latter's title, under Tennessee Act of 1819, § 1, in seven years, against an otherwise superior title in another. If the purchaser in such case be for some purposes regarded as the tenant at will of his vendor, yet he is not the tenant in fact, and his possession is not that of his vendor, in the sense of the statute. Ellege v. Cooke, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 622.

Taking Lease from Another.—One holding under a contract of purchase cannot, by accepting a lease from a stranger, convert his holding into an adverse possession as against his vendor; and if one so holding abandons the land, and afterwards re-enters under a lease from a stranger without having rescinded his contract, and without any one having in the meantime taken possession, his re-entry will be held to relate back and continue the original possession, and not to create a new and adverse possession. Pratt v. Canfield, 67 Mo. 50.

Purchase with Borrowed Money.—If one buys land with borrowed money, taking the title in the name of the lender, and goes into possession under an agreement with the lender that the title is to be conveyed to him whenever he repays the loan, his possession will not become adverse as against such lender until he has made an open and explicit disavowal of the latter's title, and assertion of the title in himself, and such disavowal and assertion have been brought home to the lender. Estes v. Long, 71 Mo. 605.

Purchase of Incumbrance.—A vendee in possession under his purchase who buys an incumbrance cannot set up an adverse title under it against his vendor, but the purchase enures to the benefit of the vendor's title, and the vendee can only abate the unpaid purchase money or recover the amount he has paid for the incumbrance by action on the covenant in his deed. Bush v. Adams, 22 Fla. 177.

A Purchaser by Executory Contract is a Quasi Tenant, and holds the possession, so far as strangers are concerned, for the benefit of his vendor's title, which he is estopped from denying, and cannot prejudice by any contract he may make with any other person. Turner v. Thomas, 13 Bush (Ky.) 518; Kirk v. Taylor, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 262.

3. Parties Holding under Vendee.—Potts v. Coleman, 67 Ala. 221; Russell v. Erwin, 38 Ala. 44; Jackson v. Harder, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 202, 4 Am. Dec. 262; Jackson v. Bard, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 230, 4 Am. After Payment of Purchase Money.—After payment of the purchase money, however, the possession is presumed to be antagonistic to the vendor, because all duty to him has been performed, and if it continues for the necessary period without some act of recognition of or subordination to the legal estate of the vendor, his right of entry or of action is barred.¹

(3) Tenants in Common—Must be an Ouster.—The entry and possession of one tenant in common is deemed the entry and possession of all the cotenants, and does not amount to a disseisin. Such possession, therefore, can never be

Illustrations.—A, having contracted to purchase lands of B, paid part of the purchase money, but titles were never made. A gave the land to his son, C, who went into possession, and it was held that his possession was adverse as to both A and B. Hunter v. Parsons, 2 Bailey (S. Car.) 59.

But possession by virtue of an executory contract with one who himself claims under a like contract from the patentee is not adverse to that of the patentee until the latter repudiates his contract by selling to other parties, in which case possession under the executory contract will be adverse to that of the second vendee. Pearson v. Boyd, 62 Tex. 541; Roosevelt v. Davis, 49 Tex. 463; Keys v. Mason, 44 Tex. 144.

There was a sale of land by bond for title in 1853. In 1855 the vendee sold and conveyed to a stranger, who entered and held possession until his death, in 1866, and after his death his widow and children continued to occupy the premises. In 1871 a bill was filed to enforce the vendor's lien for the purchase money due upon the sale in 1853. The defense was seven years' possession under the statute. The court held that the vendee, or a purchaser from him, stood in the relation of a trustee to the vendor for the unpaid purchase money, against whom the statute does not run. Lewis v. Hawkins, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 119. See also Swartwout v. Burr, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 499; Champion v. Brown, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 402, 10 Am. Dec. 343.

Contra—West Virginia.—But in Core v. Faupel, 24 W. Va. 244, it was said to be the established law of that state, that the possession of a purchaser of land under an executory contract is not adverse to his vendor, although he has paid all the purchase money and used and occupied the land for his own exclusive benefit; that the contract, being executory and made in contemplation of the conveyance by deed, recognizes the legal title as outstanding, and his possession will be treated as in subordination thereto, and not adverse.

After Such Possession has Ripened into a Perfect Title the vendee may assert and maintain his title by a bill to enjoin a sale under execution issued upon a judgment against the vendor, even though the judgment may have been rendered and become a lien before such title became perfect. Niles v. Davis, 60 Miss. 750.

Curtsey Barred.—A sold land belonging to his wife to B, giving only a title bond. B entered into possession. The wife died thirty years after such entry, and it was held that A's estate by curtesy was barred by the possession of B and his successors. Stokely v. Slayden, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 307.

Presumption of Payment from Lapse of Time.—A presumption of the payment of the purchase money, from mere lapse of time, in favor of a purchaser in possession under an executory contract, does not arise until after the expiration of twenty years from the commencement of his possession. Taylor v. Dugger, 66 Ala. 444.

Agreement for Partition.—Where one enters into possession of land under a bond for title which recites that the land belongs to the estate of S., and that a deed will be given as soon as a conveyance can be made, and where later he himself is party to an agreement with the heirs to said estate for partition proceedings before commissioners, his possession will not commence to be adverse to the heirs of S., at least until after the agreement for partition. Smith v. Lee, 82 Tex. 124.

A Silent Possession, Unaccompanied by Any Act Amounting to an Ouster, or giving notice to the cotenant that his possession is adverse, will never amount to an adverse possession. M'Clung v. Ross, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 116.

There must be Some Notorious Act of Ouster or adverse possession by the party entering, brought home to the knowledge or notice of the others, and when this occurs the possession is from that period treated as adverse. Clymer v. Dawkins, 3 How. (U. S.) 674; King v. Carmichael, 136 Ind. 20, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 233; Coogler v. Rogers, 25 Fla. 853.

It Requires Clear and Satisfactory Proof of the Dissession of a cotenant to characterize the possession as adverse, so as by lapse of time to bar a right of entry. It is not sufficient that he continues to occupy the premises and appropriates to himself the exclusive rents and profits, makes slight improvements on the land, and pays taxes. Busch v. Huston, 75 Ill. 343.

Intent.—It must be shown that the possession was with the intent to hold adversely, and such intent must be indicated by acts calculated to exclude the cotenant. Colman v. Clements 23 Cal. 245.

What Amounts to Ouster.—There must be outward acts of exclusive ownership of an unequivocal character, overt and notorious, or a clear, positive, and continuous disclaimer and disavowal of the cotenant's title, and assertion of an adverse right.¹

Members of One Family.—A tenant in common is not prevented from obtaining title adversely, by the fact that the cotenant is a member of his family. Feliz v. Feliz, 105 Cal. 1.

Actual Ouster.—By the term "actual ouster" is not meant some act accompanied by real force. A man may come in by rightful possession and yet hold over adversely without title. If he does, such holding over under the circumstances will be equivalent to an actual ouster. Doe v. Prosser, Cowp. 217; Van Bibber v. Frazier, 17 Md. 436; Burns v. Byrne, 45 Iowa 287; Warfield v. Lindell, 30 Mo. 272, 77 Am. Dec. 614.

In order that a cotenant may dispossess his companions there must be an actual ouster, or such acts as are constructively equivalent to an ouster, as a denial of right to the rent of any part or the possession of any part of the land, or an exclusive possession for a long time, so as to afford the presumption of a disseisin. Manchester v. Doddridge, 3 Ind. 361; 2 Preston on Abstracts, 291.

Ouster may be Inferred from circumstances. Harmon v. James, 7 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 111.

Adverse Claimant Requesting Cotenant to Sign Quitclaim Deed.—If the possession of a tenant in common is adverse to his cotenant, it will not lose its hostile character by the former tendering a quitclaim deed to the latter, and requesting him to sign it, there being no offer to purchase, nor any acknowledgment of the tenancy. Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 585, 49 Am. Rep. 100.

Children of Bigamous Marriage.—The possession of the children of an alleged bigamous marriage, claiming as heirs of the father, is adverse to the heirs by the former marriage, and not that of tenants in common. Westenfelder v. Green, 24 Oregon 448.

Judgment for Land—Enures to Benefit of All the Tenants.—Judgment in favor of one tenant against an adverse claimant whom he sues to recover possession of the entire tract relates back to the beginning and enures to the benefit of his cotenants. Newman v. California Bank, 80 Cal. 368.

Partners.—Where one of several partners buys lands with partnership funds, but takes title in his own name and takes possession, his possession is the possession of all, and a trust results in favor of his partners. Riddle v. Whitehill, 135 U. S. 621.

Ordering Cotenant to Leave—Acquiescence.—If one tenant in common notifies the other that he claims the whole property as his own, and orders the latter to leave, and the latter acquiesces in the pretension and leaves the premises to the possession of the first, there is an ouster, notwithstanding the fact that neither party was aware of the true state of the title, and each was under a mistake with reference to his rights. McCormack v. Silsby, 82 Cal. 72.

Acts of Ownership during a Series of Years.—Where one cotenant takes possession of the land and openly and notoriously exercises acts of exclusive ownership for a series of years, as by removing the soil, quarrying and selling rock, and by such acts as amount to the destruction of the thing itself, taking all the rents and profits without account, and by other acts which exclude the idea of his claiming a cotenancy, a jury will be warranted in presuming an ouster. Warfield v. Lindell, 38 Mo. 561, 90 Am. Dec. 443; Campau v. Dubois, 39 Mich. 274.

Occasional Acts of Ownership on Unenclosed Lands.—But occasionally cutting wood and hop-poles in small quantities, on unenclosed lands, does not amount to an ouster. Mansfield v. McGinniss, 86 Me. 118.

Tenant Claiming the Lands in His Own Right.—The fact that a tenant in common claims to occupy the land "in his own right" does not necessarily imply that he asserts right to the portion of the land occupied by him adversely to the rights of his cotenant. Teal v. Terrell, 58 Tex. 257.

Evidence Required.—The ouster by a tenant in common, of his cotenant, does not differ in its nature from any other ouster, nor in any respect except in the

Proof of a Verbal Sale of the interest of one of the heirs to an estate, to another of the heirs, followed by twenty years' adverse possession in such other heir, has been held to create title in the latter. Hyne v. Osborn, 62 Mich. 235.

The Mere Reception of the Rents and Profits, and claim of the land, will not prove an ouster. There must be positive acts or a line of conduct indicating an intention to exclude the cotenants. Susquehanna, etc., R., etc., Co. v. Quick, 61 Pa. St. 328; Velott v. Lewis, 102 Pa. St. 327; Bolton v. Hamilton, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 294, 37 Am. Dec. 509; Brown v. M'Coy, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 307, note; Phillips v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Pa.) 158, 36 Am. Dec. 158; Hart v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Pa.) 185, 36 Am. Dec. 166; Watson v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Pa.) 289, 36 Am. Dec. 176; Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 64; Forward v. Deitz, 32 Pa. St. 69; Bennet v. Bullock, 35 Pa. St. 364; Tulloch v. Worrall, 49 Pa. St. 133; Lagoria v. Dozier (Va., 1895), 22 S. E. Rep. 239; Todd v. Todd, 117 Ill. 92; Busch v. Huston, 75 Ill. 343; Rodney v. McLaughlin, 97 Mo. 426; Lapeyre v. Paul, 47 Mo. 586; Whiting v. Dewey, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 428; Parker v. Proprietors, 3 Met. (Mass.) 91, 37 Am. Dec. 121; Higbee v. Rice, 5 Mass. 351, 4 Am. Dec. 63. And see Linker v. Benson, 67 N. Car. 150.

Exclusive Possession and Reception of Rents and Profits for a great length of time has been held insufficient to create a legal presumption of ouster. Bolton v. Hamilton, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 294, 37 Am. Dec. 509; Warfield v. Lindell, 30 Mo. 272, 77 Am. Dec. 614; McGee v. Hall, 26 S. Car. 179; Frederick v. Gray, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 182; Lodge v. Patterson, 3 Watts (Pa.) 74, 27 Am. Dec. 335; Watson v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Pa.) 289, 36 Am. Dec. 176; Workman v. Guthrie, 29 Pa. St. 495, 72 Am. Dec. 654. But it may warrant the jury in presuming an ouster in the particular instance. Bolton v. Hamilton, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 294, 37 Am. Dec. 509. limiting Hart v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Pa.) 185, 36 Am. Dec. 166; Corbin v. Cannon, 31 Miss. 570; Mehaffy v. Dobbs, 9 Watts (Pa.) 377; Calhoun v. Cook, 9 Pa. St. 226; Keyser v. Evans, 30 Pa. St. 507; Rider v. Maul, 46 Pa. St. 376; Burns v. Byrne, 45 Iowa 287; Henning v. Warner, 109 N. Car. 406; Robidoux v. Casseligi, 10 Mo. App. 516.

Taking Rents and Profits and Claiming the Land as His Own.—Where one tenant in common enters on the whole and takes the rents and profits and claims the whole exclusively for a long series of years, the jury ought to presume an actual ouster. Frederick v. Gray, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 182; Wilson v. Collishaw, 13 Pa. St. 276; Grim v. Dyar, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 354; Law v. Patterson, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 184; Lapeyre v. Paul, 47 Mo. 586; Cummings v. Wyman, 10 Mass. 464; Abrams v. Rhoner, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 507; Hubbard v. Wood, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 279.

Refusal to Pay over Rents to the cotenant upon demand of his share is a circumstance showing an adverse intent. Phillips v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Pa.) 158, 36 Am. Dec. 158. And no evidence can be more satisfactory than such refusal accompanied by a refusal to admit the cotenant to possession. Newell v. Woodruff, 30 Conn. 492; Gill v. Fauntleroy, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 186; Jackson v. Tibbits, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 253. But the cotenants must have notice of the claim. Hignite v. Hignite, 65 Miss. 447, 7 Am. St. Rep. 673.

Excluding or Hindering Entry by the cotenant amounts to an ouster sufficient to support an action of ejectment, Gordon v. Pearson, 1 Mass. 323; Carpentier v. Mendenhall, 28 Cal. 484, 87 Am. Dec. 133; Siglar v. Van Riper, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 419; Hubbard v. Wood, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 279; although the portion from which he is excluded be less than the whole, Carpentier v. Webster, 27 Cal. 524.

Claiming under Deed to Whole.—And the same is true where a cotenant claims under a deed to the whole. Clark v. Vaughan, 3 Conn. 191; Barnes v. Born, 133 Ind. 169; Prescott v. Nevers, 4 Mason (U. S.) 326; Millard v. McMullin, 68 N. Y. 345; Ashley v. Rector, 20 Ark. 359; Trotter v. Neal, 50 Ark. 340; McCulloh v. Daniel, 102 N. Car. 529; Ellington v. Ellington, 103 N. Car. 54; Puckett v. McDaniel (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 28 S. W. Rep. 360. And the grantee of one tenant in common, for the whole, entering under such conveyance, may set up the statute of limitations against his cotenants. Jackson v. Huntington, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 402. Such entry and claim constitute an ouster. Marcy v. Marcy, 6 Met. (Mass.) 360. And see Highstone v. Burdette, 54 Mich. 329; Watson v. Jeffrey, 39 N. J. Eq. 62. But not where the grantor quitclaims only his interest. Moore v. Antill, 53 Iowa 612. See Laraway v. Larue, 63 Iowa 407; McQuiddy v. Ware, 67 Mo. 74; Kathan v. Rockwell, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 90.

Taking a deed by one tenant in common from a third person, and spreading it on the record, will have no effect as the equivalent of an ouster, unless accompanied and followed by a hostile claim of which the cotenant had knowledge, and by acts of possession not only inconsistent with, but exclusive of, the right of such cotenant. Holley v. Hawley, 39 Vt. 532, 94 Am. Dec. 350. See Culver v. Rhodes, 87 N. Y. 348.

Purchase at Tax Sale.—A purchase at a sale for taxes enures to all the cotenants. Jonas v. Flanniken, 69 Miss. 577; Richards v. Richards, 75 Mich. 408. See the article TAX TITLES.

Entry and Exclusive Claim to the Whole, indicated by some unequivocal act, amounts to an ouster. Frederick v. Gray, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 182; Phillips v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Pa.) 158, 36 Am. Dec. 158.

Such acts ought so necessarily and notoriously to import a claim of exclusive right, as to apprise the cotenant of the nature and degree of evidence required. The distinction relates to the character of the evidence necessary to prove that the possession was adverse.¹

Notice.—In order to operate as an ouster, the tenant out of possession must have actual notice of the adverse holding, or the hostile character of the possession must be so openly manifest that notice on his part will be presumed.²

existence of it. Bolton v. Hamilton, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 294, 37 Am. Dec. 509; Knowles v. Brown, 69 Iowa 11. As, for instance, denying possession to the cotenant. Doe v. Bird, 11 East 49; Bellis v. Bellis, 122 Mass. 415; Bigelow v. Jones, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 161; Rickard v. Rickard, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 251; Lefavour v. Homan, 3 Allen (Mass.) 354; Florence v. Hopkins, 46 N. Y. 182.

Exclusive Possession for a long period of time may afford a presumption of ouster, Manchester v. Doddridge, 3 Ind. 365; King v. Carmichael, 136 Ind. 25, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 233; Van Dyck v. Van Beuren, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 84; Jackson v. Brink, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 483; Clapp v. Bromagham, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 530; Littlejohn v. Barnes, 138 Ill. 478; especially where there is no accounting for the rents and profits, or demand made or claim set up. Doe v. Prosser, Cowp. 217; Jackson v. Whitbeck, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 532, 16 Am. Dec. 454; Neely v. Neely, 79 N. Car. 478; and improvements are made, Campau v. Dubois, 39 Mich. 274; Lapeyre v. Paul, 47 Mo. 586.

But this presumption is a matter of evidence for the consideration of the jury. Purcell v. Wilson, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 16. But see Van Dyck v. Van Beuren, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 84, where it was held that the law would raise the presumption in such cases, and that the jury were not at liberty to disregard it.

Taking Title from a Hostile Source and refusing to let in the cotenant is an ouster. Clapp v. Bromagham, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 530; Clark v. Crego, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 617; Phelan v. Kelly, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 395.

Witnessing Will of Whole.—Witnessing a will of one cotenant devising all the land, by another cotenant, and hearing it read, has been held an ouster. Miller v. Miller, 60 Pa. St. 16. See Coker v. Ferguson, 70 Ala. 284.

Payment of Taxes, Accompanied by Possession, does not amount to an ouster, Robinson v. Jones, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 316; Alsobrook v. Eggleston, 69 Miss. 833; not even when accompanied by improvements made upon the property, Pierson v. Conley, 95 Mich. 619; nor by the receipt of the rents and profits, Sontag v. Bigelow, 142 Ill. 143.

The Mortgage of the Whole premises by a cotenant is not per se an ouster. Wilson v. Colishaw, 13 Pa. St. 276.

But a Sale of the Whole does amount to an ouster. Culler v. Motzer, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 356, 15 Am. Dec. 604.

Partition.—A partition of the premises, though illegal and void, and the possession of a part, amounts to an ouster from the part occupied. Jackson v. Tibbits, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 241; Gautier v. Howard, 38 Mo. 68.

Partition is a mutual ouster. Cryer v. Andrews, 11 Tex. 170; Scoby v. Sweatt, 28 Tex. 713.

1. Newell v. Woodruff, 30 Conn. 492.

The Distinction between Strangers and Tenants in Common relates to the character of the evidence necessary to prove that the possession was adverse. If the parties are strangers in title, possession and the exercise of acts of ownership are in themselves, in the absence of explanatory evidence, proof of the ouster of the true owner; whereas in cases of privity of title, such as subsists between tenants in common, the acts of possession of one tenant will, in the absence of satisfactory evidence to the contrary, be referred to the community of title, and there must be clearer and more decisive evidence of an ouster by one tenant in common of his associate than is necessary to prove that a person having no right of possession had ousted an owner in severalty. Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 527.

2. Notice to Cotenant.—Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. (U. S.) 296; McClaskey v. Barr, 47 Fed. Rep. 154; Barr v. Gratz, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 213; M'Clung v. Ross, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 124; Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 586, 49 Am. Rep. 100; Gage v. Downey, 94 Cal. 241; In re Grider's Estate, 81 Cal. 571; Busch v. Huston, 75 Ill. 344; Ball v. Palmer, 81 Ill. 372; Warfield v. Lindell, 38 Mo. 581, 90 Am. Dec. 443, 30 Mo. 272, 77 Am. Dec. 614; Lapeyre v. Paul, 47 Mo. 586; Culver v. Rhodes, 87 N. Y. 348; Long v. Mast, 11 Pa. St. 189; Hall v. Stevens, 9 Met. (Mass.) 418; Beall v. Evans, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 443; Golson v. Fielder, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 400; Sydnor v. Palmer, 29 Wis. 226; Challefoux v. Ducharme, 8 Wis. 287.

Notice of Ouster to a Cotenant may be Constructive, by such open and notorious acts of ouster, or such an assertion of the claim to the exclusive possession of the whole land, as in law will impart notice to the cotenants of an adverse and exclusive claim of title. Warfield v. Lindell, 38 Mo. 561, 90 Am. Dec. 443; Van Gunden v. Virginia Coal, etc., Co., 52 Fed. Rep. 838.

Reasonable Presumption of Notice.—It is not necessary to show such knowledge by direct and positive evidence, but it is sufficient, if the contrary is not shown, if the circumstances are such that knowledge may be reasonably presumed. Knowles v. Brown, 69 Iowa 11; Laraway v. Larue, 63 Iowa 407; Campbell v. Laclede Gas Light Co., 84 Mo. 352.

If No Notice is Given of the adverse intent it must be manifested by outward acts of an unequivocal kind. Jackson v. Huntington, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 402; Abernathie v. Consolidated Virginia Min. Co., 16 Nev. 260; Humbert v. Trinity Church, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 587; Lodge v. Patterson, 3 Watts (Pa.) 74, 27 Am. Dec. 335; Owen v. Morton, 24 Cal. 373; Weisinger v. Murphy, 2 Head (Tenn.) 674; Culler v. Motzer, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 356, 15 Am. Dec. 604.

It must make the intention to hold adversely manifest. Marcy v. Marcy, 6 Met. (Mass.)

Questions for Jury under Instructions from Court.—Whether or not there has been an ouster is a question of fact, to be determined by the jury under proper instructions from the court as to the facts and circumstances which tend to establish an ouster. It is for the court to say what circumstances will authorize the jury to presume an ouster, and for the jury to say whether, in the given case, these circumstances exist.¹

Conveyance by Cotenant.—A conveyance by one cotenant of the entire estate gives color of title, and if possession is taken under it, the grantee claiming title to the whole, it amounts to an ouster of the cotenants, and the possession of the grantee is adverse as to them.²

360; Prescott v. Nevers, 4 Mason (U. S.) 330; Hart v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Pa.) 185, 36 Am. Dec. 166.

Recording Tax Deed.—Adverse possession is not created by a cotenant recording a tax deed to himself alone, without knowledge thereof by his cotenants or that he claims under it. Cocks v. Simmons, 55 Ark. 104.

1. Carpentier v. Mendenhall, 28 Cal. 484, 87 Am. Dec. 135; Gill v. Fauntleroy, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 177; Cummings v. Wyman, 10 Mass. 465; Parker v. Proprietors, 3 Met. (Mass.) 91, 37 Am. Dec. 121; Harmon v. James, 7 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 111, 45 Am. Dec. 296; Clark v. Crego, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 599; Doe v. Hill, 10 Leigh (Va.) 477; Purcell v. Wilson, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 16; Blackmore v. Gregg, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 182; Bolton v. Hamilton, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 294, 37 Am. Dec. 509.

Ouster is a question of fact which it is the province of the jury to determine, and the facts and circumstances which go to establish the ouster should, under proper instructions from the court, be submitted to the jury. Highstone v. Burdette, 54 Mich. 329.

The question whether the entry of a tenant in common is such as to accrue to the benefit of the others, and whether one has actually ousted another, are questions of fact involving sometimes the intentions and motives of the party in possession, which it is the province of the jury to determine. Cummings v. Wyman, 10 Mass. 464.

What state of facts will constitute an ouster and adverse possession is a question of law, but the existence of such facts is a question for the jury. Washburn v. Cutter, 17 Minn. 361.

Burden of Proof.—The burden of proof rests upon the party alleging the ouster. Van Bibber v. Frazier, 17 Md. 436; Highstone v. Burdette, 54 Mich. 329; Newell v. Woodruff, 30 Conn. 492.

Reservation of Rights of Cotenants.—But

(4) Life Tenant and Remainderman.—As against the Remainderman—Before Life Estate has Fallen In.—One entering as tenant for life cannot hold adversely to those in remainder, nor can those who enter under him prior to the falling in of the life estate.¹

where one of several tenants in common conveys land, excepting and reserving the interest of his cotenants, and the grantee takes possession of the whole under an agreement with the grantor to pay the taxes for and on behalf of the cotenants, such possession, without a subsequent ouster or disseisin, cannot be regarded as adverse to them. Grand Tower Min., etc., Co. v. Gill, 111 Ill. 541; Price v. Hall (Ind., 1895), 39 N. E. Rep. 941, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 234.

Permanent improvements upon the land will not, in such case, amount to an ouster. McClaskey v. Barr, 42 Fed. Rep. 609.

When Presumption Arises.—The presumption of ouster does not arise until the grantee has been in possession the necessary period. Ferguson v. Wright, 113 N. Car. 537.

Agreement to Convey.—Possession under an agreement to convey does not become adverse to the cotenants until the date of the deed executed. Phelan v. Smith, 100 Cal. 158.

Pending Administration the assignee of a tenant in common cannot acquire title by limitation. In re Grider's Estate, 81 Cal. 571.

Reconveyance to Grantor.—An owner of land conveyed the same to his five children. One of the grantees afterwards reconveyed to the original grantor, but by deed purporting to convey, not the undivided one-fifth interest which he held, but the entire tract. It was considered, however, that the legal effect of the reconveyance was, under the circumstances, the same as if it had purported to convey only the interest which the grantor therein held—an undivided one-fifth part. So the original grantor, having thus acquired an undivided one-fifth interest in the land, became a tenant in common with the other four owners to whom he had previously conveyed, and his possession in that relation was not adverse to them. Stevens v. Wait, 112 Ill. 544.

If there be Parcel Exchange of Lands for purposes of mutual tenancy, the presumption is that the possession is not adverse, but permissive; but in such case, if the proofs show a hostile claim of title by either of the occupants, possession for ten years under such claim may mature into a good title. Alexander v. Wheeler, 69 Ala. 332.

Several Conveyances of Part.—Entry under a deed conveying half, and two deeds each conveying a fourth undivided interest, executed by different parties, is not an ouster of the cotenants, as the deeds do not necessarily include the entire tract. Noble v. Hill (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 27 S. W. Rep. 756.

But possession by a life tenant after purchase at an administrator's sale has been held to be of an adversary character. Balkham v. Woodstock Iron Co., 43 Fed. Rep. 648. And the renunciation of the life estate and open adverse assertion of title will set the statute of limitations in motion. Miller v. Foster, 76 Tex. 479.

Acquiring Tax Title.—The life tenant may not, by failure to pay taxes, assert an adverse claim founded upon a tax title issued by reason of such default. Watkins v. Green, 101 Mich. 493.

Adverse through Trustee.—Where property is left in trust for life, with remainder over, the purchaser of the fee cannot mature title by adverse possession against the remainderman, through the trustee, as he does not hold for the remainderman, and as he cannot maintain an action for the recovery of the land during the lifetime of the life tenant. Moseley v. Hankinson, 25 S. Car. 519.

Contingent Remainders.—Land was conveyed to a trustee for the use of S. for life, and after her death to be held for the use of her three children, A., M., and W., during their lives, and at their death to vest absolutely in their children. A. survived S. and the trustee. After A.'s death his children brought a statutory action, in the nature of ejectment, for their portion of the land, and the defendant claimed it by adverse possession during the lives of the first and second life tenants. It was held that if, at the date of the execution of the deed in trust, the second life tenants had no children in being, the remainders over in fee were contingent remainders, and while they remained contingent the trustee represented the contingent remaindermen for the preservation of the remainders, and adverse possession against him for ten years before the happening of the contingency upon which the remainders were to vest barred the right of entry of the contingent remaindermen. But the remainder in fee vested upon the birth of a child to the second life tenant, and as against such vested remainderman there could be no adverse possession during the continuance of the preceding life estate. Gindrat v. Alabama Western R. Co., 96 Ala. 162, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 237. And see King v. Rhew, 108 N. Car. 606, 23 Am. St. Rep. 76. And see infra, this section, Trust Estates.

Possession of Widow.—A widow to whom dower is assigned comes in under the heir, to whom her possession can never become adverse. Malloy v. Bruden, 86 N. Car. 251; Musham v. Musham, 87 Ill. 80; Riggs v. Girard, 133 Ill. 619; Lawrence v. Lawrence, 14 Oregon 77; Cook v. Nicholas, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 27; Hall v. Mathias, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 331; Iddings v. Cairns, 2 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 88; McQueen v. Fletcher, 77 Ga. 444. Nor can her possession of the mansion-house pending an assignment of dower be adverse. Null v. Howell, 111 Mo. 273; Hannon v. Hounihan, 85 Va. 429; Sherwood v. Baker, 105 Mo. 472, 24 Am. St. Rep. 399; Page v. Branch, 97 N. Car. 97, 2 Am. St. Rep. 281; Robinson v. Allison, 97 Ala. 596. Nor can the possession of her tenant under a lease she had no authority to make. Melvin v. Waddell, 75 N. Car. 361. Nor the grantee under her deed. Culver v. Rhodes, 87 N. Y. 348; Melton v. Fitch, 125 Mo. 281. But where a widow remained in occupation of her deceased husband's residence for many years, claiming ownership, it was held that her possession was adverse to the heirs. Hogan v. Kurtz, 94 U. S. 773. But a widow's declaration that the husband had devised the land to her prevented her possession becoming adverse. Breidegam v. Hoffmaster, 61 Pa. St. 223.

But possession for twenty years, of lands allotted a widow by the purchaser under a conveyance made in invalid proceedings instituted by the guardian of infant heirs, has been held to bar the right of the heirs. Lowery v. Davis (Ala., 1890), 8 So. Rep. 79.

And twenty years' adverse possession by a widow having a life interest by dower right and an equitable title by reason of a purchase of the reversion at an administrator's sale with money which has been used to pay debts, gives her a legal title. Woodstock Iron Co. v. Fullenwider, 87 Ala. 584. But the possession of the widow is adverse to all the world save the heirs. Hickman v. Link (Mo., 1888), 7 S. W. Rep. 12.

Curtsey.—The possession of the husband after the death of his wife is not adverse to her heirs. Jackson v. Cairns, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 301; Corwin v. Corwin, 6 N. Y. 342; Craig v. Harbison, 4 Penny. (Pa.) 489.

After the Life Estate has Fallen in—As against the Remainderman or Reversioner.—After the death of the original life tenant the continued possession of his vendee becomes adverse as to the remainderman or reversioner.¹

Life Estate Acquired by Adverse Possession.—The life estate may be acquired by adverse possession.²

No Sale of the Estate by the Life Tenant can in any manner affect or change the nature or status of the estate in remainder. Pickett v. Doe, 74 Ala. 122.

The Remainderman's Cause of Action does not accrue till the death of the life tenant. Elyton Land Co. v. McElrath, 53 Fed. Rep. 763. And the statute of limitations only begins to run from his death. Thompson v. Simpson, 128 N. Y. 270.

Life Tenancy under Irregular Will.—But where a husband entered into possession of lands as tenant for life under a will so irregularly executed as not to pass real estate, and remained in possession a number of years, and united with the remainderman in a conveyance of the fee, it was held, in an action of ejectment by the heirs-at-law against the grantee, that the claim of title and possession of the husband as tenant for life under the will, being hostile to the title of the heirs at law, was, as against them, adverse and exclusive. Hanson v. Johnson, 62 Md. 25, 50 Am. Rep. 199.

Other Illustrations.—The appellee had possession and paid taxes for above twenty years, under a quitclaim deed. His grantor had an estate pour autre vie, and the appellant and another were the reversioners. The will under which the appellee's grantor acquired his title was never recorded, nor, so far as the proof showed, brought to the notice of the appellee. It was held that, under these circumstances, his possession had been adverse to the reversioners, and the bar of the statute was complete. Safford v. Stubbs, 117 Ill. 389.

Where a husband conveys in fee land of the wife in which he has curtesy, the statute will not run against the vendee of the wife until the husband's death. Jones v. Freed, 42 Ark. 357.

Where one of several remaindermen who was living with the tenant for life upon the land, accepted a deed of a portion thereof without warranty and for a nominal consideration, and thereafter occupied claiming to hold the premises conveyed adversely under the deed, but there was no apparent change of possession or occupation, and no notice of a hostile claim given to the cotenants, it was held that the giving and receiving of the deed was not in itself an act hostile to the rights of the cotenants, but that both the deed and the possession under it were consistent therewith, as the grantor could convey the life estate, so that it gave no notice or intimation of a hostile claim; and that, therefore, there was no adverse possession, such as would defeat an action for partition. Culver v. Rhodes, 87 N. Y. 348.

But it has been held that under Illinois Rev. Stat., c. 83, § 6, the statute of limitations will run against a remainderman, even during the continuance of the prior estate, where the person invoking the statute had no notice of the existence of the estate in remainder. Lewis v. Pleasants, 143 Ill. 271. In this case the tenant for life acquired a tax deed to the land and conveyed under the tax deed. And see Lewis v. Barnhart, 145 U. S. 56, 43 Fed. Rep. 854.

Where a deed conveyed a life estate, and the grantee remained in possession thirty years or more, the heirs of the grantor setting up no claim to the reversion, it was held that the occupancy for so long a period becomes in itself an independent source of title. Osborne v. Anderson, 89 N. Car. 261.

The Grantee in Fee of the Tenant for Life is not precluded from claiming in hostility to those in reversion or remainder after the expiration of the life tenancy. Christie v. Gage, 71 N. Y. 189. But see Learned v. Tallmadge, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 443.

But the reversioner must have notice of the claim. Cleveland v. Crawford, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 616.

Where Land Reverts to the Grantor upon a Contingency, twenty years' adverse possession will establish title against him. Newark v. Watson, 56 N. J. L. 667.

And where the life estate has been acquired by the adverse possession of a third person, a deed by the life tenant to the remainderman

Must be Repudiation of Relationship and Assertion of Ownership.—The possession of the tenant is the possession of his landlord, and the statute of limitations does not begin to run against the latter until such tenancy is terminated. Vanduyne v. Hepner, 45 Ind. 589; or until there is a repudiation of the relation and an assertion of ownership in his own right by the tenant. Tilghman v. Little, 13 Ill. 241; *Alderson v. And tenant cannot by disclaimer, or by mere words denying his landlord's title and asserting one of his own, work a forfeiture of his tenancy, or set running an adverse possession. Whiting v. Edmunds, 94 N. Y. 309.

A Lessee of Wharf Rights upon the navigable waters of New York harbor cannot, as against the lessor and without his consent, during the continuance of the lease, acquire an absolute right to occupy by a permanent structure the waters in front of such wharf, to the destruction of its value and usefulness. Bedlow v. New York Floating Dry Dock Co., 112 N. Y. 263.

Execution of Lease to Avoid Creditors.—Where it was shown that the defendant in possession executed a lease to the plaintiff, not for the purpose of creating the relation of landlord and tenant, but to prevent his creditors from taking the land in execution, a verdict by the jury in favor of the defendant was affirmed. Bidwell v. Evans, 156 Pa. St. 30.

One in Possession Subsequently Taking a Lease cannot, during the term of his lease, hold adverse possession against his landlord by the mere intention so to hold, and without the doing of some act which would amount to adverse possession by a tenant who entered under a lease. Abbey Homestead Assoc. v. Willard, 48 Cal. 614. But he may by disclaimer and notice terminate the tenancy. Voss v. King, 33 W. Va. 236.

But where a Tenant Extends the Boundaries and takes in adjoining land, claiming it as his own, his possession is adverse as to the additional inclosure. Pharis v. Jones, 122 Mo. 125.

Possession Presumed Continuous.—When after a contract of tenancy the landlord sees the tenant in possession cultivating the land, and after an absence of nine years returns and finds him still in possession, it will be presumed that the possession of the tenant under said landlord was continuous during all of that time. Alabama State Land Co. v. Kyle, 99 Ala. 474.

Death of Landlord.—Upon the death of the landlord the possession of the tenant is subordinate to the title of the devisees. Carothers v. Covington (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 27 S. W. Rep. 1040; Scofield v. Douglass (Tex. Civ. App., 1895), 30 S. W. Rep. 817.

Tenant at Will.—One in possession of land under a bond for a deed which provided that in case of default in payment he should have the rights of a tenant at will, and be allowed thirty days after notice in which to quit, does not hold adversely to the owner until after such notice shall have been given. Austin v. Wilson, 46 Iowa 362.

Although a tenant at will cannot transfer any of his rights to another, and his tenancy ends if he makes such transfer and surrenders the occupancy, the person taking it coming in as a trespasser only, yet where such person claims the right of occupancy by virtue of the assignment only, the recognition and allowance of such claim by the owner of the premises makes the occupant a tenant at will, the same as his predecessor, and his occupation continues the possession of the owner. Landon v. Townshend, 129 N. Y. 166.

Tenant by Sufferance.—Where one is in pos-

Failure to Pay Rent.—The mere failure to pay rent, even though none be demanded, does not make the possession adverse.¹

Limitation of Rule.—But while the tenant is estopped from denying the title of his landlord so long as the relation exists and is recognized between them,² he may repudiate the relation and set up an adverse claim and possession in himself, which, when properly brought home to the landlord, will put in operation the statute of limitations in the tenant's favor.³

Tenant Holding Over.—The continuance of possession by holding over after the lease is not adverse.⁴

session of land as a tenant by sufferance, his possession will not be adverse to the landlord. Creigh v. Henson, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 231.

Lawson*, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 46; Turner v. Davis, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 153; Sanscrainte v. Torongo, 87 Mich. 69.

A Tenant may, by Open and Notorious Renunciation of his allegiance to his landlord, hold adversely to him. Whipple v. Earick, 93 Ky. 121; Rigg v. Cook, 9 Ill. 336, 46 Am. Dec. 462.

But to Initiate an Adverse Holding he must surrender possession to the landlord, or do something that is equivalent, and bring home to the landlord knowledge of the adverse claim. Bedlow v. New York Floating Dry Dock Co., 112 N. Y. 263; Whiting v. Edmunds, 94 N. Y. 314; Jackson v. Stiles, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 575; Whaley v. Whaley, 1 Spears (S. Car.) 225, 40 Am. Dec. 594; Thayer v. United Brethren Soc., 20 Pa. St. 62; Towne v. Butterfield, 97 Mass. 105.

It must be Made Plain that the Real Owner Has been Given a Cause of Action, and if the possession commenced in subordination to his right, there should be evidence of distinct renunciation of it before he is put in position to lose anything by not bringing suit. If one goes into possession under him, he is entitled to assume that his rights are continuously admitted, until the contrary is brought to his knowledge. Willison v. Watkins, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 43; Farrow v. Edmundson, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 606, 41 Am. Dec. 250; Sherman v. Champlain Transp. Co., 31 Vt. 162; Campau v. Lafferty, 50 Mich. 114.

It must be shown that the possessor intended to dispossess all others not in privity with him, and to hold and claim the property exclusively as his own. Comstock v. Eastwood, 108 Mo. 41.

But Surrender of Possession is Not Necessary where the adverse claim is against one with whom there is no relation of landlord and tenant. Millett v. Lagomarsino, 107 Cal. 102.

A Deed to the Tenant from One Having no Title is insufficient as a basis for adverse possession. McRoberts v. Bergman (Supreme Ct.), 11 N. Y. Supp. 108.

The Purchase of a Tax Title to the land by the tenant renders his possession adverse to the landlord. Weichselbaum v. Curlett, 20 Kan. 709, 27 Am. Rep. 204. But not until the sale has been confirmed. Austin v. Willis, 90 Ala. 421. And see Gregory v. Ford, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 475.

Fraudulent Possession.—And the purchaser of a tax title obtaining possession by a fraudulent arrangement with the owner's tenant becomes the tenant of the owner, and his possession is not adverse. Pulford v. Whicher, 76 Wis. 555.

Proof.—If he claims title by virtue of a subsequent parol agreement with the landlord he must establish the same by clear proof. Cole v. Potts, 10 N. J. Eq. 67.

Presumption.—The presumption is that possession continues as tenant. Leport v. Todd, 32 N. J. L. 124.

4. Holding Over after Expiration of Term.—Tompkins v. Snow, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 525; Brandter v. Marshall, 1 Cal. (N. Y.) 394; Learned v. Tallmadge, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 444; Day v. Cochran, 24 Miss. 261; Schuylkill, etc., Imp., etc., Co. v. McCreary, 58 Pa. St. 304.

The possession of the tenant, thus in subordination to the title of the landlord, continues, not only during the term, but is presumed to remain unchanged until twenty years after the termination thereof and notwithstanding any claim of the tenant or his successors to a hostile title. Whiting v. Edmunds, 94 N. Y. 309; Church v. Schoonmaker, 115 N. Y. 570, 42 Hun (N. Y.) 225.

But after a Cancellation of the Lease the tenant's possession may become adverse. Meridian Land, etc., Co. v. Ball, 68 Miss. 135.

5. Rule as to Persons Claiming under Tenant—England.—Davies v. Pierce, 2 T. R. 53; Doe v. Wilkinson, 3 B. & C. 413, 10 E. C. L. 135; Fenner v. Duplock, 2 Bing. 10, 9 E. C. L. 295.

(6) Trust Estates—As between Trustee and Cestui Que Trust—Express Trusts.—Where the trust is express, the possession of the trustee is considered to be also the possession of the beneficiary, and consequently is not hostile or adverse until there is an open disavowal of the trust, which must be brought home to the cestui que trust.¹

South Carolina.—Anderson v. Darby, 1 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 369.

Tennessee.—Wood v. Turner, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 517.

Where the Relation of Landlord and Tenant has been Once Established the possession of the tenant and of his grantee is that of the landlord, and not hostile or adverse, and this is so where such grantee has taken a deed to the fee in ignorance of the fact that his grantor stood in the relation of tenant, the latter denying any such relation. The relation once established, it attaches to all who may succeed to the possession under the tenant. Bedlow v. New York Floating Dry Dock Co., 112 N. Y. 265; Whiting v. Edmunds, 94 N. Y. 309.

But Knowledge Brought Home to the Landlord that the vendee of the tenant claims under a warranty deed to the fee, will render the possession adverse. Swann v. Young, 36 W. Va. 57.

Assessment Lease.—But this rule is not applicable to one holding under an assessment lease. An adverse possession may be originated during the running of such lease, which will ripen into a title in twenty years after the end of the term. And where one enters under an assessment lease and subsequently grants the land in fee to another who enters and holds under that grant, claiming title, the possession is adverse to that of the owner of the reversion. Sands v. Hughes, 53 N. Y. 287; Hilton v. Bender, 4 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 270.

West Virginia.—Heiskell v. Trout, 31 W. Va. 810.

Where the Trustee Purchases Property with Trust Funds, though in his own name, his possession will be deemed the possession of the beneficiaries until he does some unequivocal act denying their right; until then the statute of limitations does not begin to run against them. Butler v. Lawson, 72 Mo. 227.

No Length of Possession by the Trustee as Such will give him a title as against the beneficiary, but the trustee may repudiate existing relations and thenceforth hold adversely to the cestui que trust. What acts will amount to such a repudiation and adverse holding, is sometimes a subject of controversy. There can be little doubt, however, when the beneficiary himself recognizes and acquiesces in the hostile possession. Hill v. Bailey, 8 Mo. App. 89. And see Catlin v. Decker, 38 Conn. 262.

Assumption of Ownership in Himself.—The possession of the trustee does not become adverse until by some act he assumes to himself the ownership of the property. Carter v. Feland, 17 Mo. 383.

Cannot Hold in Dual Capacity.—A person holding in one capacity cannot hold adversely to himself, claiming in another capacity. Roman Catholic Archbishop v. Shipman, 79 Cal. 288.

Disclaimer.—The statute of limitations is not applicable to an express trust where there is no disclaimer. Seymour v. Freer, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 202; Cunningham v. McKindley, 22 Ind. 149. The trust must be disavowed. Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 177.

Time begins to run against the trust only from the time it is disavowed by the trustee, who insists upon an adverse right and inter-

Constructive Trusts.—This principle is not applicable to constructive trusts where, by the wrongful act of one party, the other may charge him in equity as trustee. The rule in regard to this class of trusts is that if one, knowing he can avail himself of the benefit of such trust, lies by for the statutory period, his claim is thereby barred.¹ The statute, however, does not run against one est, which is fully and unequivocally made known to the beneficiary. Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How. (U. S.) 333; Janes v. Throckmorton, 57 Cal. 368; Hearst v. Pujol, 44 Cal. 235; Clayton v. Clayton (Ky., 1889), 12 S. W. Rep. 312; Roberts v. Littlefield, 48 Me. 61.

Where the trustee, with the knowledge of the beneficiary, disclaims a trust, either expressly or by acts that necessarily imply a disclaimer, and an unbroken possession follows in the trustee, or those claiming under him, for a period equal to that prescribed by the act of limitations to constitute a bar, such lapse of time may be relied upon as a defense. Williams v. First Presbyterian Soc., 1 Ohio St. 478.

Where Real Estate is Conveyed in Trust for a Married Woman to the sole use of herself and her heirs by her present husband, and they have a daughter born to them, after which the wife dies and the husband remains on the premises with the daughter, who marries, each paying part of the expenses of house-keeping for three years, when the daughter dies, and her husband continues to live on the premises five years without paying board, the possession of the father, after the daughter's husband leaves, will not bar a recovery of the premises in an action by the husband and heirs of the daughter, there being nothing to show that such possession was adverse. Spencer v. O'Neill, 100 Mo. 49.

Where there is no Adverse Possession against a tenant in common by any of his cotenants, and no open repudiation of the trust has been made to his knowledge by the trustee in possession, the possession of the trustee is as much his possession as that of the other cotenants, and the statute of limitations cannot run against him, though the trustee has not declared a trust in his favor and has declared a trust in favor of the other cotenants, and has purchased his interest from another cotenant, if such declaration of trust and conveyance were unknown to such tenant in common. Watson v. Sutro, 86 Cal. 500.

What Amounts to Repudiation.—If the trustee does an act which he intends, and which is understood by his cestui que trust, to be a discharge of his trust, from that time the statute begins to run. Starke v. Starke, 3 Rich. (S. Car.) 438.

A deed to a tract of land granted in 1765 to the town of N. declared that the premises were conveyed to the inhabitants of said town "for a parsonage and the use and support of ministers of the gospel." Since 1800 the town had used the premises otherwise, and applied the income and profits therefrom to municipal purposes. It was held that there had been such a distinct repudiation and disavowal of the trust, and such an adverse holding of the premises, without application to have trust executed, as to make a complete legal and equitable title in the town. Congregational Soc. v. Newington, 53 N. H. 595.

Secret Trusts.—The same rules apply to secret trusts, where property is conveyed for the purpose of defeating the grantor's creditors, with a secret trust for the use of the grantor. The grantee in such deed, and his heirs, is not clothed with any ownership of the land which will uphold a claim of adverse possession against a creditor of the grantor seeking to subject the land to the payment of his debts. McSween v. McCown, 23 S. Car. 342; Jones v. Wilson, 69 Ala. 400. See Ellwell v. Hinckley, 138 Mass. 225. Compare Estes v. Long, 71 Mo. 605.

Where a person takes possession of property in his own right, and is afterwards, by matter of evidence or construction, changed into a trustee, lapse of time may be pleaded in bar. Decouche v. Sanetier, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 190, 8 Am. Dec. 478.

Where a Constructive Trust is Made out in Equity, time protects the trustee, though his conduct was originally fraudulent. So where a party takes possession in his own right, and was prima facie owner, and is turned into a trustee by matter of evidence only. Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 177.

If a party is constituted a trustee by a decree of a court of equity, founded on fraud or the like, his possession is then considered adverse and the statute of limitations will run. Edwards v. University, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 325, 30 Am. Dec. 170.

Continuing Express Trusts form the only class protected from the operation of the statute. Murdock v. Hughes, 7 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 219.

Where a Deed in Trust was Made to Secure Bona Fide Debts, one who purchased and took the trustee's title was held to be protected by the statute of limitations, however fraudulently he may have acted in suppressing competition, and although he bought in the property for the trustee. Taylor v. Dawson, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 86.

But the statute of limitations will not run against a claim to land, based upon a resulting trust implied when such claimant and the person having the legal title are both in continued and fraudulent possession of the land in question. There must be, for the legal ignorant of his rights or incompetent to enforce them,¹ and the trustee must bring himself clearly within the position of a continued and consistent adverse claimant, and the cestui que trust must have no reasonable excuse for failing to prosecute his claim within the proper time.²

As to Third Parties.—But the rule that lapse of time does not bar a trust estate holds only as between the cestui que trust and the trustee, not between the cestui and the trustee on the one side and a stranger on the other. Therefore where the cestui and his trustee are both out of possession for the time limited, the party in possession has a good bar against them both.³ If the legal title was vested in the trustee, it is immaterial that the beneficiary was laboring under a disability, as of infancy or coverture.⁴

period, a possession adverse and hostile in its character. The fact that one held by deed and the other did not, does not make the possession adverse or vary the principle. McCammon v. Pettitt, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 242.

It is well settled that if the trustee delays the assertion of his rights until the statute perfects a bar against him, the cestui que trust will also be barred. The trustee may be compelled by the cestui que trust to enter so as to avoid an adverse possession. Bryan v. Weems, 29 Ala. 423, 65 Am. Dec. 407; Colburn v. Broughton, 9 Ala. 363; *Couch v. An Adverse Public User of Land Held in Trust for the Purpose of a Highway, continuing for twenty years, will establish the highway against both trustee and cestui que trust, whether consistent with the trust or not. Prudden v. Lindsley, 29 N. J. Eq. 615.

Contingent Interests.—Where land was conveyed to a trustee and his heirs for the sole and separate use of a married woman, and her husband conveyed the same by deed in which her name did not appear except in the attestation clause, and no reference was made to the trustee or the equitable estate, it was held to be the deed of the husband alone; and the limitation being to the trustee and his heirs, to hold for the sole and separate enjoyment of the wife for life, and at her death to be equally divided between any children surviving, born of the marriage, it was necessary that the trustee should hold the fee until the vesting of the contingent interest, and the fee being in him and his estate being barred, that of the beneficiaries was also barred. King v. Rhew, 108 N. Car. 696, 23 Am. St. Rep. 76.

Where a trustee holding title to land for the benefit of one for life, with remainder to others, to be ascertained at the termination of the life estate, allows a prescriptive title to ripen against him during the life estate, the remaindermen are also barred. Cushman v. Coleman, 92 Ga. 772.

Purchaser from Trustee.—One purchasing at a trustee's sale and taking possession, is to be regarded as holding in his own right, and independent of the beneficiary. This constitutes his possession adverse. Clark v. Snodgrass, 66 Ala. 243.

Where, in case of an implied or resulting trust, the trustee or one holding the legal title assumes ownership, and sells and conveys the property to a third party, this amounts to a repudiation of the trust, and the possession of the grantees claiming under such conveyance will be regarded as adverse. Peters v. Jones, 35 Iowa 512; Cummings v. Stovall, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 679.

Though a party who has agreed to act as friend and quasi agent of a nonresident landowner may renounce the agency at any time without a breach of trust or contract, he cannot at the same time retain the possession of the land; nor can he make the possession, when it becomes hostile, operate retrospectively so as to make the statute of limitations commence running before the possession became openly hostile. Whiting v. Taylor, 8 Dana (Ky.) 403.

Adverse to All Others.—But the possession of the agent may be adverse to all others but his principal. Thus the possession for the statutory period, by army officers, of land acquired by the United States for a reservation, although it should be in fact for the United States, is adverse as to other claimants, and a complete defense to an action of trespass to try title brought against such officers. Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U. S. 508.

Deed by Agent.—It has been held that a deed signed by an agent will not constitute color of title. Simmons v. Lane, 25 Ga. 178; Payne v. Blackshear, 52 Ga. 637.

Attorney and Client.—Where an attorney, without undue influence, bona fide and for a full and fair price, acquires land, the subject matter of his attorneyship, from his client, and receives a deed from the client and is put into possession, where he remains for over fifteen years, making valuable improvements, paying taxes, and claiming the land as his own, and in the meantime compromises an outstanding title, and during the fifteen years the client makes no claim to the premises or to any proceeds arising therefrom, the statute of limitations is a bar to any action. *Yeamans v. Presumption of Payment.—A presumption of payment of the mortgage debt may be raised where the mortgagor remains in uninterrupted possession of the property, after condition broken, without entry or claim on the part of the mortgagee. Howland v. Shurtleff, 2 Met. (Mass.) 26, 35 Am. Dec. 384; Chick v. Rollins, 44 Me. 104.

The presumption, however, is disputable. Cheever v. Perley, 11 Allen (Mass.) 584; Ayres v. Waite, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 76.

West Virginia.—Flynn v. Lee, 31 W. Va. 487.

Must be Repudiation of Mortgage.—The friendly relation between the mortgagor and mortgagee will be regarded as continuing until disclaimed by declarations or acts unmistakably hostile. Chouteau v. Riddle, 110 Mo. 366, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 245.

Until foreclosure the mortgagor owns the equity of redemption. This he may alien or transfer to another. It cannot be known, without some overtact throwing off allegiance, that the mortgagor or his vendee is not quietly enjoying the possession of the equity of redemption, at all times acknowledging the rights of the mortgagee. Boyd v. Beck, 29 Ala. 714.

It must appear that the mortgagor has by his acts or declarations repudiated the mortgage and denied the right and title claimed under it. Mere possession under claim of title is not necessarily adverse to the mortgagee. He must be advised by some act or declaration that possession is being held against his superior right, or at least something must be done that would put a reasonably prudent man on inquiry as to whether such holding was hostile to his right. Combs v. Goldsworthy, 109 Mo. 160.

But actual knowledge is not necessary. Bush v. White, 85 Mo. 339.

It is not sufficient that the mortgagor or those holding under him occupy, use, improve, and pay taxes on the premises as their own absolute property. Ringo v. Woodruff, 43 Ark. 469.

Where a Husband Mortgages His Land after a Parol Gift to His Wife, as payment of loans to him from her separate estate, the possession of the wife, while she resides on the land with her husband, is not an adverse possession under the statute of limitations as against the mortgagee. Gafford v. Strauss, 89 Ala. 283, 18 Am. St. Rep. 111, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 250.

Mortgage by Agent.—Where an agent buys land with his principal's money, taking the conveyance in his own name and executing a mortgage of the premises to a third party, his principal cannot avail himself of the statute of limitations as against the mortgagee where such principal takes a deed from the agent and enters into possession. Watts v. Creighton, 85 Iowa 154.

A Deed by the Mortgagor in Possession of a Third Party with Notice of the mortgage conveys only the equity of redemption, and does not pass such a colorable title as may ripen by possession into an absolute legal estate. Parker v. Banks, 79 N. Car. 480.

Such Purchaser Stands in the Shoes of the Mortgagor, and can avail himself of the presumption of payment only where the mortgagor could have done so under like circumstances. Chouteau v. Riddle, 110 Mo. 366; Martin v. Neblett, 86 Tenn. 383.

The Mere Taking Possession by the Vendee of the Mortgagor and continued occupancy by him and his vendees for the period of the statutory bar, accompanied by their open control and improvement of the land and payment of taxes thereon as their own absolute property, with the intention of holding it against all comers, will not bar the action. Whittington v. Flint, 43 Ark. 504, 51 Am. Rep. 572. See Jamison v. Perry, 38 Iowa 14.

And the rule is the same as to a junior mortgagee. Elsberry v. Boykin, 65 Ala. 336.

Possession of mortgaged premises under claim of ownership will not be adverse to the mortgagee where the claim was made with the knowledge of the mortgage and the claimant never in terms repudiated it. Duke v. State, 56 Ark. 485.

And the rule is the same as to a purchaser—

Possession by Mortgagee.—The mortgagee in possession after payment of the debt must, in order to be protected by the statute of limitations, show that he holds adversely, and some act other than the mere possession under the mortgage must be shown in order to establish the adverse character of such possession.¹ If in possession after condition broken, he may acquire title by lapse of time,² unless he has, in the meantime, recognized the mortgage as still subsisting and the mortgagor's right to redeem.³

from the mortgagor. Williams v. Kerr, 113 N. Car. 306.

Where a mortgagor or his grantee remains in possession after the title to an undivided interest therein has passed by a foreclosure sale to a purchaser thereof, his possession is presumed amicable and in subordination to the title of the purchaser until the contrary appears. The parties so jointly owning the land become tenants in common, the possession of one being deemed the possession of both; and the statute of limitations does not begin to run against such purchaser until an ouster or the assertion of some hostile claim by the tenant in possession, denoting an intention to hold adversely to his cotenant. Lowry v. Tihen, 31 Minn. 500.

1. Green v. Turner, 38 Iowa 118; Crawford v. Taylor, 42 Iowa 262; Warder v. Enslin, 73 Cal. 291; Bollinger v. Chouteau, 20 Mo. 89; Wilkerson v. Allen, 67 Mo. 502; Anding v. Davis, 38 Miss. 574, 77 Am. Dec. 658.

When Statute Begins to Run.—The statute of limitations will commence running against the right of the mortgagor to redeem whenever the mortgagee, with notice to the mortgagor, asserts an absolute title in himself to the property in his possession. A devise of the property as his estate is an assertion of title adverse to the claim of the mortgagor to redeem. Kohlheim v. Harrison, 34 Miss. 457.

Mortgagee in Possession to Satisfy His Claim out of Proceeds.—Where a mortgagee takes possession under an arrangement with the mortgagor for him to hold possession of the property, and manage it until he shall satisfy his claim from the proceeds, such possession is not adverse until the mortgagee's claim is satisfied or until he asserts an absolute title in himself and gives distinct notice of it to the mortgagor. McPherson v. Hayward, 81 Me. 329.

Possession by the Mortgagee after Foreclosure, but no order of sale issued pursuant to an arrangement with the mortgagor by which the mortgagee was to apply the rents to a satisfaction of the mortgage, is not adverse. Frink v. Le Roy, 49 Cal. 317. See Knowlton v. Walker, 13 Wis. 264.

California.—Under California Code Civ. Pro., § 346, an action to redeem a mortgage can be brought by the mortgagor against the mortgagee in possession at any time, unless the mortgagee has maintained an adverse possession of the mortgaged premises for five years after breach of some condition of the mortgage. Raynor v. Drew, 72 Cal. 307.

Void Foreclosure—Color of Title.—Where there has been a foreclosure, and a deed acquired by the mortgagee, though the proceedings were void, yet the deed will give color of title. Mason v. Ayers, 73 Ill. 121.

Deed Absolute on Its Face.—One in possession under a deed absolute on its face, but which is in fact a mortgage, does not hold adversely. Husheon v. Husheon, 71 Cal. 407.

Manhattan Co.*, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 48; Knowlton v. Walker, 13 Wis. 264; Waldo v. Rice, 14 Wis. 286.

The statute does not begin to run against the owner of the equity of redemption until the mortgagee takes actual, open, and notorious possession of the mortgaged premises. Knowlton v. Walker, 13 Wis. 264.

Claiming to Hold as Owner.—Where the mortgagee has, during a period of twenty-one years, held possession adversely to the mortgagor, claiming to hold not as mortgagee, but as owner, a court of equity, acting on the analogy of the statute of limitations, will hold the right to redeem barred, and the mortgagee must hold the possession in such manner that if the legal title and right of possession were in the mortgagor he would be barred of an action of ejectment. Robinson v. Fife, 3 Ohio St. 551; Crook v. Glenn, 30 Md. 55. The period is adopted by analogy to the statute of limitations. Hughes v. Edwards, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 489.

Where there has been No Accounting.—A mortgagor, by allowing the mortgagee to hold possession of the premises for twenty years without accounting and without admitting that he possessed the mortgage title only, loses the right of redemption. Clark v. Clough, 65 N. H. 43; Demarest v. Wynkoop, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 129; 8 Am. Dec. 467; Phillips v. Sinclair, 20 Me. 269; Jenner v. Tracy, 3 P. Wms. 287, note.

Before Bar is Complete.—A mortgagee's possessor at any period within twenty years from his entry, so far from being hostile to that of the mortgagor, is in equity deemed a possession in trust for him. Borst v. Boyd, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 507.

Presumption of Foreclosure.—Twenty years' possession under a mortgage is presumptive evidence of foreclosure. Randall v. Bradley, 65 Me. 43.

(9) Purchaser Pendente Lite.—The statute of limitations has no operation upon the subject of litigation, and hence does not run in favor of the purchaser of land pendente lite, who cannot be regarded as holding adversely to the parties to the suit during the continuance of the litigation.¹

(10) Vendor and Vendee—Possession of Vendor.—Though the mere continued possession of the vendor of land, after conveyance executed, is not adverse to his vendee, or one claiming under him,² yet there is nothing in running of time against the mortgagor, and time will begin to run only from the latest recognition within that period, Morgan v. Morgan, 10 Ga. 297; as, for example, where the mortgagee within twenty-one years before the filing of the bill to redeem takes a judgment for the mortgage debt, and files a bill of foreclosure, Robinson v. Fife, 3 Ohio St. 551. And see Pendleton v. Rooth, 1 Giff. 35.

Burden of Proof.—It lies upon the mortgagor to show such recognition. Morgan v. Morgan, 10 Ga. 297.

1. Rule as to Purchasers Pendente Lite.—In a suit to enforce a judgment lien against the real estate of a judgment debtor, a pendente lite purchaser from such debtor does not hold adversely to the party seeking to enforce such lien. Parker v. Clarkson, 39 W. Va. 184.

Where land was sold at a judicial sale, the sale confirmed, and a conveyance made to the purchaser, who took possession, and the litigation continued, and after ten years the decrees ordering and confirming the sale were reversed and declared void, and the sale set aside for want of jurisdiction in the court to order it, during which time the purchaser had been in the actual possession of the land, paying taxes, it was held that such possession was not adverse; that he stood in only the same relation to the land in controversy as did his vendor, and was as much bound by the proceedings in the suit, and could therefore claim no protection from the statute of limitations or adverse possession which his vendor could not claim, and he, being a party to the suit, had no such claim whatever. Lynch v. Andrews, 25 W. Va. 751.

Laches—Bona Fide Purchaser.—But though it is well settled that a purchaser pendente lite is bound by the judgment rendered against the one from whom he purchased, a party may by laches, lose his lis pendens, and the purchaser from the party whose title is defeated, and against whom a recovery is had, will be treated as a stranger to the proceedings. Unreasonable delay in the prosecution of an action is such negligence as will deprive a party of his remedy against a bona fide purchaser. Wallace v. Marquett, 88 Ky. 130.

Administration.—So long as the administration of an estate remains unclosed, the successor in interest of one of the distributees, entering into the possession under a decree of partial distribution, cannot acquire title by limitation or adverse possession as against those legally entitled to claim an interest in the land as tenants in common, though he claims title to the whole and pays all taxes thereon. In re Grider's Estate, 81 Cal. 571. And see Christy v. Spring Valley Water Works, 97 Cal. 21.

Void Deed.—Where, after the execution by husband and wife of a void deed of their homestead, they remained in possession thereof, their possession was held not to be the possession of the grantee, so as to enable him to claim by adverse possession, as against a party claiming by deed from the wife made after the husband's death, and while she was in possession. Parks v. Barnett (Ala., 1894), 16 So. Rep. 136.

Reservation of Homestead.—The owner of land, while in its occupancy as a homestead, their relations which will prevent the vendor from acquiring a title by adverse possession;¹ and if the intention to hold adversely is manifested by some unequivocal act of hostility, brought to the knowledge of the vendee, the statute of limitations will begin to run.²

conveyed the same in fee, reserving in the deed, however, his homestead right. It was held that the continued possession of the premises by the grantor, after his conveyance, was not adverse to his grantee, because such possession was consistent with the deed. Stevens v. Wait, 112 Ill. 544.

Acquisition of Tax Title.—The defendant's father, with whom the defendant lived, and whose affairs he managed, sold the land in question, which by intermediate conveyances came to plaintiffs' ownership. The defendant's father continued to farm the land, and it was never separated from the rest of his farm. The plaintiffs used it a few weeks of each year in their business of driving logs. It was held that defendant's father was tenant or licensee of the owners, that he held the land in trust, and that under the existing relationship he could not equitably extinguish their title and acquire the land himself by buying it at a tax sale and concealing his purchase until the time of redemption expired. Saunders v. Farmer, 62 N. H. 572.

Execution Sale—Judgment Debtor.—The possession of a judgment debtor after a sale of the property under execution is by sufferance of the purchaser, and not adverse to him. Hamilton v. Buchanan, 112 N. Car. 463; Jackson v. Sternbergh, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 153; Bradford v. Russell, 79 Ind. 64; Rucker v. Steelman, 97 Ind. 222.

It is not adverse until after the delivery of the sheriff's deed. Leonard v. Flynn (Cal., 1891), 26 Pac. Rep. 1097.

And there must be an explicit disclaimer of the purchaser's right, and assertion of right in himself. Whitlock v. Johnson, 87 Va. 323.

Tax Sale.—The rule is the same as to one purchasing at a tax sale. Hubbell v. Weldon, Hill & D. Supp. (N. Y.) 139.

Administrator's Sale—Possession of Heirs.—Since the heirs take subject to the payment of debts, their possession is not adverse to a purchaser at the administrator's sale. Rogers v. Johnson, 125 Mo. 202.

1. Smith v. Montes, 11 Tex. 24; Cramer v. Benton, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 291.

He may disseise his grantee, and by adverse possession for the necessary time bar the latter's entry. Tilton v. Emery, 17 N. H. 536.

Warranty Deed.—It is immaterial that the land was conveyed by warranty deed. The grantor is not estopped from asserting the adverse possession by a covenant of warranty. Sherman v. Kane, 86 N. Y. 57; Abbott v. Page, 92 Ala. 571, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 247; Traip v. Traip, 57 Me. 268; Stearns v. Hendersass, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 497, 57 Am. Dec. 65.

A Grantor Conveying by Quitclaim Deed may remain in possession of the property and assert and maintain an adverse possession. Dorland v. Magilton, 47 Cal. 485.

The Grantor of Lands in Trust may, by subsequent adverse use, acquire rights inconsistent with the trust. Snyder v. Snover (N. J., 1893), 27 Atl. Rep. 1013.

Shut-tuck*, 79 Cal. 511; Hoyt v. Jones, 31 Wis. 389; Chalfin v. Malone, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 496, 50 Am. Dec. 525; Creekmur v. Creekmur, 75 Va. 430; Roe v. Bundy, 45 La. Ann. 398, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.), title ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Intention must be Manifest.—There must be a change in the character of the possession if the vendor wishes to acquire title by adverse possession. Such change must be manifested by some act of hostility to the title of the vendee, plainly indicating to the latter the intention to deny his right and hold adversely to it. Connor v. Bell, 152 Pa. St. 444; Paldi v. Paldi, 84 Mich. 346.

Where a sale of land under a decree was made and confirmed, and the purchase money paid, but no deed given, and the former owner's heirs remained in possession, it was held that the statute of limitations did not begin to run against the purchaser until the heirs made a distinct disavowal of his title, and the assertion of the adverse claim was brought home to him. Whitlock v. Johnson, 87 Va. 323.

Presumption when Grantor's Possession Long Continued.—In Brinkman v. Jones, 44 Wis. 498, it was held that the possession of the grantor is presumably adverse to the grantee where it is continued for a long time after the grant, and is inconsistent in its nature with the grantee's rights under the terms of the deed.

Conveyance of Right of Way—Re-entry of Grantor.—The plaintiff had conveyed land to the defendant for a right of way, by a conveyance in which the defendant agreed to construct its railroad on the plaintiff's lands, and upon condition that if the railroad should not be so located the conveyance should be void. After the conveyance the defendant located the road-bed on the land. After five years, the plaintiff, without the knowledge of the defendant, cultivated a part of said land for thirteen years from the execution of the deed, at the end of which time the defendant entered without further permission from the plaintiff and completed the road. It was held that the re-entry by the plaintiff was insufficient to originate a right to the land by adverse possession. Yancey v. Savannah, etc., R. Co., 101 Ala. 234.

Second Grantee.—Where the vendor continued in possession of the land for a number of years and then conveyed it to another party, who took and held possession thereunder, such possession by the second grantee was held adverse to those claiming under the first deed. Smith v. Osage, 80 Iowa 84.

When a person who has conveyed property

Possession of Vendee.—The possession of the vendee is adverse to all the world, including his vendor, whether his deed is defective or not.¹

(11) Husband and Wife—As between Husband and Wife.—Owing to the unity of husband and wife, adverse possession cannot exist between them so long as the coverture continues,² but where the marital relations have been terminated by a warranty deed subsequently acquires an interest in the same property by a tax title, and conveys his subsequently-acquired title in a portion of the property to third parties, who reside thereon for more than ten years, their title cannot be attacked. Reilly v. Blaser, 61 Mich. 399.

Re-entry by Vendor.—If the vendor, on the abandonment of the land by his vendee, takes possession and puts in a tenant, it amounts to an ouster. Pipher v. Lodge, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 214. And see Watson v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Pa.) 289, 36 Am. Dec. 176; Union Canal Co. v. Young, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 410, 30 Am. Dec. 212.

Purchaser at Execution Sale.—So a purchaser at an execution sale holds adversely to the defendant in execution. Normant v. Eureka Co. (Ala., 1893), 12 So. Rep. 454.

Grantee in Deed from Guardian.—The possession of the grantee in a deed by a guardian is adverse, in its incipency, as against the widow and adult son of the intestate, who were parties to the proceedings in court ordering the sale. Myers v. McGavock, 39 Neb. 843.

Deed in Escrow.—The possession of a grantee under a deed placed in escrow, but never delivered, is the possession of the grantor. McAuliff v. Parker, 10 Wash. 141.

Subsequently Acquired Interest of Vendor.—A vendee in possession under a deed to the entire undivided interest of a tenant in common does not hold adversely to his grantor as to an interest subsequently acquired by the latter from another cotenant. Gardner v. Pace (Ky., 1889), 11 S. W. Rep. 779.

Parol Gift.—Possession under a parol gift is adverse to the donor. International Bank v. Fife, 95 Mo. 118; Comins v. Comins, 21 Conn. 416; South School Dist. v. Blakeslee, 13 Conn. 227; Quinn v. Quinn, 76 Iowa 565.

Exception in Deed.—But a vendee entering under his deed does not hold adversely as to certain lots excepted in his deed as previously sold to another. Rossee v. Wickham, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 386. And a grantee with notice that an alleyway is excepted from his deed does not acquire title thereto by adverse possession on account of the mere failure of the grantor to have it opened. Garstang v. Davenport (Iowa, 1894), 57 N. W. Rep. 876.

The possession of premises by a husband claiming the same in his marital right can in no sense be deemed adverse to the claim of one deriving title from the wife. Vandervoort v. Gould, 36 N. Y. 639.

A Wife cannot Claim Adversely to Her Husband, or those claiming under him, so long as he remains the head of the family. Santa Barbara First Nat. Bank v. Guerra, 61 Cal. 109.

Nor can a Husband Hold Adversely to His Wife premises of which they are in the joint occupancy as a family. Hendricks v. Rasson, 53 Mich. 575.

Where Husband and Wife are Tenants by Entirety, neither is capable of claiming or holding adversely to the other. Orthwein v. Thomas, 127 Ill. 554, 11 Am. St. Rep. 159.

Divorce.—In Hopson v. Fowlkes, 92 Tenn. 697, it was held that the wife's title is barred if, after the severance of an estate by the entirety by a divorce of the husband and wife, the entire interest in the lands is sold under decree for the husband's debts, and thereafter held adversely by the purchaser for the statutory period.

Joint Possession by Husband and Wife, held under the wife's color and claim of title, inures to her benefit. Templeton v. Twitty, 88 Tenn. 595.

Land Bought by Husband with Wife's Funds.—Where land is bought in the husband's name with the money of the wife, his possession of it as their common home without claim of ownership expressed to her or to any one likely to inform her is not adverse to her right to a resulting trust. Berry v. Wiedman (W. Va., 1894), 20 S. E. Rep. 817.

Destruction by Husband of Unrecorded Deed—Fraudulent Conveyance in Trust for Wife.—In Potter v. Adams, 125 Mo. 118, the husband destroyed his unrecorded deed in order to reinvest title in his grantor, and then procured a deed to the same lands to be made in fraud of his creditors, to a third person in trust for his wife, which was recorded, and both hus-

by divorce or abandonment, it seems that one may acquire title from the other by adverse possession.¹

As to Third Parties.—For the same reason a husband or wife entering upon land in subordination to the title of the owner cannot acquire title by adverse possession through the possession of his or her consort.²

(12) Parent and Child.—As between those occupying parental and filial, or quasi parental and filial, relations, the possession of one is presumed to be permissive, and not adverse to the other.³

band and wife remained in possession of the land for more than ten years, the wife having title under the trust deed, and the husband having no title. It was held that the wife must be considered to have had sole possession during the joint occupancy, and that title would vest in her by virtue of the statute of limitations, running from the recording of the trust deed. See also McQueen v. Fletcher, 77 Ga. 444.

Homestead.—The husband's acts of possession and control over the homestead will be taken as evidence of joint ownership with the wife, and no presumption of an adverse holding can be indulged or allowed. Mauldin v. Cox, 67 Cal. 391.

Separate Property.—In Bell v. Bell, 37 Ala. 541, 79 Am. Dec. 73, it was said that it might be that if the wife was in possession of property claiming openly that it was conveyed to her as a separate estate, so as to exclude the husband's marital rights, and if she had continued to possess and enjoy the property under such claim for more than twenty years, the law would presume against the husband that the claim was founded on a valid conveyance creating a separate estate.

Grantee of Husband.—Where a husband sells the land of his wife, the possession of his grantee is not adverse to the wife during the existence of the coverture. Stephens v. McCormick, 5 Bush (Ky.) 181; Salter v. Salter, 80 Ga. 178, 12 Am. St. Rep. 249.

Dower of Wife.—And an adverse possession for the statutory period under a contract of sale made by the husband does not bar the wife's inchoate right of dower. Boling v. Clark, 83 Iowa 481; Williams v. Williams, 89 Ky. 381; Miller v. Pence, 132 Ill. 149.

Grantee of Wife.—But where a married woman conveys land held in her own right without joining her husband in the deed, fifteen years' adverse possession by the grantee will bar the inchoate right of the husband. Jenkins v. Dewey, 49 Kan. 49.

1. Jones v. Thomas, 124 Mo. 586.

Where a void decree of divorce was made between husband and wife, partitioning certain land of the husband's, and the decree was acquiesced in by the husband, and the wife thereafter lived upon the portion of the land partitioned to her, in undisturbed possession, as a feme sole, for the time required for an adverse possession by the statute of limitations, she was held to have acquired a title by adverse possession. Warr v. Honeck, 8 Utah 61. In this case it was said that under the statute giving a married woman all her property owned prior to the marriage or acquired during the coverture, with power to sue and be sued plead and be impleaded, defend and be defended at law, an abandoned wife, living as a feme sole, could hold land adversely to her husband.

2. Where a husband rents land and moves upon it with his family in subordination to the owner's title, the wife cannot, during coverture, claim the premises adversely to the owner so as to set in motion the statute of limitations. Frink v. Alsip, 49 Cal. 103. And the husband's declarations as to the nature of his holding are binding upon the widow after his death. Daveis v. Collins, 43 Fed. Rep. 31. And see Meier v. Meier, 105 Mo. 411.

The possession of the widow is of the same character as was that of her husband. Mitchell v. Murphy, 43 Fed. Rep. 425. There must be a renunciation of the privity. Mitchell v. Murphy, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 583. And see Oury v. Saunders, 77 Tex. 278.

3. Burrus v. Meadors, 90 Ala. 140; Wells v. Head, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 170.

A possession with reference to parental or filial duty cannot be adverse. White v. White, 52 Ark. 188. But see Douglas v. Irvine, 126 Pa. St. 643.

Where the Title is in the Child the possession of the parent is not adverse until he does some act disavowing the right of the child and asserts title in himself in hostility thereto. Allen v. Allen, 58 Wis. 202; McDougal v. Bradford, 80 Tex. 558; Collins v. Lynch, 167 Pa. St. 635. And see Evans v. Berlocher, 83 Tex. 612.

Nor is the Possession of the Children occupying and renting the property and paying taxes adverse to the absent parent. Silva v. Wimpenny, 136 Mass. 253. And see Gifford v. Gifford, 100 Mich. 258.

Acts of Possession and Control among those occupying parental and filial relations are not to be deemed so convincing, because they may be consistent with a mere permissive enjoyment of a usufructuary possession. Davis v. Bowmar, 55 Miss. 766.

The Residence of a Son upon land in the occupation of his parent at the time of and subsequent to the taking by the son of a deed to the land cannot be regarded as possession adverse to the parent. Cahoon v. Parks, 25 Nova Scotia 1.

Widow.—A daughter will not lose title to land through a possession first asserted to be adverse during her coverture by the widow of her father, the original occupant, who during his lifetime, and at the time of his daughter's marriage, held in subordination to her title. Oury v. Saunders, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 310.

The mere entry and possession of a widow of the land of her deceased husband, claim-

c. POSSESSION MUST BE ACTUAL—(1) General Rule.—It is well established that possession, which is necessary to ripen into title, must be actual, and to begin such possession there must be an entry which will amount to an ouster of the true owner.¹ It must be actual, either of all or part of the land claimed, as the same may be held with color of title or without; because constructive possession follows the title, and there cannot be two possessions of the same land at the same time, and the owner, being in possession by virtue of his title, remains until he is disseised or ousted by another entering and holding for himself.²

ing it and taking the rents and profits, is not adverse to her children, the heirs. Cook v. Nicholas, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 27; Hall v. Matthias, 4 W & S. (Pa.) 331. And see Thomas v. Black, 113 Mo. 66.

Estoppel.—In Fox v. Windes, 127 Mo. 502, a father who had conveyed a portion of his lands to his sons subsequently made a deed to them of another portion, which recited that it was made in lieu of the first deed on account of a misdescription of the lands therein. The sons accepted the second deed and afterwards sold the lands conveyed thereby. It was held that such acceptance and sale by the sons estopped them to claim the land conveyed by the first deed, and that the possession of the father, after the making of the second deed, of the lands conveyed by the first deed, was adverse to the sons.

Son Improving Wild Lands of Father.—And where a son, by his father's permission, took possession of certain wild land belonging to the latter, and, having cleared and built upon it, took the whole use and profits for fifteen years, it was held that the father's title was thereby extinguished. Lane v. Copley, 1 Root (Conn.) 68.

Question of Actual Adverse Possession Largely Dependent upon Circumstances.—The evidence necessary to establish actual adverse possession varies in each particular case, much depending upon the situation of the property and the use to which it may be applied.¹ The same rule will not apply equally to cultivated lands, town property, and wild lands.²

When Actual Occupation, Cultivation, or Residence Unnecessary.—Although there must be actual entry, neither actual occupation, cultivation, nor residence is necessary where the property is so situated as not to admit of any permanent improvement or cultivation; but where acts of ownership have been done upon land, which from their nature indicate a continuous claim of property, and are continued long enough, such acts are evidence of an adverse possession for the consideration of the jury.³

1. Situation of the Lands—Uses to Which They may be Applied.—Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 41; Normant v. Eureka Co., 98 Ala. 181; Mooney v. Cooledge, 30 Ark. 655; Dorr v. School Dist. No. 26, 40 Ark. 237; Houghton v. Wilhelmy, 157 Mass. 521.

In Bowen v. Guild, 130 Mass. 123, Lord, J., said: "What is an adverse and exclusive possession, and what is an interruption of such possession, depend very much upon the character of the land, and the purpose to which it is adapted and for which it is used. The adverse possession of an outlying lot of small value, remote from the dwellings of people, suitable for pasturing or for the growth of wood, or for some other purpose of husbandry, is to be proved by evidence very different from that which establishes the exclusive occupation of a residence or a shop or storehouse within the limits of a thickly settled business population. The rule of law is the same in both cases; but the evidence necessary to prove the fact is very different."

In Mooney v. Cooledge, 30 Ark. 655, the court said: "It is not the particular use made of the land, or whether built upon and used as a residence, or cleared and cultivated as a farm; but the exclusive use and adverse possession may be proven as well by other acts and declarations, which show a visible, open, and exclusive possession and use of the land."

In Brown v. Rose, 55 Iowa 734, it was held that an instruction charging the jury that adverse possession might be predicated on the exercise of such acts of ownership, control, and dominion as are usually exercised by owners over their lands of like character, condition, and situation, was erroneous when applied to unimproved prairie lands.

Acts of Ownership.—In Draper v. Shoot, 25 Mo. 203, 69 Am. Dec. 462, recognizing the fact that it is difficult to lay down any precise rule for all cases, the court maintained that it might be safely said that where acts of ownership have been done on land, which from their nature indicate a notorious claim of property in it, such acts are evidence of an ouster of a former owner, provided the property was not susceptible of a more strict or definite possession.

But in Cook v. Farrah, 105 Mo. 492, where the separate tract, half prairie and half timber, could have been easily enclosed, and was fit for cultivation, it was held that the erection of timber structures, cutting of timber, pasturing of hogs, and payment of taxes under claim of ownership by one residing a mile and a half distant from the tract did not constitute actual adverse possession.

Wild Lands.—So in the case of wild lands incapable of improvement the possession and use must be such as from its nature the land is susceptible of.¹

Neither a Deed nor Any Equivalent Muniment is necessary where there is actual possession and occupation.²

More Naked Possession without Color of Title is adverse only to the extent of the actual possession or enclosure.³

Entry under Conveyance from One Having Color of Title.—But an entry into possession under a conveyance from a person having color of title is presumed to be made according to the description in the deed, and his occupancy is construed as possession of the entire lot where there is no actual adverse possession of the parts not actually occupied by him.⁴

In Huntington v. Allen, 44 Miss. 654, where the lands remained in a wild state, unused for any practical purpose, until the occupancy under the several vendees of the claimant began, and prior to that time there had been no act of ownership by the latter except the payment of taxes and an occasional visit to them, it was held that this was not an appropriation of them to some use for which they were fit so as to create an eviction, and that the statute of limitations commenced to run from the date of the actual entry and occupancy by the purchasers.

Swamp Land—Paying Taxes—Cutting Timber—Using Pond.—In Leeper v. Baker, 68 Mo. 407, the court said: "A fence, building, or other improvement is not essential to constitute an adverse possession. Acts of ownership, under a claim of right, visible, are sufficient to authorize the court to find such possession, and the nature of these acts of ownership must depend on the uses of which the land was capable." In this case the claim was for forty acres of land, a part of an entire tract of six hundred acres. The land was swamp land, unfit for cultivation, and could not be fenced in. It being shown that the defendant had paid the taxes for more than ten years before suit, used the pond for watering his stock, and cut timber from the swamp, it was held that a verdict for the defendant was not without evidence.

Cutting Timber and Grass.—In Forey v. Bigelow, 56 Iowa 381, where lands were open and unenclosed, but it appeared that the defendant and those under whom he claimed had exercised the exclusive right to cut timber and grass therefrom, and had at various times sold to others the right to cut grass, it was held that such possession was as effectual as actual enclosure of the land.

Survey of Land—Payment of Taxes.—A mere survey of land and payment of taxes are not sufficient evidence to establish adverse possession. Thompson v. Burhans, 61 N. Y. 52.

Cutting Timber—Erecting Fences and Buildings—Payment of Taxes.—In Davis v. Bowmar, 55 Miss. 742, the court said: "It is certain that appellant took possession, under some sort of right in himself, of a wilderness, felled the forest, cleared the jungle, erected fences and buildings, made the place his home, cultivated it, protected it by levees, had it assessed as his own, paid taxes on it, and enjoyed exclusive possession and control of it as his own from 1836 to 1863; and in the uncertainty, if any, from the imperfect knowledge we have, as to exactly how the possession began, appellant is entitled to the benefit of the just presumption that he was holding as owner from having acted so long, and from the beginning, as owners do, and so inconsistently with the idea of title in any other than himself."

Making Roads—Cutting Timber.—In Finn v. Wisconsin River Land Co., 72 Wis. 546, where it appeared that the plaintiffs had entered and been upon the land a number of times to see if any trespasses were being committed thereon, looking over the timber and running out lines upon which to build roads for the purpose of getting out some of the timber and firewood, that in winter they cut roads through the same for the purpose of getting out fence rails and firewood, cleared out the old roads and built new ones, it was held that this occupation was open, notorious, and continuous in the usual manner that lands are occupied for such purposes, and was sufficient to constitute adverse possession. Lyon, J., in delivering the opinion of the court stated the rule to be that if the plaintiffs actually and exclusively occupied the land in question in hostility to the defendant's title, and subjected the same to their will and dominion by actual and appropriate use thereof, according to its locality, quality, and character, the evidence of such occupation being tangible and visible to a person going upon and examining the land, such occupancy and use constituted adverse possession by the plaintiffs.

Accretions.—In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Groh, 85 Wis. 641, it was held that a disseisor who entered upon land bordering a navigable water and enclosed the same with a fence was entitled to the accretions, and that it was not necessary for him to continually extend his boundaries to the water's edge. See the title ACCRETION.

4. Watson v. Mancill, 76 Ala. 600; Bell v.

But Entry upon Part of a Tract, even under claim of the whole, while the other part is held adversely, cannot found adverse possession of the whole, although adverse possession of the other part be abandoned.¹

Legal Owner in Possession of Part of the Tract.—So where the legal owner is in possession of a part of the land of which he has the fee, the law invests him with the possession of the whole, and a person entering thereon, not having the legal title, will be restricted in his possession to the part actually occupied or cultivated;² and it has been held that a statutory provision that possession under color of title of a part of a tract in the name of the whole tract shall be deemed a possession of the whole, applies only where there is no occupancy by the legal owner of any part.³

(2) Evidence of—(a) By Occupation.—Actual, continued occupation and possession is strong evidence of adverse possession, but mere occasional entries upon, and use of, the land will not generally be sufficient to show adverse possession.⁴

As was said by Snyder, J., in Core v. Faupel, 24 W. Va. 245: "A man cannot, by mere physical means, retain land in his exclusive grasp. Possession may be more manifest as to a part than as to the rest; therefore it is an established rule of law that the actual possession of a part is the possession of the entire tract or boundary covered by the occupant's title or claim of title. * * * What is the extent of his possession, is to be determined by the limits of his title or color of title. An intruder without color of title is, of necessity, confined to his mere enclosure."

1. Pepper v. O'Dowd, 39 Wis. 538; Wilson v. McEwan, 7 Oregon 87.

In Pepper v. O'Dowd, 39 Wis. 538, it was held that to make the actual adverse possession of part of a tract of farming land, once possessed and used as several farms by several owners, constructive adverse possession of the whole tract as one farm, it was necessary to show not merely that the whole tract was included in some of the claimants' title papers, but that the several farms had been joined together in one known farm before the entry under which the claim was made, and constituted one known farm at the time of such entry.

Occasional Acts of Ownership.—"Possession of land is denoted by the exercise of acts of dominion over it, in making the ordinary use and taking the ordinary profits of which it is susceptible in its present state—such acts to be so repeated as to show that they are done in the character of owner, and not of an occasional trespasser." Gaston, J., in Williams v. Buchanan, 1 Ired. (N. Car.) 540, 35 Am. Dec. 760.

As was said in Bazille v. Murray, 40 Minn. 48: "While it is true that what will constitute adverse possession depends to a certain extent upon the character of the property, yet all the authorities agree that the possession of one claiming by disseisin must be actual, open, or visible, notorious, exclusive, distinct, and continuous. * * * An occasional or sporadic use of land, an occasional entry upon timber land, and cutting timber thereon, an annual entry to cut timber or feed cattle, an annual entry to cut grass, have been held insufficient to disseise the true owner, and create adverse possession against him."

Digging Sand and Gravel from Time to Time.—The taking of gravel for three days in one month was held to be not an interference with the possessor. Jeffries Neck Pasture v. Ipswich, 153 Mass. 42.

Where all that the defendant had done was to dig sand on and from the land from time to time, and sell the same, his entries thereon for that purpose were but successive acts of trespass against the true owner if he was

An Entry to Survey the tract is not such occupation and entry as are required.¹

The Erection of Temporary Structures is not such occupation as will establish title by adverse possession.²

Acts Indicating and Serving as Notice of Intention to appropriate.—But where upon occasional entries the acts done upon the land are such as to indicate and serve as a notice of an intention to appropriate the land itself, and not the mere products of it, as making permanent improvements, adverse possession may be established.³

not owner himself. Parker v. Wallis, 60 Md. 15, 45 Am. Rep. 703.

Merely Tearing down Part of a Fence and Walking across the Land does not establish sufficient possession, Green v. Dwyer, 33 Minn. 403; nor does slightly extending a line fence, Carrol v. Gillion, 33 Ga. 539.

Marking Boundaries—Cutting Trees.—In The Mission of the Immaculate Virgin, etc., v. Cronin, 143 N. Y. 524, it was held that where land was unenclosed, unimproved, and unoccupied, the facts that a person has for twenty years claimed title thereto, surveyed it, marked its boundaries by monuments, cut trees thereon from time to time, and for a few years had paid taxes thereon, do not establish an adverse possession, nor do these facts, in the absence of a constructive or actual possession, authorize the presumption of a grant from the true owner.

Gathering Seaweed.—In East Hampton v. Kirk, 68 N. Y. 459, it was held that the mere use by the defendant of the locus in quo for the gathering and storing of sea manure was not evidence of an occupation under a claim of title.

The Use of the Water of a Stream during a Period of Abundance is not an adverse use on which a prescription can be founded. Anaheim Water Co. v. Semi-Tropic Water Co., 64 Cal. 185.

Occupying Sugar Place for Purpose of Making Sugar.—In Wilson v. Blake, 53 Vt. 305, it was held that occupying a sugar place from year to year, only for the purpose of making sugar, such place being separated from the home farm by intervening lands owned by others, is not actual or continuous possession.

Cutting Ice.—In Gouverneur v. National Ice Co., 57 Hun (N. Y.) 474, it was held that cutting ice on a pond during a few weeks of every winter was not sufficient possession or occupation to constitute an adverse possession.

Mining Lands.—A mere digging of coals in the winter with an abandonment of the property for the rest of the year is not sufficient to establish adverse possession. Jackson v. Stoetzel, 87 Pa. St. 302. Possession of the surface does not carry with it the possession of the coal below where the title to the mineral right has been severed from that of the surface. Caldwell v. Copeland, 37 Pa. St. 427, 78 Am. Dec. 436; Westmoreland, etc., Natural Gas Co. v. DeWitt, 130 Pa. St. 235. The operations of building a shed, quarrying rocks, and erecting a limekiln on the land in dispute, continued for the statutory period, have been held sufficient. Moore v. Thomp- son, 69 N. Car. 120. See also Colvin v. McCune, 39 Iowa 502. See also the title MINES AND MINING CLAIMS.

Burying Ground.—If a person enters upon, sets apart, and asserts an exclusive right to a piece of land as a family burying ground for a series of years as deaths may occur in his own family and those of his friends, it will constitute an adverse possession. Actual residence or continuous occupation in such a case is not necessary. But where the possession is not under color of title, it will be restricted to such parts of the land as are covered with graves. Mooney v. Cooledge, 30 Ark. 655. See Bonham v. Loeb (Ala., 1895), 18 So. Rep. 300; also the title CEMETERIES.

Presumptions as to Quantity of Land Occupied.

—In Alexander v. Polk, 39 Miss. 737, it was held that where knowledge on the part of the owner of the adverse holding is sought to be established by the presumption arising from the nature and character of the possession, the quantity or proportion of the land actually occupied becomes material; and that if the whole tract is occupied and enclosed by a party asserting an adverse claim, the presumption is violent that the owner has knowledge of the adverse character of the claim; but where, on a boundary line between the owner and the adverse claimant, the possession of the latter has been but of a small quantity, which might be attributed to accident, a knowledge on the part of the owner of the adverse claim will not be presumed. See infra, this title, Extent of Adverse Possession.

One who was accustomed to have a wood pile upon a vacant lot for thirty years, and had buried potatoes upon it for six years, acquired no title to the lot by such a possession. Miller v. Downing, 54 N. Y. 631.

In Cass v. Richardson, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 28, it was held that the erection and use of a wash place to wash ore was not sufficient evidence of possession.

In McKinnon v. Meston (Mich., 1895), 62 N. W. Rep. 1014, it was held that the fact that one occupied a shanty on certain wild lands while removing timber therefrom did not show a bona fide and actual possession against the real owner.

When Question for Jury.—And although it may not be decisive, when there is evidence of the actual possession, use, cultivation, and improvement of the land, the question of adverse possession should be submitted to the jury.¹

Residence may be by Tenant or Vendee under Contract of Purchase.—Actual residence and occupation by the owner of the title in person is not necessary, but it is sufficient if the owner has possession by tenant, and by one under a contract to purchase.²

(b) By Cultivation—Ordinary Use and the Taking of Ordinary Profits Sufficient Cultivation.—Cultivation, in order to establish adverse possession, need not be the highest state of cultivation of which the land is susceptible, but ordinary use and the taking of the ordinary profits of the land will suffice.³

Occasional Acts of Working and Improving Insufficient.—But mere dilatory and negligent cultivation and occasional acts of working and improving are insufficient.⁴

Reaping Not Cultivation.—There must be actual continued cultivation; reaping alone cannot be considered cultivation or improvement.⁵

Going upon Land.—So going upon the land from time to time to cut hay or grass does not constitute such possession as will ripen into title.⁶

Cutting Timber—Firewood.—Nor will cutting and carrying off firewood and rails⁷ to indicate unmistakably that he means to be considered as claiming the ownership, and not to commit an occasional trespass simply, such occupancy is sufficient, Williams v. Buchanan, 1 Ired. (N. Where land is used for agricultural purposes, it is not essential that the claimant should cultivate it constantly, but only in accordance with usages prevailing among husbandmen." Avery, J., in Hamilton v. Icard, 114 N. Car. 532.

Where a party erected upon a city lot, to which he claimed title, a substantial and permanent brick building, which he claimed to own throughout its entire extent, the circumstances attending his act amounted to such a claim of title to the land upon which the building was erected, at least to the centre of the walls, as might, by lapse of time, ripen into a title. Crapo v. Cameron, 61 Iowa 447.

In Congdon v. Morgan, 14 S. Car. 587, where it was shown that the claimants had made entry upon the land under their deed, marked out their claim by survey and stakes, and built thereon a wharf, erected a boat shed, and used both wharf and shed, it was held that these were such acts of possession as would ripen into title.

In Judson v. Duffy, 96 Mich. 255, it was held that evidence that a defendant in ejectment entered into actual possession under a void title, and that his grantor twenty years prior had arranged with a neighboring farmer to look after the land, and thereafter paid the taxes assessed thereon, and that the farmer had sometimes pastured his cattle thereon, and authorized others to cut grass thereon, was not that clear and cogent proof necessary to divest the title to the land by adverse possession.

In Robbins v. Moore, 129 Ill. 30, where it appeared that in 1857 a party, under claim of title, took possession of a tract of land by breaking about thirty acres thereof and sowing it in wheat, but the land was not fenced, though there was a shanty on it, and that after the crop was harvested no other acts of possession were shown until after the lapse of fifteen years, it was held that this failed to establish adverse possession as required.

Cultivation of Different Spots.—In Hamilton v. Icard, 114 N. Car. 532, it was held that the planting of tobacco beds in different places, not upon the same spot for more than two successive years, though continued for the statutory period, would not constitute an actual possession such as would mature title, since occupancy does not divest title beyond its actual bounds.

In Forey v. Bigelow, 56 Iowa 381, it was held that where lands were open and unen-and timber suffice where the land is suitable for other purposes.¹

Merely Grazing Cattle and horses upon land will not show an adverse possession.²

When Cultivation of Part Constructive Possession of the Whole.—The cultivation of part of a tract does not create constructive possession of the whole, unless the original entry is by color of title by specific boundaries to the whole tract.³

(c) By Enclosure.—The actual fencing and enclosing of the tract are not, closed, but it appeared that the defendant and those under whom he claimed had for more than ten years claimed and exercised the exclusive right to cut timber and grass therefrom, and had at various times sold the right to cut grass to others, such possession was as effectual as an actual enclosure of the land.

In Watkins v. Lynch, 71 Cal. 21, it was held that the acts of sowing grain and pasturing cattle on the sides of a public road were not sufficient to show either an abandonment of the use of the road by the public, or its adverse possession by the person doing such acts.

But in Lantry v. Parker, 37 Neb. 353, it was said that the protection of grass during the growing season, and the cutting, curing, and disposal of the hay at the proper periods, was actual possession in the defendant, especially when taken in connection with his using the land in like manner as the surrounding tracts owned or claimed by him, and his acts to prevent its use by others.

Illustrations.—Such acts are mere separate acts of trespass, and do not constitute continuous possession or use. As was said by Richardson, J., in White v. Reid, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 534, of the several acts in that case: "Every trespass * * * was distinct, and had no necessary connection with the next trespass. For instance, on one day the defendant may have felled ten trees, the next twenty, the third twenty-five, and so on successively; they cannot be called even trespasses by continuation, as by feeding cattle on another's land. For in the case before us every trespass terminated in itself, and can no more be committed [continued?] than beating A to-day is beating him to-morrow; each begins, continues, and is completed in itself."

So in Childress v. Calloway, 76 Ala. 130, it was held that cutting a small quantity of timber on two occasions, at an interval of one year between the two, when the land was shown to be good for grazing and farming purposes, and suitable for a homestead, was not sufficient to establish adverse possession.

Nor will repeated cutting establish possession necessarily. Townsend v. Reeves, 44 N. J. L. 525. And it has been held that entirely clearing the land will not accomplish this if the timber is allowed to grow again. Parker v. Parker, 1 Allen (Mass.) 245.

In Heller v. Peters, 140 Pa. St. 648, evidence that the claimant's ancestor had a mill near the land in dispute, and for twenty years or more when he wanted a stick of timber went upon the land and got it, was held insufficient to prove actual possession.

In Copeland v. Murphey, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 64, although the timber constituted the principal source of the value of the land, yet since it did not appear that the land was not susceptible of cultivation, the taking of timber was not sufficient to establish adverse possession.

But where the land is susceptible of no other use, as where it is merely woodland, and one under color of title uses the land for the purpose of obtaining wood for fuel or fencing for farming, this may constitute possession. Scott v. Delany, 87 Ill. 148; Clement v. Perry, 34 Iowa 564.

Timber Lands.—So in Finn v. Wisconsin River Land Co., 72 Wis. 546, it was held that where the plaintiff went upon the land a number of times every year to see whether trespass was being committed thereon, to look over the timber, and to run out lines on which to build roads to get out some timber, and that the roads were built, and timber was cut during each winter to be used for fence rails and firewood on plaintiff's farm, which adjoined the land, and for other purposes, and where his occupation was in the usual manner that timber lands were occupied, the possession was adverse. See also Clement v. Perry, 34 Iowa 564.

And in West v. Lanier, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 762, where it appeared that the land was valuable only for the timber and ore on it, and the defendant placed slaves thereon to cut timber and dig ore, his possession was held equivalent to actual possession.

unless expressly required by statute, essential to constitute adverse possession, but such acts are very decisive in determining possession and claim of ownership.¹

Enclosure without Residence.—Where the property has been properly enclosed there may be sufficient evidence of claim to ownership without actual residence.²

By Statute in Some States it is provided that to constitute adverse possession the land must be protected by a substantial enclosure or be actually cultivated or improved where the claim is not founded on a written instrument.³

Sufficiency of Enclosure.—When required or depended upon, the fence must be substantial, and merely lapping fallen trees or making a bush fence will not generally be sufficient;⁴ but natural barriers may be used. The sufficiency of the enclosure is, however, a question for the jury.⁵

1. Actual Fencing and Enclosing Not Necessary unless Required by Statute.—Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 441; Zeilin v. Rogers, 21 Fed. Rep. 103; Bell v. Denson, 56 Ala. 444; Beecher v. Galvin, 71 Mich. 391; Irwin v. Woodmansee, 104 Mo. 403; Southmayd v. McLaughlin, 24 N. J. Eq. 181; Thompson v. Philadelphia, etc., Coal, etc., Co., 133 Pa. St. 46; Clark v. Potter, 32 Ohio St. 49; Hornor v. Reuter, 152 Ill. 106.

As was said by Somerville, J., in Doe v. Anderson, 79 Ala. 215: "A fence or enclosure is not an essential element of adverse possession, but is only one of many acts indicative of possession and claim of ownership. It is often very important, it is true, to mark with precision the limits or boundaries of a possession, especially when the occupant is without color of title, which would answer this purpose. In a section of the country, for example, where fence laws have been abolished, the absence of an enclosure would weigh but little; so where a river constitutes a boundary line. The reason is that it would then be no index of an intention to abandon. It has often been decided in this country that the possession of an occupant may be adverse without either enclosure or improvements."

So in Beecher v. Galvin, 71 Mich. 391, it was held that an instruction which assumed that there could be no adverse possession such as could develop into title unless the land was enclosed, was incorrect.

In Maryland it has been held that actual enclosure is necessary to defeat the title of the real owner. Armstrong v. Risteau, 5 Md. 274, 59 Am. Dec. 115; Casey v. Inloes, 1 Gill (Md.) 496, 39 Am. Dec. 658.

Town Lots.—In Garrett v. Belmont Land Co., 94 Tenn. 459, it was held that there must be actual enclosure, whenever the property is susceptible of it, in order to make out a case of adverse possession of town lots.

2. Laird v. McConachy, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 290; Miller v. Shaw, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 129; Smith v. Middleton, 1 Har. & M. (Md.) 521; Armstrong v. Risteau, 5 Md. 257, 59 Am. Dec. 115.

3. California Code Civ. Pro., § 325; New York Code Civ. Pro., § 372.

4. Fence must be Substantial—Lapping Fallen Trees.—Coburn v. Hollis, 3 Met. (Mass.) 125; Slater v. Jepherson, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 129; Hale v. Glidden, 10 N. H. 397.

In Borel v. Rollins, 30 Cal. 408, it was held that putting up a fence, consisting of small posts with two rails nailed on, without actually occupying the land, and afterwards suffering the fence to decay within a year or two, was not sufficient to constitute prima facie evidence of title to land by actual possession.

As to Woodland, Agnew, J., lays down the following rule in O'Hara v. Richardson, 46 Pa. St. 390: "If a party defines his boundaries, and takes actual possession of a part by clearing or cultivation, and uses the remainder as farmers usually do woodland, taking timber, tapping trees, and so forth, and does this adversely and exclusively for a period to satisfy the statute, the owner in the meantime not interfering, he gains title by limitation."

In Jackson v. Schoonmaker, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 230, it was held that a possession fence, which was made by trees felled and lapping one upon another, did not constitute a sufficient adverse possession to toll the right of entry of the true owner. The court said there must be a real and substantial enclosure, an actual occupancy, a possessio pedis, which is definite, positive, and notorious, to constitute an adverse possession, when that is the only defense, and is to countervail a legal title. The object of the statute defining the acts essential to constitute an adverse possession is that the real owner may, by unequivocal acts of the disseisor, have notice of the hostile claim, and be thereby called upon to assert his legal title. In this case there was no actual enclosure by fences of the land in question.

Brush Fence.—In Smith v. Hosmer, 7 N. H. 436, 28 Am. Dec. 354, it was held that a brush fence maintained near the line between the possessions of two adjoining owners, but not continued at all times in the same place, is not evidence of an adverse possession, so as to hold either party to the line usually occupied by such fence.

So in Hutton v. Schumaker, 21 Cal. 453, it was held that the mere enclosure of a lot, with brush fence from two to three feet high, without any other steps being taken to subject the property to any use, was not sufficient evidence of ownership or right of possession.

5. Question for Jury.—Goodwin v. McCabe, 75 Cal. 584; Becker v. Van Valkenburgh, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 319.

The Fence should be a Complete Enclosure, and not merely on two or three sides.¹
Temporary Breaches in the fence or enclosure will not affect the claim.²

Removing Fences to Prevent their being Carried off by Floods.—Where it appeared that fences on the sides of defendant's premises, extending across the strip in question to or near low-water mark, had been maintained by him and his grantors for more than twenty years, those portions across the beach being taken away in winter to prevent their being carried away by the ice and tides; and there was no fence along the cliff, the land on that side being open to the sea; it was held that the evidence was sufficient to authorize the submission to the jury of the question as to whether there was a substantial enclosure within the meaning of the statute. East Hampton v. Kirk, 84 N. Y. 221, 38 Am. Rep. 505. In this case the court said: "The requirement that the premises shall be protected by a substantial enclosure, if construed to require a continuous, uninterrupted enclosure for twenty years, would in many cases make it impossible to acquire title by adverse possession founded upon that provision. Upon such a construction, if fences were carried away by floods or destroyed by fire, or taken down in the winter for the accommodation of travel, the adverse possession would cease, although they were restored as soon as circumstances permitted. It is well understood that the bottom-lands on some parts of the Mohawk river are annually overflowed, and fences are removed to prevent them from being carried away by the flood. It cannot, we think, be claimed that the temporary removal of fences for this purpose defeats an adverse possession under the provision of the statute in respect to enclosure. In this case the land was left unenclosed on the side toward the sea. The sea was a natural barrier—as much so as a mountain or a river or a ledge of rocks; and the sea, with the lateral fences when maintained, constituted, we think, a substantial enclosure within the meaning of the statute. The removal of the fences during the winter was to protect them from being swept away by the ice and tides. If they had not been removed, but had been left to be carried away each winter by the sea, the defendant could, we think, have replaced them in the spring, and would not have lost his right under the statute. By the voluntary removal of the fences he simply anticipated the action of the elements; and having restored them when the danger was passed, and maintained them during the season when the use of the beach for taking seaweed was practicable, the purpose of notice, upon which the statute proceeds, was met."

Fencing on Margin of River.—In Jackson v. Halstead, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 216, title to land fronting on the Delaware river was claimed by adverse possession. Fences had been erected, extending to a point about a rod from the river, leaving some of the disputed ground unenclosed. But it was proved that the fence at this place was as near the river as the wash of the floods and the make of the ground would permit. This was held to be a sufficient enclosure. Woodworth, J., said that it would be too strict to require the fence to be placed on the very margin of the river, where it would be liable to be swept away by the rise of water, and not within the reason of the rule defining what shall constitute an adverse possession. The learned judge further said that a river or mountain, or a ledge of rocks, on one side, forming a natural barrier, the other sides being enclosed, would, with claim of title, constitute an adverse possession. So in Allen v. Holton, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 458, it was held that where land is enclosed by a river, fence, or road, and a disseisor occupies it as near to the river, fence, or road as is convenient, reference being had to the nature and situation of the land, this may be, if such be the intention of the occupant, a possession of the whole lot, although there be a narrow strip by the river, fence, or road not actually cultivated.

Whether Fence Erected for Purpose of Protecting Certain Lands or of Claiming Others—Intention.—Where land was claimed by actual possession and enclosed in fences, and was bounded on one side by a pond and on the other side by other lands to which the claimant had good title, though his fences did in fact surround the land in question on all sides except that next the pond, yet it was properly left to the jury to decide whether they were built for the purpose of enclosing the land in controversy or merely for the protection of his own. Dennett v. Crocker, 8 Me. 239.

1. Morrison v. Chapin, 97 Mass. 72.

2. Morrison v. Hammond, 27 Md. 604; Williams v. Rand (Tex. Civ. App., 1895), 30 S. W. Rep. 509.

In Moore v. McCown (Tex. Civ. App., 1892), 20 S. W. Rep. 1112, where it appeared that the plaintiffs had more than ten years before constructed a wire fence around all the land in controversy, and maintained it intact for a number of years, after which time gaps were cut in it, but the posts remained standing, and it could be seen that there was a fence around the land, it was held that such a fence was sufficient to give notice of adverse possession, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the land.

The Enclosure must be for the Purpose of Marking the Boundaries.—Soule v. Barlow, 48 Vt. 132.

When it is Enclosed Merely for Convenience, but with no intention to lay claim to the land, it is no evidence of a claim of ownership. Soule v. Barlow, 49 Vt. 329.

Specific Parcel within Large Enclosure.—A general enclosure of a large tract of land is not sufficient to constitute an actual, exclusive possession of a specific parcel within it, where it appears that much of the land within the enclosure is not claimed, and much of it is in the actual occupancy of persons claiming and holding adversely. Walsh v. Hill, 41 Cal. 571. See also Doolittle v. Tice, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 181, where it was held that although the claimant might avail himself of a fence upon the line, yet he could not avail himself of a fence located far away from the premises and including other lands.

(d) By Payment of Taxes.—Payment of taxes alone does not constitute adverse possession, and is not of itself evidence of ouster;¹ but together with other acts of ownership and circumstances indicating possession the payment of taxes may be considered as evidence of the claim of ownership,² and may be admitted as evidence of the extent of the title claimed.³

Tax Receipts as Evidence.—Tax receipts showing such payments are admissible in evidence where offered in support of actual possession.⁴

Necessity of Payment of Taxes.—In some states the payment of taxes is essential to the validity of the title of one who claims under the statute of limitations.⁵

A mere occasional occupancy, though taxes are paid regularly, will not give title. Sorber v. Willing, 10 Watts (Pa.) 141.

2. Payment of Taxes in Connection with Other Circumstances.—Green v. Jordan, 83 Ala. 220; Baucum v. George, 65 Ala. 259; Jay v. Stein, 49 Ala. 514; Draper v. Shoot, 25 Mo. 197, 69 Am. Illustrations.—In Brown v. Bocquin, 57 Ark. 97, it was held that permitting a person on two occasions to use part of the land as a lemonade stand for a day at a time, and causing some paving stone for a sidewalk to be deposited on the property, were not sufficient in connection with the payment of taxes to constitute adverse possession.

Paying taxes and surveying the premises was held not sufficient in Paine v. Hutchins, 49 Vt. 314.

In Royer v. Benlow, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 303, it was held that where the owner confessed himself out of possession and permitted the improver to pay taxes, such facts might be considered in determining the possession.

In Walcott v. Gibbs, 97 Ill. 118, where a defendant in ejectment received a warranty deed for the land in 1859, and paid all taxes thereon for the years 1859 to 1879 inclusive, and the proof showed it was timber land and was never enclosed, but that he used it every year after the date of his deed as occasion required in procuring therefrom rails, firewood, posts, etc., it was held that whether the land was in possession or vacant and unoccupied, the bar of the statute was complete.

And in Holbrook v. Gouverneur, 114 Ill. 623, it was held that where a defendant in ejectment showed the payment of all taxes on the land, under color of title, for seven consecutive years while the land was vacant and unoccupied, and he was found or shown to be in possession when the action was brought, it should be presumed that his possession was under his color of title, especially when that fact was not disputed on the trial.

The payment of taxes for many years following the purchase under a void tax sale, which is not followed by a collector's deed, would not be an act of possession, nor evidence tending to show a possessory title. Langdon v. Templeton, 66 Vt. 173.

In Farrar v. Fessenden, 39 N. H. 268, it was held that the assessment to and payment of taxes by one for a long series of years was competent evidence tending to show ownership, or at least a claim of ownership. See also Little v. Downing, 37 N. H. 355.

The Testimony of the Assessor who made the assessment upon an actual view of the land, was held admissible to show that those precise lands had been assessed to the claimant, and that the tax he paid was paid upon it. Wren v. Parker, 57 Conn. 529.

3. Hockenburt v. Snyder, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 240.

4. Green v. Jordan, 83 Ala. 220.

5. Illinois.—Hurlbut v. Bradford, 109 Ill. 397; Durfee v. Peoria, etc., R. Co., 140 Ill. 435; Dawley v. Van Court, 21 Ill. 460; Jayne v. Gregg, 42 Ill. 416; Bride v. Watt, 23 Ill. 507; Timmons v. Kidwell, 149 Ill. 507; Bolden v. Sherman, 101 Ill. 483.

California.—The California Code Civ. Pro., § 325, requires that one who claims by adverse possession must have paid "all taxes, state, county, or municipal, which have been levied and assessed upon such land, during the five years of his adverse occupancy." See Cavanaugh v. Jackson, 99 Cal. 672; Ross v. Evans, 65 Cal. 439; McNoble v. Justiniano, 70 Cal. 395.

This provision, however, applies only to a case in which there is a contest between the holder of the legal title and a party claiming possession for five years adversely to such title, and not to a case where the plaintiff in an action of ejectment is simply protecting his possession against one who entered thereon without right or title. Shanahan v. Tomlinson, 103 Cal. 89.

In O'Connor v. Fogle, 63 Cal. 9, the plaintiff claimed under a patent from the state. More than five years elapsed between the issuing of the patent and the commencement of the action. The defendant pleaded the statute of limitations, and relied upon an adverse possession commencing before the patent issued. It appeared from the evidence

d. POSSESSION MUST BE OPEN AND NOTORIOUS—Rule Stated.—Open, visible and notorious possession is a necessary constituent of an adverse possession. In order that the statute of limitations may operate upon the right of the true owner, the occupation or possession of the one holding adversely must be of such a nature that the owner may have knowledge or the means of knowledge that there is a possession adverse to his title, under which it is intended to make title against him.¹

that the plaintiff had paid the taxes upon the land. The court instructed the jury as to the proof required to make out an adverse possession, and that in addition to the fact of possession and its adverse character it was necessary for the defendant to show that the taxes had been paid by him. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of defendant. It was held (1) that the statute could not commence to run until the issuing of the patent; (2) that the possession of the defendant, even if sufficient in other respects, was not adverse because of his failure to pay the taxes, the statute requiring it.

In Pike v. Robertson, 79 Mo. 618, the court said: "If the owner visit his land, the indications of adverse possession and claim should be so patent that he could not be deceived. In this case, if the owner should have visited this land, he might have seen wood cut and rails split and hauled off, pretty good indications of trespass; but he would have seen no habitation, no enclosures, no fields—nothing indeed to advise him that an adverse claim was set up, that some one was disputing his title."

Secret Possession.—In Armstrong v. Morrill, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 145, Clifford, J., said: "Secret possession will not do, as publicity and notoriety are necessary as evidence of notice and to put those claiming an adverse interest upon inquiry."

To hold otherwise would be to establish a principle by which every proprietor of vacant lands might be dispossessed without his knowledge, or even the possibility of protecting himself. Dawson v. Watkins, 2 Rob. (Va.) 259.

Against a Mortgagee.—To constitute adverse possession against a mortgagee it is not sufficient that the mortgagor or those holding under him occupy, use, improve, and pay taxes on the premises as their own absolute property, but the possession must be in open denial of the mortgagee's title, and accompanied with such acts or declarations of the holders as are sufficient to put the mortgagee on notice that they claim and hold in hostility to his rights and adversely to him. Ringo v. Woodruff, 43 Ark. 469.

In Lynde v. Williams, 68 Mo. 370, an instruction to the effect that "any act done on the premises indicating an intention to hold the land is sufficient" was held incomplete as not requiring the necessary element of notoriety in adverse possession.

Posting Notice.—Merely posting a notice declaring an intention to take the property is not of itself sufficient in all cases. Lynde v. Williams, 68 Mo. 360. Compare Phillipson v. Gibbons, L. R. 6 Ch. 428.

General Reputation.—Where the defendant in an action of ejectment sets up title under adverse possession, it is competent for him to show that it was generally known in the neighborhood that he was in possession of the disputed premises, and was generally regarded as the owner. Maxwell Land Grant Co. v. Dawson, 151 U. S. 586.

Such testimony may be irrelevant in support of a paper title, but it has important bearing upon the notoriety of his possession. Sparrow v. Hovey, 44 Mich. 63.

In Graydon v. Hurd, 6 U. S. App. 610, it was held that where the possession of the defendant was originally in subordination to the title of the plaintiff an instruction that if

Actual Notice Unnecessary.—It is not necessary, however, to prove actual notice to the disseisee.¹

The Question of Notoriety does Not Arise where it is shown that the owner had actual knowledge that the possession sufficient to work a disseisin was under claim of title.²

Possession under Deed Duly Recorded—Constructive Notice.—It has been held that possession under a deed, duly recorded, is constructive notice that he who is in possession is claiming adversely, it being the presumption that he is claiming under and according to the title.³ It would seem however, that possession the defendant's possession was so notorious as to be known to the people generally in the vicinity, and of such a character as to be hostile to the plaintiff's title, the jury might find that the plaintiff had notice of its adverse character, although there might be no proof of actual notice or knowledge, was erroneous.

In Ross v. Goodwin, 88 Ala. 390, it was held that where title to land is in issue a witness cannot be asked, "Whose land was it generally known as in the neighborhood?"

Notoriety Not Necessarily Continuous.—In Watrous v. Morrison, 33 Fla. 279, commenting upon the word "notorious" as used in defining an adverse holding, Raney, C.J., said: "It seems to us not unadvisable to accompany this expression, when used, with some such explanation, and thereby prevent any misapprehension by the jury as to the extent of the notoriety that is requisite. To declare that the adverse holding must be asserted at all times and in all places wherever necessary to make such claim generally known and understood, is, to say nothing more, calculated to mislead a jury, at least by leaving it to them to decide at what times and places it is necessary to make such claim generally known and understood. They might infer that an indiscriminate assertion and a publicity of explanation of an adverse holding not contemplated by the law was necessary."

1. Samuels v. Borrowscale, 104 Mass. 207; Cook v. Babcock, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 207.

In Wilson v. Williams, 52 Miss. 487, it was held that it was erroneous to tell the jury that there must be presumptive notice without instructing them as to what constitutes such notice. Presumptive notice is an inference of law arising from certain facts. These facts should have been stated hypothetically, and the jury instructed that if they existed plaintiff had notice in law, and if not then he did not have.

2. When Notoriety Unimportant.—Clark v. Gilbert, 39 Conn. 94; Brown v. Cockerell, 33 Ala. 47; Allen v. Mansfield, 108 Mo. 343.

In Clark v. Gilbert, 39 Conn. 94, it was held that as the donor when the adverse possession was taken under a parol gift knew that the possession was adverse, there was no occasion for any notoriety. As was said in this case: "Notoriety is only important where the adverse character of the possession is to be brought home to the owner by presumption. Of course where it is shown that he had actual knowledge that the possession was under claim of a title, and therefore adverse, openness and notoriety are unimportant; for no other person has any legal interest in the question or right to be informed by notoriety or otherwise."

In Dausch v. Crane, 109 Mo. 323, an instruction to the effect that the adverse possession must have been known and acquiesced in by the true owner, or it must have been open and notorious, continuous and exclusive, was held correct. Black, J., said: "The law requires the adverse possession to be open and notorious in order to notify the real owner of the possession and claim of the disseisor. From adverse possession which is open and notorious the law presumes notice to the true owner."

In Key v. Jennings, 66 Mo. 367, the court said: "In the case before us nothing is left for presumption, as the evidence shows actual knowledge" on the part of the real owner.

Where the Acts do Not Amount to a Disseisin.—If the acts of ownership and possession relied upon as proof of title by disseisin are not of a nature to work a disseisin, they cannot be made more effectual for this purpose by proof that they were known and not objected to by the legal owner. Cook v. Babcock, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 206.

3. Possession under Duly Recorded Deed—Presumption.—Forest v. Jackson, 56 N. H. 357.

So in Bracken v. Jones, 63 Tex. 184, it was held that where the party who sets up limitation enters under a recorded deed, which on its face discloses a conflict and assumes to convey title to the land occupied, the true owner, whose land is thus held adversely, is notified of the adverse claim.

If the hostile character of the possession is so openly manifested that his observation as a man reasonably careful of his interests would be sufficient to discover it, he will be deemed to have notice. Thus, where one of two tenants in common conveys to a third person by deed purporting to convey the whole land, and the deed is recorded by the grantee, who enters under it, such entry is hostile in its nature, and the mere fact of possession by a stranger is enough to put him on inquiry, and charge him with notice. So the making of valuable improvements, paying the taxes upon the land, and receiving the rents and profits without accounting or offering to account, are circumstances indicating an adverse holding, and their effect upon the cotenant is the same as if notice were directly communicated to him. The means of knowledge being furnished by the open and notorious character of the possession, he is chargeable with actual notice. Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 586, 49 Am. Rep. 100.

cannot be dispensed with by recording the deed.¹

In Constructive Notice the Element of Quantity becomes material, there being a stronger presumption where a whole tract is cleared and occupied than where the possession has been of but a small quantity.²

When Possession is Originally Taken and Held under the True Owner, the assertion of the adverse claim must be brought home to the true owner.³

e. POSSESSION MUST BE EXCLUSIVE.—The possession to be effectual must be exclusive, not only of the owner, but of all other persons.⁴

How Shown.—The exclusive use and adverse possession are to be shown by such acts of ownership, occupation, etc., as the land in the nature of things allows.⁵ The exercise of rights in common with the public generally, as in the case of a public street or fishing-ground, is not sufficient.⁶

Exclusive Claim to Entire Tract Unnecessary.—There need not be an exclusive claim to the entire title.⁷

f. POSSESSION MUST BE CONTINUOUS.—(1) General Rule.—Continuity of possession is an essential element of an adverse holding which will ripen into title, and if there be an interruption of the holding the term of adverse possession is closed; for the moment the dispossession terminates, the possession is by construction of law considered as having returned to him who holds the

When one takes a conveyance of land in the actual, open, notorious, and hostile possession of another claiming to hold adversely to the grantor, he takes it with notice of all the rights of the possessor that he would have learned if he had duly and fully inquired of the person in possession. It is not enough that such inquiry must be made of the person holding adversely to the grantor. Canfield v. Hard, 58 Vt. 217.

But it is not sufficient that some former deed in his claim of title has been recorded. Wimberly v. Bailey, 58 Tex. 222.

Possession under Bond.—Possession under title bond is sufficient to charge a purchaser from the obligor with notice of the obligee's color of title. Spitler v. Scofield, 43 Iowa 571.

2. Alexander v. Polk, 39 Miss. 737.

Extending an Enclosure over the Line of Another for a few feet and claiming title to the strip so cut off is not that open and notorious possession required. Carrol v. Gillion, 33 Ga. 539; Brown v. Cockerell, 33 Ala. 38; Bracken v. Jones, 63 Tex. 184.

Coterminous Proprietors.—When a dividing fence is run beyond the true line, whether from inadvertence, ignorance, or convenience on the part of the owner; and with no intention to claim up to it as the dividing line, his possession is not adverse to the adjoining proprietor, nor can it, when accompanied by acts of ownership, and continued for the length of time prescribed by the statute, perfect a title as against such adjoining proprietor. Brown v. Cockerell, 33 Ala. 38.

In Harper v. Morse, 114 Mo. 317, it was held that title by adverse possession cannot originate between the landlords of adjacent tracts of land in possession of the same tenant without notice of the adverse claim brought home to the other proprietor.

For in case of common possession by two or more persons the law adjudges the rightful possession to him who has the legal title; and no length of holding in such case can give title by possession against such legal title. Bartholomew v. Edwards, 1 Houst. (Del.) 17.

The exclusive possession must have a character that does not ordinarily belong to it, and that character must be proved to the satisfaction of the jury like any other fact. Russell v. Davis, 38 Conn. 562.

Joint Occupancy—Husband and Wife.—In Hendricks v. Rasson, 53 Mich. 575, it was held that a husband could not hold adversely to his wife premises of which they are in joint occupancy as a family.

legal title, and upon the resumption of the adverse possession a new time is fixed from which the statutory period will begin to run.¹ Indeed it has been said that "if there be one element more distinctly material than another, in conferring title, when all requisites are so, it is the existence of a continuous adverse possession."²

Continuity in Point of Locality.—There must be continuity in point of locality as well, for possession of part of a tract of land cannot be joined to the possession of another part so as to make up the period.³

(2) Interruption of Possession—(a) Re-entry and Intrusion.—As a general rule it may be stated that an entry upon, or possession of, the lands claimed by another, which in the first instance would suffice to effect a disseisin or ouster of the true owner, will break the continuity of the possession of the holder claiming by adverse possession.

Texas.—Satterwhite v. Rosser, 61 Tex. 166; Holstein v. Adams, 72 Tex. 485; Smith v. Estill, 87 Tex. 264.

Upon Every Discontinuance of the Possession of the Wrongdoer the possession of the rightful owner is, by operation of law, restored, and nothing short of an actual adverse and continuous possession for the statutory period can destroy his title or vest title in the wrongdoer. Casey v. Inloes, 1 Gill (Md.) 430, 39 Am. Dec. 658; McEntire v. Brown, 28 Ind. 347.

The Moment the Premises Become Vacant, that moment the owner, by reason of his legal title, will be regarded in the constructive possession, and the adverse possession of the wrongdoer at an end. Snyder, J., in Core v. Faupel, 24 W. Va. 238.

Nothing to be Left to Conjecture.—As was said in Ruffin v. Overby, 105 N. Car. 78, in proving continuous adverse possession nothing must be left to conjecture. The testimony, if believed, must show the continuity of the possession for the full statutory period, in plain terms or by necessary implication.

3. Potts v. Gilbert, 3 Wash. (U. S.) 475; Griffith v. Schwenderman, 27 Mo. 412.

A Roving Possession from one part of a tract to another will not bar the right of entry of the owner upon any part which has not been held adversely for the statutory period. Messer v. Reginnitter, 32 Iowa 312.

Changing Fence.—When the fence is removed or taken away and re-erected on a different part of the land before the statute of limitations has run its full time, it follows from the change in the possession that the part of the land where the old structure stood was not in the actual possession of the trespasser for the requisite time. Peoria, etc., R. Co. v. Tamplin, 156 Ill. 285.

By the True Owner.—Such an entry upon or occupation of the land, by the true owner, for any portion of the period of adverse possession by the claimant, will, as a general rule, break the continuity and destroy the adverse possession.¹

Nature of Re-entry Required.—It is not every entry, however, by the owner that will disturb the adverse possession, but to effect this he must assert his claim to the land by acts of ownership; an entry by stealth, or for other purposes than those connected with a right to enter, will not break the continuity of the adverse possession in another.²

An Entry, in Order to Work a Legal Interruption, must be made under such circumstances as to enable the party in possession, by the use of reasonable diligence, to ascertain the right and claim of the party making the entry. Wing v. Hall, 47 Vt. 182.

Intention to Resume Actual Possession.—In Altamus v. Campbell, 9 Watts (Pa.) 31, 34 Am. Dec. 494, Gibson, C.J., said: "There must be an explicit declaration, or an act of notorious dominion, by which the claimant challenges the right of the occupant; or it cannot, perhaps, be better defined than by saying that the entry must bear, on the face of it, an unequivocal intent to resume the actual possession."

Possession Surrendered under Threat of Legal Proceedings.—In Gould v. Carr, 33 Fla. 535, Mabry, J., after reviewing many cases said: "The correct rule, we think, to be deduced from the law on the subject is that the adverse possessor, the inception of whose title is founded in wrongdoing, must not yield or surrender his possession under the pressure of any legal methods used to oust him, if he can legally prevent it; and if he does, and an entry adverse to him is made, the continuity of his possession will be broken." To the same effect is Shaffer v. Lowry, 25 Pa. St. 252.

Tearing down Division Fence.—In Donovan v. Bissell, 53 Mich. 462, it was held that tearing down the fence between one's self and next neighbor after asserting a right to the land enclosed did not break the adverse possession of the claimant.

Forcible Entry.—A forcible intrusion into the possession of the premises will not suspend the operation of the statute. In Ferguson v. Bartholomew, 67 Mo. 212, the court said: "A rule which would allow the owner of land to arrest the operation of the statute of limitations by a forcible intrusion upon the peaceable possession of an adverse occupant, and his expulsion from the premises, would be followed by the most pernicious consequences. Violence and disorder would speedily ensue, and for the peaceful methods of the law would be substituted the hostile conflicts of opposing claimants." See also Cary v. Edmonds, 71 Mo. 523; San José v. Trimble, 41 Cal. 536; Gould v. Carr, 33 Fla. 523; Pella v. Scholte, 24 Iowa 283, 95 Am. Dec. 729; Ladd v. Dubroca, 61 Ala. 25; Beard v. Ryan, 78 Ala. 37.

Joint Possession.—Joint possession by the legal owner, and the claimant by possession, at any time within the statutory period will stop the running of the statute. Larwell v. Stevens, 2 McCrary (U. S.) 311. See also supra, this title, Possession must be Exclusive.

Forfeiture for Taxes.—In Armstrong v. Morrill, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 120, where the lands of A in the adverse possession of B were forfeited to the state for nonpayment of taxes, but were allowed by subsequent and private act to be redeemed by the original owner, it was held that the forfeiture to the state broke, in point of law, the continuity of the adverse possession, and that such adverse possession (though it might have been in fact continuous) having been, in law, thus broken, was neither restored upon the redemption so as to be continuous in law, nor was it so affected as that the persons holding adversely could tack the adverse possession subsequent to the redemption. See also Braxton v. Rich, 47 Fed. Rep. 178; Wettig v. Bowman, 47 Ill. 17.

Undelivered Deed.—In Sullivan v. Eddy, 154 Ill. 199, it was held that the continuity of adverse possession was not interrupted by an undelivered deed from the possessor to a third person, although the latter subsequently reconveyed for the purpose of removing the apparent cloud on the title.

Death of Real Owner.—Where adverse possession begins during the lifetime of the real owner, it does not cease at his death by operation of law, but, if maintained, continues as against all parties claiming by or through him, whether minors, married women, persons of unsound mind, or otherwise. Lynch v. Cannon, 7 Houst. (Del.) 386.

Where the land in question was timber land, unenclosed, and used for no other purpose than to supply wood, rails, and other timber, and the defendant, who had the

Entry for Purpose of Discovering Evidence of Adverse Occupation.—A mere entry to see if there is any evidence of an adverse possession is not, as a matter of law, conclusive evidence of an interruption.¹

Mere Oral Assertions of Right without actual entry and claim of possession will not interfere with the adverse possession.²

An Entry with a Proposed Purchaser, pointing out the land and claiming it, and the subsequent execution of a deed, have been held to amount to a re-entry.³

And a Re-entry upon Any Part of the Land in the constructive possession of an adverse claimant interrupts the possession, at least as to the unenclosed portions of the tract.⁴

Any Interruption, for However Short a Time, may stop the running of the statute.⁵

Question for Jury.—As to whether the possession has been continuous or adverse, the question is for the jury to determine.⁶

Entry by Another Adverse Claimant.—Entry and possession by another than the real owner claiming title will operate as an interruption.⁷

Mere Intrusion Unknown to the Possessor.—The mere intrusion of a trespasser not brought to the knowledge of a party in possession, nor continued long enough to raise a presumption that it was known to him, is not an interruption.⁸

Interruption during Suspension of Statute.—An interruption, although occurring during a period when the statute was suspended, is sufficient to destroy the continuity of the possession.⁹

patent title, so used it up to the time when the tax title vested in the plaintiff, and continued so to use it thereafter for a time exceeding the period prescribed by the statute of limitations, it was held that the tax title was barred, notwithstanding the exercise by plaintiff during that time of certain acts of ownership which, however, did not amount to an ouster of the defendant. *Brett v. Where one has in good faith entered upon and continued in possession of land under a paper title which he took believing it to be good, the maintenance of such possession during a portion of the three years next after the recording of a tax deed of the land interrupts the running of the three-year limitation in favor of the tax-title claimant, and defeats the tax title to the extent of such actual possession and of the constructive possession following upon it. Stephenson v. Wilson, 50 Wis. 95.

Where one holding land permissively under bonds for titles conveyed it absolutely (the vendee taking possession), and subsequently rebought from his vendee and resold to another vendee, the adverse possession was broken, and the possession of the first and last vendees could not be tacked so as to make a good prescriptive title. *Hines v. Passage of Inhabitants over Beach to Gather Seaweed.—The adverse possession of a beach by a town is not affected by the passage of inhabitants of the town over the beach to gather seaweed or procure sand, or by their using the beach as a place of temporary deposit for the seaweed. New Shoreham v. Ball, 14 R. I. 566.

Claimants Compelled to Leave Country by Military Order.—So in Holliday v. Cromwell, 37 Tex. 437, where it was attempted to excuse the interruption by showing that the claimants had been compelled by military rule to leave the country, but it appeared that the parties having title were similarly affected, it was held to be not a good defense.

Burning of Fence by Army—Fence Replaced in Reasonable Time.—In McColgan v. Langford, Possession Interrupted by Casualty.—And though the possession be interrupted by casualty the continuity may be broken.¹

(b) Acknowledgment of Superior Title—Rule Stated.—Any act of recognition or acknowledgment of a superior title in another, during the period of adverse possession, will, as a general rule, amount to an interruption of the continuity and defeat the operation of the statute.²

Presumption from Agreement to Arbitrate or Suspend Suit.—Recognition of the true title may be presumed from an agreement to arbitrate or suspend suit.³

6 Lea (Tenn.) 116, it was held that an instruction as follows was proper: "If such possession was disturbed by the act of war by an army quartering thereon, who burned the fence, such interference would not arrest the running of the statute if it be shown that the defendants resumed their actual possession as soon thereafter as they reasonably could do." The court on appeal said: "Surely the temporary destruction of the fences by an army, or an accidental fire, would not arrest the running of the statute if the fence be replaced in a reasonable time."

Temporary Interruption of Actual Residence by Violence of Strangers.—And in Clark v. Potter, 32 Ohio St. 49, it was held that the temporary interruption of actual residence on the land, caused by the unlawful and violent acts of strangers in tearing down the house and rendering the premises untenable for the time being, would not stop the running of the statute. In this case the neighbors of the adverse claimant, on account of objectionable tenants placed upon the land, tore down the house and fences and removed the timber; but the claimant, though he neither resided on it nor had a tenant thereon, continued to pay taxes and to exercise other acts of ownership and control.

1. Abandonment on Account of Encroachments of River.—In Western v. Flanagan, 120 Mo. 61, the land held adversely was submerged for years, so that the occupant was forced to abandon the possession. It was held that the time during which it was thus submerged could not be counted in favor of either the holder of the legal title or the adverse claimant.

2. Acknowledging Superior Title.—Davis v. Collins, 43 Fed. Rep. 31; Ingersoll v. Lewis, 11 Pa. St. 212, 51 Am. Dec. 536; Sailor v. Hertzogg, 2 Pa. St. 184; Criswell v. Altemus, 7 Watts (Pa.) 566.

In Garlington v. Copeland, 32 S. Car. 57, where it appeared that A bought a parcel of land and entered into possession of it, in 1864, without having taken a deed, and in 1868 the administrator of A's grantor filed a bill alleging that the land belonged to his decedent's estate, and that in 1875 under an agreement the administrator discontinued the suit, and the plaintiffs, who claimed under A, surrendered to him the possession of the land, it was held that the surrender was abandonment of adverse possession by the plaintiffs, which related back to the commencement of the suit in 1868.

When Acknowledgment to be Made.—The acknowledgment must be shown to have been made before the statute has closed upon the title of the party making it. Bradford v. Guthrie, 4 Brews. (Pa.) 361.

Execution of Quitclaim.—Where the grantee under an invalid tax deed agreed orally to execute a quitclaim deed to the original owner upon repayment of the amount of taxes paid by him with interest, it was held that this agreement operated as a waiver and abandonment of the constructive possession obtained by the grantee and stopped the running of the statute in his favor. Cornell University v. Mead, 80 Wis. 387.

And in Warren v. Putnam, 63 Wis. 419, where it appeared that within three years after the recording of a tax deed the grantee therein quitclaimed to the original owner, but the quitclaim deed was not recorded; and subsequently he conveyed the land to a third person, who had no notice of the quitclaim deed, and who duly recorded his conveyance, and the lands remained unoccupied for more than three years after the tax deed was recorded;—it was held that the quitclaim deed to the original owner was an abandonment and surrender by the tax-title claimant of the constructive adverse possession which arose in his favor upon the recording of his tax deed, and that the statute of limitations ceased thereupon to run in his favor, but ran thereafter in favor of the original owner, and at the expiration of the three years from the recording of the tax deed all right of action in favor of those claiming title thereunder.

A Disclaimer of Part, however, will not affect the adverse possession of the remainder. Barnett v. Templeman (Tex., 1895), 31 S. W. Rep. 78.

Submitting to Erroneous Assessment.—In Clarke v. Dougan, 12 Pa. St. 87, it was held that an assessment of warranted land for a disseising settler, of a less quantity than is called for by the warrant and survey, if made by his procurement, or even with his knowledge and acquiescence, will lose to him his constructive possession, by detaching it from the landmarks that had sustained it.

Attornment.—In Russell v. Erwin, 38 Ala. 44, it was held that, though an attornment by a tenant to a stranger, who claims to own the land, was ineffectual to create the relation of landlord and tenant, nevertheless it destroyed the adverse character of his possession as against such claimant.

But in Haynes v. Boardman, 119 Mass. 414, it was said that it could not be stated as a matter of law that the payment of rent, or an admission of title, by a tenant of the demandant or his grantor, without the knowledge of his landlord, would alone operate to interrupt an otherwise continuous adverse occupation.

3. Hunt v. Guilford, 4 Ohio 317; Devyr v. Schaefer, 55 N. Y. 446.

Possession Part of Period in Subordination to True Owner.—Though the possession be continuous, yet if for part of the time it was in recognized subordination to the true owner, the two periods cannot be united to make up the period of limitation.¹

Purchase of Outstanding Claims.—Neither the purchase nor the attempt to purchase outstanding claims or an ostensible title on the part of one in the adverse possession of the property will necessarily amount to a waiver or non-claim on his part, or interrupt the adverse holding.² But the purchase of an outstanding claim or title may be made in such a way as to amount to a clear recognition of another's right.³

Agreement to Arbitrate.—In Perkins v. Blood, 36 Vt. 273, it was held that the running of the statute of limitations would be interrupted by an agreement to arbitrate the dispute in a contest for the possession of land, and that the defendant in possession should continue in possession pending the arbitration.

But in Breston v. Beall, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 61, (Ky., 1892) 19 S. W. Rep. 175, where the holder of certain land claims, which were unsettled, signed a writing appointing an agent with power of attorney to adjust such claims, agreeing to give him one half of the land as compensation, and it was also agreed that the claim which the agent himself had to the same land would not be affected, it was held that adverse possession of the agent of part of the same land was not interfered with.

Agreement Not to Bring Suit.—In Dietrick v. Noel, 42 Ohio St. 18, 51 Am. Rep. 788, it was held that adverse possession loses its adverse character when the holder thereof, for a sufficient consideration, agrees with the true owner that suit to recover such possession shall not be brought during the lifetime of each of them.

In East Hampton v. Kirk, 84 N. Y. 215, it appeared that R., a former owner of the defendant's land, brought an action for trespass against one who had gathered seaweed upon the beach. R. discontinued the action under an agreement with the town, and agreed not to sue again. It was held that this did not entitle plaintiffs to a charge to the jury that R. thereby relinquished his adverse possession; that it was at most evidence bearing upon that question for the consideration of the jury.

Agreement to Vacate.—In Eldridge v. Parish, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 35, it was held that an agreement by one in possession to vacate in consideration of the conveyance of other land by the claimants stopped the running of the statute.

1. Clark v. Kirby (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 25 S. W. Rep. 1096. In this case it was held that a plea of adverse possession could not be sustained when the defendant did not take possession with intent to hold in hostility to the owner, but subsequently concluded to do so, and there was no evidence as to when the possession became hostile.

Texas.—Cuellar v. Dewitt, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 568; McLane v. Canales (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 25 S. W. Rep. 29.

In Tobey v. Secor, 60 Wis. 310, it was held that an attempt or negotiation by one party after litigation was threatened, to purchase the lands in controversy which he had held adversely for the statutory period, was not a submission to the title of the other party and an abandonment of such adverse holding.

In Cannon v. Stockmon, 36 Cal. 535, 95 Am. Dec. 205, Sawyer, C. J., said: "A party is not bound to admit, and does not necessarily admit, title in another because he prefers to get rid of that other's claim by purchasing it. He has a right to quiet his possession and protect himself from litigation in any lawful mode that appears to him most advantageous or desirable. To hold otherwise would compel him to litigate adverse claims, or by buying one, forego any right to claim the benefit of the statute of limitations as to all others."

In Dean v. Goddard, 55 Minn. 290, it was held that the continuity of adverse possession was not broken by the party in possession taking written conveyances of the premises from other parties claiming an interest therein.

3. Long v. Young, 28 Ga. 130.

In Headrick v. Fritts, 93 Tenn. 270, Wilkes, J., said: "It may safely be assumed as a general proposition that if a defendant in possession of disputed territory concede that the true title is in another, and offer to purchase from him, then the continuity of adverse possession is broken. But there is a broad difference between the cases where

The Purchase of a Tax Title to land is not an admission by the purchaser of another's right.¹

But the Offer to Purchase or Rent the Property, and not merely to purchase an outstanding or adverse claim or title to quiet his possession or protect him from litigation, is a clear and unequivocal recognition of the title of him from whom he would purchase the land.²

(c) Suit by True Owner—Recovery.—When the possession has been delivered to the real owners by virtue of a recovery in a court of justice, the act of limitation is avoided and the continuity of the adverse possession is broken.³

Suit Unsuccessful or Dismissed.—There is no interruption or suspension of the adverse possession caused by an action of ejectment brought by the owner against the adverse holder and afterwards dismissed,⁴ or which is unsuccessful.⁵ Nor will, according to the weight of authority, a recovery without an entry stop the running of the statute.⁶

the real title is conceded and acknowledged to be in another, and an offer or contract is made to buy the title from him as the true owner, and the cases where there is a new offer to buy in an outstanding claim for the purpose of quieting a title already held, in order to prevent litigation. The defendant in possession has the right to buy in an outstanding hostile claim in order to quiet his own title and possession under a different title, and he may make such purchase or offer to purchase of the real owner without prejudice to his own adverse holding, provided he buys in such hostile title in order to quiet his own, and not merely as a recognition of the superiority of the adverse title, and his desire to hold under it. Each case will depend upon its own facts and circumstances, and the intention of the parties as to whether the fact of purchase is intended as an acknowledgment of the true title or a mere effort to extinguish an adverse claim; and the solution does not depend merely upon the question whether the party from whom the purchase is made or attempted is or is not the true owner. Every claimant is presumed to have some title, and the defendant is not required, at his peril, to determine that he is buying from the true owner, but he may buy any adverse claim, whether well or ill founded."

3. Pedrick v. Searle, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 240.

And an Order of Court requiring the conveyance of the land interrupts the possession. Gower v. Quinlan, 40 Mich. 572.

One Remaining in Possession after Adverse Decree.—One who continues in possession or resumes possession after a decree quieting title against him and declaring it to be vested in another is presumed to have possession in subordination to the real owner, and he cannot assert adverse possession without formal express notice thereof to the owner. Root v. Woolworth, 150 U. S. 401; Hintrager v. Smith, 89 Iowa 270.

Acquiescence.—Where, before the expiration of the statutory period, the true boundary line between the lands in dispute was established and acquiesced in by the adverse claimant, it was held that though he continued in possession for the entire period his possession was not continuous adverse possession. Heinz v. Cramer, 84 Iowa 497.

4. Langford v. Poppe, 56 Cal. 73.

5. Workman v. Guthrie, 29 Pa. St. 495, 72 Am. Dec. 654.

An entry under a power of attorney from the owner as administrator of another would be unavailable. Workman v. Guthrie, 29 Pa. St. 495, 72 Am. Dec. 654.

6. Doe v. Reynolds, 27 Ala. 364; Smith v. Hornback, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 232, 14 Am. Dec. 122; Jackson v. Haviland, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 229; Forbes v. Caldwell, 39 Kan. 14; Smith v. Trabue, 1 McLean (U. S.) 87; Bright v. Stevens, 1 Houst. (Del.) 240; Carpenter v. Natoma Water, etc., Co., 63 Cal. 616; Doe v. Reynolds, 27 Ala. 364; Gould v. Carr, 33 Fla. 523. But see Brolaskey v. McClain, 61 Pa. St. 146.

As was said in Smith v. Trabue, 1 McLean (U. S.) 88: "It is true, the judgment fixes the right of entry in the lessor of the plaintiff, if he can make an entry without force. But if he fail to make his entry, either with or without a writ of possession, the statute of limitations will continue to operate against the right. A mere entry while the tenant remains in possession will not oust him, but he must be turned out of possession, or acknowledge the right of the lessor of the plaintiff by consenting to hold under him. Nothing short of this will stop the statute."

But a recovery and the attorning of the defendant's tenant to the plaintiff, under the pressure of a writ of habere facias possessionem, is sufficient to break the continuity of the possession. Groft v. Weakland, 34 Pa. St. 304.

And in contemplation of law the enforcement of a writ of possession in an action of ejectment puts an end to the adverse possession of defendant as of the day of the in-

(d) Abandonment.—Where one in possession leaves the land with a purpose to abandon it, the possession is lost.¹

But the Mere Fact that the Premises are Vacant at Times, provided there is no intention to abandon them, will not defeat the continuity of the possession.²

The Mere Lapse of Time between successive acts of occupancy does not per se, as a matter of law, show conclusively an abandonment of the first possession, but it is a question of fact for the jury.³

stitution of the suit. Dunn v. Miller, 75 Mo. 260.

1. Harper v. Tapley, 35 Miss. 506; Brown v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 101 Mo. 484; Holcombe v. Austill, 19 Ga. 604.

Presumption.—In Russell v. Slaton, 25 Ga. 193, it was held that where a man who has been holding land without a title to it voluntarily abandons it the presumption is that he has not been holding it adversely, but in subordination to the title of the true owner, and therefore he cannot insist upon such possession, to make out title in him, under the statute of limitations.

Illustrations.—In Congdon v. Morgan, 14 S. Car. 587, where the defendant died, and plaintiffs took possession, but were ousted by defendant's heirs, it was held that there was not a continuous possession cast by descent.

In Phillipson v. Flynn, 83 Tex. 580, an unexplained break of seventeen months in the occupancy of the land was held to be fatal to the claim of adverse possession.

In Doe v. Roe, 32 Ga. 572, where it appeared that in 1847 the claimant had entered upon a lot of land, planted it in peas, and the next year in corn, but he neither lived on nor cultivated the land until 1852, it was held that there was not such a continuous possession as to constitute title.

Permitting the enclosure to decay has been held to interrupt the possession. Borel v. Rollins, 30 Cal. 408.

In Whittlesey v. Hoppenyan, 72 Wis. 140, where the fence had been allowed to decay, and there was no proof of other possession, it was held that this was not a continued occupation.

In Ford v. Wilson, 35 Miss. 490, 72 Am. Dec. 137, it was held that the accidental burning of the fences did not interrupt the continuity of the possession.

Beginning the erection of a house, leaving it partly built, and returning some months afterwards to finish and occupy it, was held to break the continuity of possession in Byrne v. Lowry, 19 Ga. 27.

If the first settler or warrant holder abandons and another settles on the land and afterwards abandons it also, the first claimant by going on and perfecting his title will prevail against the other. Holtzapfel v. Phillibaum, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 356.

In Webb v. Richardson, 42 Vt. 473, Peck, J., said: "To constitute a continuous possession it is not necessary that the occupant should be actually upon the premises continually. The mere fact that time intervenes between successive acts of occupancy does not necessarily destroy the continuity of the possession. The kind and frequency of the acts of occupancy necessary to constitute a continuous possession depend somewhat on the condition of the property and the uses to which it is adapted in reference to the circumstances and situation of the possessor, and partly on his intention. If in the intermediate time between the different acts of occupancy there is no existing intention to continue the possession, or return to the enjoyment of the premises, the possession, if it has not ripened into a title, terminates and cannot afterwards be connected with a subsequent occupation, so as to be made available toward gaining title; while such continual intention might, and generally would, preserve the possession unbroken. This principle is tersely stated in the civil law thus: 'A man may retain possession by intention alone, yet this is not sufficient for the acquisition of possession.'"

So a Short Absence on Business from the premises will not affect the possession. Cunningham v. Patton, 6 Pa. St. 355; Sailor v. Hertzog, 10 Pa. St. 206.

If One Member of the Family Remains, there will be no interruption. Cunningham v. Brumback, 23 Ark. 336.

Possession by Agent.—Possession may be continued by an agent. Omaha, etc., Land, etc., Co. v. Parker, 33 Neb. 775.

The absence of the defendant, or the absence of any vendor under whom he claims from the state, has no effect to prevent the running of the statute in his favor. It is the possession of the land by himself or tenants, not his personal presence, which avails him. Hunton v. Nichols, 55 Tex. 217. See also Zoll v. Carnahan, 83 Mo. 35.

Presumption as to Continuance.—In some cases it is affirmed that adverse possession having taken place it is presumed to continue until adverse possession is proved to have been taken by another. In Clements v. Lampkin, 34 Ark. 598, the court said: "The possession of Topp's vendee, once established by material acts of visible, notorious ownership, which was done by putting negroes upon it and making a deadening, long

The Intention to Return, however, would not, it seems, make any difference where the appearances of ownership are lacking, for whatever may be the mind of the claimant, he must be judged by his acts.¹

When the Statutory Bar is Complete.—Of course when the title has been acquired by adverse possession an interruption of the actual occupation will not affect the title.² The continuity of possession has reference to the time the statute is running, and is not necessary after the bar has attached.³

(3) Tacking—Rule Stated.—The several possessions of successive disseisors cannot be tacked together so as to make a continuous possession, but where there is such a privity of estate or title as that the several possessions can be referred to the original entry they may be joined, and are regarded as a continuous possession, as in the case of landlord and tenant, ancestor and heirs, and vendor and vendee.⁴

known afterwards as the Lampkin deadening, must be presumed to have continued until open, notorious, and adverse possession be shown to have been taken by another."

1. Susquehanna, etc., R., etc., Co. v. Quick, 68 Pa. St. 189.

In Stephens v. Leach, 19 Pa. St. 262, Gibson, J., said: "A man does not discontinue his possession by locking up his house in town, or suspending his cultivation in the country, provided he do not suffer the building in the one case or the fields in the other to be thrown open, but he is bound to continue a positive appearance of ownership by treating the property as his own, and holding it within his exclusive control. An intention to resume a suspended intrusion, of which the owner of the title may know nothing, is short of the requirement of the statute. The question is not what did the outgoing occupant intend, but what did he do. Did he keep his flag flying and present a hostile front to adverse pretensions? An adverse possession ought to be such as to challenge the right of all the world; but when an occupant evacuates the place and suffers it to go to wreck he hauls down his colors, and his challenge is withdrawn."

The purpose to continue or abandon is to be gathered from the acts of the party. If he has left the premises, but continues acts of ownership and claim to the possession, his rights are not interrupted. When, however, the claimant deserts the premises and for a while exercises no rights thereon, but afterwards returns to the premises, his possession is interrupted, and the two possessions cannot be added together. Tegarden v. Carpenter, 36 Miss. 404.

Whether or not the adverse claimant left the possession animo revertendi is for the consideration of the jury; but the court may decide whether or not, from the facts of the case, such a question arises. McCall v. Pryor, 17 Ala. 533; Wilson v. Glenn, 68 Ala. 383; King v. Sears, 91 Ga. 577; Beverly v. Burke, 9 Ga. 440, 54 Am. Dec. 351; Patchin v. Stroud, 28 Vt. 394; O'Hara v. Richardson, 46 Pa. St. 385; Jackson v. Joy, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 102; Van Gorden v. Jackson, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 440; Jackson v. Wood, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 242, 7 Am. Dec. 315.

And in the absence of a finding of abandonment it may be presumed that possession had

3. Jacks v. Chaffin, 34 Ark. 534; Todd v. Kauffman, 19 D. C. 304; Hoffman v. Bell, 61 Pa. St. 444.

In Schall v. Williams Valley R. Co., 35 Pa. St. 191, it was held that such a title was an absolute one and indefeasible, and that the subsequent neglect to keep up the possession conferred no equity on a purchaser of the outstanding paper title, upon which the statute of limitations had closed. In delivering the opinion of the court Woodward, J., said: "The common-law distinction between the right of possession and the right of property, as elements of title, is very much disregarded by us, and, so far as concerns the operation of the statute of limitations, is altogether lost sight of. Hence, we have numerous cases in our books in which titles, under the statute, are spoken of as titles against all the world, as indefeasible, as equally perfect with any known to the law, as title against the true owner, as capable of being lost only by grant or adverse possession, and not by neglect—as a perfect title even against a bona fide purchaser without notice. Leeds v. Bender, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 318; Gregg v. Blackmore, 10 Watts (Pa.) 192; Creswell v. Altemus, 7 Watts (Pa.) 566; Sailor v. Hertzogg, 2 Pa. St. 184; Bunting v. Young, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 196."

But in Vickery v. Benson, 26 Ga. 582, it was held that the abandonment after the lapse of the statutory period would defeat the title so acquired.

Vermont.—Winslow v. Newell, 19 Vt. 164.

West Virginia.—Jarrett v. Stevens, 36 W. Va. 445.

There must be privity of grant or descent or some judicial or other proceeding which shall connect the possessions so that the latter shall apparently hold by right of the former. Crispin v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 536; Adkins v. Tomlinson, 121 Mo. 487.

In Potts v. Gilbert, 3 Wash. (U. S.) 475, Washington, J., said: "The court is perfectly clear, that where different persons enter upon land in succession, each retaining the possession for a period short of twenty-one years, the last possessor, who may be the defendant, cannot tack the possessions of his predecessors to his own, so as to make out continuity of possession sufficient to bar the entry of the owner. The possession of A, the first occupant, cannot be the possession of B, the next occupant; because the moment A quits the actual possession the legal possession of the real owner is restored, and the entry of B constitutes him a new disseisor; and if he seeks to bar the entry of the owner, he must show an actual adverse possession, continued in himself for twenty-one years. There is no privity between A and B."

As was said by Bigelow, J., in Sawyer v. Kendall, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 244: "The general rules of law respecting successive disseisins are well settled. To make a disseisin effectual to give title under it to a second disseisor, it must appear that the latter holds the estate under the first disseisor, so that the disseisin of one may be connected with that of the other. Separate successive disseisins do not aid one another, where several persons successively enter on land as disseisors, without any conveyance from one to another, or any privity of estate between them, other than that derived from the mere possession of the estate; their several consecutive possessions cannot be tacked, so as to make a continuity of disseisin, of sufficient length of time to bar the true owners of their right of entry. To sustain separate successive disseisins as constituting a continuous possession, and conferring a title upon the last disseisor, there must have been a privity of estate between the several successive disseisors. To create such privity there must have existed, as between the different disseisors, in regard to the estate of which a title by disseisin is claimed, some such relation as that of ancestor and heir, grantor and grantee, or deviser and devisee."

Husband and Wife—Widow.—In Sawyer v. Kendall, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 241, it was held that a wife had no such privity of estate with her husband in land of which he dies in adverse possession to the real owner, and that her continued adverse possession after his decease could not be tacked to his to give her a complete title by disseisin.

The reason upon which this rests is that dower is a mere right conferring no title to the land or right of entry until assignment is made. McEntire v. Brown, 28 Ind. 347; Marr v. Gilliam, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 488.

But the duration of the possession by a husband, of land claimed by him to belong to his wife and to which he made no claim in any other right, may be added to the duration of his widow's possession immediately following his death, to make an adverse possession, and sustain the title of the widow or her grantee. Holton v. Whitney, 30 Vt. 405.

Widow and Heirs.—In Hickman v. Link, 97 Mo. 482, it was held that the possession of a widow before assignment of dower and that of the deceased husband's heirs may be tacked.

Administrator.—In Bullen v. Arnold, 31 Me. 583, it was held that the occupation of an administratrix could not be added to that of an intestate. See also Shaw v. Nicholay, 30 Mo. 99.

But in Spotts v. Hanley, 85 Cal. 155, it was held that the possession of an administrator under a judgment in his favor might be added to that of the defendants claiming under him.

Life Tenant and Remainderman.—There is no privity between one in possession of land under a will, under color and claim of only a life estate, and one in possession after the termination of the life estate, under the same will, claiming a remainder; and therefore the possession of the tenant will not enure to the remainderman. Austin v. Rutland R. Co., 45 Vt. 215. See also Bleidorn v. Pilot Mountain Coal, etc., Co., 89 Tenn. 204.

Execution and Judicial Sale.—Privity may be established between successive occupants by execution, and a conveyance by the officer making it. Kendrick v. Latham, 25 Fla. 819.

In Cooper v. Great Falls Cotton Co., 94 Tenn. 588, it was held that connected adverse possession of land, held pending suit claims, are but a succession of trespasses, and neither can furnish a support to the other.¹

How the Requisite Privity may Arise.—The privity required to constitute continuous adverse possession may be effected by any conveyance, agreement, or understanding which has for its object a transfer of the rights of the original entry;² as between testator and devisee, or ancestor and heir, the disseisin to foreclose a mortgage thereon successively, by the purchaser at the original sale in such suit, and by his vendee under title bond, and by the purchaser at a second sale made for the purchase price, are all held under and enure to the benefit of the mortgagor's title or color of title. See also Atchison v. Pease, 96 Mo. 566.

In Miller v. Bumgardner, 109 N. Car. 412, where the plaintiff took possession of land under a deed from a married woman without privy examination, and remained in possession for six years, and until it was purchased by the defendant under execution against the plaintiff, it was held that in an action under a deed executed by such married woman with privy examination the defendant might assert the plaintiff's adverse possession under the first deed and that of himself as the purchaser under execution, the joint possession being for more than the statutory period.

In Carson v. Dundas, 39 Neb. 503, where in an action of ejectment title had been adjudicated in the plaintiff, but the defendant in possession decreed to have a lien upon the land, and the land ordered sold to satisfy it, it was held that the purchaser at a sale under such a decree could not, in a subsequent action of ejectment against him, tack the prior possession of the lienors to his own possession, subsequent to the sale, for the purpose of establishing a title by adverse possession against another who claimed under the same source of title as the plaintiff. See also Marsh v. Griffin, 53 Ga. 330.

Sheriff's Deed.—In Kendrick v. Latham, 25 Fla. 819, it was held that a sheriff's deed conveying a prior adverse occupant's interest in the land to the succeeding occupant was not sufficient evidence to establish privy between them or connect their possessions, because it was not of itself evidence of the sheriff's authority to sell, but that judgment and execution should have been shown.

And in Hester v. Coats, 22 Ga. 56, it was held that an invalid sheriff's deed would not constitute privy between the person whose property is sold and the purchaser.

Promoters and Corporation.—In Reformed Church v. Schoolcraft, 65 N. Y. 134, it was held that the possession of the members and officers of a corporation prior to the formal organization might be continued by the corporation.

Corporation and Its Successor.—The possession of a corporation may be tacked by its successor. Miner v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 123 N. Y. 242.

Possession of Receiver.—In Verdery v. Savannah, etc., R. Co., 82 Ga. 675, it was held that whilst realty of which a debtor has had adverse possession is in the hands of a receiver the statute of limitations continues to run in favor of such debtor's title against strangers to the pending litigation, and the possession of the receiver may be tacked to that of the debtor and to that of the purchaser of the premises, at a sale made under a decree in the cause, to make out the full period.

In North Carolina it has been settled by repeated adjudications that an adverse possession of lands for thirty years raises a presumption of a grant from the state, and it is not necessary even that there should be a privy or connection among the successive tenants. Rogers v. Mabe, 4 Dev. (N. Car.) 180; Wallace v. Maxwell, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 110, 51 Am. Dec. 380; Reed v. Earnhart, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 516; Melvin v. Waddell, 75 N. Car. 361; Davis v. McArthur, 78 N. Car. 357; Cowles v. Hall, 90 N. Car. 330.

Anderson*, 73 Ill. 439; Kruse v. Wilson, 79 Ill. 233; Faloon v. Simshauser, 130 Ill. 649; Scheetz v. Fitzwater, 5 Pa. St. 126; Cook v. Dennis, 61 Tex. 246; Chilton v. Wilson, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 399; Vandall v. St. Martin, 42 Minn. 163.

In McNeely v. Langan, 22 Ohio St. 32, the court said: "The mode adopted for the transfer of the possession may give rise to questions between the parties to the transfer; but as respects the rights of third persons, against whom the possession is held adversely, it seems to us to be immaterial, if successive transfers of possession were in fact made, whether such transfers were effected by will, by deed, or by mere agreement either written or verbal."

A feme covert died in December, 1854, leaving a will, which was admitted to probate, but was not executed in due form to pass real estate, because the consent of her husband in writing was not annexed thereto, and also because it was not executed sixty days before her death. By said will she devised a farm to her husband for life, with remainder in fee to her nephew. Under it her husband, on the 1st of January, 1855, entered into possession of the property, claiming title as tenant for life, and so continued in possession until the 5th of February, 1868, when he united with the nephew in a sale and conveyance to J., who thereupon entered upon said property, and continued in possession up to the 11th of April, 1882, when the heirs at law of the testatrix brought ejectment against him. It was held that the claim of title and possession of the husband, as tenant for life under the will, being hostile to the title commenced by the former is continued in the latter in accordance with his title, and is referred to the original entry.¹

Continuity Shown by Parol.—No paper evidence of a transfer of possession is necessary when the property is held under the claim of the first entryman, but the continuity may be shown by parol.²

Prior Possession must have been Bona Fide.—But it must appear that the character of the previous possession was bona fide.³

Cannot Rely upon Grantor's Possession of Other Lands.—Where the grantee relies upon the deed to show the privity of estate he cannot have the benefit of the grantor's possession of lands which are not mentioned in the deed.⁴

of the heirs at law, was as against them adverse and exclusive; that the purchaser from the husband and nephew having immediately taken and held possession under the conveyance to him, his possession was added or tacked to the possession of the husband, making a continuous adverse possession of more than twenty years, which was a flat bar to the right of the plaintiffs as heirs at law. Hanson v. Johnson, 62 Md. 25, 50 Am. Rep. 199.

Agreement for Purchase.—A vendee in possession under a contract of purchase is in privity with his vendor, and is entitled to have the time when he held possession under his vendor added to that after receiving his deed in determining whether colorable title was matured into a perfect title by possession. Brown v. Brown, 106 N. Car. 451.

Fraudulent Deeds.—In Clark v. Chase, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 636, it was held that parties claiming to hold under successive deeds, although such deeds were fraudulent, might tack their several possessions.

In South Carolina it is held that where possession originally was wrongful, until it ripened into a right by lapse of time, or by descent cast, there was no estate, no right of property, which could be conveyed by deed. Consequently the purchaser from a party thus in possession of lands of another acquired nothing by his deed. They were, as to the real owners, mere trespassers, who could not tack their successive trespasses together so as to defeat the right of him who had the title. Mazyck v. Wight, 2 Brev. (S. Car.) 151; King v. Smith, Rice (S. Car.) 11; Pegues v. Warley, 14 S. Car. 180.

In Pegues v. Warley, 14 S. Car. 180, it was held that the possession of successive purchasers of a tract of land covered by the lien of a judgment, who derived title from the judgment debtor, could not be united so as to make up the statutory period necessary to give title by adverse possession.

St. 357; Scheetz v. Fitzwater, 5 Pa. St. 131; Weber v. Anderson, 73 Ill. 439; Baker v. Hale, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 46.

As was said by Napton, J., in Menkens v. Blumenthal, 27 Mo. 203: "Whether one occupant receives his possession from a prior one, or is a mere intruder upon an abandoned lot, is a question of fact which may be determined by any testimony which is legitimate and pertinent. We know of no rule of evidence which confines the proof to deeds or written instruments."

And in Shuffleton v. Nelson, 2 Sawy. (U. S.) 545, Deady, J., said: "Where the possession is actual, it may commence in parol without deed or any writing; and I am of the opinion, both upon reason and authority, that it may be transferred or pass from one occupant to another by a parol bargain and sale, accompanied by delivery. All the law requires is continuity of possession, where it is actual."

A contrary opinion, however, is expressed in Simpson v. Downing, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 316.

3. Hammond v. Crosby, 68 Ga. 770; Worthy v. Kinamon, 44 Ga. 297.

In Farrow v. Bullock, 63 Ga. 360, it was held that the defendant in ejectment could not tack the possession of a grantor, whose possession originated in fraud of the true owner, to his own possession in order to complete the term of years necessary to give him title, although he himself was an innocent purchaser from such fraudulent grantor.

When a vendor conveys by deed lands particularly designated, or described by numbers, metes, and bounds, the purchaser acquires title, or color of title, only to the lands within the designated numbers and boundaries; and if he claims adverse possession, under color of title, of adjoining lands outside of those numbers and boundaries, because his vendor was in possession thereof at the time his conveyance was executed, he must show that the possession thereof was delivered to him, as a part of the lands sold and conveyed; otherwise he cannot tack his vendor's prior possession to his own subsequent possession for the purpose of making out a title under the statute of limitations. Humes v. Bernstein, 72 Ala. 546.

In Erck v. Church, 87 Tenn. 575, where it appeared that the purchaser by mistake enclosed land not conveyed in his deed, and held the land thus enclosed as his own for less than the statutory period, and then conveyed to B by a deed, containing the description identical with his own deed, and B went

III. COLOR OF TITLE—1. Definition.—Color of title is that which in appearance is title, but which in reality is no title.¹ Where a person is said to have color of title, the phrase implies that some act has been done or some event has occurred by which some title, good or bad, has been conveyed to him.²

2. Distinguished from Claim of Title.—Color is not to be confounded with claim of title, which is also spoken of indifferently as claim of right, claim of

into possession of the whole and held it as his own long enough to make out the period of limitation by tacking his possession to that of A, it was held that the possession of the land enclosed by mistake could not be tacked.

And in Witt v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 38 Minn. 122, where A entered and occupied the land, which consisted of several lots, and the land was subsequently sold for taxes, and still later the owner of the tax title conveyed his interest in some of the lots to A, who subsequently conveyed to B by a description which recited, "intending to convey only those lots * * * which have been quitclaimed to said parties of the first part, or either of them, by conveyance of tax titles," it was held that the possession of B must be referred to the deed, and that as to those lots not included in the tax deed there was not privity between him and A, he merely succeeding to the possession of the lots; but there was no unity of possession under the original hostile entry by A.

Substituted Deed.—In Weaver v. Wilson, 48 Ill. 125, it was held that where a deed giving color of title misdescribed the land and a new deed is substituted, the statute will run from the date of the last deed.

Omodt*, 37 Minn. 157; Swift v. Mulkey, 17 Oregon 532; Wood v. Conrad, 2 S. Dak. 334; Edgerton v. Bird, 6 Wis. 527, 70 Am. Dec. 473.

2. Other Definitions.—By color of title is meant the semblance or appearance of title. Field v. Columbet, 4 Sawy. (U. S.) 523.

Color of title is such title as is in appearance good and sufficient, but which in reality is not good and effectual. Baker v. Swan, 32 Md. 355.

Color of title is "that which the law will consider prima facie a good title, but which by reason of some defect not appearing on its face does not amount to title." Bernal v. Gleim, 33 Cal. 676.

Definitions Assuming Necessity of a Writing.—The definitions of color of title frequently assume the necessity of a writing. Thus the phrase has been variously defined to be: an apparent title, founded upon a written instrument, such as a deed, levy of execution, decree of court, or the like, 8 Wait Act. and Def. 17; Brooks v. Bruyn, 35 Ill. 394; Wood v. Conrad, 2 S. Dak. 334; some written document which appears to be a title to land, but is not a good title, Oliver v. Pullam, 24 Fed. Rep. 127; an apparent though not real title to lands, founded upon a deed which purports to convey them, Seigneuret v. Fahey, 27 Minn. 60; a writing upon its face professing to pass title to land, Keener v.

Goodson, 89 N. Car. 273; that which has the semblance of title, but which in fact is no title, and is anything in writing, however defective or imperfect, purporting to convey title to land, and defines the extent of the claim, Hutch. L. Tit., § 389; Swann v. Thayer, 36 W. Va. 46; anything in writing which serves to define the extent of the claim, Field v. Boynton, 33 Ga. 239; Burdell v. Blain, 66 Ga. 169 (see Walls v. Smith, 19 Ga. 8); anything in writing purporting to convey title to the land, which defines the extent of the claim, it being immaterial how defective or imperfect the writing may be, so that it is a sign, semblance, or color of title, Veal v. Robinson, 70 Ga. 809.

"Any writing which purports to convey land and describes the same is color of title, though the writing is invalid, and conveys no title. Fugate v. Pierce, 49 Mo. 441; Hamilton v. Boggess, 63 Mo. 233; Hickman v. Link, 97 Mo. 482." Black, J., in Allen v. Mansfield, 108 Mo. 343.

Somewhat similar to the foregoing definitions is the description of color of title as any writing which purports to convey the title to land by apt words of transfer, and clearly defines the extent of the claim. Wood Lim. Act., § 259, citing Hall v. Law, 102 U. S. 461; Lynde v. Williams, 68 Mo. 360; State Bank v. Smyers, 2 Strobb. (S. Car.) 24; Johnson v. M'Millan, 1 Strobb. (S. Car.) 143.

Color of title may be defined to be a writing, upon its face professing to pass title, but which does not do it, either from a want of title in the person making it, or from the defective conveyance that is used—a title that is imperfect, but not so obviously so that it would be apparent to one not skilled in the law. Beverly v. Burke, 9 Ga. 440, 54 Am. Dec. 351; Gittens v. Lowry, 15 Ga. 336; White v. Rowland, 67 Ga. 556, 44 Am. Rep. 731. For a very similar definition see Tate v. Southard, 3 Hawks (N. Car.) 119, 14 Am. Dec. 578.

Definition by Texas Statute.—Under a Texas statute (Hart. Dig., art. 2391) defining color of title to be "a consecutive claim of transfer down to him, her, or them in possession without being regular," etc., the courts of that state have said that the definition of color of title of this statute was certainly very different from that which has been given by courts to these terms; that is, "that which in appearance is title, but which in reality is no title." And it was said that this is not the color of title defined in the statute, and that the statute having defined the terms, it must be looked to for their meaning. Marsh v. Weir, 21 Tex. 97.

Of American Origin.—The doctrine of color of title seems to be peculiar to the law of the United States. See Tate v. Southard, 3 Hawks (N. Car.) 119, 14 Am. Dec. 578.

ownership, claim of appropriation, and hostile claim.¹ That color of title is not synonymous with these is apparent from the fact that, whether the adverse possession is under color of title or not, there must be a claim of title.²

3. Not Essential to Adverse Possession.—Color of title, unless expressly required by statute, is not essential to the acquisition of title by adverse possession; one who enters upon and occupies a tract of land under a claim of ownership may, even though he is a mere intruder and has no colorable title thereto, acquire title by adverse possession to so much of the tract as he actually occupies.³ But where a person enters upon and actually occupies

1. See Allen v. Mansfield, 108 Mo. 343; Mylar v. Hughes, 60 Mo. 105.

That the courts have frequently confused color of title with claim of right is quite apparent on an examination of the authorities. See Sedgw. & W. Tr. T. to L., §§ 763, 764, where instances of the misuse of the phrase are pointed out.

In Hamilton v. Wright, 30 Iowa 480, Cole, J., said: "The distinction between adverse possession under 'color of title' and under a 'hostile claim' finds a fair illustration in the statement of the case and the opinion of the court in the case of Clagett v. Conlee, 16 Iowa 487. There the defendant himself testified 'that he never claimed any title, either decree title, tax title, sheriff's title, nor any other kind of title, except the title or right of a settler or squatter; and that he had so informed the owners of the decree title,' under which the plaintiff in that action claimed. The court held 'that to constitute an adverse possession, it must be held under a claim of title,' following Jones v. Hockman, 12 Iowa 101, and Wright v. Keithler, 7 Iowa 92. In the first two cases the terms 'color of title' and 'claim of title' are so used as to afford grounds for the possible construction that they were regarded as synonymous terms. But they are not such, and were not so used; and a fair construction of the language is, that the defendant may rely upon either a color of title or a claim of title."

Instrument Insufficient to Give Color Evidence of Claim of Title.—It may be stated as a general rule, that a writing which is insufficient to constitute color of title and thereby create constructive possession, may nevertheless be introduced in evidence by the grantee to show his claim of title to the land in controversy and the character of his possession. Pillow v. Roberts, 13 How. (U. S.) 477. And see Sedgw. & W. Tr. T. to L., § 765, citing Humbert v. Trinity Church, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 604; Rout v. McFerrin, 37 Miss. 51, 75 Am. Dec. 409; *Atkinson v. Adverse possession extends to all the land possessed, even though some of it be omitted by mistake from the deed under which the possessor claims. Vandall v. St. Martin, 42 Minn. 163.

Tennessee Doctrine.—The rule that color of title is not essential to the acquisition of title to land by adverse possession seems not to have been recognized in Tennessee. Under the Tennessee Limitation Act of 1797, the courts of that state have decided, for the reason that by that act not only the right of possession is barred, but also the right of property, that there must be color of title combined with the possession. Barton v. Shall, Peck (Tenn.) 215; Waterhouse v. Martin, Peck (Tenn.) 392; Wilson v. Kilcannon, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 186; Powell v. Harman, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 241.

It has also been held under the Tennessee Act of 1819, c. 28, that a naked possession without color or pretense of right gives the right of possession only, and not the title in fee. Wallace v. Hannum, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 443, 34 Am. Dec. 659. And see Lea v. Polk County Copper Co., 21 How. (U. S.) 493.

Statutes Requiring Color of Title.—Some statutes of limitation for the recovery of real property expressly provide that to constitute a bar to the plaintiff's right of recovery at the time limited, the possession must have been taken and held under color of title. As part of a tract of land, under a claim of ownership of the entire tract, and also has color of title to the whole, his adverse possession will extend beyond his possessio pedis, or actual occupancy, and, generally speaking, he will be deemed constructively to be in possession to the extent of the land to which he has colorable title.¹ And this is the principal, if not the only, effect of color of title on the adverse possession—to extend the possession beyond the claimant's actual occupancy.²

4. What Constitutes—a. WHETHER A WRITING IS NECESSARY—(1) In General.—Color of title is commonly claimed by virtue of some written instrument. And it has sometimes been held that it is only upon some writing that color of title can be based.³ But other authorities favor the rule that a writin the state of Kentucky, for instance, there was one statute limiting the right of action to twenty years, and another limiting it to seven years, where the party in possession had title and actual residence on the land. Under the former statute it was held that an adversary possession of twenty years barred an ejectment without any paper title whatever, the statute not requiring it, Taylor v. Buckner, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.), 18, 12 Am. Dec. 354; Herndon v. Wood, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 44; Chiles v. Jones, 4 Dana (Ky.) 483; while under the latter statute it was held that the adverse possession of seven years must have been by actual residence, under a title legal or equitable, Anderson v. Turner, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 133; Robinson v. Neal, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 214; Poage v. Chinn, 4 Dana (Ky.) 54.

So the fifteenth section, or the three years statute, of the Texas act (Pasc. Dig., art. 4622), required the adverse possession to have been taken and held under a title deducible of record from the commonwealth to the parties in possession. See Osterman v. Baldwin, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 116; Thompson v. Cragg, 24 Tex. 596.

1. Swift v. Mulkey, 14 Oregon 59. And see infra, this title, Extent of Adverse Possession, subdivision Under Color of Title.

2. Adverse Possession with or without Color of Title.—The principal difference between adverse possession with color, and that without, is that in the former the possession is considered coextensive with the boundaries of the land conveyed; in the latter it is limited by the actual occupation.

3. Cook v. Long, 27 Ga. 280.

Missouri.—In a number of early Missouri cases the courts seem to favor the view that it does not always require a written instrument to constitute color of title. In Rannels v. Rannels, 52 Mo. 108, the court held that where a man made a verbal gift of a defined tract of land to his sister, had it surveyed for her, and put her in possession under this survey and the descriptions in his own deed, she was in possession of the whole tract under color of title. The court, in delivering the opinion in this case, said: "It is not necessary that this color of title should be created by deed or other instrument of writing. It may be created by an act in pais without writing." This case was cited with approval in a dictum in the subsequent case of Cooper v. Ord, 60 Mo. 421; also in the case of Hughes v. Israel, 73 Mo. 538. In this last case, where the facts were that the parties to a deed undertook by verbal contract to rescind the deed, and the grantor thereafter remained in the actual possession of a part of the land, claiming title under the rescission, it was held that he was in under color of title, and that his possession extended to the whole tract described in the deed.

But in other Missouri cases it would seem that a different view is taken as to the essentials of color of title. Thus in Fugate v. Pierce, 49 Mo. 441, it was said that constructive possession is never based upon a claim merely; "there must be a deed purporting to convey the whole, or some proceeding or instrument giving color and defining boundaries, as well as actual possession." And this doctrine was approved in Long v. Higginbotham, 56 Mo. 245. In Crispen v. Hannan, 50 Mo. 536, it was said that the claim must be "evidenced by some paper, or proceeding, or relation, that makes the claimant the apparent owner of the whole." In a later case, Allen v. Mansfield, 108 Mo. 343, it was said that "these cases all lead to the conclusion that to constitute color of title there must be some documentary evidence." And it has been held that while a possession under a verbal gift may be adverse to the owner, a verbal gift does not give color of title. Allen v. Mansfield, 108 Mo. 343; McGrath v. Mitchell, 56 Mo. App. 626.

Of the case of Rannels v. Rannels, 52 Mo. 108, cited above, Black, J., in Allen v. Mansfield, 108 Mo. 343, says: "According to the statement, the donee and her heirs had actual possession of the entire tract as against the donor." And while it is admitted that the conclusion reached in that case is right on the facts given in the statement, the learned judge not only asserts that, so far as it defines color of title, "it is clearly exceptional in its character," but intimates that it should not be given the force of a decision on that question.

Execution Sale without Deed.—North Carolina.—An attachment, execution, and sale were held not to constitute color of title in the defendant within the meaning of that phrase as used in the North Carolina Act of 1715, for the reason that, the purchase being proved by parol only, one of the essentials of color of title was lacking. Tate v. Southard, 3 Hawks (N. Car.) 119, 14 Am. Dec. 578.

Georgia.—A sale under execution will not give color of title unless a deed is executed. Baird v. Evans, 58 Ga. 350.

Statutory Requirement of Writing.—The statutes of some of the states require that there must be a writing to constitute color of title.

Colorado.—See Mills' Annotated Colorado Stat. (1891), § 2923. Knight v. Lawrence, 19 Colo. 425.

Florida.—Under the Florida statute, the actual possession of part of a tract of land, which will give constructive possession to the whole, must be under a claim founded "upon a written instrument as being a conveyance of the premises in question." Doyle v. Wade, 23 Fla. 90, 11 Am. St. Rep. 334.

Illinois.—The Illinois statute of 1839, which is incorporated in the Revised Statutes, c. 24, pp. 104, 105, §§ 8-10 inclusive, says that the adverse claimant "shall be held and adjudged the legal owner  to the extent and according to the purpose of his or her paper title." Under this statute color of title can only be derived from a written instrument. Wright v. Mattison, 18 How. (U. S.) 50; Woodward v. Blanchard, 16 Ill. 427; Shackelford v. Bailey, 35 Ill. 391; Bride v. Watt, 23 Ill. 507; Rigor v. Frye, 62 Ill. 507; Dickenson v. Breeden, 30 Ill. 279; Morrison v. Norman, 47 Ill. 477; Huls v. Buntin, 47 Ill. 396; McClellan v. Kellogg, 17 Ill. 498.

A parol partition does not constitute color of title for the purpose of adverse possession against the cotenant. Sontag v. Bigelow, 142 Ill. 143.

Texas.—The Texas statute has been construed to require a paper title. Finch v. Trent, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 568.

1. Teabout v. Daniels, 38 Iowa 158.

This rule has frequently been preferred by text writers. See 2 Smith L. Cas. (8th Am. ed.) 711.

Where parties to a deed under-took by verbal contract to rescind the deed, and the grantor thereafter remained in the actual possession of a part of the land, claiming it under the rescission, he was held to be in possession under color of title. Hughes v. Israel, 73 Mo. 538.

In McCall v. Neely, 3 Watts (Pa.) 69, it is said by Chief Justice Gibson that the words "color of title" do not necessarily import the accompaniment of the usual documentary evidences. And this language is quoted, apparently with approval, in Green v. Kellum, 23 Pa. St. 254, 62 Am. Dec. 332.

The case of Bell v. Longworth, 6 Ind. 273, is sometimes cited in support of this view. In this case the court, while denying the right of a mere intruder to extend his possession beyond the limits of his enclosure, use this language: "But where a party is in possession, under and pursuant to a state of facts which of themselves show the character and extent of his entry and claim, the case is entirely different; and such facts, whatever they may be in a given case, perform sufficiently the office of color of title. They evidence the character of the entry and the extent of the claim, and no colorable title does more." While the language used in the opinion in this case is very broad as to what will constitute color of title, it is to be observed that Longworth claimed the land under a written assignment of a certificate of purchase from the United States. See Allen v. Mansfield, 108 Mo. 343.

Surveys.—One who entered upon a specific tract of land which had been surveyed and marked out by public authority, so that its boundaries were well known by the name of the tract and number of the survey, and who improved a considerable portion of the same, claiming the whole as his own and exercising acts of ownership over the whole, and who thus occupied for over twenty years, was held to have disseised the true owner, to have been in under color of title to the whole survey, and to be entitled to protection as owner of the land not under actual cultivation as well as the other. McCall v. Neely, 3 Watts (Pa.) 69. This case has been commented upon in subsequent decisions, and it has been said that "it is not likely that Judge Gibson would have held that a claimant merely to a legal subdivision of land under our ordinary congressional surveys, who should occupy only a part, would have color of title to the whole, although his claim may be bona fide. The different mode of issuing the patents, with their special surveys; the possession and claim of the occupant, so referring to the patent and special survey as to indicate the boundary of his claim; the fact that with the knowledge of its holder he had for more than the statutory period exercised acts of ownership over the whole by continuously paying taxes, and otherwise,—would distinguish it from the case at bar had there been no instrument or proceeding to indicate the extent of

(2) Parol Gift or Purchase.—Where the first-stated rule prevails, it is held that a parol purchase or gift of land does not confer color of title thereto upon the donee.¹ But in those jurisdictions where it is considered that color of title need not necessarily be based upon a writing, it is held that a parol gift or purchase may give color of title.²

(3) Descent Cast.—Stating that there are other modes of acquiring color of title than through a paper conveyance, the courts have held that where a person dies in possession of land and the possession devolves upon and is continued by his heirs, their possession is under color of title.³

b. INOPERATIVE CONVEYANCES—(1) General Rule.—Color of title is merely a semblance of title. Hence the fact that the claimant's supposed title is invalid is of no importance on the question of whether or not the instrument under which he claims constitutes color of title; a purported conveyance which passes nothing may constitute a colorable title.⁴

the occupant's claim." Bliss, J., in Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 536. See also St. Louis v. Gorman, 29 Mo. 593, 77 Am. Dec. 586.

Equitable Title.—It has been said that possession of part of a tract under an equitable title, by which the boundary is defined, will be construed to extend to the whole in the same way that it would had the title been a legal one. Jones v. Perry, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 59, 30 Am. Dec. 430.

1. So it has been held that the adverse possession of one who enters upon land under a parol gift must be limited to his actual occupancy. Allen v. Mansfield, 108 Mo. 343, criticising Rannels v. Rannels, 52 Mo. 108; McGrath v. Mitchell, 56 Mo. App. 626.

And it has been held that one going into possession of land, under parol purchase, can hold only to the extent of his actual possession. Cook v. Long, 27 Ga. 280.

2. Thus it has been held that a parol vendee, entering under his purchase, is in possession of the whole land, although only a portion is actually occupied. Niles v. Davis, 60 Miss. 750; Davis v. Bowmar, 55 Miss. 671; Davis v. Davis, 68 Miss. 478.

3. Teabout v. Daniels, 38 Iowa 158; Hamilton v. Wright, 30 Iowa 480. See King v. Rowan, 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 675.

4. General Rule as to Inoperative Conveyances.—Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 41; Pillow v. Roberts, 13 How. (U. S.) 472; Conyers v. Kenan, 4 Ga. 308, 48 Am. Dec. 226; Brooks v. Bruyn, 35 Ill. 394; Hanna v. Renfro, 32 Miss. 125; Welborn v. Anderson, 37 Miss. 155; Nash v. Fletcher, 44 Miss. 609; LaFrombois v. Jackson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 589, 18 Am. Dec. 463; Hill v. Wilton, 2 Murph. (N. Car.) 14; Swift v. Mulkey, 17 Oregon 532; Whiteside v. Singleton, Meigs (Tenn.) 207; Swann v. Thayer, 36 W. Va. 46; Cooley v. Porter, 22 W. Va. 120; Core v. Faupel, 24 W. Va. 247; Hickman v. Link (Mo., 1888), 13 West. Rep. 215.

Continued, open, and exclusive possession for the statutory period, under claim and color of title, is sufficient to give a good title thereto, without regard to the regularity and validity of the colorable title, or to the defects or insufficiency of the instruments confirming it. Grant v. Fowler, 39 N. H. 101;

Farrar v. Fessenden, 39 N. H. 268; Elliott v. Pearce, 20 Ark. 508; Cofer v. Brooks, 20 Ark. 542; St. Louis v. Gorman, 29 Mo. 593, 77 Am. Dec. 586.

In Brooks v. Bruyn, 35 Ill. 393, in an action of ejectment, where the defense was adverse possession under the statute of limitations with color of title, the court, by Beckwith, J., said: "Any instrument having a grantor and a grantee, and containing a description of the lands intended to be conveyed, and apt words for their conveyance, gives color of title to the lands described. Such an instrument purports to be a conveyance of the title, and because it does not, for some reason, have that effect, it passes only color or the semblance of a title. It makes no difference whether the instrument fails to pass an absolute title, because the grantor had none to convey, or had no authority, in law or in fact, to convey one, or whether such want of authority appears on the face of the instrument, or aliunde. The instrument fails to pass an absolute title, for the reason that the grantor was not possessed of some one or more of these requisites, and therefore it gives the semblance, or color only, of what its effect would be if they were not wanting."

To the same effect see Dickenson v. Breeden, 30 Ill. 279; Cook v. Norton, 43 Ill. 391. And see Winstanley v. Meacham, 58 Ill. 97.

Although it has been said that "an absolute nullity, as a void deed, judgment, etc., will not constitute color of title" (Bernal v. Gleim, 33 Cal. 668), this statement is far too broad. If an instrument is correct in form and made by a person having a perfect title, the grantee would not be under the necessity of using it as basis for a claim of title under the statute of limitations. Rawson v. Fox, 65 Ill. 200; Sater v. Meadows, 68 Iowa 507. In Pillow v. Roberts, 13 How. (U. S.) 472, it was said that the defendant, who claimed the land under a tax title, was not bound to show that all the prerequisites of the law had been complied with in order to entitle him to set up the bar of the statute of limitation. If the court should require such proof before the defendant could have the benefit of this law, it would require him to show that he had no need of the protection of the statute before he could be entitled to it.

(2) What Sufficient.—But while color of title may originate by a writing which is in fact void, there is considerable conflict as well as a marked confu-

In Wright v. Mattison, 18 How. (U. S.) 50, it is said that the courts have concurred "in attaching no exclusive or peculiar character or importance to the ground of the invalidity of an apparent or colorable title: the inquiry with them has been whether there was an apparent or colorable title, under which an entry or a claim has been made in good faith."

Instruments Constituting Color of Title.—The following invalid instruments have been held to give color of title:

A County Treasurer's Deed, which, while insufficient to convey title, purported to convey land for delinquent drain taxes assessed thereon. Hecock v. Van Dusen, 80 Mich. 359.

A Void Deed—United States.—Ewing v. Bur- net, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 53; Hall v. Law, 102 U. S. 466.

Indiana.—Irey v. Markey, 132 Ind. 546.

Iowa.—Sater v. Meadows, 68 Iowa 507.

Mississippi.—Welborn v. Anderson, 37 Miss. 155.

New York.—Jackson v. Woodruff, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 276, 13 Am. Dec. 525; Jackson v. Frost, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 346; Sinclair v. Jack- son, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 583; Jackson v. Waters, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 365; Livingston v. Peru
Iron Co., 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 511.

Wisconsin.—Zwietusch v. Watkins, 61 Wis. 615; Edgerton v. Bird, 6 Wis. 527, 70 Am. Dec. 473.

Possession under a deed of which there has not been a delivery may nevertheless, the grantee believing that he is the owner, be under color of title. Stewart v. Stewart (Wis., 1895), 63 N. W. Rep. 886.

A Void Mortgage Foreclosure—Illinois.—Chickering v. Failes, 26 Ill. 508; Mason v. Ayers, 73 Ill. 121; Hinkley v. Greene, 52 Ill. 223.

An Invalid Sale under a Trust Deed.—Gebhard v. Sattler, 40 Iowa 152.

A Mortgagor's Deed to Mortgaged Premises.—A deed to mortgaged premises, absolute on its face, and purporting to convey the title to the land described in it, executed by a mortgagor to the mortgagee, for a sufficient consideration. McCagg v. Heacock, 42 Ill. 153.

Patents, etc.—A void patent for land or grant from the state. Gregg v. Tesson, 1 Black (U. S.) 150; Logan v. Jelks, 34 Ark. 547; Sanford v. Cloud, 17 Fla. 557; Moody v. Fleming, 4 Ga. 118, 48 Am. Dec. 210. See Charle v. Saffold, 13 Tex. 94; Wofford v. McKinna, 23 Tex. 36, 76 Am. Dec. 56.

Where a defendant in an execution denies the validity of the sale of land thereunder, and subsequently enters on and holds the premises adversely, the patent and deeds under which he held before the sale are sufficient to give color of title in aid of such adverse possession. Gaines v. Saunders, 87 Mo. 557.

A grant from the state, purporting to be made in obedience to acts of the General Assembly providing for the relief of persons whose title-deeds had been destroyed by the burning of the court-house of a particular county. Kron v. Hinson, 8 Jones (N. Car.) 347. Compare Oliver v. Pullam, 24 Fed. Rep. 127.

A Void Certificate.—Hannibal, etc., R. Co. v. Clark, 68 Mo. 371.

A certificate of purchase of swamp land under the California Civil Code. Goodwin v. McCabe, 75 Cal. 584.

A Void Judgment or Decree of Court.—Huls v. Buntin, 47 Ill. 396; Whiteside v. Singleton, Meigs (Tenn.) 207. And compare Melia v. Simmons, 45 Wis. 334.

Sheriff's Deed, Return, or Record.—An invalid or informal sheriff's deed, Webber v. Clarke, 74 Cal. 11; Burkhalter v. Edwards, 16 Ga. 593, 60 Am. Dec. 744; Hester v. Coats, 22 Ga. 56; Sutton v. McLoud, 26 Ga. 638; Simmons v. Lane, 25 Ga. 178; Baily v. Doolittle, 24 Ill. 577; Fritz v. Joiner, 54 Ill. 101; Riggs v. Dooley, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 236; Brien v. Sargent, 13 La. Ann. 198; North v. Hammer, 34 Wis. 425; LaFrombois v. Jackson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 589, 18 Am. Dec. 463; Northrop v. Wright, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 476; a sheriff's deed upon the sale of land for taxes, Brooks v. Bruyn, 35 Ill. 392; a sheriff's deed, though unaccompanied by execution, Burkhalter v. Edwards, 16 Ga. 593, 60 Am. Dec. 744; a sheriff's deed unaccompanied by judgment or execution, Kendrick v. Latham, 25 Fla. 819; a sheriff's deed in fact void because the land was out of the sheriff's bailiwick, Beverly v. Burke, 9 Ga. 440, 54 Am. Dec. 351; a fiat facias with entries of levies thereon, in which a tract of land is described and which is by one of said entries returned as sold by the sheriff, and purchased by one under whom defendant claims, Walls v. Smith, 19 Ga. 8; a record of sale kept by a sheriff, Field v. Boynton, 33 Ga. 239.

Wills.—A bequest of land under a will, University Trustees v. Blount, Term (N. Car.) 13; Den v. Turner, 1 Murph. (N. Car.) 14; Charle v. Saffold, 13 Tex. 94; Henley v. Wilson, 81 N. Car. 405. See Green v. Mizelle, 54 Miss. 220; although the will is that only of a life tenant, Den v. Satterfield, 1 Murph. (N. Car.) 413. See Teabout v. Daniels, 38 Iowa 158; Green v. Mizelle, 54 Miss. 220 (compare Callender v. Sherman, 5 Ired. (N. Car.) 711); a paper purporting to be a will, and proved many years before, McConnell v. McConnell, 64 N. Car. 342.

A testator, by will dated 1824, devised all his estates, and all other estates of which he might be possessed at the time of his death, to his wife for life, with remainder over. He purchased a freehold estate after the date of his will. After his death his widow entered into possession of all of the estates of which he died possessed, believing she was entitled so to do under the will; and she continued in possession more than twenty years. It was held that she had acquired title by adverse possession. Paine v. Jones, L. R. 18 Eq. 320.

sion in the authorities on the question as to what are the requisites of an instrument in order that it may have the effect of conferring color of title.

(a) Defects in Title Appearing dehors the Immediate Conveyance.—It appears to be a quite generally accepted rule, that if the instrument under which the claimant enters upon land is regular upon its face, this will suffice to give him color of title, and he is not ordinarily required to go beyond the writing to see whether it actually passes title or is in fact void.¹

No Title in Grantor.—Thus an instrument which on its face purports to convey land gives color of title even though the grantor has no title to the land,² or the estate which he has therein is different from the one which he pretends to convey.³

Deed Conveying Life Estate.—A deed conveying a life estate is color of title, and, when accompanied by adverse possession for the required time, will ripen into a good title to the life estate so granted. Staton v. Mullis, 92 N. Car. 623. But a deed cannot have the effect of giving color of title beyond the estate which it professes to pass. Hence a conveyance of a life estate does not give color of title to the fee. McRae v. Williams, 7 Jones (N. Car.) 430.

Virginia.—Nowlin v. Reynolds, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 137.

It makes no difference that the grantor had neither title nor possession, provided the deed is not void on its face, and the party relying upon it believes in good faith that he has acquired an interest under it. Webber v. Clarke, 74 Cal. 11.

Instances.—A deed by the husband purporting to convey the separate property of his wife may give color of title. McDonough v. Jefferson County, 79 Tex. 535. And so of an administrator's deed of property to which the deceased had no title. Woodstock Iron Co. v. Roberts, 87 Ala. 436.

Color of title may be derived from a deed by the husband of a life tenant given after her death and purporting to convey the fee. Forest v. Jackson, 56 N. H. 357.

A probated will devising land held by the testator under claim of adverse possession and payment of taxes for nine years before his death, to his widow and children, who continue in possession and pay taxes, is sufficient color of title in Illinois to establish, after the lapse of seven years, their legal ownership, there being no proof of bad faith. Baldwin v. Ratcliff, 125 Ill. 376.

Conveyance of the Fee by a Mortgagee.—A deed from one who has only the title of a mortgagee may give color of title. Stevens v. Brooks, 24 Wis. 326.

Deed by One of Tenants in Common.—If real estate is held in common, and one tenant assumes to convey the entire land, or any specific part of it, by metes and bounds, his deed will furnish color of title. Weisinger v. Murphy, 2 Head (Tenn.) 674. Compare Saunders v. Silvey, 55 Tex. 46.

Deed Based on Partition Sale.—A deed executed in pursuance of a partition sale purporting to be of the entire interest in the land is color of title. Amis v. Stephens, 111 N. Car. 172.

3. Conveyance of Fee by Life Tenant.—A warranty deed conveying the fee executed by a life tenant is color of title, although his claim of title is based upon a tax deed issued to himself when he was under legal obliga-

Fraud on Part of Grantor.—A deed may give color of title although it is fraudulent on the part of the grantor.¹

Want of Capacity in Grantor.—And it would seem that a deed to land by one who, although the owner, lacks the legal capacity to convey, may give color of title.²

No Authority in Person Acting as Agent or Attorney.—It has been held that where a deed to land is executed by a person who pretends to act as the owner's agent or attorney, but who in fact has no authority to act as such, the instrument may give color of title.³

No Authority in Person Acting Officially.—A deed by a person acting in an official or representative capacity, as a public officer, an administrator or executor, has been held to give color of title, even though the grantor had no authority to execute the conveyance.⁴

tion to pay taxes. Lewis v. Pleasants, 143 Ill. 271.

Deed of Fee by Life Tenant.—A will may give color of title although it is only that of a life tenant. Den v. Satterfield, 1 Murph. (N. Car.) 413. See Teabout v. Daniels, 38 Iowa 158; also Callender v. Sherman, 5 Ired. (N. Car.) 711.

Conveyance of Fee by Tenant by Curtesy.—If a husband, seised as tenant by curtesy, gives a deed in fee, and the grantee enters and continues in possession, claiming to own the whole estate absolutely, such possession will be regarded as adverse to the wife, and those claiming under her, from the period of the husband's death. Constantine v. Van Winkle, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 177. See Mellus v. Snowman, 21 Me. 201; Bruce v. Wood, 1 Met. (Mass.) 542, 35 Am. Dec. 380; Miller v. Shackelford, 3 Dana (Ky.) 289; Meraman v. Caldwell, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 32.

1. Gregg v. Sayre, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 253; Griffin v. Stamper, 17 Ga. 108.

In Fraud of Creditors.—A deed which is fraudulent as to the grantor's creditors is voidable only, and therefore gives the grantee color of title. Harper v. Tapley, 35 Miss. 506. But it has been held that a conveyance in fraud of creditors cannot be used as color of title until they have notice of the facts constituting the fraud, as the statute of limitations does not begin to run in favor of the grantee until that time. Garvin v. Garvin, 47 S. Car. 435.

2. Deed by Married Woman.—Hence it would seem that a deed from a married woman may give color of title to the grantee. See Sanborn v. French, 22 N. H. 246.

In 1854 certain land belonging to C. was levied upon and sold to satisfy a judgment against him alone. In 1856 his wife executed a deed, in which he did not join, to one claiming under the sheriff's sale. In 1864 C. died, his wife surviving. In an action by the latter, in 1884, against a remote grantee to recover one third of the land, it was held that while her deed was void, it was sufficient to convey color of title; that the plaintiff's cause of action to avoid the deed which gave color of title accrued when her grantee took possession under the deed in 1856, as there was then an adverse possession of all the land; also, that the defendant and his grantors having been in possession more than twenty years under color of title conferred by the plaintiff's deed, the action was barred by the statute of limitations, the plaintiff's disability of coverture not postponing the time when the statute began to run. Wright v. Kleyla, 104 Ind. 223. See Hunter v. O'Neal, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 494.

Deed by Person Non Compos Mentis.—And it has been held that colorable title may be derived from the deed of a person non compos mentis. Ellington v. Ellington, 103 N. Car. 54.

Deed from Infant.—And the deed of an infant has been held to give colorable title. Murray v. Shanklin, 4 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 276.

3. Where a deed was executed in the name of the owner by a person who, while professing to have authority, in fact had none, it was held that the grantee obtained a colorable title. Hill v. Wilton, 2 Murph. (N. Car.) 14. And so of a bond for a title executed by one as the owner's agent, without authority. Millen v. Stines, 81 Ga. 655.

A Deed by an Assumed Agent in His Own Name has been held to give color of title. Payne v. Blackshear, 52 Ga. 637.

Deed under Power of Attorney Giving No Authority.—It has been held that where a power of attorney, upon being produced, clearly showed that the attorney had no authority to convey the land, the deed purporting to be made by virtue of the power therein nevertheless constituted a color of title. Hill v. Wilton, 2 Murph. (N. Car.) 14; Smith v. Allen, 112 N. Car. 223.

Power of Attorney Not Produced.—It has been held that a deed purporting to be executed by virtue of a power of attorney may be sufficient to confer colorable title upon the grantee without producing the power of attorney. Brackett v. Persons Unknown, 53 Me. 228, 87 Am. Dec. 548; Munro v. Merchant, 28 N. Y. 9. See Thompson v. Burhans, 61 N. Y. 60.

4. Conveyance by Public Officer without Authority.—In Texas it has been held that the deed of an assessor under the statutes will support the plea of limitation of five years, without proof of his authority to sell. Wofford v. McKinna, 23 Tex. 36, 76 Am. Dec. 53.

In Mississippi, a deed by the president of the board of police, in proper form, duly executed and recorded, and purporting to con-

Irregular Appointment of Person Acting Officially.—It seems that the deed of a person who assumes to act in a representative or official capacity may have the effect of passing colorable title to the grantee although his appointment is irregular and void.¹

Irregularities in Proceedings on Which the Conveyance is Based.—A deed which is executed pursuant to a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction gives color of title even though the decree is void.²

vey the fee, was held to give color of title though he had not the legal authority to make the conveyance. Welborn v. Anderson, 37 Miss. 155.

But it was held in Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Reich, 101 Ill. 157, that the deed of commissioners of highways was not color of title, when such commissioners could not in any case be party grantors in a deed of conveyance.

Deed by Administrator without Authority.—An administrator's deed under a will without power of sale, or without authority, was held to give color of title. Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 556; Riggs v. Fuller, 54 Ala. 141. And so of an agreement of partition, where one of the parties was an administrator, and acted in the premises without an order of the court. McMullin v. Erwin, 58 Ga. 427.

A and B, as administrators of C, entered into a written agreement to partition lands held in common. B had not obtained an order of court. It was held that A had color of title. Shiels v. Lamar, 58 Ga. 590.

But it has been held that when, at a sale of lands made by an executor under orders of the probate court, a conveyance is made to the purchaser, without a report or confirmation of the sale, without a report that the purchase money has been paid, and without an order of the court to make titles, such a conveyance will be ignored, and the purchaser does not hold adversely so that his possession will ripen into a title by the expiration of ten years. Casey v. Morgan, 67 Ala. 441.

Deed by Trustee Having no Authority.—A deed purporting to convey land in fee, under a void sale, made under a deed of trust, by a trustee having no legal authority, has been held to give color of title. Swann v. Thayer, 36 W. Va. 46; Swann v. Young, 36 W. Va. 57.

1. The title to the lands was in a trustee for a lunatic. One claiming to be guardian of the lunatic, but acting under a void appointment, obtained an order of the probate court for the sale of the lands, and sold and conveyed them. The purchaser, and those claiming under him, had had possession of the lands under claim of right and of ownership for a length of time sufficient to bar the right of entry under the statute. The whole proceedings under which the sale and conveyance were made were void, because the order appointing the guardian was invalid and void. It was held that the statute of limitations ran in favor of the derivative purchaser, although the possession of the irregularly appointed guardian was but the possession of the lunatic, in whose right he assumed control and made the sale. Molton v. Henderson, 62 Ala. 426.

Deed by Master in Chancery, Executed after Expiration of Term.—A deed made by a clerk or master in equity, after he goes out of office, on a sale made by him while in office, is color of title, though not otherwise operative. Williams v. Council, 4 Jones (N. Car.) 206.

2. Huls v. Buntin, 47 Ill. 396; Whiteside v. Singleton, Meigs (Tenn.) 207.

A deed executed pursuant to a void decree by a commissioner appointed by the court may give color of title. Hall v. Law, 102 U. S. 461. And so of a deed by an administrator or executor pursuant to a sale under a void order of the probate court. Balkham v. Woodstock Iron Co., 43 Fed. Rep. 648; Nash v. Fletcher, 44 Miss. 609; Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 536. Or a guardian's deed, although the decree of sale is void. Molton v. Henderson, 62 Ala. 426; Woodstock Iron Co. v. Fullenwider, 87 Ala. 584, 13 Am. St. Rep. 73; Lowery v. Davis (Ala., 1890), 8 So. Rep. 79.

No Jurisdiction of Person.—A deed made under a decree of a court of equity without jurisdiction of the person has been held to give color of title. Mullan v. Carper, 37 W. Va. 215.

A deed made in pursuance to an order for sale of the lands of a decedent to pay debts, the order having been made without any service of process on certain of the devisees, was held to give color of title. McCulloh v. Daniel, 102 N. Car. 529, followed in Amis v. Stephens, 111 N. Car. 172.

An administrator's deed, void as against heirs for want of notice, they being minors, will give color of title. Vancleave v. Milliken, 13 Ind. 105; Root v. McFerrin, 37 Miss. 17, 75 Am. Dec. 49.

And a partition and assignment of shares of the land among tenants in common, even where one of the cotenants was not a party to the decree, constituted color of title to each of the tenants for the share set off to him under the decree. Hassett v. Ridgely, 49 Ill. 200; Hinkley v. Greene, 52 Ill. 223.

It has been held that where there was an ineffectual effort to obtain a strict foreclosure, as where the holder of the equity of redemption was not made a party, the mortgage and decree became color of title. Chickering v. Failes, 26 Ill. 507.

Sale under Trust Deed without Giving Sufficient Notice.—In Gebhard v. Sattler, 40 Iowa 152, it was held that a sale under a deed of trust without giving sufficient notice constituted color of title.

Sheriff's Deed Founded on a Sale under a Void Judgment.—A sheriff's deed, although founded upon a void or voidable judgment, may give color of title. Packard v. Moss, 68 Cal. 123.

Forged Deed.—It has been held that a deed which is regular upon its face, but is in fact void because it is forged, may give color of title to the grantee entering thereunder without knowledge of the forgery.¹

Break in Chain of Title.—To constitute colorable title it is not necessary that the title when traced back to its source prove an apparently legal and valid title.²

(b) Defects on Face of Writing—aa. IN GENERAL.—The authorities are more especially conflicting as to the effect which is to be given to defects in the title, which are discoverable by an inspection of the instrument, in rendering the purported conveyance inoperative as color of title. Thus, courts of respectable authority have enunciated the general rule, that an instrument which is defective on its face, either by reason of being defectively executed or because it discloses or recites facts which show that it must be inoperative as a conveyance, is not such instrument as supplies color of title to the person claiming land thereunder.³ But the correctness of the rule thus

Administration of Estate of Living Person.—But it has been held that proceedings in administering and settling the estate of a person represented to be dead but actually still alive are void for all purposes, and an entry and continuous occupation under such proceedings, exclusive of any other right, will not bar an action to recover the land. Melia v. Simmons, 45 Wis. 334.

Succession Sale in Louisiana.—It has been held in Louisiana, that where a deed under which the party claims title as vendee at a succession sale, does not recite that it was made under order of court, and is otherwise silent as to the observance of the formalities essential to the legality of such a sale, and where the evidence shows that the auctioneer, in selling, departed from the terms of the order authorizing a sale, such title cannot serve as the basis for the commencement of the prescription of ten years. Ford v. Mills, 46 La. Ann. 331.

1. Griffin v. Stamper, 17 Ga. 108; Stamper v. Griffin, 20 Ga. 312, 65 Am. Dec. 628; Parker v. Waycross, etc., R. Co., 81 Ga. 387; Millen v. Stines, 81 Ga. 655, distinguishing Simmons v. Lane, 25 Ga. 178.

2. Dickenson v. Breeden, 30 Ill. 279.

The claimant is not required to trace the title through a chain to any source to constitute color of title. Woodward v. Blanchard, 16 Ill. 424, overruling Irving v. Brownell, 11 Ill. 412; Rawson v. Fox, 65 Ill. 200. So in Coleman v. Billings 89 Ill. 190, it is said that it is not necessary that the title should purport, when traced back to its source, to be an apparently legal title. See also Moore v. Brown, 11 How. (U. S.) 424.

Statutes Requiring Chain of Transfers.—Under the Texas statute of limitations (Hart Dig., art. 2391; Sayles' Tex. Civ. Stat., art. 3192), which defines the term "title" to mean "a regular chain of transfer from or under the sovereignty of the soil," and "color of title" to be "a consecutive claim of such transfer down to him, her, or them in possession, without being regular," etc., it seems that there must be an apparent chain of title in order to constitute colorable title. Marsh v. Weir, 21 Tex. 97.

Under this statute there can be no color of title unless there is a consecutive chain of transfer from or under the sovereignty of the soil to the one in possession. Color of title cannot exist where there is a complete hiatus in the chain. Osterman v. Balawin, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 116; League v. Atchison, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 112.

3. To give color of title the instrument or conveyance must be good in point of form, profess to convey the entire title, and be properly executed. LaFrombois v. Jackson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 589, 18 Am. Dec. 463; Dufour v. Camfranc, 11 Martin (La.) 715; Frique v. Hopkins, 4 Martin N. S. (La.) 224.

In Frique v. Hopkins, 4 Martin N. S. (La.) 224, Martin, J., says: "The correct doctrine we think is this: that if the title under which the acquisition is made be null in itself from defect of form, or discloses facts which show the person from whom it is acquired has no title, it cannot form the basis of this prescription, because the party acquiring must be presumed to know the law, and consequently wants the animo domini which is indispensable in cases of this kind. But where the title is free from these defects, and the property is not transferred by want of title in the party making the transfer, then it forms a good ground for the prescription; or, in other words, the inquiry is whether the error be one of fact or of law." This opinion was followed in Hoskins v. Helm, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 310, 14 Am. Dec. 133.

Texas.—So it is held that, under the Texas statute, the instrument must have all the constituent parts, tested by itself, of a good and perfect deed. Wofford v. McKinna, 23 Tex. 36, 76 Am. Dec. 53.

California Authorities.—In certain early California cases it was said that an instrument, to give color of title, must be regular upon its face and prima facie give a good title, and that a deed void upon its face cannot aid the adverse possession of an occupant. Woodworth v. Fulton, 1 Cal. 295; Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 254; Bernal v. Gleim, 33 Cal. 668. In the last case cited it was held that a sheriff's deed executed immediately after an execution sale without waiting for the time given by law for redemption was insufficient to give color of title. But of these cases it is said in Wilson v. Atkinson, 77 Cal. 485, decided in 1888, that they "were based upon laid down has been questioned.¹ And some of the authorities support the general proposition that a defect in the title, even though appearing upon the face of the instrument, which will deprive the writing of the character of giving color of title, must be such as would be readily detected by a person who does not have any special knowledge of the law.² And it is apparent that the broad rule that a writing, to give color of title must be executed in accordance with all the requisite formalities of a valid instrument, has not always been applied.

bb. OMISSION OF SEAL.—Thus it has been held that an instrument purporting the peculiar language of the Spanish law, and are of but little weight in determining what should be the rule under the present code provisions."

Tax Deeds.—It has been decided that a tax deed which is not regular upon its face does not give color of title. O'Mulcahy v. Florer, 27 Minn. 449. Thus it has been held that an instrument purporting to be a deed from an officer authorized to sell for taxes, which upon its face showed that the officer had not complied with the requisitions of the statute, did not give color of title. Moore v. Brown, 11 How. (U. S.) 424. And a tax deed which showed that the tax certificate was assigned by the county treasurer, he not having authority to make such assignment, the tax laws conferring that power upon the county clerk, was held not to give color of title. Shoat v. Walker, 6 Kan. 65. And see the title TAX TITLES.

Instrument Which on its Face Shows Grantor without Title.—It has been held that an instrument is not sufficient to give color of title if it discloses upon its face facts which show that the person purporting to convey the estate had no title to it. Dufour v. Camfranc, 11 Martin (La.) 715; Marsh v. Weir, 21 Tex. 97. So it was held that a bond signed by "A as agent" showed no color of title in the grantees, as the grantor disclaims title on the face of it. Simmons v. Lane, 25 Ga. 178.

Under "Occupying Claimants' Acts."—It has been held that a person who is in possession of land under an instrument which, upon its face, does not appear to give him any title or right of possession, cannot be said to be holding under color of title within the meaning of the Occupying Claimants' Act. O'Mulcahy v. Florer, 27 Minn. 449; McLellan v. Omodt, 37 Minn. 157. See the title OCCUPYING CLAIMANTS' ACTS.

1. Hamilton v. Boggess, 63 Mo. 233.

2. Wilson v. Atkinson, 77 Cal. 485.

It has been said that a deed must be held to give color of title, even though a person of legal learning and experience may, by a critical examination, discover defects in the instrument fatal to its validity as a muniment of title. The court therefore deemed it unnecessary to determine whether a tax deed which showed a sale and conveyance of several distinct parcels of land en masse, where the statute in force required a separate sale and conveyance of each lot or parcel of land sold at a tax sale, was or was not void upon its face; it nevertheless was sufficient to give colorable title. De Foresta v. Gast, 20 Colo. 307.

Rule of the North Carolina Cases.—According to the North Carolina cases the rule is that the defect which will make a writing ineffectual to give color of title must be such that a person uneducated in the law could be expected to know that it invalidates the instrument as a legal conveyance. Thus it has been held that the instrument must be so obviously defective that no man of ordinary capacity would be misled by it. Tate v. Southard, 3 Hawks (N. Car.) 119, 14 Am. Dec. 578; McConnell v. McConnell, 64 N. Car. 342. And it has been said that color of title requires a person to have "some written document of title, professing to pass the land, and one not so obviously defective that it could not have misled a man of ordinary capacity." Dobson v. Murphy, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 586; Ellington v. Ellington, 103 N. Car. 54; Avent v. Arrington, 105 N. Car. 390. In the last case cited Avery, J., said of an unsealed instrument, after expressing the opinion that it conferred color of title, that "it was in form a deed that purported to convey the entire estate in the land, and only one educated in the law could be expected to understand that a seal was necessary to make it in reality a deed, and vest the legal estate in the grantee." The cases of Barger v. Hobbs, 67 Ill. 592, and Watts v. Parker, 27 Ill. 224, are cited as "direct authority to sustain this view." This view certainly finds support in the language of Lumpkin, J., in Beverly v. Burke, 9 Ga. 443, 54 Am. Dec. 351, to the effect that color of title is "a title that is imperfect, but not so obviously so that it would be apparent to one not skilled in the law."

The general rule that every man is presumed to know the law, it has been said, has no application in determining what is and what is not color of title, Perry v. Perry, 99 N. Car. 270; and in endeavoring to ascertain whether or not a particular instrument is so obviously defective as not to give color of title this rule is to be excluded, McConnell v. McConnell, 64 N. Car. 342.

In North Carolina, where a sheriff's deed recites the execution under which the sheriff sold the land, and it appears that the execution was tested and signed by the deputy clerk instead of the clerk himself, it would enure as color of title, notwithstanding the constitution requires all writs to bear teste and be signed by the clerks of the respective courts. Den v. Putney, 3 Murph. (N. Car.) 562.

cc. DEFECTIVE ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—It has been held that an instrument may be sufficient to give color of title although it is defectively acknowledged, or not acknowledged at all.²

Omission of Wife's Privy Examination.—So a deed from the husband and wife, but lacking the privy examination of the latter, has been held to give color of title.³

dd. INSUFFICIENTLY WITNESSED.—It would seem that it might be held, in line with the decisions relating to the omission of a seal and proper acknowledgment, that the want of sufficient subscribing witnesses to a deed is only a formal defect in the instrument which will not prevent it giving color of title.⁴

(e) Instrument must Apparently Convey Title—aa. IN GENERAL.—But notwithstanding the marked conflict in the authorities, both apparent and real, on the question as to what constitutes color of title in particular instances, the cases quite generally agree that an instrument cannot be deemed to give color of title unless it apparently transfers title to the holder.⁵

1. Barger v. Hobbs, 67 Ill. 592; Kruse v. Wilson, 79 Ill. 233; Hamilton v. Boggess, 63 Mo. 233; Jackson v. Newton, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 361. See Pillow v. Roberts, 13 How. (U. S.) 472.

The decision in the above-cited case of Kruse v. Wilson, 79 Ill. 233, seems to be controlled, in some measure, by the fact that the grantor in the unsealed sheriff's deed could have been compelled to execute a sufficient deed, and also that the successor of the sheriff who neglected to put a scrawl to the deed, upon the discovery of the omission, made a perfect deed to the grantee in the defective deed. "This deed," it was said, "on every principle of right and justice, should have relation back to the time of the execution of the defective deed."

Unsealed Writing Competent to Prove Claim of Title.—But whether an unsealed instrument gives color of title or not, it may, on the principle that an instrument which is insufficient to constitute color of title is nevertheless competent evidence of claim of title and to show the character of the possession, be introduced in evidence to show that the possession thereunder was adverse. McCoy v. Dickinson College, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 254. See also Avent v. Arrington, 105 N. Car. 392.

A deed acknowledged by one only of the parties grantor was held to give color of title. Torrey v. Forbes, 94 Ala. 135.

3. Watson v. Mancill, 76 Ala. 600; Pearse v. House, 2 Hayw. (N. Car.) 386; Perry v. Perry, 99 N. Car. 270; Smith v. Allen, 112 N. Car. 223; Fry v. Baker, 59 Tex. 404.

A deed executed by husband and wife, purporting to convey the homestead, but without the necessary certificate of acknowledgment showing the wife's voluntary assent and signature, is totally inoperative and ineffectual as a conveyance of title; but, possession being delivered and held under it, it may constitute color of title, and be admissible to show the extent of the grantee's possession. Watson v. Mancill, 76 Ala. 600.

A deed of conveyance of land in fee executed by a married woman alone, without any privy examination, is an assurance of title purporting to convey an estate in fee which will perfect the title of an adverse holder of land. The disseisin occasioned by the possession of the grantee of such a deed would be a disseisin of the joint estate of husband and wife, and their joint right of action would be barred in seven years, and the title of the husband not only barred, but extinguished, and the heirs of the wife, if she died before the husband, would have only three years after her death and the extinguishment of the husband's right within which to bring suit for the recovery of the land. Hanks v. Folsom, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 555.

4. See McInerny v. Irvin, 90 Ala. 275; Lyles v. Kirkpatrick, 9 S. Car. 265.

But it has been held that two papers, offered as the will of a deceased owner, not on their face professing to devise the land, there being but one subscribing witness to the document, and, although it was in the handwriting of the deceased, it having never been proved as a will, and there being no evidence that it had been lodged in the hands of a third person for safe keeping, or had been found among the valuable papers or effects of the deceased, as the statute required, did not give color of title. Callender v. Sherman, 5 Ired. (N. Car.) 711.

5. Dickenson v. Breeden, 30 Ill. 293; Coleman v. Billings, 89 Ill. 183; Kruse v. Wilson, 79 Ill. 241; Bolden v. Sherman, 110 Ill. 418.

There can be no color of title in an occupant of land who does not hold under an instrument or proceeding or law purporting to transfer the title or give the right of possession. Deffebach v. Hawke, 115 U. S. 392.

It has been said that to give color of title the conveyance must be good in form, contain a description of the property, and be duly executed (La Frombois v. Jackson, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 589, 18 Am. Dec. 463), and, containing these requirements, it will give color of title, although in fact invalid and insufficient to pass the title, or actually void or voidable. Hall v. Law, 102 U. S. 466; Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 41; Murray v. Shanklin, 4

bb. MUST HAVE GRANTOR AND GRANTEE.—There must be a party grantor as well as grantee, in order that an instrument may furnish color of title.¹

Grant from Foreign Government or State.—A grant from a foreign government has been considered not to confer color of title.² So a grant by one of the states of the Union, of lands lying in another state, will not, it has been held, confer color of title.³

cc. MUST DESCRIBE THE LAND.—In order that an instrument may confer color of title it must contain a description of the land; for, although it is of no importance that the title is defective, yet, if no land is described, nothing can pass.⁴ Accordingly, an instrument which contains no description of the land,⁵ or by mistake describes a tract entirely different from the one intended,⁶ or an instrument which contains a description so vague and indefinite that the land cannot be identified or distinguished from other lands,⁷ cannot be said to give

"Wherever an instrument, by apt words of transfer from grantor to grantee, whether such grantor acts under the authority of judicial proceedings or otherwise, in form passes what purports to be the title, it gives color of title." Hall v. Law, 102 U. S. 461. And see Field v. Columet, 4 Sawy. (U. S.) 523.

1. This rule was announced in Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Reich, 101 Ill. 157, where it was held that the deed of commissioners of highways was not color of title, when such commissioners could not in any case be party grantors in a deed of conveyance.

Deed by Person Non Compos Mentis.—It has, however, been held that a deed from a person non compos gave color of title. Ellington v. Ellington, 103 N. Car. 54.

Deed by Infant.—The deed of an infant is color of title. Murray v. Shanklin, 4 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 276.

Deeds by Indians.—It has been said that a grant by any of the aboriginal natives of this country, being not from an acknowledged legitimate source, gives no color of title. Ang. Lim. of Act., § 412, citing Jackson v. Hudson, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 384, 3 Am. Dec. 500; Thompson v. Gotham, 9 Ohio 170; Cocke v. Dotson, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 169.

Mistake in Name of Grantee.—It has been held that where a grantee takes a deed accidentally executed to him by a wrong name, and enters into possession under it, it will, under the Illinois statute, constitute color of title. Elston v. Kennicott, 46 Ill. 187.

2. As to the effect of a grant of land by the French government in Canada, prior to the treaty between Great Britain and France in 1763, the courts have said that they could not notice any title to land not derived from our own government. Jackson v. Ingraham, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 163; Jackson v. Waters, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 365.

3. A land office warrant and patent, issued by the state of Virginia, and granting certain lands, which, though described and declared to be located within that state, were located within the state of Maryland, were held not to give color of title. Baker v. Swan, 32 Md. 359. Here the court, by Alvey, J., said: "The title papers originating in Virginia, for land described as, and declared to be located within that state, are simply void as to titles within the limits of this state, and never being intended to operate upon lands beyond the limits of Virginia, they have nothing upon their face of a colorable character from which a party could suppose that his possession under them was justified."

4. Ang. Lim., § 408.

Color of Title Limited to Land Described.—Hence a person cannot claim color of title, and corresponding constructive possession, to lands upon which he enters, beyond what his deed purports to convey. Russell v. Erwin, 38 Ala. 48; U. S. v. Cameron (Arizona, 1889), 21 Pac. Rep. 177; Dubuque v. Coman, 64 Conn. 475; Hinchman v. Whetstone, 23 Ill. 185; Brooks v. Bruyn, 35 Ill. 394; Shackleford v. Bailey, 35 Ill. 391; Woods v. Banks, 14 N. H. 101; Minot v. Brooks, 16 N. H. 376; Bellows v. Jewell, 60 N. H. 420; Tate v. Southard, 3 Hawks (N. Car.) 119, 14 Am. Dec. 578.

Contradictory Description.—Where a deed purported to convey two lots by their numbers, the plat and stakes showing the precise location, but the description including six feet on another lot, it was held to give color of title to the entire lots as shown by the plat and stakes, which prevail over distances. Bolden v. Sherman, 110 Ill. 418.

5. Jackson v. Woodruff, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 276, 13 Am. Dec. 525. In this case the deed purported to convey seven hundred and eighty-three acres, but, upon surveying out the lands according to the description given in the instrument, it was found that only a line had been described. The court said: "No land is included, consequently the deed is a nullity." And it was held that under this deed adverse possession was confined to the possessio pedis.

A deed does not give color of title where the only description of the land is by reference to another deed, itself not recorded. McDonough v. Jefferson County, 79 Tex. 525; or in which the description is equally indefinite. McKinzie v. Stafford (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 27 S. W. Rep. 790.

6. Elofrson v. Lindsay (Wis., 1895), 63 N. W. Rep. 89.

color of title, and the claimant thereunder will have adversary possession only of the land which he actually occupies.¹

Sufficiency of Description.—The description must be sufficiently accurate to identify or furnish the means of identifying the land under the maxim certum est quod certum reddi potest.² If the land can be identified from the description it is sufficient.³

dd. MUST CONTAIN WORDS OF CONVEYANCE.—Color of title being an apparent title, an instrument must, in order to give colorable title, show an apparent transfer of the title. A writing does not constitute color of title unless it purports or professes, as by apt words of transfer, to convey the title.⁴

Executory Contract of Purchase and Bond to Convey.—Consequently, as a mere executory contract or bond to convey does not itself purport to transfer title, but only promises a conveyance in the future, such instrument does not ordinarily confer color of title.⁵

(Tenn.) 570; Kilpatrick v. Sisneros, 23 Tex. 113; Berrendo Stock Co. v. Kaiser, 66 Tex. 352; Blakey v. Morris, 89 Va. 717.

In Humphries v. Huffman, 33 Ohio St. 395, it was held that a conveyance of one hundred acres out of a described plat of six hundred acres, without further description of the one hundred acres, was void, and could not be relied upon as conveying color of title. For similar cases see Shackleford v. Bailey, 35 Ill. 387; Wofford v. McKinna, 23 Tex. 36, 76 Am. Dec. 53; McKinzie v. Stafford (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 27 S. W. Rep. 790.

Under the Iowa statute providing that "the purchaser in good faith at any judicial or tax sale * * * has color of title," etc., it was held that an alleged defect in the description in the tax deed did not deprive the purchaser of color of title under the sale. Childs v. Shower, 18 Iowa 261.

1. In Absence of Written Instrument.—In the absence of a written instrument to define the limits of the adverse claim there must be some visible acts, signs, or indications which are apparent to all, showing the extent of the boundaries of the land claimed to amount to color of title. Cooper v. Ord, 60 Mo. 420; Rannels v. Rannels, 52 Mo. 108.

2. Dickens v. Barnes, 79 N. Car. 492; Brown v. Coble, 76 N. Car. 391; Capps v. Holt, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 153.

Thus, land described as "one tract of land lying and being in the county aforesaid, adjoining the land of A and B, containing twenty acres more or less," was held insufficient. Dickens v. Barnes, 79 N. Car. 490.

A devise by a testator of all the lands belonging to him in a particular state, it has been held, does not give the devisee color of title to those lands in the particular state to which his deviser had not a good, but only a colorable, title. Holbrook v. Forsythe, 112 Ill. 306, 21 Cent. L. J. 170.

3. Henley v. Wilson, 81 N. Car. 405. See Lynde v. Williams, 68 Mo. 360; Jackson v. Frost, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 346; Coleman v. Billings, 89 Ill. 183.

In the case of a written agreement to divide land, made by tenants in common, though it does not describe the line with certainty, yet if it contains certain indicia by which a surveyor can ascertain the line agreed upon, the paper gives color of title to the extent of the true dividing line. McMullin v. Erwin, 58 Ga. 427; McNamara v. Seaton, 82 Ill. 498.

In Henley v. Wilson, 81 N. Car. 407, the demise was of "all my land on both sides of Haw river in Chatham county, and all the mills and appurtenances and improvements belonging thereto, said property being known as the McClennahan mills." The court held that the description was sufficient for the conveyance to operate as color of title.

Conveyance of All Grantor's Property in Specified Territory.—A grant of land in the patent of B, and of all other lands belonging to the grantor, in the province of New York, was held good. Jackson v. DeLancey, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 368. So a conveyance granting land in a particular town or city was held sufficient to convey color of title. Harmon v. James, 7 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 118, 45 Am. Dec. 296; Prettyman v. Walston, 34 Ill. 191.

4. Reservation of Land.—Where a patent is issued for land, reserving land within its limits "previously granted," possession under such patent but outside of the land previously granted has been held not to give constructive possession of the excepted land, and it has been held that the patent was not color of title to the land so excepted, though the burden was on the party claiming under the exception to show that the land in question came within the exception. Eastern Carolina Land, etc., Co. v. Frey, 112 N. Car. 158; Basnight v. Smith, 112 N. Car. 229.

Administrator's Sale.—The sale by the administrator of a solvent estate, of the land of his intestate, under a license from the court of probate, gives no title or color of title to the purchaser, unless it be accompanied by a deed of conveyance from the administrator. Livingston v. Pendergast, 34 N. H. 544.

5. Osterman v. Baldwin, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 116; Kilburn v. Ritchie, 2 Cal. 145, 56 Am. Dec. 326; Dunlap v. Daugherty, 20 Ill. 404; Rigor v. Frye, 62 Ill. 507; Hardin v. Crate, 78 Ill. 533; King v. Travis, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 280; Wilson v. Kilcannon, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 182; Ellege v. Cooke, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 622.

It seems that in Texas a bond for title will constitute color of title because such an instrument is regarded and treated there "as a species of title," which may be recorded, and upon which trespass to try title may be

Tax Certificates.—Since a certificate of purchase at a tax sale does not purport to pass any title, either in fee or any other estate, it does not give color of title.¹

Pre-emption Certificate and Claim.—It has been held that a pre-emption claim does not give color of title.² And for the reason that a certificate of a land office showing that at one time a certain person was entitled to a pre-emption does not purport to convey the land, the courts have held that a writing of this kind does not give color of title.³

(d) Unrecorded Instruments.—The mere fact that an instrument is unrecorded does not deprive it of the character of giving color of title.⁴

(e) Quitclaim Deeds.—A quitclaim deed may give color of title.⁵

(f) Lost Deed.—A deed executed and delivered, but subsequently lost, gives maintained. Miller v. Alexander, 8 Tex. 36; Scarborough v. Arrant, 25 Tex. 129; Elliott v. Mitchell, 47 Tex. 445.

Ambiguity in Instrument as to Whether or Not it is a Conveyance.—Where on its face the written color of title under which land has been claimed and held adversely for about fifteen years, during which time there has been no obstacle to bringing suit for its recovery, is ambiguous in respect to whether its terms ought to be construed as a deed conveying land in presenti or as testamentary paper, public policy and the general principle on which prescription rests require that the doubt should be given in favor of the occupant and against the adverse claimant. Westmoreland v. Westmoreland, 92 Ga. 233.

2. Although a pre-emption claim might be, in the language of the act, such "evidence or right to land, recognized by the laws of this government," as would maintain trespass to try title, yet until perfected it is neither such title nor color of title as can support limitation. Buford v. Bostick, 58 Tex. 63; Clark v. Smith, 59 Tex. 275.

Car. 19.

In Minot v. Brooks, 16 N. H. 374, it was held that an unrecorded quitclaim deed of all a grantor's title, under a collector's deed, though the collector's deed conveyed no interest, is color of title.

And so of a deed from one in possession of land under color of title, though the deed was not recorded. Bellows v. Jewell, 60 N. H. 420.

Where possession has been had under a valid but unrecorded paper title for upwards of twenty years, it will be established thereby as against a title derived from a subsequent conveyance recorded first, and the latter will be removed as a cloud upon the former. Jaques v. Lester, 118 Ill. 246.

Georgia.—In Georgia it is held that a deed which has not been recorded cannot be given in evidence as color of title without proof of its execution. Hightower v. Williams, 38 Ga. 597.

5. Quitclaim Deed as Giving Color of Title.—Torrey v. Forbes, 94 Ala. 135; McCamy v. Higdon, 50 Ga. 629; Holloway v. Clark, 27 Ill. 486; Swift v. Mulkey, 14 Oregon 59; McDonough v. Jefferson County, 79 Tex. 535; Parker v. Newberry, 83 Tex. 428.

In Holloway v. Clark, 27 Ill. 486, Walker, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said of a quitclaim deed, that "if the grantee were required to see that it passed paramount title, before he could rely upon it as color, he would not need the protection of the statute. All know, that a quitclaim deed is as effectual to pass title, as a deed containing full covenants. A deed of release passes all of the grantor's title, and a deed of bargain and sale, with full covenants for title, conveys no more, or greater estate. The covenants form no part of the operative part of the deed, to pass title, but oblige the grantor, on the failure of the title, or breach of any covenant, to make it good, by compensation in damages. All persons in the community know that a quitclaim deed conveys the grantor's title, and it purports to have, and has, that effect. We all know that the language used in a deed of bargain and sale cannot enlarge the estate granted, but only purports to convey the grantor's title. This the quitclaim deed does, by another mode of expression. In law, they both purport to accomplish the same thing, independent of the effect of the covenants."

In New Hampshire it has been held that a quitclaim deed by one who is not shown to have either color of title or possession does not give colorable title. Woods v. Banks, 14 N. H. 101. But a quitclaim deed by one having colorable title to the lands gives color of title to the grantee. Minot v. Brooks, 16 N. H. 374; Wells v. Jackson Iron Mfg. Co., 47 N. H. 235, 90 Am. Dec. 575.

color of title; and actual possession of part of a lot, claiming possession of the whole under such lost deed, is equal to actual possession of the entire lot without color of title to any part of it.¹

(g) A Question of Law.—The question of what is sufficient to give colorable title is one of law, and, when the facts are shown, it is for the court to determine whether or not they amount to color of title.²

5. Good Faith.—It has occasionally been said that reliance upon anything as conferring color of title must be in good faith in order that the thing relied on shall afford color of title.³ But it would probably be more correct to say that such good faith is required in order that a person entering upon land under color of title may be deemed to be constructively in possession of the whole, though actually occupying only part of the land; or, in other words, that there can be no constructive possession, unless the occupying claimant relies in good faith upon the validity of his apparent title.⁴

IV. EXTENT OF ADVERSE POSSESSION.—The extent of the land held by an adversary possession is largely controlled by the question of whether the possession is by a mere intruder, or by a person who has a colorable title. There is, in this respect, an obvious and important distinction to be observed between these two possessions.

1. Without Color of Title.—Where a person enters, not under color of title, but merely assuming the possession with a claim of right, the ouster of his predecessor and his own subsequent possession extends no farther than to what he occupies, cultivates, encloses, or otherwise excludes the owner from; in this case there must be an actual possession of the entire parcel claimed, and that possession cannot be extended by construction.⁵

"An entry is by color of title when it is made under a bona fide and not pretended claim to a title existing in another." Gibson, C.J., in McCall v. Neely, 3 Watts (Pa.) 69, quoted with approval in Green v. Kellum, 23 Pa. St. 254, 62 Am. Dec. 332. See Ege v. Medlar, 82 Pa. St. 98.

4. The Correct View as to the Relation of Good Faith to adverse possession under color of title is considered to be that it is essential to constructive possession, and not that it is one of the component elements of color of title. It does not seem that it can be correct to consider that the same instrument might in the hands of one person give color of title, and in the hands of another person, for reasons wholly extrinsic to the instrument and depending entirely on the quo animo of the grantee, not have that effect; but, rather, that the writing may or may not have the effect of extending the grantee's possession beyond his possessione pedis, or actual occupancy, accordingly as the possession thereunder is or is not taken in good faith.

On the one hand, when the question of whether or not a particular instrument gives color of title arises, it does not involve an inquiry into the good faith of the grantee, but is to be determined solely from the writing or transaction which is relied upon as giving color of title. In accordance with this view, we find that the question of what constitutes color of title is one of law, exclusively for the determination of the court (see supra, this title, Color of Title—A Question of Law), which could not be the case if the question of good faith, which is a question of fact for the jury (see infra, this title, Extent of Adverse Possession—Good Faith), were one of the elements of color of title. When, on the other hand, the question of whether a claimant is or is not to be deemed to have constructive possession beyond his actual occupancy arises, the inquiry is, first, whether or not he has a colorable title; second, among other matters, whether he entered in good faith. As is said in the case of Wright v. Mattison, 18 How. (U. S.) 56, the question is whether there is an apparent or colorable title, under which an entry or a claim has been made in good faith. And see Hardin v. Gouveneur, 69 Ill. 140.

The requirement of good faith in the law of adverse possession will therefore be treated in connection with constructive possession. See infra, this title, Extent of Adverse Possession—Good Faith.

Vermont Doctrine.—The rule that one who enters upon land without color of title has no constructive possession whatever, and can acquire no title by possession beyond his actual occupation or possessio pedis, has, it is asserted, been somewhat extended in Vermont.

In Hodges v. Eddy, 38 Vt. 327, it is asserted that in that state a more liberal doctrine has been maintained, and that it is now settled "that where a person without title or color of title enters upon a vacant lot, and actually occupies a portion of it, and the lot has a definite boundary marked upon the land, such person, by claiming to be the owner to the boundary lines of the lot, has a constructive possession of the whole, and will acquire a title to the whole by such partial occupation for fifteen years, and such entry and claim give him a good prior possession of the whole which is a good title against all the world, except the true owner of the lot. See Crowell v. Bebee, 10 Vt. 33, 33 Am. Dec. 172; Ralph v. Bayley, 11 Vt. 521."

The rule which seems to prevail in this state is that where one enters upon land without color of title, and there is a definite boundary marked upon the tract, possession of a part only, with claim of title to the boundaries, will constitute constructive possession of the whole. Hodges v. Eddy, 38 Vt. 327. It is enough if the claim of title be in writing, capable of being produced on request, or if it is distinctly indicated upon the land by unequivocal monuments, such as would arrest the attention of counter-claimants, Swift v. Gage, 26 Vt. 224; or by the manner of occupation, Buck v. Squiers, 23 Vt. 498. In Shedd v. Powers, 28 Vt. 652, the court say that in the absence of all proper title a mere marked line might be so made as to be sufficiently indicative of a claim of title, in any adversary possession, his possession is, as a general rule, deemed to be coextensive with the boundaries as described in the writing or transaction which gives him colorable title to the land.¹ The possession which may be without any other monument. But where the line by which one claims by adverse possession is not marked so as to be discernible, the fact that he has enclosed the tract in dispute by a fence, which embraces lands beyond such line, will not give him constructive possession to the line. Wood v. Willard, 37 Vt. 377, 86 Am. Dec. 716. And see, generally, Stevens v. Hollister, 18 Vt. 294, 46 Am. Dec. 154; Spaulding v. Warren, 25 Vt. 316; Paine v. Hutchins, 49 Vt. 315; Langdon v. Templeton, 66 Vt. 173.

Indiana Doctrine.—In Bell v. Longworth, 6 Ind. 273, Perkins, J., says: "When a party is in possession of land, claiming an adverse title, the question must always arise, To what extent does his claim reach, what lands does his claim of title cover? And where there is nothing but naked possession to evidence it, his title must, from necessity, be limited to the lands over which he has exercised a visible authority, known to others, as owner; to those, in short, from which he has excluded the former owner and others. * * * But where a party is in possession under and pursuant to a state of facts which, of themselves, show the character and extent of his entry and claim, the case is entirely different; and such facts, whatever they may be in a given case, perform sufficiently the office of color of title. They evidence the character of the entry and extent of the claim, and no colorable title does more; for such title alone does not give right; and possession under such facts as above indicated would be constructive notice, on general principles of law, to all the world, of the character of the claim of title."

Limitation of the General Rule.—To the general rule certain limitations have been asserted. Thus, the authorities have sometimes applied the qualification that the rule must be applied with reference to the nature and extent of the land. And it has been held that in order that that part of the land which is not actually possessed may be deemed constructively so, it must be for use with or subservient to the part of which the claimant has actual possession; in other words, constructive possession will extend only to such land as is used in connection with the land actually possessed, and to only so much as is reasonable and proper for that purpose according to the custom of the country.² But the actual occupancy of only a part of a tract under color of title will give constructive possession of the remainder if it is, according to the customs of the country, naturally subservient to and used in connection with the part actually occupied.³

b. PREREQUISITES TO CONSTRUCTIVE POSSESSION—(1) Color of Title.—There can be no constructive possession of a tract of land unless the claimant has color of title thereto.

Constructive Possession as against the True Owner.—Although the opinion has sometimes been expressed that there can be no constructive possession as against the true owner of the land, and that such possession operates only against those who have no title (Griffith v. Schwenderman, 27 Mo. 412; McDonald v. Schneider, 27 Mo. 405), this view is clearly a mistaken one, and can apply only to cases of mixed possession where both claimants actually occupy a part, claiming the whole by adverse titles. Crispin v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 536. See infra, this section, subdivision Mixed Possession.

1. Thompson v. Burhans, 79 N. Y. 93.

"Constructive possession is a possession in law without possession in fact." Hodges v. Eddy, 38 Vt. 327.

The doctrine of constructive possession is enforced for the protection of bona fide settlers, who go upon land for the purpose of actual cultivation. Where one takes possession of a few acres of land in a township, not for the ordinary purpose of settlement, but to gain a title by possession, he cannot be considered as constructively in possession of the entire township. Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 388.

3. Argotsinger v. Vines, 82 N. Y. 308.

Actual possession under color of title, of part of a tract of land, may give possession to the entire tract, provided it consists of a single tract of a proper size to be managed and used in one body, according to the usual manner of business of the country. Murphy v. Doyle, 37 Minn. 113.

Constructive Possession Limited to Colorable Title.—Hence the adversary possession of land under color of title cannot be extended by construction to embrace more than the land which is described in the instrument giving the color of title.¹

Derived from Several Writings.—And it seems that it is immaterial whether the color of title is in one instrument covering the entire tract, or several instruments each purporting to convey a portion thereof, and that the actual possession of either part so conveyed by separate instruments will give constructive possession to all if they constitute one tract.²

(2) Actual Possession of Part of Land.—But there must be something more than the instrument which confers the color of title and a mere entry under it. In order to entitle a person who claims, under color of title, to the benefit of the doctrine of constructive possession, there must be an entry upon and actual possession for the statutory period of some part of the land covered by the color of title.³

Alienation of the Part Actually Occupied.—The constructive is dependent upon the Deed of Land Consisting of Former Parcels.—The mere fact that an entire undivided tract of land which is conveyed by a deed thereof was formerly made up of different parcels lying contiguous to each other, with the title, or color of title, of the several parcels derived, at some former period, from different sources, does not, it has been held, take it out of the general rule as to constructive possession, although in such deed conveying the entire tract the several parcels of which it is composed are separately described. Webb v. Richardson, 42 Vt. 465. But see, contra, Carson v. Mills, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 546, 30 Am. Dec. 143.

The statute does not begin to run in favor of the holder of a tax deed by merely recording it. Baldwin v. Merriam, 16 Neb. 199.

There can be no constructive adverse possession against the owner when there has been no actual possession which he could treat as a trespass, and bring suit for. Steedman v. Hilliard, 3 Rich. (S. Car.) 101. And see also Slice v. Derrick, 2 Rich. (S. Car.) 627; Gourdin v. Davis, 2 Rich. (S. Car.) 481, 45 Am. Dec. 745. But such acts of possession are not necessarily sufficient. There must be a disseisin of the owner; an actual possession by the claimant. The owner is not bound to consider a mere act of trespass to be a disseisin. Clarke v. Courtney, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 354.

Where a grantee's deed by mistake includes a tract of land that was not in fact sold, and he takes possession of only that land which he actually purchased, he does not obtain possession of the land which was included in his deed by mistake. De Forest v. Walters (Supreme Ct.), 60 N. Y. St. Rep. 1.

Necessity of Acts of Ownership over Unoccupied Portion.—There are cases which seem to require of a person claiming a right to land by virtue of his adverse possession under color of title, in order that he may have constructive possession beyond the portion in actual occupancy by substantial enclosures or under cultivation, that he shall, for the requisite period of time, exercise such acts of ownership over the other portions of the land as are calculated to assert to the world a claim of right or will amount to actual possession. Den v. Hunt, 20 N. J. L. 492. So in Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 547, where the foregoing case is quoted from with approval, it seems to be required that there be "a substantial holding coextensive with the boundaries in the deed." But this requirement is not generally made. The commonly accepted view is that, where the entry is under color of title, if there is a sufficient actual possession of a part, no acts of ownership need be shown upon the remainder of the land. Sedgw. & W. Tr. Tit. to L., § 771.

In Missouri, however, the requirement that there must be an exercise, "during the period of such possession," of the "usual acts of ownership over the whole tract so claimed," has been superadded by statute. Norfleet v. Hutchins, 68 Mo. 597.

actual possession, and must continue or fail with it. Consequently, if the occupying claimant conveys that part of the tract which constituted his actual possession, but not the whole tract, he loses the constructive possession of the balance, unless he takes actual possession of some part thereof.¹

The Possession Required.—Even though the entry is under a color of title, the possession required is, in every respect except that of extent, practically the same as that which is required when there is no color of title; an actual, visible, notorious, distinct, and hostile possession, continuous for the prescribed period, must appear in order to form a bar to the assertion of the legal title by the true owner.²

Under Instrument Describing Land in Separate Parcels.—It seems that the mere fact that the instrument under which the entry is made describes the land in separate parcels does not prevent the application of the general rule; and that, if the land is in fact one entire undivided tract, the claimant will have constructive possession of the whole, even though his actual occupancy is limited to one of the portions which are separately described in the conveyance.³

Where Land Claimed Consists of Separate Tracts.—Where the instrument which confers the color of title purports to convey and describes several tracts which do not constitute one entire undivided tract, the possession of one of such tracts will not give constructive possession of another granted in the same conveyance.⁴

Under Title Void as to Part Only.—In the case where a person who has a good Color of title does not dispense with the necessity of the possession being continuous. Hamilton v. Icard, 114 N. Car. 532.

3. Undivided Tract of Several Parcels.—The mere fact that an entire undivided tract, conveyed by deed, was formerly made up of different parcels, with the title, or color of title, of the several parcels derived from different sources, does not prevent the application of the general rule. Northport Real Estate, etc., Co. v. Hendrickson, 139 N. Y. 440; although the deed conveying the tract describes the parcels of which it is composed separately. Webb v. Richardson, 42 Vt. 465. Contra, Carson v. Mills, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 546, 30 Am. Dec. 143.

Where a deed conveying five contiguous lots described them by their numbers, and named the aggregate quantity of land conveyed, and referred to the whole as "five tracts or lots of land containing two hundred two and one half acres each," and the several tracts described really constituted but one tract, the whole lying together in one body, it was held that the possession, under such a deed, of a part of the land thus conveyed, would embrace the whole tract described in the deed. Johnson v. Simerly, 90 Ga. 612, explaining Barber v. Shaffer, 76 Ga. 285. But see Griffin v. Lee, 90 Ga. 224.

Although the testimony went to show that the whole tract was under a common enclosure, and although subdivided into several lots was subject to a common use, the refusal by the court to instruct the jury that evidence of actual possession of one of these lots was not to be considered in determining whether this possession extended to the whole tract was held entirely proper. Kerr v. Nicholas, 88 Ala. 351.

4. Separate and Distinct Tracts.—Brown v. Bocquin, 57 Ark. 97; Grimes v. Ragland, 28 Ga. 123; Wiley v. Warmock, 30 Ga. 701; Morris v. McClary, 43 Minn. 346; Schultz v. Lindell, 30 Mo. 310; Thompson v. Burhans, 61 N. Y. 52; Pepper v. O'Dowd, 39 Wis. 538.

The Missouri courts have stated and applied the principle that where a large tract embraces several smaller ones, actual possession of one of the smaller lots only by the person claiming the large tract will not be a defense against a superior title to any one of the other small lots. Tayon v. Ladew, 33 Mo. 205; Leeper v. Baker, 68 Mo. 400; Hickman v. Link, 97 Mo. 482.

And in the case of Church of Jesus Christ, etc., v. Church of Christ, 60 Fed. Rep. 937, it is held that it is not sufficient that a party under a colorable deed should occupy one lot, where a tract is divided up into lots with separate streets, and acquire title by limitation to a lot not connected, and not occupied, by merely claiming title thereto.

So it is held that where two separate lots, included in the same deed, belong to different owners, an entry into one can in no way operate as a disseisin in relation to the other. Bailey v. Carleton, 12 N. H. 9, 37 Am. Dec. 190; Turner v. Moore, 81 Tex. 206.

Where one in possession of a very large survey of land, claiming title thereto, sells several distinct tracts located in different portions of said survey, his actual possession of one parcel of the original tract does not, it has been held, give him a constructive possession of all the remaining portions of the tract not actually conveyed, they being severed from the portion actually occupied. West v. McKinney, 92 Ky. 638.

title to one portion of a tract of land, but a merely colorable title to another part, enters upon and actually occupies the part to which he has a valid title, it would seem, though the question has not yet been definitely settled by the authorities, that such entry and possession will not give him constructive possession of that part to which he has only color of title.¹

Possession, by Mistake, of Land Not Covered by Colorable Title.—It sometimes happens that a person, by mistake or inadvertence, enters upon a tract of land different from that which is described in the instrument under which he claims. In such case there will be no constructive possession created; whatever adverse possession such claimant may have is limited to his actual possession.² But he may make a claim of right, and by his actual occupancy have adverse possession to the extent of such actual possession.³

(3) Claim of Right to Whole Tract.—The fact that a person enters under color of title does not dispense with the necessity for a claim of right; constructive possession is dependent not only on color of title and actual possession of part of the land, but also on a claim of title to the whole.⁴ Where the possession, whether under color of title or not, is greater in extent than the claim, it is the latter which determines the amount of land gained by adverse possession.⁵

Color of Title, Evidence of.—But the entry under color of title, together with the

1. Deed Void in Part.—In Bailey v. Carleton, 12 N. H. 9, 37 Am. Dec. 190, Parker, C. J., said: "We are of opinion that the rule cannot apply to a case where a party, having a deed which embraces land to which his grantor had good title, and other land to which he had no right, enters into and possesses that portion of the land which his grantor owned, but makes no entry into that part which he could not lawfully convey. There is no notice in such case to the owner of the land thus embraced in the deed, and no possession which can be deemed adverse to him. If it may be said that the color of title gives such a constructive seisin and possession that the grantee could maintain trespass against any person who did not show a better right (that is, a title or prior possession), there is nothing in the nature of it which can give it the character of a disseisin, or possession adverse to the true owner, so as to bind him." And this rule is in strict analogy with that applicable in the case of conflicting boundaries. See infra, this section, Overlapping Boundaries.

While the case of Wharton v. Bunting, 73 Ill. 16, seems, at first blush, to support the contrary of the rule stated in the foregoing case, it turns largely upon the construction of the phrase "actual residence," as used in the Illinois statute of limitations. And it is not clear but that there was actual possession of both tracts. Mr. Justice Breese said: "The occupancy of the farm, the two tracts being under one enclosure as one field, was open, notorious, exclusive, and adverse to the owner or claimant of any one of the tracts, and as much notice to him as if a house for a residence was erected on each subdivision, and such house actually occupied."

3. Possession by Mistake.—Swettenham v.

Leary, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 286. See supra, this title, What Constitutes Adverse Possession—Intent.

In Metcalfe v. McCutchen, 60 Miss. 145, the facts were these: A was the owner of the west half of a certain section of land, and B was the owner of the east half of the same section. B had been in possession of a part of the west half for more than ten years (the period necessary to establish a title by adverse possession), claiming title thereto in the belief that it was in the east half, and not intending to claim any part of the west half, but recognizing A's title to all of that half. It was held that the possession of a part of the west half by B had been adverse, and vested him with the title to that part as against A, though he had claimed it in the mistaken belief that it was in the east half, and embraced within the calls of his deed thereto. Compare Grube v. Wells, 34 Iowa 148; Napier v. Simpson, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 453.

J., owning a lot of land on the south side of Green street, in P., with a frontage of one hundred and twenty-six feet, conveyed a piece thereof with a frontage of sixty feet to the defendant, the latter supposing that by the terms of his deed his lot extended to a certain fence which would give him a frontage of sixty-six feet. Soon after the delivery of his deed the defendant entered, occupied, and cultivated the lot to the fence for more than twenty consecutive years. It was held that if the defendant claimed title to the fence during his entire occupation, his title ripened into an absolute title by disseisin, although he was mistaken as to the true bound. Hitchings v. Morrison, 72 Me. 331.

color of title itself, is generally regarded as an assertion of such a claim.¹ And the color of title, it has been said, "may be looked to for the purpose of showing the character and extent of the claim, and the intent with which the entry was made."²

(4) Good Faith—In General.—While a person who accepts a defective title to land and goes into possession under it, knowing the defect, may nevertheless by virtue of his adverse possession under claim of title alone,³ plead the statute of limitations in bar against any action brought for the recovery of the land,⁴ yet the general rule is that possession under a defective title by a grantee who knows the defect must be limited to his actual occupancy. In other words, to entitle a claimant under color of title to the benefit of the doctrine of constructive possession, there must be a bona fide reliance upon the merely apparent title as being good and valid. Therefore, if the instrument constituting color of title was obtained by fraud on the part of the grantee, or with a knowledge by him that it conveys no title, he cannot have the advantage of an entry under color of title.⁵

1. Sedgw. & W. Tr. Tit. to L., § 761.

2. Humbert v. Trinity Church, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 604.

3. Good Faith Not Essential to Acquisition of Title by Actual Possession.—The requirement of good faith in an adverse claimant is generally held to be material only when a person is claiming constructive possession under color of title, and does not apply when there is a disseisin of the true owner, and an actual, open and adverse possession which exposes the claimant to an action by the true owner. Hence the opinion has been expressed that actual adverse possession by the defendant for the statutory period under a junior grant constituted a bar to an action by the senior grantee, even though the defendant's grant was obtained by fraud with knowledge of the senior grant. Oliver v. Pullam, 24 Fed. Rep. 127. See Den v. Leggat, 3 Murph. (N. Car.) 539.

In Love v. Shields, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 405, where there was no question of constructive possession beyond the actual possession of the claimant under a void tax deed, it was held that the act of limitations would prove a bar to an action of ejectment, although the defendant, when he received his deed, knew that the person conveying to him had no title.

On the general proposition that, except when expressly required by the statute, the question of the claimant's good faith has no application where there is actual adverse possession, see Smith v. Roberts, 62 Ala. 83; Brady v. Huff, 75 Ala. 80; Bryan v. Atwater, 5 Day (Conn.) 181, 5 Am. Dec. 136; French v. Pearce, 8 Conn. 443, 21 Am. Dec. 680; Weber v. Anderson, 73 Ill. 439; Humbert v. Trinity Church, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 587; Munro v. Merchant, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 402; Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 541; Kinney v. Vinson, 32 Tex. 128.

Good faith on the part of the occupant is sometimes made an essential element of adverse possession. Wood Lim. of Act., § 259, where Louisiana is instanced.

The second section of the Illinois Act of 1839 provides in effect that, when one has acquired color of title in good faith to vacant and unoccupied lands, and has paid taxes thereon for seven successive years from the time this color of title was acquired, and afterwards gets into possession of the land under such title, he acquires title by adverse possession. See McCagg v. Heacock, 42 Ill. 153.

4. Reliance by Claimant with Color, on Claim of Title Only.—It seems to be a general rule that a person who either originally enters under or subsequently acquires a colorable title may wholly discard such title, and, merely relying upon his claim of title, may acquire title by adverse possession to the extent of his actual adverse occupancy.

In the case of Strange v. Durham, 2 Bay (S. Car.) 429, the defendant had entered into possession of land under a deed which he knew to give no title, and held the premises for the statutory period. In his defense to the plaintiff's action, he relinquished all claim under the deed and rested solely upon his possessory right. The plaintiff contended that as the defendant went into possession of the land by virtue of a void deed, which he knew to be defective, he could not afterwards relinquish his claim to it and set up title by possession alone, though it was admitted that he might have done so if he had not accepted this conveyance. But it was held that the defendant set up a good defense.

And it has been held that one who is in adverse possession of land does not impair his right to rely upon the statute of limitations by purchasing the land at a tax sale and receiving a tax deed therefor. Hayes v. Martin, 45 Cal. 559; Griffith v. Smith, 27 Neb. 47; Omaha, etc., Land, etc., Co. v. Hansen, 32 Neb. 449.

The fact that the color of title is based upon

Fraud must be Actual.—But a grantee will not be deprived of the legal advantages of an entry under color of title, unless it be for actual fraud on his part.¹

Knowledge of Defect must be Actual.—And the rule that what is sufficient to put a person on inquiry operates as notice does not apply in such case,² so that it is only actual knowledge that the title supposed to have been acquired is invalid, and not such knowledge as would arise from the legal construction of the instrument, which will deprive the claimant of the benefit of the doctrine of constructive possession.³

A Question of Fact.—The question of what is good faith in a person claiming under color of title is one of fact for the jury.⁴

c. MIXED POSSESSION.—(1) Definition.—Mixed possession may be defined as the actual possession, at the same time, of parts of the same tract of land, by two or more persons each claiming the whole under a separate conveyance or other instrument giving at least color of title.⁵

(2) When True Owner is in Possession of Part.—In cases of mixed possession, the true title prevails against the one merely colorable, and carries with it the constructive possession.⁶ Hence, when the true owner of a tract of land a quitclaim deed does not of itself negative good faith. McCamy v. Higdon, 50 Ga. 629.

Illinois Decisions.—Under the Illinois statute it is held that the bona fides of the claimant will be presumed until the contrary appears. Dawley v. Van Court, 21 Ill. 460; Brooks v. Bruyn, 35 Ill. 394; Milliken v. Marlin, 66 Ill. 13; Hardin v. Gouveneur, 69 Ill. 140; Russell v. Mandell, 73 Ill. 163; Hodgen v. Henrichsen, 85 Ill. 262; Davis v. Hall, 92 Ill. 85.

Active or constructive notice of irregularities does not necessarily impute bad faith to the party chargeable with notice. Davis v. Hall, 92 Ill. 85. Compare Bowman v. Wettig, 39 Ill. 416; Stubblefield v. Borders, 92 Ill. 279.

Failure to record a deed which constitutes the color of title is not a presumption of bad faith. Rawson v. Fox, 65 Ill. 200.

Under the Illinois statute it has been said that the words "good faith," as used in the statute, must receive a practical, common-sense construction. The statute was intended to protect a purchaser of land who bought and paid his money under the belief that he was acquiring title. Winters v. Haines, 84 Ill. 585; Woodward v. Blanchard, 16 Ill. 424; Rawson v. Fox, 65 Ill. 200; Davis v. Hall, 92 Ill. 85.

1. Actual Fraud Necessary.—In Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 527, the law upon this point is stated by Depue, J., as follows: "A grantee will not be deprived of the legal advantages of an entry under color of title, unless it be for actual fraud on his part. He will not be prejudiced even though the grantor be justly chargeable with fraud in making the conveyance, unless he personally participated in the fraud. If his deed purports on its face to convey good title and he has accepted it in good faith, he is entitled to the benefits to be derived from an entry under color of title. Gregg v. Sayre, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 244. * * * The doctrine of constructive notice does not apply in such a case. There must be proof of actual fraud. Mere neglect to inquire into the state of the title is not sufficient evidence of fraud."

6. True Owner in Possession of Part.—"The rule is well settled that title draws to it the possession, and it remains with the owner of the legal title until he is divested of it by an actual, adverse possession; and, while he is in possession of a part of the premises, his possession is entitled to the benefit of the constructive possession, and can only be ousted by, and to the extent of, the actual occupation of a mere intruder." Wood on Lim. of Actions, § 261, citing, among other cases, Hall v. Powel, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 456, 8 Am. Dec. 722, where it is said by Duncan, J.: "There would appear to be no clearer principle of reason and of justice than this, that if the rightful owner is in the actual occupancy of a part of his tract by himself, or tenant, he is in the constructive and legal possession and seisin of the whole, unless he is disseised by actual occupation and dispossession. If this were not the law, the possessor by wrong would be more is in actual possession of a portion thereof, a person who enters into actual possession of another portion, whether he has or has not color of title, will be deemed to be in possession only to the extent of his actual occupation; the true owner is constructively in possession of the remainder.¹ And even though a person enters upon land under color of title, and by his actual possession of part and claim of title to the whole obtains constructive possession of the entire tract, if the owner of the true title afterwards, and before the title by adverse possession is perfected, enters upon the same tract in another place, claiming the whole, the constructive possession thus acquired by the former is overcome by that of the latter, so that he can acquire title by adverse possession, as against the true owner, to only that portion of the land which he actually occupies.²

(3) When Neither Claimant Has True Title.—If a person enters under color of title, and by actually occupying a part, claiming the whole, obtains constructive possession of the entire tract to which his color of title extends, this possession cannot be defeated by a subsequent entry and occupancy of a portion of the same tract, even though under color of title to the whole, where neither claimant shows himself to be in possession of the true title.³ But a favored than the rightful possessor. Here are two, each in actual possession and occupation of part of a surveyed tract, the owner and an intruder. Who, then, is in possession of the part not occupied by enclosure by either? The man who has no right but by disseisin of a part, or he who is in the actual occupancy of a part, and the rightful owner of the whole? In this kind of mixed constructive possession, the legal seisin is according to the title. Title draws possession to the owner. It remains until he is dispossessed, and then no further than actual dispossession by a trespasser, who cannot acquire a constructive possession, which always remains with the title."

And in Barr v. Gratz, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 213, Story, J., says: "Where two persons are in possession of land at the same time, under different titles, the law adjudges him to have the seisin of the estate who has the better title."

The doctrine that when a party enters under claim and color of title, his or her possession is to be deemed co-extensive with the description in the deed under which the entry is made, does not apply to such of the described tract as may at the time be in the actual occupancy of another. Goewey v. Urig, 18 Ill. 238; East St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Nugent, 147 Ill. 254.

In Williams v. McAiley, Cheves (S. Car.) 200, there were an old grant and two junior grants, all of the same land, with possession by each of the junior grantees, of different parts, claiming the whole, for the statutory period; it was held that the junior grantee who first entered had such actual possession as at the expiration of ten years gave him a title to all the land within his claim, except the part in the actual occupancy of the other junior grantee.

In Owens v. Goode, 3 Strobb. (S. Car.) 474, there were an old grant with which another prior constructive possession must yield to a subsequent actual possession, so that the possession of the subsequent claimant will extend to the part which he actually occupies, and may ripen into title by adverse possession.¹

d. OVERLAPPING BOUNDARIES—Constructive Possession Follows Title.—The same principle which is applied in the case of mixed possession, namely, that constructive possession follows the true title, is applicable to the case of interfering or overlapping boundaries.²

Where the Owner Has Possession—General Rule.—The general rule seems to be that, where the person having the better title is in possession of any part of his land, either within or outside of the interlock, he is constructively in possession of all the land in conflict, except such part as is in the actual possession of the person claiming under the merely colorable title.³

Both Parties in Possession outside of Overlap.—Thus, where the instruments under which two rival claimants assert title describe in part the same land, and neither claimant is in actual possession of any part of the overlapping portion, but each is in actual possession of a part or all of that portion of the tract described in the instrument under which he claims which is not within the interference, the person who has the better title will be considered to be in constructive possession of the overlapping part.⁴

Both Parties in Possession of Part of Overlap.—And if both have actual possession of party was connected; a plat which covered part of the old grant and the other land; occupancy by the defendant, under that plat, of the part outside the old grant; a junior grant to the plaintiff, of all the land within the old grant; occupancy by him, for the statutory period, on a part of it outside of the defendant's plat after abandonment, by an agent of plaintiff's, of a possession which had been for a few years held on the part within the defendant's plat; entry by defendant upon the part within his plat covered by the old grant; action of trespass to try titles brought against him. It was held that as there was no pedis possessio of the part which was covered by both claims and by the old grant, but there was pedis possessio on either side outside of that parcel, the defendant's possession, being first extended to his whole claim, where it was not interrupted by an actual occupancy, attached again, as soon as the actual occupancy within his claim was abandoned, and prevented the extension of plaintiff's subsequent possession to the same part, which was thus already occupied by the prior virtual possession of defendant; and that upon this virtual possession the defendant might have maintained trespass quare clausum fregit against the person who had entered upon his claim and abandoned possession, at any time before that person had held ten years.

Where two or more claimants are in possession of land, each actually occupying a part of the same, and each having color of title to the whole, the junior must yield to the senior possession or title, as to the part claimed by both through constructive possession under color of title, on the same principle that the possession of an adverse claimant must be confined to what he actually occupies, though he has color of title to the whole tract, if the rightful owner is still in the actual possession of any part of the same, or recovers possession of some part of it. Sedgw. & Wait, Trial of Tit. to Land, § 753.

a part of the overlap, the true owner is in constructive possession of all that is not actually occupied by the other.¹

Possession by Holder of Inferior Title inside, and by Owner outside, of Overlap.—Or even if the person having the merely colorable title is in actual possession of a portion of the interference, and the true owner is at the same time in actual possession of some part of that portion of his land which does not lie within the limits of the defective title, the latter has the constructive possession of all that part of the overlap which is not in the actual possession of the former.²

Where Owner does Not Have Possession—General Rule.—If the true owner has no actual possession of any part of his land, the claimant having the inferior title to the overlap may obtain constructive possession thereof by the actual occupancy of some part of it, but not by the actual occupancy of some part of his grant lying outside of the interlock.

Possession of Overlap by Claimant under Colorable Title.—Of course, if the person claiming under the inferior title is in actual possession of a part of the interference, and the true owner has actual possession of no part of his land, then the North Carolina Cases.—There is a series of cases in North Carolina in which, after stating the generally accepted rule that when a tract of land is, as to part, included in A's deed or patent, and the same part is also included in B's deed or patent, and each grantee is settled upon that part of the land comprised in his deed, although not included in both deeds, the possession of the part included in both deeds is in him whose deed or patent is the oldest, the courts lay down the broad rule that if one of them is actually settled for the statutory period upon the part comprehended in both deeds he will obtain title by adverse possession, though his title was originally the weaker one. Borrets v. Turner, 2 Hayw. (N. Car.) 97; Slade v. Griffin, 2 Hayw. (N. Car.) 178; Sawyer v. Sexton, 2 Hayw. (N. Car.) 67; Williams v. Buchanan, 1 Ired. (N. Car.) 535, 35 Am. Dec. 760; Bryan v. Carleton, 1 Tayl. (N. Car.) 103; Doe v. Morrison, 1 Hawks (N. Car.) 467. It does not clearly appear from the reports of these cases whether there was an actual possession of the whole or of only part of the tract in dispute. But in Green v. Harman, 4 Dev. (N. Car.) 158, where the defendant claimed title by adverse possession to the whole of an overlap, although he had been in actual occupancy of only a part thereof, the court questioned whether "when the portion into which the actual entry is made, and possession taken, is very minute, so that an owner of reasonable diligence and ordinary vigilance might remain ignorant that it included his land, or might fairly mistake the character of the possession, the disseisin shall extend beyond the occupancy." * * * As to the occupancy necessary to give adverse possession to the whole interference, Ruffin, C.J., continued: "I think it may be properly declared that it must be of as much as will reasonably denote, both to the other proprietor and to the jury, that the party intended to usurp a possession beyond those boundaries to which his title is acknowledged by all parties. If the defendant had not a good title to adjoining land, his entry on the land of the lessor of the plaintiff would be distinct notice, and could not be deceptive. But when his possession for the most part is rightful, and admitted to be so, and only wrongful to a very inconsiderable extent, it seems to me that he cannot have the benefit of it beyond its actual bounds, unless from that and other circumstances the jury may reasonably infer that he intended to make open claim under his deeds to the land covered by both."

But in Hamilton v. Icard, 114 N. Car. 532, there is a dictum to the effect that occupation of the interference by those claiming under a grant is necessary in order to limit the constructive possession of one who is seated on the lappage and claims under color of title for the statutory period.

Actual Possession of One of Two Adjoining Tracts Not Extended by Construction to the Other.

—Where two adjoining parcels of land were conveyed to the same person by one deed, but separately described, and the tracts so conveyed extended side by side into the land of another who had the better title, but who, though in possession of that part of his land which was not within the overlap, was not in actual possession of any part of the interference, the actual possession by the grantee of the overlapping portion of one of the tracts, it was held, did not give constructive possession to the overlapping portion of the other parcel, although it adjoined the former. Carson v. Mills, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 546, 30 Am. Dec. 143.

possession of the former is not confined to his actual occupancy, but is coextensive with the boundaries of the land described in his conveyance.¹

Possession outside of Overlap by Such Claimant.—But if the actual possession of such claimant is of that part which does not come within the conflict, his possession will not, although the person having the better title is not in actual possession of any part of his tract, be extended by construction to that part which lies within the interference.²

Subsequent Entry by Owner.—A subsequent entry of the true owner upon any part of his land is an ouster of the intruder from the part of which he has constructive possession. Altemus v. Long, 4 Pa. St. 254, 45 Am. Dec. 688; Hunnicut v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333; Evitts v. Roth, 61 Tex. 81; Parker v. Baines, 65 Tex. 609; Hull v. Woods (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 25 S. W. Rep. 458. And see Boomer v. Gibbs, 114 N. Car. 76. But in Fox v. Hinton, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 559, it was held that a subsequent entry made under the better title, but not within the interference, does not give the person making it the possession within the interference of either the part which was actually occupied under the merely colorable title, or of that part of which the prior occupant had constructive possession; the entry, to be good for such purpose, should be made upon the land included in the interference.

No Actual Possession of Overlap by Either Claimant.—In Trimble v. Smith, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 257, which was an action of ejectment, the parties made an agreed case, from which it appears that the plaintiff derived title to the land in controversy under a patent bearing date the 2d of December, 1785, and the defendants under a patent of a later date, interfering in part with each other; that the defendants had settled upon and occupied for more than twenty years before the commencement of the action that part of the land included in their patent which was not within the interference, but had not settled upon or occupied that part which was within the interference until within less than twenty years before the institution of the suit; and that the plaintiff had not, nor had any one under whom he claims, been in the actual possession of any part of the land covered by his patent, previous to the bringing of the action." Boyle, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The question presented by the agreed case is, whether the entry or settlement by the defendants upon that part of the land covered by their patent which is not within the interference between the two patents should be construed to give them the possession of the land included within the interference? For if it ought not to be so construed, then they were not in possession of the land in dispute for twenty years prior to the commencement of the action, and consequently the plaintiff's right of entry was not tolled. Where there is no adverse possession there can be no doubt that a man by an entry into part of a tract may acquire the possession of the whole, provided he may lawfully enter upon the whole; but to construe an entry into part to which he has right, to give him possession of another part to which he has no right, would be making an act which was right in itself tortious by construction. This would be wholly unwarranted by any precedent, and in direct violation of the principle of law which requires, where an act is done which is susceptible of a twofold construction, one of which is consistent with law and the other not, that the former should prevail."

Pennsylvania Doctrine as to Conflicting Surveys.—In Pennsylvania, where by statute as well as by the courts much force is given to surveys by a person going into adverse possession of lands, it was at one time held that where two surveys run into one another, and the junior warrant holder occupies his survey, although not that part which interferes with the other, and the elder one does not occupy his, the possession of the former extends, by operation of law, to the interference as well as to the rest of the tract. Waggoner v. Hastings, 5 Pa. St. 300; Seigle v. Louderbaugh, 5 Pa. St. 490; Kite v. Brown, 5 Pa. St. 291; Hole v. Rittenhouse, 19 Pa. St. 305.

But the case of Waggoner v. Hastings, 5 Pa. St. 300, which seems to have been the first Pennsylvania case in which the rule above stated was definitely asserted, was overruled by Hole v. Rittenhouse, 25 Pa. St. 491. And it is now, by this and later decisions, finally settled that there must in such case be an actual occupancy, or pedis possessio, within the interference, to give title by ad-

V. SUBJECTS OF ADVERSE POSSESSION—1. General Rule.—As a general rule, the property subject to adverse possession is realty held in private right. Special and exceptional instances occur in which peculiarities arise either from the nature of the right affected or from the character of the persons in whom the title is vested.¹

2. The Several Classes of Property Considered—a. PERSONALTY.—It has been held that adverse possession of a chattel for the period of limitations not only bars the remedy, but destroys the right, and vests such title in the possessor as will enable him to maintain an action for the possession of the chattel against the original owner.²

Where one has entered upon land under a claim of title founded upon a written instrument as a conveyance, his occupation of the land by mining operations, prosecuted as continuously as the nature of the business and the custom of the country will permit, constitutes an adverse possession. Stephenson v. Wilson, 50 Wis. 95, 37 Wis. 482; Wilson v. Henry, 40 Wis. 594, 35 Wis. 241. See also Sydnor v. Palmer, 29 Wis. 226.

Mere Digging for Coal in the Winter, and abandoning the property the rest of the year, will not constitute such permanent use and possession of wild lands as will defeat the title of a purchaser at a tax sale. Jackson v. Stoetzel, 87 Pa. St. 302.

4. Quarry.—Colvin v. McCune, 39 Iowa 502; Moore v. Thompson, 69 N. Car. 120.

The operations of building a shed, quarrying rock, erecting a lime-kiln, and cutting wood to burn it for the purpose of making lime on the land in dispute, continued interruptedly for more than seven years, constitute such a possession as will give a good title to the person claiming adversely under it. Moore v. Thompson, 69 N. Car. 120.

Where the claimant of a tract of timber and quarry land assumed entire possession, paid the taxes, cut timber and quarried stone, and permitted others to quarry stone thereon for payment, it was held that this adverse possession. Adverse possession of the surface of the land does not necessarily include possession of the minerals below it, where the title to the latter has been severed by deed from that to the surface.¹

c. WATER.—The continuous and uninterrupted adverse possession and user of water for the statutory period will create title to such use. But a mere claim of a right to the use and enjoyment of water, however long continued, will not ripen into adverse title thereto. It is the actual appropriation, followed by open, notorious, continuous, and exclusive possession, under a claim of title, for the time limited by statute, that gives the right.²

d. EASEMENTS.—The adverse, uninterrupted, and exclusive use of an easement for the statutory period is sufficient to create a title to the easement.³ But the claim of a mere easement or other right in land, less than the entire fee, does not confer any adverse right to the fee. To have that effect under the statute, the claim must be for the entire title, exclusive of the title of any other person.⁴

Right of Way.—To acquire a right of way by prescription there must be an adverse use of the way for the statutory period, and this use must be continuous and as of right. If the use is interrupted by the owner of the land, by obstructions placed upon it, in the exercise of his right to prevent the use of the way, the continuity of the use is broken. Whether the interruption is acquiesced in by the claimant of the right of way, in such manner that the subsequent use must be regarded as permissive, is a question for the jury upon the facts.⁵

e. PUBLIC LANDS.—Adverse possession cannot be held as against the United States, and the mere possession of land the legal title to which is in the United States, although open, exclusive, and uninterrupted for the statutory period, creates no impediment to a recovery by the government, nor by was adverse possession. Colvin v. McCune, 39 Iowa 503.

Tunnel.—The use of a tunnel constructed under a road by license from the road trustees, in whom the soil of the road is vested, which has remained in the uninterrupted and exclusive possession of the constructors and their successors in title for the period of limitations, is not a mere easement, but amounts to exclusive possession and occupation, which, being continued for the statutory length of time, will bar an action by the adjoining proprietors. Bevan v. London Portland Cement Co., 3 Rep. 47, 67 L. T. 615.

Burial Lot.—The burial of a dead body is the only possession necessary to ultimately create complete ownership of the easement of a burial lot; and as long as the lot is enclosed as a burial-place, or even without enclosure, as long as gravestones stand marking the place as a burial-ground, the possession is necessarily actual, adverse, and notorious, and there can be no actual ouster of possession by an intruder, nor running of the statute of limitations in his favor, while such gravestones stand indicating the previous burial of another. Hook v. Joyce, 94 Ky. 450. See also Bonham v. Loeb (Ala., 1895), 18 So. Rep. 300; Conger v. Weyant (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 809.

one who, within the statutory period before bringing suit, has received a conveyance of the land.¹

f. STATE LANDS—General Rule.—Statutes of limitation do not run against a state unless by their terms the state is especially included within their operation. This is equally true of statutes of limitation barring the right of entry to lands after a certain period of adverse possession. Hence title to land owned by a state cannot be acquired by an adverse possession.²

Stat.* 1878 contemplates as a proper foundation for adverse possession. Cawley v. Johnson, 21 Fed. Rep. 492.

Land Office Certificates operate as a severance of the land from the public domain, and when accompanied by actual possession are sufficient evidence of title to support prescriptive rights based thereon against the holder of a patent subsequently issued. Gay v. Ellis, 33 La. Ann. 249.

The Right of Entry or Action of a person claiming under a patent from the United States, or any one succeeding to his rights, may be barred by adverse possession for the period of limitation. Coker v. Ferguson, 70 Ala. 284; Hughes v. Stevers, 95 Ill. 391.

The Statute of Limitations cannot Avail a Pre-emption Claimant, whose pre-emption claim is of land already held by a private individual under patent, or location and survey which would entitle him to a patent. Clark v. Smith, 59 Tex. 275. See also Sutton v. Carabjal, 26 Tex. 497; Buford v. Bostwick, 58 Tex. 63.

A Person in Possession in Subordination to the Title of the United States may hold adversely as to another claimant. Francœur v. Newhouse, 14 Sawy. (U. S.) 600. See also Hayes v. Martin, 45 Cal. 559.

Adverse Possession by Statute.—In several states statutes have been enacted limiting the period within which the state may maintain an action for the recovery of real estate which has been held adversely.¹

Adverse possession might be set up against the lord proprietary of Maryland. Kelly v. Greenfield, 2 Har. & M. (Md.) 121; Russell v. Baker, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 67. See also Hall v. Gittings, 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 114; Cheney v. Ringgold, 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 87.

Adverse Possession against State Board of Proprietors.—It has been held in New Jersey that title by adverse possession can be acquired against the board of proprietors. Cornelius v. Giberson, 25 N. J. L. 1; Yard v. Ocean Beach Assoc., 49 N. J. Eq. 306.

No Adverse Possession before Patent.—The defendant in ejectment may not avail himself of his possession anterior to the date of the plaintiff's patent. Chiles v. Calk, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 554; Jackson v. Vail, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 125; Wallace v. Miner, 6 Ohio 367; Smith v. Power, 23 Tex. 29. See also Udell v. Peak, 70 Tex. 547.

It was held in California that the statute of limitations did not commence to run against title to marsh and overflowed lands founded upon a certificate of purchase from the state, until the lands had been certified to the state by the United States. Packard v. Moss, 63 Cal. 123.

As to the validity of a patent issued upon a land certificate not obtained in strict accordance with law, and the effect of such certificate as a foundation for adverse possession in Texas, see Spofford v. Bennett, 55 Tex. 293. See also League v. Rogan, 59 Tex. 427.

Land Covered by Water.—Adverse possession for twenty years of land covered by water, within the ebb and flow of the tide, where the soil is vested in the state, will not confer such title thereto as will enable a party to maintain trespass against one who enters thereon and catches fish without permission from the person claiming it. Sollers v. Sollers, 77 Md. 148, 20 L. R. A. 95. Compare, as to law in Massachusetts, Nichols v. Boston, 98 Mass. 39, 93 Am. Dec. 132; Tufts v. Charlestown, 117 Mass. 401; Eastern R.

Co. v. Allen, 135 Mass. 13. See also Lakeman v. Burnham, 7 Gray (Mass.) 437.

Great Pond.—It was held in Massachusetts that a prescriptive right to lower the waters of a great pond, the title to which is in the commonwealth, might be acquired by the uninterrupted adverse exercise of this power by an individual for a great number of years, where such use amounts to no greater public nuisance than the abridgment of the ordinary use of the property by the public, and where there is a statute permitting the acquisition by disseisin of a complete title against the state. Atty.-Gen. v. Revere Copper Co., 152 Mass. 444. See also Hittinger v. Eames, 121 Mass. 539.

Permissive Possession.—Where a county had for forty years used for its purposes certain rooms in the state house, it was held, in an action of ejectment brought by the state to recover the rooms, that in the absence of proof to the contrary it would be presumed that such use and occupation were by sufferance merely, and without any intent on the part of the county to appropriate the rooms to itself; and that such mere permissive possession could not ripen into title. Pulaski County v. State, 42 Ark. 118.

1. Adverse Possession by Statute—Massachusetts.—As to the operation of adverse possession against the state, in Massachusetts, under Public Statutes 1882, c. 196, § 11, see Piper v. Richardson, 9 Met. (Mass.) 155; Nichols v. Boston, 98 Mass. 39, 93 Am. Dec. 132.

Mississippi.—See Green v. Irving, 54 Miss. 450, 28 Am. Rep. 360.

New York.—"The people of the state will not sue a person for or with respect to real property, or the issues or profits thereof, by reason of the right or title of the people to the same, unless either (1) the cause of action accrued within forty years before the action is commenced; or (2) the people, or those from whom they claim, have received the rents and profits of the real property, or of some part thereof, within the same period of time." New York Code Civ. Pro., § 362; People v. Arnold, 4 N. Y. 508; People v. Van Rensselaer, 9 N. Y. 317, reversing People v. Van Rensselaer, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 189; People v. Livingston, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 253; People v. In an action of ejectment brought by the people, proof that the premises claimed were vacant and unoccupied within the period necessary to be shown to establish title by adverse possession against them is prima facie sufficient to authorize a recovery. Wendell v. Jackson, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 283, 22 Am.

Presumption of Grant.—Under certain circumstances long-continued adverse possession of state lands may be sufficient to raise the presumption of a grant from the state.¹

g. PROPERTY OF MUNICIPAL AND QUASI-MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—(1) Property Dedicated to Public Uses—Highways, Streets, Parks, etc.—The decisions of the courts as to whether title to highways, streets, parks, or other public property can be acquired against a municipal or quasi-municipal corporation by adverse possession have been conflicting. Each side of the question is supported by a long list of authorities.²

North Carolina.—Under the North Carolina Code of Civil Procedure, § 18, adverse possession for thirty years, which was formerly held to constitute a presumption of a grant, is an absolute bar against the state; but a person claiming title under this statute must show a privity between himself and his predecessors in possession, and also that the possession was held up to known and visible boundaries. Price v. Jackson, 91 N. Car. 11; Phipps v. Pierce, 94 N. Car. 514. See also Mobley v. Griffin, 104 N. Car. 112; Walker v. Moses, 113 N. Car. 527.

South Carolina.—As to present law in this state see Busby v. Florida Cent., etc., R. Co. (S. Car., 1895), 23 S. E. Rep. 50.

1. Presumption of Grant—North Carolina.—Prior to the Code of Civil Procedure of North Carolina adverse possession of land for thirty years was sufficient to raise a presumption of a grant from the state. Fitzrandolph v. Norman, Term (N. Car.) 127; Rogers v. Mabe, 4 Dev. (N. Car.) 180; Candler v. Lunsford, 4 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 407; Simpson v. Hyatt, 1 Jones (N. Car.) 517; Taylor v. Gooch, 3 Jones (N. See also Bullard v. Barksdale, 11 Ired. (N. Car.) 461.

And it was not necessary that there should be privity or connection among the successive tenants. Fitzrandolph v. Norman, Term (N. Car.) 127; Candler v. Lunsford, 4 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 407; Reed v. Earnhart, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 516; Davis v. McArthur, 78 N. Car. 357; Cowles v. Hall, 90 N. Car. 330; Davidson v. Arledge, 97 N. Car. 172; Pearson v. Simmons, 98 N. Break in Possession.—Under this law a break of several years in the continuity of the possession was not sufficient to rebut the presumption of a grant. Reed v. Earn- hart, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 516; Cowles v. Hall, 90 N. Car. 330; Mallett v. Simpson, 94 N. Car. 37. But see Malloy v. Bruden, 86 N. Car. 251.

Uribe*, 85 Tex. 386.

Exercise of Easement in Excess of Grant—Presumption.—Where an easement is granted to be exercised within certain limits, and the grantee openly exercises a privilege in excess of the limit continuously and without interruption for twenty-one years under a claim of right, the law may presume a second grant superadded to the first covering a larger right. Gehman v. Erdman, 105 Pa. St. 371. See also Tracy v. Norwich, etc., R. Co., 39 Conn. 382; and for a general treatment of this branch of the subject see the title PRESCRIPTION.

Street.—In Wheeling v. Campbell, 12 W. Va. 36, the city sought to enjoin the defendants from building a house upon a portion of the street, concerning the original dedication of which there was no question. The defendants set up an adverse possession, and were met by the doctrine of nullum tempus, but it was held that the city was barred. After an extended review of the authorities on both sides of this question, the court, by Johnson, J., said: "As we have seen, the courts of last resort in the states of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Rhode Island, and Louisiana have held that the maxim nullum tempus occurrit regi is not restricted in its application to sovereignty, but that it applies to municipal corporations, as trustees of the rights of the public; while, on the other hand, the highest courts of Vermont, Massachusetts, New York, Connecticut, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Mississippi, Texas, Missouri, Kentucky, Ohio, Illinois, and Iowa have restricted the application of the maxim to sovereignty alone; and most of said courts have in express terms, in cases requiring the decision, held that municipal corporations, like natural persons, are subject to limitation statutes. While able judges have held the former doctrine, we have Chancellor Kent, Judges Redfield, Marshall, Moncure, Ranney, and other eminent jurists holding to the latter; and Judge Dillon, perhaps no less distinguished than any of the others, on both sides of the question."

Where lot owners are allowed by statute to use a portion of the street in front of their lots in a prescribed manner, a long-continued use inconsistent with or in violation of the statute will establish a right to claim the land so used by adverse possession. Flynn v. Detroit, 93 Mich. 590.

Alley.—It was held in Texas that an action brought by a city to recover an alley dividing a city block was barred by ten years' adverse possession thereof, such alleys being expressly excepted from the operation of the Act of 1887 (Sayles' Civ. Stat., art. 3200), providing that limitation will not affect a city as to lands, streets, sidewalks, grounds, etc. Fol- som v. McGregor (Tex. Civ. App., 1895), 30 S. W. Rep. 846.

Town Site.—A party who has been in the open, notorious, exclusive, adverse possession of a portion of a town site for a period of time sufficient to bar an action against him to recover possession thereof, thereby acquires an absolute title to said land, and may protect his possession by injunction against unlawful acts of the city authorities in attempting to open streets. Schock v. Falls City, 31 Neb. 599.

Public Square.—Where the original proprietor of a city remained in open and adverse possession of a public square, with the knowledge of the city, for the statutory period for the limitation of real actions, and there was some doubt as to whether the land had ever been dedicated to the public, it was held that the right of the city to maintain an action for the recovery thereof was barred. Pella v. Scholte, 24 Iowa 283, 95 Am. Dec. 729. In delivering the opinion of the court Dillon, C. J., said: "Of course it is well understood that statutes of limitations do not constructively apply to the state or sovereignty. But the principle has not, so far as we know, been extended to municipal or public corporations. On the contrary, it has been expressly held that these corporations are within the statute of limitations the same as natural persons" (citing cases in Ohio, Kentucky, and New York).

"Whether there may not be some limitations on this general doctrine, arising out of the want of knowledge of the public corporation or its officers of its rights, or of the adverse right sought to be asserted against it, we need not stop to examine. For in this case the right claimed by the defendant has been openly asserted by him, and fully known to the city ever since its first organization. The present case is, therefore, a proper one for the application of the statute, or the principle of repose upon which it rests. * * * In conclusion, it is deemed proper to add that the foregoing views in relation to the statute of limitations, and adverse possession, are to be taken in connection with the special facts of this case, and would not necessarily apply to a case where the dedication was general, unlimited, and for the whole public, and not restricted, or for the primary benefit of the contemplated municipality, and hence under its special control and guardianship; or to a case where the public corporation was ignorant of its rights or those of the public, or that these had been encroached upon, or that a hostile right was being asserted against it."

See also the view of the writer of the foregoing opinion in 2 Dillon Munic. Corp. (4th ed.), § 677; and also Wheeling v. Campbell, 12 W. Va. 36; Fort Smith v. McKibbin, 41 Ark. 45, 48 Am. Rep. 19, 5 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 453, where these views in connection with each other are criticised apparently without reference to the qualification expressed in the opinion just quoted.

sions, a distinction is made between property held by a municipality in a private capacity and that held for the benefit of the whole public, strictly so called.

Highway.—Under the Public Statutes of Massachusetts (1882), c. 54, § 1, it was held that where fences had been maintained within the limits of a highway under a claim of right for more than seventy years, the owner acquired an absolute right to continue them there, as against the public. Cutter v. Cambridge, 6 Allen (Mass.) 20. See also, as to the construction of a similar statute in Maine (Rev. Stat. 1883, c. 18, § 95), Stetson v. Bangor, 73 Me. 357; Charlotte v. Pembroke Iron Works, 82 Me. 391.

It was held in Webber v. Chapman, 42 N. H. 326, 80 Am. Dec. 111, that enclosing and occupying a highway adversely, uninterruptedly, and under a claim of right, for more than twenty years, will vest in the occupant a prescriptive right to the land as against the public and all persons claiming any public right or easement therein. The doctrine established in this case has since been abrogated by statute. Pub. Stat. New Hampshire 1891, c. 77, § 7. See also State v. Franklin Falls Co., 49 N. H. 240, 6 Am. Rep. 513.

In Com. v. Alburger, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 469, Sergeant, J., said: "Individuals may reasonably be held to a limited period to enforce their right against adverse occupants, because they have interest sufficient to make them vigilant. But in public rights of property each individual feels but a slight interest, and rather tolerates even a manifest encroachment than seeks a dispute to set it right."

In Richmond v. Poe, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 149, where the holder of a lot and those under whom he claimed had been in possession by actual enclosure for more than sixty years, and there was no proof that the original owner had ever dedicated the land to the public, and the city had never been in possession, the city was enjoined from interfering with the land in question for the purpose of widening the street, unless and until it should acquire the legal right to do so in the mode prescribed by law. The court, in affirming the decree of the court below, adopted the opinion of the chancellor, who rendered the decree in the lower court. In this opinion the chancellor said: "But in this case the ground was enclosed, and there was adverse possession for over thirty-five years, acquiesced in by the city; and this would have destroyed the right of the city, if it ever existed." This case has been cited (see Wheeling v. Campbell, 12 W. Va. 36) as sustaining the doctrine that adverse possession will operate against a municipal corporation, but it is not noticed in the Virginia cases holding the contrary. See also Devaux v. Detroit, Harr. (Mich.) 98; Varick v. New York, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 53; Manchester Cotton Mills v. Manchester, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 825.

These courts, while maintaining that no encroachment by an individual, however long continued, upon property held on a public trust and dedicated

The Enclosure and Occupation of a Portion of a Street by an adjoining lot owner and those under whom he claims do not destroy the rights of the public in such strip of ground and vest the title thereto in the party so enclosing it. Brooks v. Riding, 46 Ind. 15.

No Prescription for Public Nuisance.—Since the occupation of a highway by an individual is a nuisance which no lapse of time will enable him to prescribe, such occupation, though continuing for twenty years, will not vest title thereto in the occupant, nor enable him to maintain an action of trespass against the city authorities for removing a building placed thereon by him. Driggs v. Phillips, 103 N. Y. 77. See also St. Vincent Female Orphan Asylum v. Troy, 76 N. Y. 108, 32 Am. Rep. 286; Walker v. Caywood, 31 N. Y. 51; Kellogg v. Thompson, 66 N. Y. 88.

But a simple encroachment continuing for thirty years, but not constituting a public nuisance, cannot be abated as such by the commissioners of highways. Peckham v. Henderson, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 207.

Partial Encroachment on Public Road.—Where there is a continued use of the part of the road left open, and there is nothing to authorize a presumption that any part of it had been abandoned or would not be occupied as soon as the public convenience should require, a partial encroachment by an adjacent owner by putting a fence or planting a hedge within the legal limits of the road, though continued for many years, does not constitute such adverse possession as will confer title. Fox v. Hart, 11 Ohio 414; Lane v. Kennedy, 13 Ohio St. 42; McClelland v. Miller, 28 Ohio St. 488. See also Webb v. Butler County, 52 Kan. 375; Nail, etc., Co. v. Furnace Co., 46 Ohio St. 544; State v. Wertzel, 62 Wis. 184.

The use by adjoining landowners of the sides of a public highway by sowing grain or pasturing cattle thereon does not of itself show either an abandonment of the road by the public or its adverse possession by the person so using it. Watkins v. Lynch, 71 Cal. 21.

Where a railroad company was empowered to construct its road across a public highway on condition that the usefulness of the highway would not be impaired, it was held, in an action to secure the performance of such condition, that the statute of limitations was not an available defense. Little Miami R. Co. v. Greene County, 31 Ohio St. 338.

Adverse User of Abandoned Highway.—Where a private right of way by prescription was claimed over what had formerly been a public highway, but had been abandoned and fenced up, it was held that the right of way could have been acquired only by adverse user, which must have commenced after the abandonment of the highway. Black v. O'Hara, 54 Conn. 17. See also Flick's Estate (Pa. Orph. Ct.), 6 Kulp. 329.

Where the state began the construction of a canal, but before its completion conveyed its right therein to a corporation for public purposes, and the corporation abandoned it as a highway, and abutting lot owners filled up the channel and retained exclusive and continuous possession of the land for more than twenty years, it was held that they acquired title thereto by prescription, as against one asserting a mere private proprietary interest therein. Collett v. Vanderburgh County, 119 Ind. 27.

Gate across Private Road—South Carolina.—A gate, which may be opened and shut at pleasure, erected by the owner of the land across a private road used by the public, is not such an obstruction as will extinguish the right of way, however long it may be continued. Barnwell v. Magrath, 1 McMull. (S. Car.) 174, 36 Am. Dec. 254; Bowen v. Learn, 6 Rich. (S. Car.) 298; State v. Pettis, 7 Rich. (S. Car.) 390.

Navigable River.—The plea of prescription is not available in favor of parties obstructing the navigation of a river used as a public highway. Olive v. State, 86 Ala. 88; Ingram v. Police Jury, 20 La. Ann. 226; Arundel v. McCulloch, 10 Mass. 70. See the title NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Where the Possession is Not Adverse, but under and according to the rights of a municipality, or not inconsistent with them, the rights of the latter are not barred by one not having legal title. Little Rock v. Wright, 58 Ark. 142; Hempsted v. Huffman, 84 Iowa 398; Olean v. Steyner, 135 N. Y. 341, 48 N. Y. St. Rep. 66; Kittanning Academy v. Brown, 41 Pa. St. 269; *Carter v. The mere permitting the original dedicatory to remain in possession of a public street or square, where he at the time disclaims hostility to the public, would not be a bar under the statute of limitations, even if the statute were applicable in such cases. Lee v. Mound Station, 118 Ill. 304. See also Little Rock v. Wright, 58 Ark. 142.

Continuous possession of land laid out for a street, but never completed as such, though kept up for more than twenty years by one holding no deed from any former occupant, where such possession is not inconsistent with to the public use, confers any title on the adverse occupant, but is a public nuisance, and is abatable as such,¹ yet hold that as to property of which the legal title is in the municipality, and which may be alienated by it, the municipality is subject to limitation laws to the same extent as private individuals.²

(3) Equitable Estoppel.—In cases where the circumstances would make it highly inequitable or oppressive to enforce public rights to property dedicated to the use of the public which has been encroached upon by private individuals, the courts occasionally interpose by holding the municipality estopped from doing so.³

the rights of the city, is not such adverse possession as will affect the rights of the city authorities to complete the street. Henshaw v. Hunting, 1 Gray (Mass.) 203.

The grant to a railroad of a joint and mutual use of a highway with the public cannot be set up as a bar under the statute of limitations, such use by the railroad not being adverse. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Reich, 101 Ill. 157. See also Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 47 Ind. 25.

Admission of Right of Public.—Where a person who has obstructed a highway by placing fences thereon has admitted during the period of limitations the right of the public to the land as a highway by promising to remove the fences, he cannot claim title to the land by adverse possession. Devoe v. Smeltzer, 86 Iowa 385.

Incomplete Dedication.—Where the dedication of land to the public is not made complete by acceptance, such land is not exempt from the running of the statute of limitations in favor of an adverse holder. San Francisco v. Calderwood, 31 Cal. 585, 91 Am. Dec. 542.

Illustrations—Swamp Land.—Where a person acquired claim and color of title at a tax sale to swamp land belonging to a county, in which the general public had no interest in common with the citizens of the county, and paid the taxes thereon, and remained in possession a number of years under such claim and color of title, it was held that the rights of the county in the land were barred by the statute of limitations. Piatt County v. Goodell, 97 Ill. 84.

Beach and Water-lot Property in which the city has the legal estate for a term of years may be acquired by adverse possession. San Francisco v. Straut, 84 Cal. 124.

Poor-house Tract.—Where the city granted a tract of land to the borough of Erie, Pa., reserving a certain number of acres to be selected by the commissioners for a poor-house for Erie county, it was held that adverse possession of a strip left after the location of the poor-house tract would bar the title of the borough to such strip. Evans v. Erie County, 66 Pa. St. 222. In this case the court, by Sharswood, J., said, without any reference to any former Pennsylvania decisions to the contrary: "That the statute of limitations runs against a county or other municipal corporation, we think cannot be doubted. The prerogative is that of the sovereign alone: nullum tempus occurrit reipublica. Her grantees, though artificial bodies created by her, are in the same category with natural persons."

Burying-ground.—Where land which had been dedicated by a city for burying-ground, training-ground, etc., had been adversely occupied for the statutory period of limitations, it was held that title thereto might be acquired by the adverse occupant, the dedication being a dedication to a charitable use, not for the whole public, but for a limited portion thereof only. Mowry v. Providence, 10 R. I. 52.

VI. EFFECT OF ADVERSE POSSESSION.—By adverse possession of land for the statutory period of limitation the adverse holder acquires a title in fee simple which is as perfect as a title by deed. Its legal effect is not only to bar the remedy of the owner of the paper title, but to divest his estate and vest it in the party holding adversely for the required period of time,¹ so that he may joining a highway, relying upon a survey duly made and recognized by the public as correct, made valuable improvements on his land with reference to the line thus established, and remained in open and notorious possession for more than ten years, it was held that although a resurvey made the line of his land extend several feet into the highway, so long as the improvements did not obstruct the road, nor prevent any necessary improvement thereof, the authorities might be enjoined from removing them. Crismon v. Deck, 84 Iowa 344.

In an action to recover damages resulting from the removal by the city officers of a portion of a building erected within the street lines, where it appeared that the owner had in good faith placed his building upon the apparent and reputed line of the street as it was shown to him by the city surveyor, and had from the time of the erection of the building continued for many years in the uninterrupted, exclusive, and adverse possession of the ground, it was held that the plaintiff could recover. Cincinnati v. Evans, 5 Ohio St. 594.

In Lane v. Kennedy, 13 Ohio St. 42, Peck, J., said, with reference to the case last cited: "The erection of such a building in such a place was ample notice to the city authorities that he thereby intended a permanent appropriation to his private and individual benefit of a portion of the public easement, and called for immediate and effective measures upon their part to prevent it. The case was, in this view of it, rightly determined; but as will be seen by a reference to the facts therein stated, it might with equal if not greater propriety have been placed upon the ground of an estoppel in pais on the part of the city authorities, the building having been located by the city surveyor, and upon lines previously established and built upon." See also Elster v. Springfield, 49 Ohio St. 82.

Absence of Estoppel—Illustrations.—The occupation of a public street under a baseless claim of right, by the construction of a mill-race therein, without any inducement or encouragement from the city, though continued without protest for ten years, does not estop the city from setting up a claim for the use of the street and removing the obstruction. Waterloo v. Union Mill Co., 72 Iowa 437; Davies v. Huebner, 45 Iowa 575; Bell v. Burlington, 68 Iowa 296.

Where there had not been a total cessation of the use of a street by the public, it was held that the occupancy of a small space in the street by structures of a temporary character not inconsistent with the right of the public would not estop the city from demanding the removal of such structures. Check v. Aurora, 92 Ind. 107.

Merely permitting the owner of the abutting lot to partially enclose an unopened street, and to occupy it for sixteen years, does not estop the city to insist upon its rights therein. Solberg v. Decorah, 41 Iowa 501.

Doctrine of Equitable Estoppel Rejected—Alabama.—A city or town has no alienable interest in the public streets thereof, but holds them in trust for its citizens and the public generally; and neither its acquiescence in an obstruction or private use of a street by a citizen, or laches in resorting to legal remedies to remove it, nor the statute of limitations, nor the doctrine of equitable estoppel, nor prescription, can defeat the right of the city to maintain a suit in equity to remove the obstruction. *Webb v. See, generally, the cases cited throughout this article, in most of which the question of the effect of adverse possession is directly or indirectly involved.

A clear, adverse possession for twenty years makes a title to lands which a purchaser at a judicial sale may not refuse; but he will not be required to accept title where there are circumstances that may prevent the possession from being adverse. Shriver v. Shriver, 86 N. Y. 575; Seymour v. DeLancey, Hopk. Ch. (N. Y.) 436, 14 Am. Dec. 552. See also O'Connor v. Huggins, 113 N. Y. 511.

Adverse possession for the period of limitations vests a perfect title in the occupant, even as against one of whose claim he is ignorant. Leeds v. Bender, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 315; McKinley v. Neely, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 76. See also Calhoun v. Cook, 9 Pa. St. 226.

Bed of Lake.—One who, by adverse possession, acquires title to land bordering on a non-navigable lake acquires title also to the bed of the lake up to its middle line. Ridgway v. Ludlow, 58 Ind. 248.

Cemetery Lot.—Possession for more than twenty years under a claim of title will defeat an action of ejectment for a cemetery lot. Conger v. Weyant (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 809.

Land Certificate—Texas.—The right which one has through an unlocated land certificate is an intangible thing, which vests in the true owner and cannot be adversely passed by another; and adverse possession of such certificate for more than two years before it was located does not give title to the land located by virtue of it. Barker v. Swenson, 66 Tex. 407; Boone v. Miller, 73 Tex. 557.

Dower.—Adverse possession of land for the statutory period during the life of the husband does not bar the widow's right to dower. Hart v. McCollum, 28 Ga. 478; Boling v. Clark, 83 Iowa 481; Williams v. Williams, 89 Ky. 381; Durham v. Angier, 20 Me. 242; Moore v. Frost, 3 N. H. 126. See title DOWER.

No Title by Adverse Possession—Colorado.—There being no statute in Colorado as to acquiring title by adverse possession, and the common law as it stood in the fourth year of James I. having been adopted (Gen. Stat. 170), it was held that twenty-one years' adverse possession of lands in that state was no bar to an action of ejectment by the holder of the fee-simple title. Latta v. Clifford, 45 Fed. Rep. 108. See also Mill's Ann. Stat. 1891, c. 29, § 431.

Adverse Possession of Land for a Period Less than That Prescribed by the statute of limitations confers no title. Durfee v. Peoria, etc., R. Co., 140 Ill. 435. But a prior possession, under a claim of right, short of the period which creates a bar, under the statute of limitations, will prevail over a subsequent possession when no other evidence of title appears on either side. Smoot v. Lecatt, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 590; McCall v. Pryor, 17 Ala. 533; Marston v. Rowe, 43 Ala. 271; Currier v. Gale, 9 Allen (Mass.) 522; Jackson v. Hazen, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 22; Smith v. Lorillard, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 338. See also Allen v. Rivington, 2 Saund. 111; Badger v. Lyon, 7 Ala. 564.

maintain an action of ejectment for the recovery of the land even as against the holder of such paper title who has ousted him.¹

VII. EVIDENCE—1. A Question of Law and Fact.—Adverse possession is usually a mixed question of law and fact, to be left to the jury under the instructions of the court. What state of facts will constitute adverse possession is a question of law to be decided by the court.² Whether these facts exist so that there has been an adverse possession, is a question of fact to be determined by the jury.³

Title Once Acquired by Adverse Possession cannot be Divested by Subsequent Declarations or admissions of the adverse holder. Byers v. Sheplar (Pa., 1886), 5 Cent. Rep. 293; Bruce v. Washington, 80 Tex. 368; Williams v. Rand (Tex. Civ. App., 1895), 30 S. W. Rep. 509. But see Cook v. Long, 27 Ga. 280; Long v. Young, 28 Ga. 130.

2. Burden of Proof.—The burden of proving adverse possession rests upon the party alleging it.¹

3. Clear Proof Required.—The doctrine of adverse possession is to be construed strictly, and such possession cannot be made out by inference, but only by clear and positive proof.²

Ouster.—Ouster is a question of fact, which it is the province of the jury to determine; and the facts and circumstances which go to establish the ouster ought, under the proper instructions from the court, to be submitted to the jury. Carpentier v. Mendenhall, 28 Cal. 484, 87 Am. Dec. 135; Oglesby v. Hollister, 76 Cal. 136; Cummings v. Wyman, 10 Mass. 464; Highstone v. Burdette, 54 Mich. 329, 61 Mich. 54; Washburn v. Hill, 10 Leigh (Va.) 477.

What constitutes adverse possession is a question of law; but the intention of the possession is one of fact. Magee v. Magee, 37 Miss. 138.

And possession and acts of ownership cannot be declared, as a matter of law, to amount to an adverse possession. The character of the possession is a question for the jury. *Trufant v. Ouster.—The burden of proving ouster rests upon the party alleging it. Van Bibber v. Frazier, 17 Md. 436; Highstone v. Burdette, 54 Mich. 329, 61 Mich. 54.

In Bazille v. Murray, 40 Minn. 48, it is held that the burden of proof is upon the party claiming title by adverse possession to show not only that he had once held adversely, but that the possession was maintained for the full statutory period. But see infra, this section, Presumptions of Law.

Where the plaintiff in ejectment has introduced evidence tending to prove that he was ousted within the period of limitations, the burden is shifted upon the defendant claiming by adverse possession to show that the ouster occurred so long before, that the period of limitation had run since. Highstone v. Burdette, 54 Mich. 329.

When the party claiming by adverse possession has established a prima facie case the burden of proof is shifted, and it is incumbent on the opposite party to rebut the presumption of law raised by the evidence. Bryan v. Spivey, 109 N. Car. 57. See also Staton v. Mullis, 92 N. Car. 625; Miller v. Bumgardner, 109 N. Car. 412.

In Davis v. Davis, 68 Miss. 478, it was held that, in ejectment, when the defendant recognizes the title to have originally been in the plaintiff, and claims the land merely by a parol gift followed by adverse possession, the only issue is the character of the possession, and the burden of proof is on the defendant. See also Coburn v. Hollis, 3 Met. (Mass.) 125; Rowland v. Updike, 28 N. J. L. 101.

The proof furnished by a defendant in ejectment relying on adverse possession must be sufficiently definite and certain to locate and identify the land so possessed. Hughes v. Israel, 73 Mo. 538.

The evidence to prove adverse possession need not be free from doubt. The question is to be decided by the weight of the evidence. Jones v. Hughes (Pa., 1889), 16 Atl. Rep. 849.

Slight Proof Held Sufficient.—It was held in Hawaii, that where the nature of the land in controversy rendered it difficult to get satisfactory testimony as to the occupation of it, slight proof of adverse possession was sufficient. See generally, as to the evidence held sufficient or insufficient to sustain a plea of adverse possession, as well as to the admissibility of evidence, supra, this title, What Constitutes Adverse Possession.

Actual adverse possession under a claim of right or ownership distinct from and hostile to the title of the true owner, being an open and patent fact, furnishes evidence of its own existence, and is the equivalent of actual notice of the claim under which it is held. Murray v. Hoyle, 92 Ala. 561. See also Lucy v. Tennessee, etc., R. Co., 92 Ala. 246; Knowles v. Brown, 69 Iowa 11.

Where the evidence that the defendant in an action to try title to lands had held continuous adverse possession by his tenants for the period of limitations, was uncontradicted, it was held that the court erred in holding this evidence insufficient to sustain the defense of the statute of limitations. Mims v. Rafel, 73 Tex. 300.

Where a witness swears to his possession and to repeated acts of ownership by himself extending over many years, and this testimony is before the jury unchallenged, it is proper for the court to assume the legal possession to have been testified to, and to so present the case in the charge to the jury. Staton v. Mullis, 92 N. Car. 623.

Where the evidence showed that during a period of twenty-one years a landholder and his predecessor in title had annually cut the grass on a small plat of ground in a highway, had planted a row of trees thereon, which were removed within a few years, and had occasionally piled lumber on the road against the fence, it was held that the evidence failed to establish a claim to the soil by adverse possession against the holder of the legal title. Bliss v. Johnson, 94 N. Y. 235.

The fact that the defendant in an action to recover land, and his grantors, gathered seaweed from the premises, when taken in connection with the fact that they claimed to prevent others from doing so and took it under a claim of exclusive right as owners, is some evidence of adverse possession. East Hampton v. Kirk, 84 N. Y. 215, 38 Am. Rep. 505.

Posting a Notice on land, notifying the owner that the notifier intended to hold the land, is not sufficient proof of adverse possession. Lynde v. Williams, 68 Mo. 360.

Proof of a Recorded Deed is not sufficient without proof of possession taken and held under it. Lipscomb v. McClellan, 72 Ala. 151.

Enclosure.—The mere act of enclosing the land is not evidence of adverse possession. Russell v. Davis, 38 Conn. 562. See supra, this title, Essential Elements—By Enclosure.

Lapse of Time.—Adverse possession must be proved to the satisfaction of the jury like any other fact, and cannot be assumed, as a matter of law, from mere exclusive possession, however long continued. Russell v. Davis, 38 Conn. 563; Grube v. Wells, 34 Iowa 148; Skinner v. Crawford, 54 Iowa 119; McDonald v. Fox, 20 Nev. 364. See also Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 60; Boone v. Miller, 73 Tex. 557; and supra, this title, Essential Elements—Possession must be Hostile.

An ouster or disseisin is not to be presumed from the mere fact of sole possession; but it may be proved by such possession accompanied by a notorious claim of exclusive right. Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 59; Oglesby v. Hollister, 76 Cal. 136; Miller v. Myles, 46 Cal. 535; Parker v. Proprietors, 3 Met. (Mass.) 91, 37 Am. Dec. 121.

Where the possession of one person is shown to have once been in subordination to the title of another, it will not be adjudged afterwards adverse to such title without clear and positive proof of its having distinctly become so, for every presumption is in favor of the possession continuing in the same subordination to the title. Hood v. Hood, 2 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 229.

Where Adverse Possession of Land is Once Taken under Color of Title it is presumed to continue, in the absence of proof of interruption within the period of limitations. Elyton Land Co. v. McElrath, 53 Fed. Rep. 763; Marston v. Rowe, 43 Ala. 271; Wilson v. Spring, 38 Ark. 181. See also Currier v. Gale, 9 Allen (Mass.) 522.

The Burden of Proving Abandonment or Interruption is upon the adverse party. Wilson v. Spring, 38 Ark. 181.

Title Decreed with Plaintiff—Entry by Defendant.—The subsequent possession of a defendant after the court has decreed the title to be of land for the period of limitation, apparently as owner, and such possession is not explained or otherwise accounted for, it will be presumed to have been adverse; but this presumption may be rebutted by proof that the possession in its origin was not adverse, but permissive; and sometimes the condition of the property and the circumstances accompanying the occupancy itself will rebut the presumption that it was adverse or under a claim of right.¹

5. What Evidence Admissible—Invalid Deed.—A defective or invalid deed, although insufficient to convey title, is admissible in evidence to show the character and extent of the adverse claimant's possession.²

in the plaintiff is presumed to be in subordination to the latter. Root v. Woolworth, 150 U. S. 401.

England—Entry by Second Son upon Death of Father—Presumption.—In England, it is held that where upon the death of the father the second son enters without title, his possession and entry are presumed to be for the use of the elder son, against whom the statute of limitations will not run. Dowell v. Byrne, Beat. 373; Gilbert on Tenures 28. And see Fairclaim v. Shackleton, 5 Burr. 2604; Reading v. Royston, 2 Salk. 423; Page v. Selfby, Bull. N. P. 1026.

Rep. 562.

Presumption of Ouster.—Exclusive possession by one tenant in common for a great number of years without any accounting to, or recognition of right in, his fellow commoner, or any evidence explaining why the cotenant neglected to assert his right, is evidence from which the jury may infer actual ouster and adverse possession. Doe v. Prosser, Cowp. 217; Culley v. Doe, 11 Ad. & El. 1008, 39 E. C. L. 303; Lefavour v. Homan, 3 Allen (Mass.) 354; Rickard v. Rickard, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 251; Law v. Patterson, 1 W. & S. St. 226; Doe v. Bird, 11 East 49.

Demand for and refusal of possession are not ouster, but they are such evidence as will authorize a court to find an ouster. Phelan v. Smith, 100 Cal. 158.

Where A had enclosed land and cultivated it for over twenty years, and it appeared that during this time his brother B built a house on the premises, B being a man of wealth and A in moderate circumstances, and evidence was given tending to show that B built the house because he was the owner of the land, it was held that it was competent to rebut this evidence by showing that B acquiesced in the fact that A owned the premises, and was building the house for him. Tindale v. Powell (Supreme Ct.), 34 N. Y. Supp. 659.

Where the defendant claimed title to a spring through adverse possession by himself and his grantors, it was held that parol evidence was admissible to show that at the time of the execution of the deed to the land his grantors informed him that they held under a deed in which their grantor reserved title to the spring. Hamilton v. Gray (Vt., 1895), 31 Atl. Rep. 314.

Where the plaintiff in ejectment has been in possession of the land for nearly thirty years, the fact that the land was embraced in a deed to the defendant is not sufficient to defeat the plaintiff's title. Jones v. Graham, 80 Ga. 591.

A Written Recognition of the Title of a person not in actual possession of the land, and an offer to purchase such title by the party in possession, effectually rebut the allegation of adverse possession. Miller v. Keene, 5 Watts (Pa.) 348. See also Bradford v. Guthrie, 4 Brews. (Pa.) 357.

Correspondence.—The correspondence and other transactions between the grantor of a right of way and the officers of the grantee, a railroad company, which occurred before the execution of the deeds and covenant relating to the right of way, are admissible in evidence as tending to prove permissive occupation, and to rebut the idea of adverse possession by the railroad. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Gilmer, 85 Ala. 422.

A Deed Executed by the Plaintiff Claiming by Adverse Possession conveying land to the defendant, together with oral testimony that the plaintiff held the land as the tenant of the defendant, is competent evidence to show that the possession was not adverse. Rogencamp v. Converse, 15 Neb. 105.

Offer to Purchase Title.—Where the defendant in ejectment relied on adverse possession as a defense, it was held that an instruction which in effect withdrew from the consideration of the jury evidence that the defendant while in possession offered to pay the adverse claimant for the land, thus tending to disprove the defense, was erroneous. Liggett v. Morgan, 98 Mo. 39.

2. Defective Sheriff's Deed.—Where the defendant in an action to recover land set up as a defense the adverse possession of a third party claiming under a sheriff's deed, it was held that such deed was admissible to show the extent of the adverse possession,

Record of Suit.—The record of a former suit involving title to the land in controversy is admissible as evidence of adverse possession.¹

Declarations.—The declarations of the occupant of the land are admissible to show the character of his possession, where such declarations may be regarded as res gestæ, or are made against his interest.²

although it was insufficient to convey title on account of ambiguity in the description of the land. Branch v. Baker, 70 Tex. 190.

Where the defendants in an action to try title claimed under a deed conveying a part of the land in controversy, it was held that the deed, to the extent of the land included by it, was admissible as a basis for the plea of the statute of limitations. Overand v. Menczer, 83 Tex. 122.

An Administrator's Deed, void because of the disqualification of the judge to pass upon the acts of the administrator, is a legally sufficient basis for a plea of the statute of limitations. Halbert v. Martin (Tex. Civ. App., 1895), 30 S. W. Rep. 388.

A Tax Deed, though void as a conveyance of title, is admissible as evidence of the character and extent of the possession of the party claiming by adverse possession. Oglesby v. Hollister, 76 Cal. 136; Wilson v. Atkinson, 77 Cal. 485; Murphy v. Doyle, 37 Minn. 113; Ricker v. Butler, 45 Minn. 545. See also supra, this title, Color of Title.

1. The Record of a Suit in which the real owner recovered the land from the adverse holder, is admissible to show that the possession was adverse. Faulcon v. Johnston, 102 N. Car. 264, 11 Am. St. Rep. 737.

Where a person claims title to land by adverse possession for the period of limitations, it is competent for him to show that during his occupancy he asserted ownership by bringing an action of trespass against others who attempted to enjoy the premises, and that he prosecuted the suit to final adjudication. In such case it is immaterial which way the case was decided, the only effect of the evidence being to show that he was claiming the land in dispute. Hollister v. Young, 42 Vt. 403. See also Morrison v. Chapin, 97 Mass. 72; Hickman v. Link, 97 Mo. 482.

A Judgment Roll in a forcible entry case is admissible to show adverse possession. Unger v. Roper, 53 Cal. 39. See also McCourtney v. Fortune, 57 Cal. 617; Fredericks v. Judah, 73 Cal. 604.

2. Declarations Admissible to Show Character of Possession.—Stockton v. Staples Sav. Bank, 98 Cal. 189; Cannon v. Stockmon, 36 Cal. 535, 95 Am. Dec. 205; Jackson v. Bard, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 230, 4 Am. Dec. 267; Kennedy v. Wible (Pa., 1887), 11 Atl. Rep. 98; Lochhausen v. Laughter, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 291; Webb v. Richardson, 42 Vt. 465. See also Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. (U. See, generally, the titles ADMISSIONS; DECLARATIONS; RES GESTÆ.

The declarations of a person claiming by adverse possession, made while in possession of the premises, as well as the understanding of his neighbors, are proper evidence to show the character of his claim. Kennedy v. Wible (Pa., 1887), 11 Atl. Rep. 98.

The declarations of the party claiming by adverse possession are admissible to show that his possession was continuous, and also its adverse character; and it is not necessary that they should be made on the land in dispute. Webb v. Richardson, 42 Vt. 465.

The declarations of the party in possession are admissible only when a part of the res gestæ or against the interest of the party making them. Saugatuck Cong. Soc. v. East Saugatuck School Dist., 53 Conn. 478; Seymour v. Over River School Dist. (Conn., 1885), 4 Atl. Rep. 246. In delivering the opinion of the court in these cases, Carpenter, J., said: "Possession does not receive its adverse character from the declarations of the party in possession, except when such declarations may be regarded as res gestæ. The mere declarations of a party cannot be admitted in his own favor. It follows that the mere absence of such declarations cannot be shown by the adverse party against him. A party is not bound to make public proclamation that he holds adversely. Therefore whatever he says or omits to say is a matter of no importance, unless he speaks against his interest or fails to speak when required to do so. The adverse character of the possession is ordinarily, if not always, shown by the facts of the case, and not from loose and casual declarations. Therefore the absence of such declarations has no tendency to prove that the possession is not adverse."

Declarations of Grantee Not in Possession—Tax Returns.—Declarations made by the grantee when the grantor was not present, who had never entered into possession of the land, and tax books showing that the grantee had returned the land as his property for taxation, are not admissible to show an adverse holding by the grantee. Parrott v. Baker, 82 Ga. 364.

Declarations Admissible to Show that Possession is Not Adverse.—Clements v. Wheeler, 62 Ga. 53; McNamee v. Moreland, 26 Iowa 96; Hale v. Silloway, 1 Allen (Mass.) 21; Bradford v. Guthrie, 4 Brews. (Pa.) 351; Sailor v. Hertzogg, 2 Pa. St. 182, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 259; Calhoun v. Cook, 9 Pa. St. 226; St. Clair v. Shale, 9 Pa. St. 252; Breidegam v. Hoffmaster, 61 Pa. St. 223; Leger v. Doyle, 11 Rich. (S. Car.) 109, 70 Am. Dec. 240. See also Curlee v. Smith, 91 N. Car. 172.

The declarations of the party in possession that he held as agent of another are admissible. Kirkland v. Trott, 66 Ala. 417; Lucy v. Tennessee, etc., R. Co., 92 Ala. 246.

General Reputation.—It has been held that a party claiming by adverse possession may, for the purpose of establishing his claim, introduce evidence that the land was generally understood to belong to him and was called his.¹ Some courts, however, have denied the admissibility of evidence of this nature.²

Declarations by Husband Binding on Wife.—Where husband and wife claim title by adverse possession, and the possession of the wife is the possession of the husband, the acts and declarations of the latter, although not authorized nor acquiesced in by the wife, are admissible to show that such holding was not adverse. Hurley v. Lockett, 72 Tex. 262.

Declarations by Alleged Tenants.—The declarations of the occupants of land are admissible against parties claiming by adverse possession where there is no other evidence that such occupants held as tenants of the adverse claimants than the general statement of the latter that they were in possession by agents and tenants. Hurley v. Lockett, 72 Tex. 262.

Declarations by Infant Son against Father Claiming Adversely.—Declarations by a boy nine years old, who was a devisee of the former owner of the land, and who lived with his father, the adverse holder, to the effect that he was the owner of the land on which they lived, were held inadmissible to break the continuity of the adverse possession of the father. Douglas v. Irvine, 126 Pa. St. 643.

Landlord's Disclaimer Admissible against Tenant.—Where the defendant in an action of ejectment set up as a defense the adverse possession of his landlord, it was held competent to show that in a prior ejectment suit the landlord disclaimed any title to the premises. Dillon v. Center, 68 Cal. 561.

2. Possession cannot be Established by Evidence of General Reputation in the community, nor by "what was understood and recognized," nor by the fact that a witness did not know of any adverse possession, nor by the declarations of the grantee in a deed that the property was his, such declarations not being admissible, save to characterize a possession otherwise proved. Walker v. Hughes, 90 Ga. 52.

Evidence that the land in dispute was formerly called the "Barney Crocker lot" was held inadmissible for the purpose of showing that the title was reputed to be in Barney Crocker, under whom the claimants sought to establish their title by adverse possession. Howland v. Crocker, 7 Allen (Mass.) 153, distinguishing Green v. Chelsea, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 71. See also Woodstock Iron Co. v. Roberts, 87 Ala. 436.

Other Evidence Admitted—The Testimony of

Witnesses who have been living on the grounds and are familiar with the character of the fences, etc., is admissible to show the character of the possession. Silverer v. Hansen, 77 Cal. 579.

When the character of the possession is in issue it cannot be proved by general reputation, nor by the opinion of individuals as to the actual condition of the property; but a witness may testify that a party went into the possession of lands, "and thereafter controlled them," the control of the property not being the opinion of the witness, but a collective statement of his conclusion of fact. Woodstock Iron Co. v. Roberts, 87 Ala. 436. See also Abbett v. Page, 92 Ala. 571.

The testimony of a witness that a certain person was in possession of lands is the statement of a simple fact, and as such is admissible on an issue of adverse possession as evidence of actual possession and occupation. Bryan v. Spivey, 109 N. Car. 57.

Evidence is admissible to show that a person, since dead, was in occupation. Lick v. Diaz, 44 Cal. 479.

real-estate agent, for the land sold, fifty dollars, "in full for all trouble in showing and advertising said land." The trial court instructed that "the plaintiff could advertise the land mentioned in the contract, introduced in evidence, within the meaning and intent of said contract, by showing the same to prospective buyers and trying to sell same, and describing same to those who would likely buy; and to comply with the terms of said contract it was not necessary to advertise the same in a newspaper, unless the word advertise among real-estate men in the neighborhood of said land was generally understood and known to contemplate such advertisement." This was held to be error. The Appellate Court said: "Language and terms employed in a contract in general are to be construed in accordance with the general understanding and common acceptance of the terms and language used therein, and we think that the term advertising as used in the contract, taken in connection with the subject matter and other conditions thereof, should be construed to mean to publish a notice in some newspaper in the usual way that such notices are advertised. The word advertise is defined by Webster to mean 'to publish notice of,' 'to publish a written or printed account of.'" Bouvier defines advertisement to mean 'a notice published in handbills or a newspaper.'"

1. Bouv. Law Dict., followed in Darst v. Doom, 38 Ill. App. 400.

Constable's Notice of Sale.—In Com. v. Johnson, 3 Pa. Dist. Rep. 222, it was held that the Pennsylvania act making it a misdemeanor to mutilate, destroy, tear down, or remove any "show-bills, play-bills, posters or programmes, or other advertisements," did not apply to a constable's notice of sale. The court based its decision upon the principle that the term advertisements must be read in connection with the other words of the statute, and was evidently intended to apply to advertisements of a like character with those already enumerated.

Lottery Laws.—In Com. v. Hooper, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 42, it was held that a signboard erected at a person's place of business, giving notice that lottery tickets were for sale, was an advertisement within the meaning of the Massachusetts statute against lotteries. And see also the title LOTTERIES.

Advertisement of Reward.—See the title REWARDS.

Public Sales.—See SHERIFF'S SALES; JUDICIAL SALES; TAX SALES.

General Principles.—It may be well to state generally, first, that advertisements should be sufficiently full and precise in their terms, as to time, persons, place, and description, to identify the subject matter, notice of which is intended to be given; and, second, that an advertisement cut from a newspaper is not a handbill. Clark v. Chambers, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 222. See also the titles SHERIFF'S SALES; JUDICIAL SALES; TAX SALES; NOTICE. Nor is a mere advertising sheet a newspaper, for the purposes of advertisement required by law. Tyler v. Bowen, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 225. See also the title NEWSPAPERS.

Where an advertisement is directed to be inserted in a particular paper, the course pointed out must be pursued, and all other local requirements must likewise be complied with. If not otherwise expressly provided, the paper is to be one printed in the English language. Road in Upper Hanover, 44 Pa. St. 277; Tyler v. Bowen, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 225. And see the titles NOTICE; SHERIFF'S SALES; JUDICIAL SALES; TAX SALES; STATUTES.

2. In Norcum v. D'Ench, 17 Mo. 99, power was given by the testator to his widow to sell and dispose of his property with the advice and consent of the executor. It was held that the refusal of the executor to give his consent did not prevent a valid sale; advice meant general advice, and not consent to each act; and therefore a court of equity would on application authorize the sale.

I. LIABILITY OF ATTORNEY—1. To Client—a. FOR IMPROPER OR ERRONEOUS ADVICE—Attorney's Undertaking.—In rendering to a client an opinion or advice as to any matter concerning which he is consulted, the undertaking of the attorney is that he possesses the requisite knowledge and experience to advise in such matters, and that he will use reasonable care and skill in investigating the law and the facts, and in forming his opinion therefrom; and for a failure to comply with the undertaking in any of these respects he is liable to his client for the resulting damages.¹

Question of Fact for the Jury.—In Pinkston v. Arrington, 98 Ala. 489, it was held that whether or not due care had been exercised by an attorney was a question of fact for the jury.

No Warranty of Correctness of Opinion.—The undertaking extends no further, however, and the attorney cannot be held to warrant the correctness of his opinions or advice.¹

Attorney may Not Profit by His Erroneous Advice.—Where an attorney ignorantly and mistakenly, though honestly, gives advice to his client, and then by a negotiation entered into, or otherwise, gains an advantage over his client in respect to the property which is the subject matter of the advice, he will be looked upon as the agent or trustee of the client, and will not be allowed to profit by his own mistake or ignorance.²

Where the Advice is Fraudulent.—Similarly, where an attorney deceives his client by false advice, or knowingly permits him to be deceived by the false advice of others, he violates his duty, and will not be permitted to avail himself of a negotiation entered into under such circumstances.³

Erroneous Opinion as to Sufficiency of Security.—In Howell v. Young, 5 B. & C. 259, 11 E. C. L. 219, an attorney was employed to ascertain whether certain mortgages were a sufficient security for a loan of three thousand dollars, and falsely informed his client that they were. It was held in an action against the attorney that the client might recover at once for all the probable loss he was likely to sustain from the invalidating of the security.

Ignorance of Change of Statute.—The estate of an attorney is liable after his death for damages to a client from erroneous advice given in a case in ignorance of the recent change of the statute applicable. A. B.'s Estate, Tuck. (N. Y.) 247.

Advising Client Not to Answer Questions on a Reference.—In Gihon v. Albert, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 278, it was held that if the counsel has advised the client not to answer a question put to him under an order of reference where there is no real doubt as to its propriety or where an answer cannot injure the client if he is honest, the counsel will be liable for damages resulting from such advice.

Evidence—Opinions.—In Cochrane v. Little, 71 Md. 323, an action against an attorney for giving improper advice, it was held proper to admit the testimony of other lawyers as to whether or not in their opinion the advice given by defendant was such as a prudent and careful lawyer of ordinary capacity and intelligence would or ought to have given under the circumstances; it would be otherwise, however, as to a question the object of which was to elicit witness's opinion of the extent of the client's knowledge of law on certain points.

Where Question Submitted to Attorney has Not been Passed upon by Supreme Court.—Thus where an attorney, before the Supreme Court of the state had decided that a mortgage executed by a husband and wife upon land held by them as tenants by entireties was void as to both of them, advised his clients that such a mortgage was good, there was no such mistake as to render him liable in damages. Citizens' Loan Fund, etc., Assoc. v. Friedley, 123 Ind. 143, 18 Am. St. Rep. 320.

In Bowman v. Tallman, 40 How. Pr. (N. Y. Ct. App.) 1, it was held that where the advice given depends upon the construction of a will and also upon the application of a statute, no authoritative interpretation of which had been given by the courts, an error in the advice is not such negligence as to deprive the attorney of his right to compensation.

A Mere Error of Judgment upon a Controverted Point of Law has been held to be no ground for holding the attorney liable for damages resulting therefrom, no evidence of negligence appearing. Mowill v. Graham, 27 Tex. 646.

In Bulkley v. Wilford, 2 Cl. & F. 177, Lord Eldon said: "Whether you meant fraud, whether you knew that you were the heir at law of the testator or not, you who have been wanting in what I conceive to be the duty of an attorney, if it happens that you get an advantage by that neglect, you shall not hold that advantage, but you shall be a trustee of the property for the benefit of that person who would have remained entitled to it if you had known what you ought as an attorney to have known; and not knowing it, because you ought to have known it, you shall not take advantage of your own ignorance; for I carry it so far, you shall not take advantage of your own ignorance. It is too dangerous to the interests of mankind that those who are bound to advise, and who being bound to advise ought to be able to give sound and sufficient advice—it is too dangerous to allow that they shall ever take advantage of their own ignorance, of their own professional ignorance, to the prejudice of others."

An Attorney Who Advises a Devise of Property to Himself on pretense that he will make use of it for another, while intending nevertheless to appropriate it for his own use, is guilty of a gross fraud and breach of confidence, and will be held liable. Hooker v. Axford, 33 Mich. 453.

6. FOR FAILURE TO ADVISE.—An attorney will be held liable in damages to his client where he is guilty of neglect or want of skill in failing to advise him concerning matters which come within his duties as attorney.¹

2. To Third Persons.—In addition to his liability to his client, an attorney may become liable to an action by a third party for advising the commission of a wrongful act against the latter.²

3. For Contempt in Giving Improper Advice.—An attorney is liable to fine in giving advice which amounts to contempt of court.³ Where, however, he has

Sale by Client to Attorney—Duty to Advise.—

It is well settled that an attorney cannot, in any case, sustain a purchase from his client without showing that he communicated to him disinterested advice and information necessary for him to form a correct judgment as to the real value of the subject of the purchase and as to the propriety of selling for the price offered. Rogers v. Marshall, 3 McCrary (U. S.) 76; White v. Whaley, 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 327; Evans v. Ellis, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 640; Howell v. Ransom, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 538. See also Montesquieu v. Sandys, 18 Ves. Jr. 308; Holman v. Loynes, 18 Jur. 839; Rhodes v. Bate, L. R. 1 Ch. 252.

See the titles ATTORNEY AND CLIENT; UNDUE INFLUENCE.

Thus an Attorney Who Purchases an Interest in a Judgment and obtains a power of attorney to collect stands in a relation of trust and confidence to the party owning the judgment. In order to recover on the contract he must prove that he took no advantage, but gave to his client all the information he possessed or could obtain on the subject, and advised him as he would have done in relation to a third person offering to become a purchaser. White v. Whaley, 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 327.

Conveyance to Defraud Creditor.—A conveyance intended by both parties to hinder and delay the creditors of the grantor cannot, even as against the latter, be sustained in favor of the grantee or his assignee with notice, by reason of the fact that the grantee was the attorney and counsel of the grantor, and as such advised and received the conveyance. Attorney and client, when parties to such a transaction, are not considered in pari delicto, but the client will be relieved if it can be done without injury to an innocent purchaser. Goodenough v. Spencer, 15 Abb. Pr., N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 248.

Statutory Liability to Treble Damages.—In Looff v. Lawton, 97 N. Y. 478, it was held that the provision of the Revised Statute (2 New York Rev. Stat. 97, § 68) making an attorney "who shall be guilty of any deceit or collusion * * * with intent to deceive the court or any party liable for treble damages" has reference to a suit pending, and does not include a transaction between an attorney and his client before proceedings have been commenced or an action brought.

Unlicensed Attorney.—In Freelove v. Cole, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 318, it was held that the rule, as stated in the text, applies to an unlicensed attorney.

1. In Jamison v. Weaver, 81 Iowa 212, it was held that it is part of an attorney's duty, employed to prosecute an appeal to final decision, to advise his client concerning the expenses necessary in the prosecution, and that he is liable in damages for failure to perform such duty.

In Cohn v. Heusner (C. Pl.), 30 N. Y. Supp. 244, it was held that an attorney who is employed merely to examine title to property on the security of which the client contemplates advancing money, or to prepare the necessary legal documents, is not chargeable with neglect of duty in failing to advise his client as to the value of the security, such duty not belonging to the profession.

2. Revill v. Pettit, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 314; Peck v. Chouteau, 91 Mo. 138, 60 Am. Rep. 236; Peckinbaugh v. Quillin, 12 Neb. 586.

Advising Officer to Make a Wrongful Attachment.—In Peckinbaugh v. Quillin, 12 Neb. 586, where an attorney in an attachment suit, in addition to his ordinary duties in suing out the writ, specially advised and directed the legal seizure of property and assisted in its conversion by being present at the sale and bidding off portions of it for his client, it was held that his liability was equal to that of the officer by whom the seizure and sale were made.

Advising Justice of the Peace to Do Wrongful Act.—Where an attorney advised the justice of the peace to act alone in an examining court and commit to jail one charged with a felony, it was held that the attorney was liable in an action by the party committed. Revill v. Pettit, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 314.

3. Reynolds v. Parkes, 2 Dem. (N. Y.) 399. See also Wells v. Com., 21 Gratt. (Va.) 500.

In Reynolds v. Parkes, 2 Dem. (N. Y.) 399, where a person attended before a referee, though not subpoenaed, for the purpose of making a deposition in behalf of the respondent in a certain proceeding, accompanied by one claiming to be counsel for the witness and for the petitioner, and submitted to be sworn, and thereafter, upon the counsel being directed to retire, the witness, by his advice, though directed to remain, retired with him and refused to testify, it was held that the counsel was guilty of contempt of court.

Advice Held Not to Constitute Contempt.—A., being indicted for an assault and battery and bound by recognizance to answer the charge, was advised by his attorney that if he, A., could not procure a continuance of the cause on affidavit, "he then could escape and forfeit his recognizance, which would work a continuance of said cause until the next term at a trifling cost." It was held that the attorney was not guilty of contempt. Ingle v. State, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 574.

acted honestly and in good faith in giving such advice, though he may have erred in judgment, he is not liable.¹

II. THE ADVICE A PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION.—The advice which an attorney gives to his client is a privileged communication, which the law will not permit the attorney,² nor compel the client,³ to disclose. Thus, an attorney when called as a witness at a trial cannot be permitted or compelled to produce one of his client's letters and testify as to his own reply to it.⁴

Justice Requires such a Rule, for, otherwise, no man would dare to consult a professional adviser with a view to his defense or the enforcement of his rights.⁵

Waiver by Client.—This privilege, however, may be waived by the client, in which case he⁶ or his attorney⁷ may testify as to the advice given.

III. THE ADVICE AS A DEFENSE—1. To Clients Generally—a. IN ACTIONS GENERALLY—Violation of Law.—It is a general rule that the advice of counsel furnishes no excuse to the client for the violation of law, and cannot be relied upon as a defense in either civil⁸ or criminal⁹ actions.

1. Wells v. Com., 21 Gratt. (Va.) 500. In this case, Anderson, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "An attorney, then, who would corruptly conspire with his client to obstruct the due administration of the law and to bring the authority of a court of justice into contempt by resisting and obstructing the execution of its lawful decrees, by whatever contrivance, even though it should be by procuring the interference of another court which had no appellate or supervisory power, or jurisdiction of the subject matter of the suit, in abuse of its powers, to enjoin and inhibit the officers of said court and other persons from the execution or performance of said decrees, is at least as guilty of an offense against public justice and of a contempt of court as his client, and as justly liable to summary punishment. But where, as I have said, the attorney has acted in good faith, although he may have erred in judgment, he is not liable. To vindicate his conduct, it is not necessary to be shown that he was right in his opinions, but it is necessary to be shown that he was acting in good faith for what he believed to be the interest of his client, and not from disrespect to the court or from a design to oust it from its lawful jurisdiction."¹⁰

2. Bluck v. Galsworthy, 7 Jur. N. S. 91; Higbee v. Dresser, 103 Mass. 523. See also Lengsfeld v. Richardson, 52 Miss. 443. Compare Dunn v. Amos, 14 Wis. 115.

3. State v. White, 19 Kan. 445, 27 Am. Rep. 137.

Production of Documents Containing Legal Advice.—In Garland v. Scott, 3 Sim. 396, it was held that the court will not order a defendant to produce letters of his solicitor containing legal advice.

4. Higbee v. Dresser, 103 Mass. 523.

5. State v. White, 19 Kan. 445, 27 Am. Rep. 137.

6. Passmore v. Passmore, 50 Mich. 626, 45 Am. Rep. 62.

7. Upon the trial of one indicted for perjury in falsely swearing respecting the existence of a partnership, it was held that the attorney whom the defendant had consulted respecting the partnership might be introduced for the defendant and asked what advice he gave in the matter about which the defendant was charged to have sworn falsely. State v. McKinney, 42 Iowa 205.

8. Action Ex contractu.—Where an officer was sued on his official bond for certain breaches of duty, it was held that it was no defense that he acted under the legal opinion of the attorney-general of the state. Dodd v. State, 18 Ind. 56. See Farmers', etc., F. Ins. Co. v. Bowen, 40 Mich. 147.

Actions Ex delicto.—The advice of counsel is, in general, admissible to rebut the presumption of wantonness and malice in actions ex delicto, and may be considered by way of mitigation of exemplary damages. Thus in Cochrane v. Tuttle, 75 Ill. 361, where, in an action on the case by the plaintiff for being wrongfully put out of a house, a portion of which she claimed to have rented from the defendant, there being no force or violence used, the defendant offered to prove that he acted upon competent legal advice in what he did, which the court refused to admit, it was held that the proof was admissible, not in bar of the action or in mitigation of actual damages, but in mitigation of any exemplary damages, and that the court erred in refusing to admit it. See also Green v. Jones, 39 Ga. 522; Jasper v. Purnell, 67 Ill. 361.

But in Order to Render the Advice of Counsel Admissible Evidence in Mitigation of Damages it must appear that the advice was given upon a full and fair statement of the facts, or of such of them as were material to the question on which counsel was consulted. Shores v. Brooks, 81 Ga. 468, 12 Am. St. Rep. 332. See also Jackson v. Mather, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 301.

For further discussion of this question see infra, this title, False Arrest and Imprisonment.

For instances where the advice of counsel constitutes a complete defense to an action ex delicto, see infra, this title, Libel and Slander; Malicious Prosecution.

9. Criminal Actions.—Barnett v. State, 89 Ala. 170; Forwood v. State, 49 Md. 531; People v. Kane (Supreme Ct.), 15 N. Y. Supp. 613; Weston v. Com., 111 Pa. St. 251.

b. CONTEMPT—General Rule—Advice of Counsel No Justification.—The fact that a party, in committing an act of contempt, acted under the erroneous advice of counsel will, in general, afford him no justification.¹

Qualifications.—In certain cases, however, the advice of counsel may be a palliation to some extent of the offense;² but to what extent must depend upon the character of the advice and the circumstances under which it was given.³ Thus, where an act of contempt appears to be not at all wilful or defiant, but committed merely in the exercise of a supposed right, under advice taken and given in good faith, it does not deserve punishment beyond the requirement to pay an amount sufficient to compensate the adverse party for the injuries sustained, and to meet the necessary expenses of the proceedings.⁴

c. PERJURY—Where the Question is One of Fact.—On a prosecution for perjury, where the matter testified to is purely one of fact and involves no question of law, the defendant cannot be permitted to prove that he acted under legal advice, especially when it does not appear that he truly stated the facts to the attorney.⁵

Where a Question of Law is Involved.—But when the truth or falsity of the matter charged as being wilfully and corruptly false is a mixed question of law and

In Barnett v. State, 89 Ala. 165, McClellan, J., said: "The general rule unquestionably is, that the advice of counsel can afford no protection against the punitive consequences of criminal acts. Whatever the rights of a defendant are in respect to the doing of the act charged, they are available to him in defense whether he was advised of them or not, and no amount of assurance, even from those learned in the law, of the existence of rights in the premises, which in point of fact do not exist, can justify or excuse an act otherwise criminal. The giving of such assurance or advice neither increases nor diminishes criminality in any degree, and evidence of it is therefore irrelevant."

On the Trial of One Charged with Murder testimony that the defendant had consulted counsel, and had by counsel been advised that he had a legal right to maintain possession of the land, in a dispute about which the alleged murder took place, was held not to be admissible in evidence. Weston v. Com., 111 Pa. St. 257.

Two factions were each endeavoring to obtain control of the affairs of a company, and one of them obtained an injunction to restrain the defendant from attempting to act as business manager of the company or to enter on its premises for that purpose. Afterwards defendant was elected business manager of the company by his faction, and was advised by counsel that he was entitled to take possession of the office of the company and administer its affairs, which he did by entering the office with his party, ejecting the office boy, procuring the safe to be opened, and discharging an employee of the company. This was held to be a violation of the injunction order, whether his election was or was not valid, but it was also held that, having acted under the advice of counsel and no loss or damage to the company having accrued therefrom, defendant's term of imprisonment should be reduced from thirty to ten days. Ciancimino's Towing, etc., Co. v. Ciancimino (Supreme Ct.), 17 N. Y. Supp. 125.

3. People v. Compton, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 512; State v. Harper's Ferry Bridge Co., 16 W. Va. 864.

In People v. Compton, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 512, it was held that when a manifest contempt is proved, a statement in general words that the guilty party acted under the advice of counsel will never be accepted by the court as excusing or palliating his misconduct, and that to enable the court to regard such advice the names of the counsel, the information that was laid before them, and the exact import of their advice must be fully stated.

fact, if the facts are fully and in good faith laid before counsel and upon them he advises as a matter of law that a certain statement may be made which will be the truth, and, acting upon this advice, the client swears to the statement, believing he has been correctly advised, it cannot be said that this oath is wilfully and corruptly false, and hence the charge of perjury cannot be predicated upon it.¹

d. LIBEL AND SLANDER.—In an action for libel or slander the fact that the defendant acted upon the advice of counsel, given upon a full and fair statement of the facts, is to be considered in determining whether or not he acted maliciously.²

e. FALSE ARREST AND IMPRISONMENT.—While the advice of counsel cannot be a complete defense to an action for false arrest or imprisonment, yet, when counsel has been consulted in good faith and has been correctly informed of the facts, his advice will be a circumstance to be taken into consideration by way of mitigating the damages to which his client should be subjected.³

f. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.—(1) General Rule.—In an action for malicious prosecution, if it appears that the defendant laid before counsel a full and fair statement of the facts relevant to the prosecution, and acted honestly and in good faith upon the advice given him, however erroneous it may have been, there will be sufficient evidence of probable cause, the idea of malice will be negatived, and the action cannot be maintained.⁴

Withholding Certain Items from Bankrupt's Schedule.—In U. S. v. Conner, 3 McLean (U. S.) 574, it was held that where a bankrupt having submitted the facts in regard to his property fairly to his counsel, and acting under the advice thus given, withholds certain items from his schedule, he is not guilty of perjury. In giving the opinion in this case the court said: "A bankrupt is bound to exhibit a true schedule of all his property, and if he fails to do this, wilfully and fraudulently, he is guilty of perjury; but if he, being unacquainted with the requirements of the law, shall be advised by his counsel, after the facts have been fully stated to him, that certain items of property are not required to be stated on his schedule, and he omits them, he is not guilty of perjury. He acts fairly in submitting the facts to his counsel, and by acting under his advice he shows a desire to conform to the law."

In Walter v. Sample, 25 Pa. St. 275, Woodward, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Professors of the law are the proper advisers of men in doubtful circumstances, and their advice, when fairly obtained, exempts the party who acts upon it from the imputation of proceeding maliciously and without probable cause. It may be erroneous, but the client is not responsible for the error. He is not the insurer of his lawyer. Whether the facts amount to probable cause is the very question submitted to counsel in such cases, and when the client is instructed that they do he has taken all the precaution demanded of a good citizen."

Misnomer of the Offense in a Complaint.—In Bartlett v. Brown, 6 R. I. 37, 75 Am. Dec. 675, it was held that where the prosecutor, a laboring man, truly stated his cause of complaint to a counsellor at law for his advice and direction, and, pursuing that advice, signed and swore to a complaint prepared for him by the counsel under a misrecollection of the statute, the misnomer of the offense in the complaint would not support an action for malicious prosecution, even in case of the most express malice in prosecuting, inasmuch as there was probable cause for the prosecution in the form in which it was made.

In Mitigation of Damages.—In an action for malicious prosecution it has been held that where advice was taken and followed in good faith the defendant, while he might be liable to actual damages if the advice was bad, was not liable to exemplary damages. Chambers v. Upton, 34 Fed. Rep. 473.

Wrongful Attachment.—Also in an action to recover exemplary damages for wilfully suing out a wrongful attachment it has been held that the advice of counsel might be a defense against exemplary damages, but not against actual damages. Raver v. Webster, 3 Iowa 502a, 66 Am. Dec. 96.

Georgia Code.—It has been held that under the Georgia Code the advice of counsel, though of itself no protection to the defendant in a suit for malicious prosecution, is nevertheless a circumstance tending to show the absence of malice, and the existence of probable cause, and should go before the jury as a circumstance in the case which, when weighed with other circumstances, may, according to the evidence of each case, relieve the defendant, or make the damages nominal, or mitigate them. Fox v. Davis, 55 Ga. 298.

In delivering the opinion of the court in Barhight v. Tammany, 158 Pa. St. 545, McCollum, J., said: "Any evasion or concealment by the prosecutor in his statement of the case to his counsel, or any failure on his part to make a full disclosure of all the facts within his knowledge concerning it, will deprive him of the protection which advice founded upon an honest, fair, and full presentation of the case affords. An incomplete and unfair statement warrants an inference that the advice was sought as a mere cover for the prosecution, and an opinion based on such statement is an unsatisfactory reply to evidence of malice and want of probable cause. The legal advice which constitutes a defense to an action for malicious prosecution must rest on an honest and full presentation to counsel of all the facts within the knowledge of the prosecutor, or which he has reasonable ground for believing he is able to prove."

Omission of Material Facts.—In an action for malicious prosecution of special proceedings for an order of arrest and false imprisonment, it appeared that defendant was a member of a firm doing business as photographers in New York, and also of a like firm in Philadelphia; that the firms divided territory between themselves, and were not to encroach upon that of each other; that the New York firm was to have Connecticut, and appointed plaintiff agent for that territory, agreeing that he should have the exclusive right there and certain commissions, and that he should collect all moneys and turn them over weekly with a statement of receipts and disbursements; that this agreement was subsequently changed so that the firm were to charge him with what was furnished him at agreed prices, he to pay his own expenses and make collections at his own risk; that on settlement there was an ultimate balance against plaintiff at the agreed rates, which he refused to pay, claiming damages in consequence of an agent of the other firm having encroached upon his territory; that thereupon, on the ground that this balance was received by plaintiff in a fiduciary capacity, an order of arrest was procured by defendant, under which plaintiff was arrested on Friday, and committed to jail, but was released on the following Monday, the order having been dissolved. It was held that, defendant having admitted that he did not, at the time of applying for the order of arrest, lay before his counsel the facts with reference to the doing of business by the agent of the Philadelphia firm in plaintiff's territory, or the change from selling for the New York firm to purchasing from them, the advice of counsel was not a shelter from liability. Cuthbert v. Galloway, 35 Fed. Rep. 467.

In Roy v. Goings, 112 Ill. 656, a mortgagor of crops grown by him, before the maturity of the debt, gathered a load of beans from the land and took them to his residence, about two miles distant, to thresh them. The mortgagee, on learning this, posted notices for a foreclosure of the mortgage, and forbade the mortgagor removing any more of the crops, and threatened to have him arrested if he did. The latter, claiming he had the right to gather the beans, and denying the mortgagee's right to foreclose, gathered another load of beans, in open day, under claim of right, whereupon the mortgagee had him arrested and imprisoned on a charge of larceny. In an action for malicious prosecution by the mortgagor against the mortgagee the latter sought to justify under the advice of the state's attorney. It was held that he should have disclosed to the attorney, whose advice he sought, that the plaintiff took the property openly, in daylight, as anyone would his own property, and that plaintiff had insisted that the mortgagee had no right to foreclose, and that he had claimed the right to gather and preserve the beans in order to protect himself, as he had been advised he might do.

In an action for malicious prosecution it was shown that the plaintiff, before the prosecution, requested the defendant to examine the supposed stolen property in his possession, which the defendant refused to do. This was a material fact, under the circumstances, which should have been stated when the defendant sought legal advice with respect to the prosecution. Norrell v. Vogel, 39 Minn. 107.

False Statements.—The plaintiff found the cows of the defendant in his garden, and sent a messenger to defendant requesting him to come and pay the damage done by the cows, and to take them away. The defendant thereupon went to an attorney and told him that he had heard that the plaintiff had his cows, and had secreted them, and that he could not find them, and the attorney advised the defendant to cause the arrest of the plaintiff for larceny, which was done. It was held that the defendant misrepresented the facts to his attorney, and was not protected by the advice of counsel. Wild v. Odell, 56 Cal. 136.

There need Not be Gross Negligence.—If the person seeking such advice purposely, carelessly, or negligently fails to give such full statement, the advice will not avail as a defense. It need not amount to gross negligence. Scotten v. Longfellow, 40 Ind. 24.

Proof that Counsel Knew All the Facts.—In order to avail himself of the defense of advice of counsel it devolves upon the defendant to prove that, before receiving the advice, he had fairly and fully communicated to his counsel, or at least that his counsel knew, all the facts within the defendant's knowledge tending to prove or disprove probable cause for the prosecution. *Dawson v. facts were immaterial.¹

After-acquired Knowledge Not Communicated.—Where the client receives advice favorable to the prosecution, and subsequently acquires material information which does not warrant the prosecution, and which is not communicated to the counsel for his further opinion, then the advice previously given can be no protection.²

Requisites as to Evidence of Facts Communicated.—Evidence to establish the defense must show that facts and circumstances were communicated to the counsel, and not conclusions drawn from those facts and circumstances; since the inference as to what circumstances will constitute a proper disclosure is for the jury, and not for the witness, to draw.³

(3) Requisites as to the Advice Given.—The Statement that the Plaintiff was Liable to Prosecution Sufficient.—It is sufficient if the attorney stated to the client that the plaintiff in the action was liable to prosecution,⁴ and it is improper to limit the inquiry as to whether the counsel advised the suit to be brought.⁵

Advice must be Given before Prosecution.—To constitute a defense the advice must be given before prosecution, and not afterwards.⁶

(4) Qualifications of the Attorney.—To entitle the defendant to the benefit of the rule making the advice of counsel a defense in an action for malicious prosecution, it is necessary for the counsel selected to be a licensed attorney,⁷

Doctrine Questioned.—In Johnson v. Miller, 69 Iowa 562, 58 Am. Rep. 231, it was held that one who seeks advice of counsel about the commencement of a criminal prosecution must, in order that he may be protected from liability, on the ground of such advice, in an action for malicious prosecution, make known to counsel a full and fair statement of all the facts known to him. If he has reasonable ground to believe that facts exist which would tend to exculpate the accused, he must either make further inquiry in relation to such facts and communicate to counsel the information obtained, or else inform counsel of his belief of their existence, in order that counsel may investigate, and take the information gained into account in forming an opinion. But he is not required to do more than this, and an instruction that defendants were bound to submit to counsel all facts which they could have ascertained by reasonable diligence was held to be erroneous.

Examination by Prosecutor into Character of His Informant Unnecessary.—It was held in Jordan v. Alabama G. S. R. Co., 81 Ala. 220, that the advice of counsel on a full and fair statement of the facts does not cease to be a defense because the prosecutor could, by the exercise of reasonable diligence and prudence, have learned that those on whose information he acted were of bad character for truth and veracity, there having been no known facts and circumstances calculated to arouse suspicion as to the truth of their statements.

In Kansas if, after the filing of an original complaint, those who instituted the prosecution learned facts showing the innocence of the accused, they are not liable for malicious prosecution for merely withholding such information from the prosecuting attorney, but they are liable if they still insist upon, urge, and demand prosecution. 6. Blunt v. Little, 3 Mason (U. S.) 102. In delivering the opinion of the court in this case, Story, J., said: "I think it ought not to be permitted to any person, after the commencement of his suit, to repel the imputation of malice or prove probable cause by subsequently getting the opinions of counsel in his favor. What would this be but to encourage unfounded suits, and to enable parties to get rid of the effects of their own misconduct by matters ex post facto? What constitutes probable cause of action is, when the facts are given, matter of law upon which the court are to decide, and it cannot be proper to introduce certificates of counsel to establish what the law is. If the party acts upon the advice of counsel, however mistaken, in commencing his suit, and is honestly misled, there is some ground to excuse his act. But when he has gone on without such advice and in point of law has no probable cause of action, it is, I think, conceding too much to allow the subsequent opinion of counsel to change the legal rights of the parties."

Where Person Advising Holds Himself out as Attorney—Mitigation of Damages.—In Murphy v. Larson, 77 Ill. 175, it was held that it was not sufficient as a bar to an action for malicious prosecution that the person advising the prosecution held himself out as an attorney at law, and was believed to be such by the party consulting him, when in reality he was not. It was at the same time held, however, that where a party before instituting a criminal prosecution in good faith consults one whom he supposes a licensed attorney and learned in the law and competent to advise, but who in fact is not licensed, and acts upon his advice, the advice so given is competent evidence in an action for malicious prosecution on the question of malice and in reduction of any exemplary damages that may be claimed, but not in bar of the action or in reduction of any actual damages.

Attorney Not in Actual Practice.—In an action for the wrongful suing out of an attachment it was held that the plaintiff in the attachment might show that he consulted an attorney by profession, but not in actual practice, and that he advised the suing out of the attachment. Charles City Plow, etc., Co. v. Jones, 71 Iowa 235.

Private Counsel.—Whether the advice of private counsel, instead of the district attorney, is a complete defense, has been a question in Wisconsin. Plath v. Braunsdorff, 40 Wis. 112.

1. Murphy v. Larson, 77 Ill. 172; Roy v. Goings, 112 Ill. 656; Davie v. Wisher, 72 Ill. 262; Beidler v. Beirnaert, 25 Ill. App. 422; Walter v. Sample, 25 Pa. St. 275; Newton v. Weaver, 13 R. I. 616.

Where the proof showed that the criminal prosecution was instituted on the advice of the state's attorney, and also that such attorney was habitually intemperate, the jury were instructed that to entitle the defendant to protect himself on account of the advice of an attorney he must have communicated the facts within his knowledge, etc., to a respectable attorney in good standing, and have acted in good faith on his advice. It was held that there was no error in the instructions in requiring the communication to have been made to an attorney in good standing, the court not being prepared to hold that an attorney is in good standing merely because of his holding a commission as state's attorney. Roy v. Goings, 112 Ill. 656.

Wisconsin.—Sutton v. McConnell, 46 Wis. 269.

In Olmstead v. Partridge, 16 Gray (Mass.) 381, Bigelow, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The law wisely requires that a party who has instituted a groundless suit against another should show that he acted on the advice of a person who by his professional training and experience and as an officer of the court may be reasonably supposed to be competent to give safe and prudent counsel on which a party may act honestly and in good faith, although to the injury of another. But it would open the door to great abuses of legal process if shelter and protection from the consequences of instituting an unfounded prosecution could be obtained by proof that a party acted on the irresponsible advice of one who could not be presumed to have better means of judging of the rights and duties of the prosecutor on a given state of facts than the prosecutor himself."

Advice of Attorney-General of the State.—In Gilbertson v. Fuller, 40 Minn. 413, it was held that the rule making the advice of counsel a defense to an action for malicious prosecution is especially pertinent and relevant when the prosecution is commenced upon the suggestion and with the indorsement of the attorney-general of the state.

Police Justice.—The rule as stated in the text applies to a police justice. Sutton v. McConnell, 46 Wis. 269.

Where the Attorney Advising is at the Same Time Justice of the Peace before Whom the Complaint is Made.—It seems to be the better doctrine that where the advice depended upon as a defense is given by a counsellor-at-law who is at the same time the justice before whom the complaint is made, it is admissible in evidence. Monaghan v. Cox, 155 Mass.

a police officer,¹ or other layman,² will not be admissible in evidence as a justification.

Where the Attorney is Personally Interested in the Subject Matter.—The doctrine has been laid down that a party who consults an attorney-at-law in regard to his legal right to bring an action against another when the attorney is interested in the subject matter of the suit, and known by him when consulting to be so interested, cannot show the opinion of such attorney as a justification for bringing such suit, although the opinion is honestly given.³ On the other hand, there is authority for the rule that counsel are not necessarily incapable of giving a direct opinion because of their pecuniary interest in the result, and that the question in every such case is, whether the party has honestly sought the advice of competent and trustworthy counsel and acted in good faith on the advice given him.⁴

487; Turner v. Dinnegar, 20 Hun (N. Y.) 467. Compare Marks v. Hastings, 101 Ala. 174; Cooney v. Chase, 81 Mich. 203.

In Monaghan v. Cox, 155 Mass. 487, Barker, J., said: "While all magistrates should, so far as possible, keep themselves unbiased, and should ordinarily refrain from expressing an opinion on matters which are to come before them judicially, there are cases in which they are to exercise discretion and are required to take preliminary action, when they may properly state their views in reference to the phase of the case presented. Upon the question whether, under certain circumstances stated, a formal complaint of this or that character ought to be made and a warrant issued, we cannot say that it is improper for such magistrates to give advice. And it follows that no good reason now exists why, in this commonwealth, evidence that a complaint was made upon the advice of such a magistrate should be inadmissible upon the question of probable cause."

But in Marks v. Hastings, 101 Ala. 174, Haralson, J., said: "Does the fact that the magistrate is also a practicing attorney have a different effect? We think not. The policy of the law forbids a justice of the peace to act as an attorney or to advise in regard to a prosecution intended to be instituted before him."

In What Capacity a Justice who is at the Same Time an Attorney Acted—A Question for the Jury.—An instruction in a suit for malicious prosecution for the arrest of the plaintiff on a criminal charge, that if the defendant acted upon the advice of counsel learned in the law, after placing all the facts before him, no recovery could be had, is properly qualified by the statement that the jury might take into account the fact whether the defendant paid the counsel anything, or employed him in any way as his counsel, or distinguished him from a magistrate, it appearing that he was a justice of the peace as well as an attorney-at-law. Cooney v. Chase, 81 Mich. 203.

1. Coleman v. Heinrich, 2 Mackey (D. C.) 180.

Mitigation of Damages.—In Hirsch v. Feeney, 83 Ill. 548, it was held that in a suit for malicious prosecution the advice given defendant by police officers might be proved as showing the circumstances under which the prosecution was instituted, and to mitigate damages, but not as a defense.

Detectives.—In an action for malicious prosecution, the defendant will not be permitted to show that he acted under the advice of a detective. Breitmesser v. Stier, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 80.

In Hirsch v. Feeney, 83 Ill. 550, Walker, J., said: "The law has never regarded the advice of detectives as being a justification for instituting mistaken criminal proceedings. It, on the contrary, is believed that such persons, from the very nature of their business, become more suspicious than ordinary persons."

2. Coleman v. Heinrich, 2 Mackey (D. C.) 189; Straus v. Young, 36 Md. 246.

City Alderman.—But in Pennsylvania the advice of a city alderman has been held to afford protection to a party in an action for malicious prosecution. Rosenstein v. Feigel, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 532; Thomas v. Painter, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 409. Briggs, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in the latter case, said: "Much may be said in the maintenance of such doctrine. An alderman is an officer of constitutional creation, invested with great power in bringing offenders to justice; he is a conservator of the peace, and specially commissioned to inquire into all charges of an alleged criminal nature."

3. White v. Carr, 71 Me. 557, 36 Am. Rep. 353.

Question for the Jury.—In an action for malicious prosecution, where the defendant claims that he acted under advice of counsel, it is for the jury to say whether the fact that the attorney and counsellor whose advice he sought was the attorney in a civil suit to recover of the plaintiff the sum alleged in the criminal proceeding to have been embezzled, made the attorney an improper person to consult; whether he was carrying on the suit under such circumstances and with such motives as prejudiced him and rendered him unfit to give fair and impartial advice in the premises. Watt v. Corey, 76 Me. 87. See also Charles City Plow, etc., Co. v. Jones, 71 Iowa 238.

4. In Charles City Plow, etc., Co. v. Jones, 71 Iowa 234, an action on an attachment bond for the wrongful suing out of the attachment, it was held that the attachment plaintiff might show, for the purpose of rebutting the charge of malice, that he sought the advice of counsel and acted under such advice in suing out the attachment, even though the counsel

(5) Good Faith of Client in Acting upon Advice.—Where the defendant, in an action for malicious prosecution, relies on the fact that he was advised by counsel, he must show that he acted in good faith upon the advice, believing that there was good cause for the prosecution, and not seeking to procure an opinion in order to shelter himself.¹ If counsel is sought simply to enable him to use the criminal laws for his own private gain and advantage,² or if the attorney and client conspire to institute a malicious prosecution,³ the client cannot justify himself by the other's advice.

(6) Effect of Advice as Evidence—Not a Defense, per se.—A resort to professional advice does not necessarily establish a conclusive presumption against malice and in favor of a probable cause, and hence does not constitute an independent and substantive defense to an action for malicious prosecution.⁴ Such evidence is admissible, however, as tending to establish a defense.

A Question of Fact for the Jury.—Whether or not the defense is established is a Ann. 303; Stevens v. Fassett, 27 Me. 266; Sparling v. Conway, 75 Mo. 510; Messman v. Ihlenfeldt, 89 Wis. 585.

In Pipkin v. Hauke, 15 Mo. App. 373, Lewis, J., said: "The prosecuting witness may have given to the attorney all the facts he knew about the case, and may yet have believed the accused to be innocent of any crime, notwithstanding the attorney's advice, and so may have caused the arrest purely for the purpose of injury and degradation upon the accused. The jury should have been told that if the defendant acted in good faith upon the advice of the attorney, believing that it was correct, and that the accused was guilty of a violation of the criminal law, then the verdict ought to be in his favor."

Where the Defendant Subsequently Ascertained the Innocence of the Plaintiff.—After the advice of counsel is received, if a person swears out a warrant against another person and, before causing the arrest, he ascertains that the party against whom the warrant was issued is innocent of the charge, he is not justified in proceeding even though he was protected by professional advice in taking out the warrant. Ash v. Marlow, 20 Ohio 110; Cole v. Curtis, 16 Minn. 182. Compare Lunk v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 38 Fed. Rep. 311.

Where Attorney Entertained Doubts.—In an action for malicious prosecution where it was shown that the attorney-general who preferred an indictment entertained doubts in regard to the proper construction of the statute upon which the indictment was framed; that the defendant seemed to hesitate whether or not he would prosecute, and that the attorney left it to the defendant to decide, it was held that there was no such advice of counsel as could be relied on in good faith by the defendant. Kendrick v. Cypert, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 294.

In an action for malicious prosecution, where the district attorney testified that he said to the defendant when he came to him to start the prosecution, "I did not think he could convict under the testimony. I gave him reasons for it. I told him my opinion was that he had not a very good case;" and the defendant testified that he consulted other lawyers besides the district attorney, and that they advised him that the prosecution could be maintained, but he did not produce such lawyers as witnesses,—it was held that there was conclusive evidence that the defendant did not believe that the plaintiff was guilty of the crime with which he was charged. Vann v. McCreary, 77 Cal. 434.

In Neufeld v. Rodeminski, 144 Ill. 83, Shope, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "If the criminal prosecution against appellee was instituted for the mere purpose of coercing him into payment of a debt or the surrender of some right claimed, and not in the interest of public justice or to vindicate the law and punish crime, and was falsely made, the fact that he procured the advice of counsel will not shield him from the consequences of his wrongful act, done, not in good faith upon such advice, but with the sinister motive of personal gain."

question of fact to be found by the jury from all the facts and circumstances taken in connection with such advice.¹ Thus it is for the jury to determine whether the party has fairly and fully communicated to his counsel the facts within his knowledge and used reasonable diligence to ascertain the truth,² as also whether he acted in good faith upon the advice received from counsel.³

2. To Trustees.—In England, it seems to be a well-settled rule, that where a trustee has made a payment out of the trust funds to a party not authorized by the terms of the trust to receive it, he will be held personally responsible for the misapplication, to the parties who can establish a better right, notwithstanding the fact that such misapplication was the result of ill advice of counsel.⁴

United States.—But this doctrine has been repudiated by certain cases in this country, which hold that trustees who have acted in good faith and under the advice of counsel are not responsible for an error of judgment or mistake of law.⁵

ADVISE.—To advise is to give advice to; to offer an opinion as worthy or expedient to be followed; to counsel.⁶

6. Long v. State, 23 Neb. 45. In that case it was held, that it was not error in a judge, in a charge defining "accessories," to use the words "requested, advised, incited," instead of the statutory words "aid, abet, or procure."

Advise and Instruct.—The California code authorized the court to advise the jury to acquit. It was held that, where the court instructed the jury to acquit and the jury brought in a verdict of "not guilty," the defendant could not again be placed in jeopardy. The court said: "The court was only authorized to advise the jury to acquit, and the jury were not bound by the advice. (Penal Code, § 1118.) Here the bill of exceptions reads that the court 'instructed' the jury, but the jury retired and deliberated before rendering the verdict 'not guilty.' They were permitted to retire for deliberation, and found a verdict. Non constat that they did not act on the evidence. The request of the defendant that the court 'instruct' should have been denied, but the court was authorized to advise an acquittal. It is no reason for setting aside the direction, that the defendant consented to a verdict in his favor." People v. Horn, 70 Cal. 18.

Advise Distinguished from Persuade.—"It has been suggested that 'persuades' should be construed to mean advise; and that the mere act of advising a slave to leave his master's service, with the intent to go to a state where he might enjoy freedom, would constitute the offense. There are two conclusive objections to such a construction. Advise has not the same meaning with 'persuade'; and the rules for construing penal statutes do not permit us to strike out any of the necessary requisites to make an offense, as implied from the language used. 'Persuade' embraces in its meaning more than advise; and we

2. Property in.—In Goddard v. Winchell, 86 Iowa 82, it was held, where an aerolite weighing sixty-six pounds buried itself in the ground where it fell, to the depth of three feet, that it thereupon became the property of the owner of the soil, rather than of one who discovered it the next day after its fall and dug it up out of the ground. The court said: "The subject of the dispute is an aerolite, of about sixty-six pounds weight, that 'fell from the heavens' on the land of the plaintiff, and was found three feet below the surface. It came to its position in the earth through natural causes. It was one of nature's deposits, with nothing in its material composition to make it foreign or unnatural to the soil. It was not a movable thing 'on the earth.' It was in the earth, and in a very significant sense immovable; that is, it was only movable as parts of the earth are made movable by the hand of man. Except for the peculiar manner in which it came, its relation to the soil would be beyond dispute. It was in its substance, as we understand, a stone. It was not of a character to be thought of as 'unclaimed by any owner,' and, because unclaimed, 'supposed to be abandoned by the last proprietor,' as should be the case under the rule invoked by the appellant. * * * No similar question has, to our knowledge, been determined in a court of last resort. In 15 AMERICAN AND ENGLISH ENCYCLOPEDIA OF LAW, page 388, is the following language: 'An aerolite is the property of the owner of the fee upon which it falls. Hence a pedestrian on the highway, who is first to discover such a stone, is not the owner of it; the highway being a mere easement for travel.' It cites the case of Maas v. Amana Soc., 16 Alb. L. J. 76, and 13 Irish Law Times 381, each of which periodicals contains an editorial notice of such a case having been decided in Illinois, but no reported case is to be found. Anderson's Law Dictionary states the same rule of law, with the same references, under the subject of 'Accretions.' In 20 Alb. L. J. 299 is a letter to the editor from a correspondent, calling attention to a case determined in France, where an aerolite found by a peasant was held not to be the property of the 'proprietor of the field,' but that of the finder."

County Affairs. (See also COUNTY and the title STATUTES.)—County affairs are those relating to the county in its organic and corporate capacity and included within its governmental or corporate powers. Hankins v. New York, 64 N. Y. 22. But see the cases below.

The Pennsylvania constitution provided that the legislature should not pass any local or special law relating to the "affairs of counties." In Morrison v. Bachert, 17 W. N. C. (Pa.) 353, 112 Pa. St. 322, it was held that the words "affairs of counties" meant such affairs as affected the people of the county; therefore a local act which regulated the fees of a county officer which were paid by the people of the county was held unconstitutional. The court said: "It was held by the learned judge of the court below, however, that an act regulating the fees of the prothonotary or other county officer was not a law 'regulating the affairs of counties,' and he defines the 'affairs of counties' to be such 'as concern counties in their governmental and corporate capacity.' This will not do. It is too narrow a construction of the constitution. * * * The word affairs is one of broad signification, and the convention used it understandingly. Mr. Buckalew, who was a prominent member of that body, thus refers to this subject in his very excellent work on the constitution, at page 72: 'In the Pennsylvania provision the word affairs is the important one to be examined. It was obviously borrowed from the constitutions which were in 1873 of most recent formation, in which it was made to supply the word "business" found in the earlier constitutions above mentioned. The substitution of a French for a Saxon word, affairs for "business," was probably made in consequence of judicial opinions which had assigned a somewhat restricted effect to the word "business," as found in the earlier constitutions, and was intended to give to the prohibition upon local legislation a more extended application."

In Com. v. Patton, 88 Pa. St. 258, and Scowden's Appeal, 96 Pa. St. 422, it was held that an act authorizing the holding of special sessions of courts of certain counties was unconstitutional within this clause.

In Frost v. Cherry, 122 Pa. St. 417, it was held that an act for the repeal of a section of the Pennsylvania Fence Law, to be effective in a county upon the vote of the people, was a special act within the prohibition.

In Montgomery v. Com., 91 Pa. St. 133, it was held that an act directing the school directors of a township to levy a tax to re-

Affairs of a Railroad.—Affairs is a word of large import, and a receiver of a railroad having the management of the affairs thereof must necessarily have the control and management of the entire road. Tompkins v. Little Rock, etc., R. Co., 15 Fed. Rep. 13.

1. In U. S. v. Rhodes, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 33, it is said: "It is by no means true as a universal proposition, that none are affected, in the legal sense of the term, by a case, but those who are parties to the record." Citing Osborn v. U. S. Bank, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 738.

Affect in the Sense of "Affect Injuri-ously" or "Beneficially."—In Tyler v. Wells, 2 Mo. App. 538, it is said: "Undoubtedly a party may be beneficially affected as well as injuriously affected by anything, and the word affect standing alone may be said to be equivocal." But in that case the court, construing the act in pari materia, felt compelled to construe the word affect, standing alone and unqualified, to mean "affect injuriously."

And in a case where a statute provided that an act should not affect any confirmed claims to the lands a similar construction was given to affect. The court said: "It is unnecessary to give the various definitions of the word affect. It is enough to say that it is often used in the sense of acting injuriously upon persons and things; and in this sense, we are all of opinion, it was used in this proviso." Ryan v. Carter, 93 U. S. 84.

To the same effect see Baird v. St. Louis Hospital Assoc. (Mo., 1893), 21 S. W. Rep. 11, 116 Mo. 419.

Affect and Vary.—"When it is said that parol evidence shall not affect written instruments, the vice of the argument turns upon the use of the word affect; for if it means to 'vary it,' it is true, and if it is to be carried beyond that meaning, it is not true; there is nothing so clear as the jurisdiction of the court to affect a written instrument by parol testimony." Davis v. Symonds, 1 Cox Ch. 407.

Affecting Judgment.—Review was allowed upon intermediate orders affecting the judgment. The court said: "Whatever can be regarded as affecting the necessary means of obtaining a judgment must be regarded as affecting the judgment itself." Blakeley v. Frazier, 11 S. Car. 135.

Affecting a Substantial Right.—Within a statute providing that the court may disregard errors not affecting a substantial right, it was held that affecting a substantial right related only to the subject matters of litigation, and not to the mere matters of practice. Rahn v. Gunnison, 12 Wis. 528.

In Oatman v. Bond, 15 Wis. 23, it was said that an order which affected a substantial right, within a clause that such orders should be appealable, is one which determines the action.

Lot Affected by Change of Grade.—In Strowel v. Milwaukee, 31 Wis. 526, where it was provided that when a grade has already been established and is afterwards changed, all costs, damages, and charges arising therefrom shall be paid by the city to the owner whose lots are affected, the court said: "We agree with the counsel for the plaintiff that the word affected has reference to the phrase 'costs and charges' previously mentioned. The property is affected when it is burdened with the expense of grading the street."

In English Statute.—A judgment entered upon a warrant of attorney given by a benefited clergyman to secure payment of an annuity need not be registered, under 8 Geo. II., c. 6; for though it may be enforced by sequestration, yet the benefice is not affected by the judgment. Cottle v. Warrington, 5 B. & Ad. 453, 27 E. C. L. 105.

Real Estate Affected.—A suit for the specific execution of a contract for the sale of land is a suit concerning real estate whereby the same may be affected, under the Missouri code. Ensworth v. Holly, 33 Mo. 370.

An action brought to set aside a deed and to compel a conveyance is an action "affecting the title to real property or an estate therein." Warren v. Wilder (Ct. App.), 23 N. Y. St. Rep. 108; Nichols v. Voorhis, 74 N. Y. 28. See also the title JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

2. Oath and Affidavit.—For the formal requisites of an affidavit see 1 ENCYC. PL. AND PR. 309. A bare oath (or affirmation) need not contain these formal requisites, but as every affidavit includes the oath (or affirmation), a defective affidavit may be valid as an oath (or affirmation) to show what facts were testified to. Burns v. Doyle, 28 Wis. 460.

Where a statute requires an oath, it will be complied with if the matter is reduced to the form of an affidavit, signed and sworn to by the proper officer. Edwards v. McKay, 73 Ill. 570; Osborne v. Milman, 56 L. J. Q. B. 263.

Where a party arrested upon execution moved for his discharge, and the order refusing such discharge recited that the execution was issued upon the oath of a certain person, and not upon his affidavit as the statute required, it was held that this did not vitiate the proceedings, it appearing that the execution was issued upon an affidavit. In re Heath, 40 Kan. 335.

But affidavits are very different from official and promissory oaths, which are not at all in the nature of evidence. State v. Green, 15 N. J. L. 88.

3. There is no such thing as an unwritten affidavit. Windley v. Bradway, 77 N. Car. 333.

In Hawkins v. Gibson, 1 Leigh (Va.) 480, it is said, "The term affidavit in the statute [a bail statute] imports an oath in writing."

"It must be in writing. * * * It is sufficient that it be made before an officer authorized by law to administer it, and that voluntary,¹ *ex parte*² statement, sworn (or affirmed) to before an officer authorized to take it.³

he reduce it to writing, and certify officially to the fact of its having been made before him. Shelton v. Berry, 19 Tex. 154, 70 Am. Dec. 326; Crist v. Parks, 19 Tex. 234; Alford v. Cochrane, 7 Tex. 488." Morris v. State, 2 Tex. App. 503.

The word affidavit, ex vi termini, means an oath reduced to writing. Grove v. Campbell, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 10.

But in Baker v. Williams, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 527, it was held that an affidavit to obtain an attachment against a witness for nonattendance need not be an oath in writing. The application may be oral. The court said: "In common parlance, the word is understood to mean any form of legal oath which may be taken. The words 'oath,' 'deposition,' 'testimony,' and affidavit, when used in reference to legal proceedings, convey to the unprofessional ear the same meaning as do the verbs to swear, to make oath, to depose, to testify, and to make affidavit; and we know as well that each has its own distinctive legal technical meaning. The statute in which the word in question is found was passed for the people at large, and the language, I think, should be understood and interpreted as it would be received by ordinary intelligent persons, who are not supposed to be acquainted with technical legal distinctions." See also Soule v. Chase, 1 Robt. (N. Y.) 234.

1. The law presumes that the performance of every act required by it is voluntary, and no affidavit is valid unless obtained by legal means and for a legal purpose. Where affidavits can only be compelled for legal use as evidence, they cannot be compelled merely for information. Dudley v. McCord, 65 Iowa 671.

In Robb v. McDonald, 29 Iowa 330, 4 Am. Rep. 211, and State v. Seaton, 61 Iowa 563, it was held by a divided court that a justice's decision as to his jurisdiction to require an affidavit was final, and that a party refusing to make an affidavit was in contempt, except in cases of gross abuse of authority. An affidavit is also voluntary in the sense of not being made under cross-examination. See next note.

2. Distinguished from Deposition.—The term "deposition" is often used as a generic expression, to comprehend all written evidence verified by oath, affidavits included; but there is a clear distinction between the two, in that in taking depositions the opposite party can always cross-examine, while affidavits are ex parte.

"A deposition is evidence given by a witness under interrogatories, oral or written, and usually written down by an official person; while an affidavit is the mere voluntary act of the party making the oath, and may be, and generally is, taken without the cognizance of the one against whom it is to be used." Stimpson v. Brooks, 3 Blatchf. (U. S.) 456.

By the Kansas Code notice to the adverse party is the distinctive criterion. Atchison v. Bartholow, 4 Kan. 124. And so in South Dakota. State v. Henning, 3 S. Dak. 492.

"It differs from a deposition in this, that in the latter the opposite party has an opportunity to cross-examine the witness, whereas an affidavit is always taken ex parte." Bouv. L. Dict., title Affidavit, quoted in Woods v. State, 134 Ind. 42.

3. In State v. Green, 15 N. J. L. 88, it was held that an affidavit, when offered to be read in evidence, must appear to have been made before the proper officer and in compliance with all legal requirements. The court cannot stop to inquire into the competency of the officer.

False Affidavit.—In U. S. v. Ingraham, 49 Fed. Rep. 155, it was held that an indictment for presenting a false affidavit need not aver that the officer before whom it was taken was authorized to administer oaths. The court said: "The word affidavit relates to the form of the false paper which is presented, and not to its legal character. If Remington were not a justice of the peace, or if he did not administer the oath, and his signature to the jurat were forged, I think the paper would still be a false affidavit within the meaning of the statute."

Other Definitions.—An affidavit is a declaration in writing, sworn to before a magistrate. Brooks v. Snead, 50 Miss. 418.

An affidavit is a statement in writing, signed and made upon oath before an authorized magistrate. Watt v. Carnes, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 534.

An affidavit is a written declaration under oath, made without notice to the adverse party (Civil Code Kentucky, § 505). Bishop v. McQuerry, 13 Bush (Ky.) 418. The definition of the South Dakota Code is the same. State v. Henning, 3 S. Dak. 492.

"An affidavit is 'a statement or declaration reduced to writing, and sworn or affirmed to before some officer who has authority to administer an oath.' (Bouvier's Law Dict.)" Metcalf v. Prescott, 10 Mont. 293. See also Barhydt v. Alexander, 59 Mo. App. 188; Morris v. State, 2 Tex. App. 503; Woods v. State, 134 Ind. 42.

An affidavit is a voluntary oath before some officer of the court to evince the truth of a certain matter. 3 Black. Com. 304, quoted in Gill v. Ward, 23 Ark. 16; Shelton v. Berry, 19 Tex. 155, 70 Am. Dec. 326.

An affidavit is simply a declaration on oath, in writing, sworn to by a party before some person who has authority under the law to administer oaths. Harris v. Lester, 80 Ill. 307.

An affidavit is a statement of facts under oath, reduced to writing, and certified to by the officer before whom the same is made. It is usually, though not necessarily, unless required by statute, signed by the affiant. State v. Sullivan, 39 S. Car. 400.

"An affidavit is an oath in writing, signed by the party deposing, sworn before and attested by him who hath authority to administer the same." Bac. Abr., title Affidavits; Knapp v. Duclou, 1 Mich. N. P. 189, criticised in Crist v. Parks, 19 Tex. 235; Gill v. Ward, 23 Ark. 16; Soule v. Chase, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 48.

AFFILIATION.—See the titles BASTARDY; LEGITIMACY.

AFFINITY. (As to the disqualification of judge or juror on account of affinity to a party see the titles JUDGE; JURY AND JURY TRIAL. And see the titles INCEST; RELATIONSHIP; SUCCESSION.)—Affinity is the relation contracted by marriage between a husband and his wife's kindred, and between a wife and her husband's kindred, in contradistinction from consanguinity, or relation by blood.¹ A number of authorities define affinity as the connection which arises from marriage between the husband and the blood-

Complaint.—Under the extradition laws of Congress the term "complaint" is not necessarily or presumptively equivalent to affidavit. State v. Richardson, 34 Minn. 115.

Pleading.—An affidavit is not a pleading. Johnson v. Laughlin, 7 Kan. 359.

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law.—In Boyd v. Anderson, 18 Nev. 351, it was held that the findings of fact and the conclusions of law required to be found and filed by the court were not affidavits within the statute permitting reference to be made, in an argument for a new trial, to the affidavits in the case.

Subscription by Affiant. (See also 1 ENCYC. PL. AND PR. 309.)—In Watts v. Womack, 44 Ala. 605, it was held that it was not essential to an affidavit that the name of the affiant should be subscribed. The court said: "The word affidavit is a very broad term. It may mean an oath reduced to writing and subscribed by the party making it, or only an oath in writing without such subscription. The legal definition of the word affidavit is 'an oath in writing, sworn before some judge or officer of a court or other person legally authorized to administer it; a sworn statement in writing. To make affidavit to a thing is to testify to it upon oath in writing.' 1 Burrill Law Dict. 68; Shelton v. Berry, 19 Tex. 154, 70 Am. Dec. 326; 3 Black. Com. 304, marg.; 1 Bouv. Law Dict. (12th ed.), p. 96, § 97." The definition in the above case was approved in Wright v. Smith, 66 Ala. 546.

Testimony and Affidavit.—The Indiana criminal code disqualified any person as a juror who had read reports of the testimony of witnesses and formed an opinion. In Woods v. State, 134 Ind. 35, it appeared that a juror had formed an opinion, based upon an affidavit of a witness which had been widely published in the papers. Upon the question whether the affidavit was included in the term "testimony" as used in the statute, the court, after quoting Bouvier's definition (set out above), says: "According to this definition of the word affidavit, it may contain evidence, and if evidence, then it is in a sense testimony, because it is the statement of facts witnessed by the affiant, only differing from a deposition in that the adverse party had no opportunity to cross-examine the witness. Webster defines the word 'testimony' as a 'solemn declaration or affirmation made for the purpose of establishing or proving some fact.' Bouvier's Law Dictionary, title Testimony, defines the word to mean 'the statement made by a witness under oath or affirmation.' Under these definitions of the words 'testimony' and affidavit they approach very close to the same meaning, so far as the question here involved is concerned."

Jurat of Clerk. (See also 1 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 309.)—In Williams v. Stevenson, 103 Ind. 243, it was held, where no jurat was attached to an affidavit as to the posting of notices, that the trial court might hear evidence that such affidavit was in fact sworn to at the proper time before the clerk, and might order that officer to affix his jurat thereto, as of that date. The court said: "The statute required an affidavit in proof of the posting of notices, but it did not prescribe any particular and formal parts of which the affidavit should consist. The jurat of the officer is not the affidavit nor any part of it. It is simply evidence of the fact that the affidavit was properly sworn to by the affiant." See also Kruse v. Wilson, 79 Ill. 233; Cook v. Jenkins, 30 Iowa 452.

Answer.—In Servoss v. Stannard, 2 Code Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 56, the court said: "The word affidavit in section 226 [of the code] can hardly be construed to mean 'answer.' We find the words 'answer' and affidavit throughout the code applied to different objects, and certainly in their ordinary acceptance they are not synonymous. There are some words in the code which the legislature intended should have a signification different from that usually assigned them; these have been enumerated and their arbitrary definition given. The word affidavit is not among the words to which the legislature have attached a peculiar meaning; and I see nothing in the code, nor am I aware of any decision, which would justify me in holding that an answer, verified in conformity with the code, is an affidavit." To the same effect see Blatchford v. New York, etc., R. Co., 7 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 324; Gawtry v. Doane, 51 N. Y. 84. The section referred to, namely, 226, was to the effect that when application was made upon affidavit on the part of the defendant, the plaintiff might oppose the same by affidavit.

1. Carman v. Newell, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 26. In Spear v. Robinson, 29 Me. 545, the court said: "By the marriage one party thereto holds by affinity the same relation to the kindred of the other that the latter holds by consanguinity; and no rule is known to us under which the relation by affinity is lost on a dissolution of the marriage more than that by blood is lost by the death of those through whom it is derived."

"The connection between the husband and his wife's parents, and the wife and her husband's parents." Cooper's Justinian 422, quoted in Waterhouse v. Martin, Peck (Tenn.) 389.

relatives of the wife, and between the wife and the blood-relatives of the husband; or, in other words, they hold that it does not include persons related to the spouse simply by affinity: and it would seem that this definition was supported by the weight of authority.¹

This definition, however, does not cover all the cases; for while there is no question that the blood-relations of the husband and the blood-relations of the wife are not related to each other by affinity,² yet it has been held in a number of cases that relationship by affinity may exist between the husband and the spouse of a blood-relation of the wife. Thus, it has been held that where two marry sisters, they are related to each other by affinity, though the husband of a wife's sister is certainly not the wife's blood-relation, and the case therefore does not fall within the definition given above.³

1. 1 Bl. Com. 434; Paddock v. Wells, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 333; Higbe v. Leonard, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 186; Solinger v. Earle, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct. 84; Oneal v. State, 47 Ga. 248; Hume v. Commercial Bank, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 2, 43 Am. Rep. 290; Poydras v. Livingston, 5 Martin (La.) 293.

Or as sometimes stated, the consanguinei of the wife are the affines of the husband, and vice versa; but the affines of the wife are not those of the husband, nor are the affines of the husband those of the wife. 2 Steph. Com. 285.

So, in Chinn v. State, 47 Ohio St. 575, it is held that a husband was not related by affinity to his wife's brother's wife. Citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 315. But see the cases in the note after the next.

2. Between Kinsman of Wife and Kinsman of Husband.—"Affinity is the tie arising from marriage, betwixt the husband and the blood-relations of the wife, and betwixt the wife and the blood-relations of the husband; but there is no affinity betwixt the kinsmen of the wife and those of the husband, or vice versa. Thus, say the books, the husband's brother and the wife's sister have no affinity. The same must be true of the husband's brother and the wife's brother. See title 'Affinity,' in the law dictionaries of Tomlin, Bouvier, Abbott, and Rapalje and Lawrence. There is no affinity between the blood-relatives of the husband and blood-relatives of the wife. Paddock v. Wells, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 331; Carman v. Newell, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 25; Spear v. Robinson, 29 Me. 531; Waterhouse v. Martin, Peck (Tenn.) 374. Ex p. Harris, 26 Fla. 77.

"The juror Bryant, being a cousin of the stepfather of the deceased, was related by affinity to the mother of the deceased, but bore no relation to deceased himself, and was a competent juror." Kirby v. State, 89 Ala. 69.

In Higbe v. Leonard, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 186, it is said: "'A husband is related by affinity to all the consanguinei of his wife and, vice versa, the wife to the husband's consanguinei; for, the husband and wife being considered one flesh, those who are related to the one by blood are related to the other by affinity.'" "But the consanguinei of the husband are not at all related to the consanguinei of the wife." If this rule be correct, and I think it is, although the justice was related by affinity to the two sisters of Higbe, the plaintiff, there was no such relation between him and Higbe."

"The father of a son, whose wife is the aunt of the plaintiff, is not connected by affinity with the plaintiff; nor vice versa; for the son only has formed the connection, with which the father is not affected." Waterhouse v. Martin, Peck (Tenn.) 390.

That the sister and niece of a juror are the wives of two of the brothers of a party to a suit, constitutes no ground of disqualification. Johnson v. Richardson, 52 Tex. 482.

Upon a trial for murder, a juror stated that the sons of his wife by a former marriage were second cousins of the deceased; and this was held not to disqualify him. Moses v. State, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 232.

A juror whose brother is joined in marriage with a sister of one of the parties, is not disqualified to sit in the trial. Chase v. Jennings, 38 Me. 44.

It is not a good cause of principal challenge to a juror that his sister is the wife of the nephew of the party; but if made to the favor of the juror, it would be sufficient to induce triers to exclude him from the jury. Rank v. Shewey, 4 Watts (Pa.) 218.

3. Markham v. Lee, cited in Mounson v. West, 1 Leon 89, and see the note to Cain v. Ingham, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 478; Paddock v. Wells, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 333; Charles v. John, Year Book 41 Edw. III., p. 9.

In Foot v. Morgan, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 654, it was held that a justice of the peace whose wife is the sister of A's wife cannot take jurisdiction of a cause in which A is the plaintiff; because such relation between the plaintiff and a juror is a cause of challenge for the juror, or, if the sheriff is thus related to the plaintiff, a cause of challenge to the array on the ground of affinity.

Husband of Aunt and Husband of Niece.—Within a statute disqualifying a judge from presiding where he is related by consanguinity or affinity within the fourth degree to either party, it was held that the husband of an aunt and the husband of the niece were related within the fourth degree of affinity. The court said: "Affinity is a connection formed by marriage, which places the husband in the same degree of nominal propinquity to the relations of the wife as that in which she herself stands towards them, and gives to the wife the same reciprocal connection with the relations of the husband. It is used in contradistinction to 'consanguinity.'

The death of the spouse terminates the relationship by affinity.¹

AFFIRM—AFFIRMATIVE. (See also AFFIRMANCE.)—Affirm means to ratify or confirm and not to destroy.²

AFFIRMANCE. (See also AFFIRM. Compare REVERSAL; and see ENCYC. PL. AND PR., title JUDGMENTS.)—A decision upholding the validity of a judgment.³

It is no real kindred. A person cannot by legal succession receive an inheritance from a relation by affinity, neither does it extend to the nearest relations of husband and wife, so as to create a mutual relation between them. The degrees of affinity are computed in the same way as those of consanguinity." Kelley v. Neely, 12 Ark. 657, 56 Am. Dec. 289.

But in Hume v. Commercial Bank, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 2, 43 Am. Rep. 290, and in Poydras v. Livingston, 5 Martin (La.) 293, the contrary was held, viz.: that although a man is related to his wife's sister by affinity, he is not so to his wife's sister's husband. To the same effect is Chinn v. State, 47 Ohio St. 575.

1. Carman v. Newell, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 26; Cain v. Ingham, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 478; Foot v. Morgan, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 654; State v. Shaw, 3 Ired. (N. Car.) 532. See also Bigelow v. Sprague, 140 Mass. 425. But see Spear v. Robinson, 29 Me. 531.

In Cain v. Ingham, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 478, there was a deficiency of jurors, and the sheriff summoned one A, whose father had married the widow of the defendant's brother. A's father died before the trial, and his widow was also the widow of the defendant's brother. It was held that there was no ground of challenge to A on his alleged affinity.

It seems that the husband of a sister of a decedent leaving issue is not a competent juror in a suit brought by the widow. Dearmond v. Dearmond, 10 Ind. 191.

A juror who had married the sister of a party in another case depending on the same principles as the one on trial, was excused from sitting though his wife was then dead. Hartford Bank v. Hart, 3 Day (Conn.) 491, 3 Am. Dec. 274.

Birth of Issue.—If, however, the marriage has resulted in issue who are still living, the relationship by affinity continues, and a challenge to a juror must be sustained. Jaques v. Com., 10 Gratt. (Va.) 690; Mounson v. West, 1 Leon 88; Dearmond v. Dearmond, 10 (Ind.) 191; Bigelow v. Sprague, 140 Mass. 425.

2. Planters' Bank v. Calvit, 3 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 194, 41 Am. Dec. 616.

"Reverse" and affirm are not appropriate terms, where the correctness of the order or decree below is made to depend upon the production of new testimony." Mitchell v. Lenox, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 665.

Affirmative Relief.—By the Minnesota Code, a plaintiff may dismiss his action at any time before trial, unless affirmative relief is demanded in the answer. The court, in Koerper v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 40 Minn. 134, thus construes "affirmative relief": "The correctness of this ruling presents the main point in the case, and this all turns upon the question whether the relief demanded in the answer is affirmative, within the meaning of the statute. It seems to us that the relief to which the statute refers as affirmative is only that for which the defendant might maintain an action entirely independent of plaintiff's claim, and which he might proceed to establish and recover even if plaintiff abandoned his cause of action, or failed to establish it. In other words, the answer must be in the nature of a cross-action, thereby rendering the action defendant's as well as plaintiff's. The relief demanded in the answer in this case is clearly not of this kind. It is entirely conditioned and dependent upon plaintiffs establishing their right of recovery."

Affirmative Representation.—See the title REPRESENTATIONS.

Affirmative Proof.—See PROOF.

3. Drummond v. Husson, 14 N. Y. 60. The court in that case said: "A dismissal of the appeal for want of prosecution is clearly not an affirmance of the judgment. This court has decided nothing whatever in respect to the validity of the judgment."

Not a New Judgment—Lien.—In Planters' Bank v. Calvit, 3 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 143, 41 Am. Dec. 616, it was held that the affirmance by the Court of Appeals of a judgment of an inferior court did not extinguish the lien of that judgment. The court said: "To me it seems a contradiction that the judgment of affirmance, the act which declares that the judgment was regular and constituted a perfect lien from the time it was rendered in the Circuit Court, should be considered as the act which destroys the validity of the lien. Affirm means to ratify or confirm, and not to destroy."

Same—Justice of Peace.—Where a justice's judgment for less than fifteen dollars is affirmed, a readjudication by the appellate court, that the respondent recover the amount of such judgment together with interest thereon from the time of its rendition, will not be deemed a new judgment or anything more than a simple affirmance. Wold v. Ordway, 68 Wis. 176.

Smaller Judgment—Bond.—If an appeal be entered, from a judgment rendered by a county court, to the Supreme Court, and the appellee recover judgment in the Supreme Court, although for a less sum than he recovered in the county court, it is an affirmance of the judgment of the county court within the meaning of the condition of the recognizance for the prosecution of such appeal. Page v. Johnson, 1 D. Chip. (Vt.) 338.

Same—Costs.—But upon the question of costs, it was held in Housel v. Higgins, 47 N. J. L. 72, that if the plaintiff appeals from judgment in his favor before a justice of the peace, and on appeal receives an increase of debt or damages, he is not entitled to costs of appeal on affirmance, and that costs on appeal will be given only to a successful party who has judgment in his favor on the appeal. Scudder, J., delivering the opinion of the court in this case, said: "The terms affirmance or 'reversal' used in section 84 of the Small Cause Act (Rev., p. 554) are employed to indicate the successful or unsuccessful party on the appeal. In Robinson v. Hedges, 3 N. J. L. 262, the plaintiff obtained judgment before the justice, the defendant appealed, the judgment below was reversed and judgment rendered for a less amount, with the costs of appeal. The court said the defendant was actually the successful party, and should not pay costs to his adversary on the appeal; that the more reasonable rule would be that his adversary pay costs to him, but the practice had been in such cases for neither party to pay costs, on the principle that the error was in the judgment of the justice, and not the fault of the plaintiff. On certiorari the judgment was reversed as to the costs and affirmed as to the debt. See also Cheeseman v. Cade, 24 N. J. L. 632, where the judgment on appeal was for less than the amount recovered before the justice, and it was held that the Court of Common Pleas erred in allowing costs to the plaintiff. The proper form of judgment on appeal is given in Hendricks v. Craig, 5 N. J. L. 654, and Woodruff v. Badgley, 12 N. J. L. 367. The entry on the minutes should be specific both as to the debt or damages and the costs in each court. In the present case the plaintiffs have appealed from their own judgment, and a judgment of affirmance has been entered in the form prescribed in Hendricks v. Craig, 5 N. J. L. 654; for damages, costs below, and costs on appeal. The amount of the judgment for damages has not been reduced, and they may therefore hold the costs below; but the amount has not been increased, consequently they are not the successful party on the appeal, in fact, and should recover no costs. There should be judgment of affirmance, but no costs allowed the plaintiffs on appeal. This is the view expressed in Pennington's Treatise 73, where it says costs in the Common Pleas must be given to the successful party, generally. Griffith's Treatise, 137, says: 'If a party appeals from a judgment in his own favor (because less than he thought due to him, as he may), and recovers either more or less than before the justice, the appellee in that case is to pay no costs on the appeal, nor to recover any, but the appellant will be entitled to recover the costs below.' The practice now would be to give the appellant costs on his appeal if he recovers more, but none if he recovers the same or less; for in the first case he is successful, in the latter he is not. But as the appellee is not successful in reversing the judgment of the plaintiffs in either case, he can have no costs on appeal. Each party must pay his own costs in the Court of Common Pleas. That must be the rule in this cause, for here the appellants, who are the plaintiffs and had judgment below, recovered but one dollar—the same amount that was given in the justice's court. As there has been no increase of damages, they are not entitled to costs on the appeal."

In an Instruction.—In Fields v. State, 134 Ind. 46, the court, after quoting the definition given in the text, says: "The law relating to affirmatives and negatives pregnant, so far as we are aware, has been confined to the rules of pleading in civil actions, and has no place in criminal law; but a proposition of law in an instruction to a jury, stated in the form of an affirmative pregnant, is subject to all the objections against it as a rule of pleading, and is likely to be much more misleading and harmful. The jury may have understood the court as instructing them that they could only acquit the defendant if the reasonable hypothesis consistent with his innocence did not contradict any credible evidence given in the cause. The court did not so instruct them, but an inference to that effect was implied." See generally, ENCYC. PL. AND PR., title INSTRUCTIONS.

I. DEFINITION.—An affray is the fighting together of two or more persons, either by mutual consent or otherwise, in some public place, to the terror of the people.¹

1. 2 Bishop New Cr. Law, § 1.

At Common Law an affray was defined as the fighting of two or more persons in some public place to the terror of the people. Bouv. L. Dict., title Affray; 2 Bl. Com. (Broom & Had. ed.) 168; McClellan v. State, 53 Ala. 640; Thompson v. State, 70 Ala. 26; Childs v. State, 15 Ark. 204; State v. Brewer, 33 Ark. 176; Com. v. Simmons, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 614; State v. Allen, 4 Hawks (N. Car.) 356; State v. Wilson, Phil. (N. Car.) 237; State v. Woody, 2 Jones (N. Car.) 335; State v. Stanly, 4 Jones (N. Car.) 290; State v. Perry, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 9, 69 Am. Dec. 768; State v. Sumner, 5 Strobb. (S. Car.) 53; Simpson v. State, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 356. See also Supreme Council v. Garrigus, 104 Ind. 133, 54 Am. Rep. 298; People v. Judson, 11 Daly (N. Y.) 1; State v. Davis, 65 N. Car. 298.

An affray is the fighting of two or more persons in a public place. Wilkes v. Jackson, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 355; O'Neill v. State, 16 Ala. 65.

Fighting in a Private Place is only an assault. Timothy v. Simpson, 1 C. M. & R. 757; Reg. v. Hunt, 1 Cox C. C. 177.

Appearing in Public Place Armed with Dangerous Weapons.—It has been stated that appearing in a public place armed with dangerous or unusual weapons to the terror of the people is an affray at common law. State v. Huntly, 3 Ired. (N. Car.) 418, 40 Am. Dec. 416; State v. Davis, 65 N. Car. 298; 1 Russ. on Cr. (9th ed.) 407, citing 1 Hawk. P. C., c. 63, §§ 2, 4. See also State v. Lanier, 71 N. Car. 288 Compare Simpson v. State, 5

Yerg. (Tenn.) 356; 2 Bishop's New Criminal Law, § 3, par. 2.

Affray Distinguished from Riot.—If a number of persons meet together at a fair or market, or upon any other lawful or innocent occasion, and happen, on a sudden quarrel, to engage in fighting, they are not guilty of riot, but of affray only (of which none are guilty but those who actually engage in it), the object of their meeting being innocent and lawful, and the breach of the peace happening unexpectedly, without previous intention. Hawk. P. C., c. 65, § 3.

Statutes Defining Affray have been enacted in many of the states, in some of which the common-law definition has been adopted.

In Georgia an affray is defined as "the fighting of two or more persons in some public place, to the terror of the citizens and disturbance of the public tranquillity." Ga. Code 1882, § 4515. See Hawkins v. State, 13 Ga. 322, 58 Am. Dec. 517.

For the definition of affray in Texas see Penal Code 381. Shelton v. State, 30 Tex. 432.

In some states the common-law definition has been modified. Thus:

In Indiana it is enacted, "If two or more persons, by agreement, fight in any public place, the persons so offending are guilty of an affray." Ind. Annot. Stat. 1894, § 2063. See Fritz v. State, 40 Ind. 18; Supreme Council v. Carrigus, 104 Ind. 133, 54 Am. Rep. 298.

In Iowa, "If two or more persons voluntarily, or by agreement, engage in any fight

II. ELEMENTS OF THE OFFENSE—Actual Fighting—Abusive Language.—In general, to constitute an affray there must be actual fighting.¹ The mere use of abusive or quarrelsome words by which another person is provoked to violence does not of itself make the person using them guilty of an affray.² But it has been held that if one person by using such language towards another as is calculated or intended to bring on a fight induces the other to strike him, he is guilty of an affray although he did not himself strike a blow.³ Abusive language, accompanied by acts calculated to terrify the people and disturb the public tranquillity, is sufficient to constitute an affray, although there be no actual fighting.⁴

By Two or More Persons.—The fighting must be by or between two or more persons.⁵ This distinguishes affrays from riots, routs, and unlawful assem-or use any blows or violence towards each other in an angry or quarrelsome manner, in any public place, to the disturbance of others, they are guilty of an affray." Iowa Annot. Code (1888), § 4065.

See, further, the several state statutes.

In Kentucky, where there is no statutory definition, an affray was defined as "a disturbance of the public peace, by a fighting with the mutual consent of the combatants." Duncan v. Com., 6 Dana (Ky.) 295. But see Com. v. Simmons, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 614.

Justification—Self-defense.—A person who engages in a fight in a public place, wilfully, is guilty of an affray, and it is immaterial that he fought under a reasonable apprehension that his antagonist intended to make a violent assault upon him; nor is it any defense that in the course of the conflict he fired a shot, believing that he and his sons were in danger of great bodily harm. State v. Harrell, 107 N. Car. 944.

Where there was an opportunity to escape from the apprehended danger, a plea of self-defense is untenable. State v. Downing, 74 N. Car. 184.

Burden of Proof.—Where a person on trial for an affray admits that he fought with a deadly weapon, the burden of proof is on him to show, to the satisfaction of the jury, such facts as will justify his conduct. State v. Barringer, 114 N. Car. 840. See also State v. Weathers, 98 N. Car. 685.

Liability of Affrayers.—Persons fighting with pistols in a public street are liable in an action of trespass for injuries to a passer-by, caused by a shot fired during the combat, and it is immaterial whether the shot was fired by the defendants in the action or by some one else participating in the fight. Murphy v. Wilson, 44 Mo. 313. 100 Am. Dec. 290.

But affrayers are not liable for injuries done by outsiders, and where one of the combatants in a fight was killed by a blow from an outsider breaking into the ring, it was held that the persons encouraging the fight by their presence were not answerable. Rex v. Murphy, 6 C. & P. 103, 25 E. C. L. 301.

1. Actual Fighting Necessary.—Simpson v. State, 5 Verg. (Tenn.) 356. See also, in connection with this and the other notes to this section, supra, this title, Definition.

2. Abusive Language.—O'Neill v. State, 16 Ala. 65. It was held in this case that a charge that if one person by insulting language provoked another to attack him, he was guilty of an affray whether he resisted or not, was erroneous.

Where it appeared that one of the parties to a fight was willing to fight, but wished to go outside of the corporate limits to do so, and yet by abusive language provoked the other to strike the first blow, so that a fight ensued in the street, it was held that he was guilty of an affray. State v. Sumner, 5 Strobb. (S. Car.) 53.

To the same effect see Pollock v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 29.

3. State v. Perry, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 9, 69 Am. Dec. 768; State v. Davis, 80 N. Car. 351, 30 Am. Rep. 86; State v. Fanning, 94 N. Car. 940, 55 Am. Rep. 653. See also State v. Robbins, 78 N. Car. 431.

Where A and B quarreled at the gate in front of B's house, and B ordered A to leave, and upon his refusal to do so went into the house and procured a pistol, and A, having meanwhile retired some distance from the gate, on seeing him with the pistol, returned and dared him to shoot, which he did, it was held that both were guilty of an affray. State v. Downing, 74 N. Car. 184.

Intention.—A party on trial for an affray cannot be heard to say that he did not intend to bring about a breach of the peace. State v. King, 86 N. Car. 603.

4. Hawkins v. State, 13 Ga. 322, 58 Am. Dec. 517. In this case A and B had an altercation in a public street, at the instance of A, who first accosted B, whereupon B drew his knife and cut at A, who also drew his knife from his pocket, but was prevented by the bystanders from using it. It was held that, while the words alone of the parties, independent of their acts, would not have constituted an affray, their words accompanied by their acts, respectively, in drawing their knives and attempting to use them, made the parties guilty of an affray. See also State v. Fanning, 94 N. Car. 940, 55 Am. Rep. 653.

5. Thompson v. State, 70 Ala. 26; Simpson v. State, 5 Verg. (Tenn.) 356; Pollock v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 29. See also State v. Priddy, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 429.

Three defendants may be convicted of an affray on proof that they fought, not as antagonists against each other, but as common antagonists against a fourth person. Thompson v. State, 70 Ala. 26.

blies, which require three persons at least to constitute them.¹

Accessories.—All who aid, assist, and abet an affray are guilty as principals.²

Mutual Consent.—Under the common-law definition, it is not necessary, in order to constitute an affray, for the fighting to be by mutual consent; but in some states this definition has been so modified by statute as to involve an agreement to fight.³

In a Public Place.—The fighting must be in a public place.⁴ It is this circumstance that distinguishes an affray from an assault,⁵ which is included in the former.⁶ The fighting need not originate in a public place; if it commences in a private place, but is carried by the movement of the participants into a public place, it will be an affray.⁷

Terror of the People.—The fighting in a public place must be to the terror of the people.⁸ It seems that the existence of terror, as a matter of fact, does not require proof; but where the fighting is proved to have been in a public place, the law will sufficiently infer terror.⁹

III. SUPPRESSION OF AFFRAYS—Arrest by Private Person.—If an affray be made to the breach of the peace, any person may, without a warrant from a magistrate, restrain any of the offenders in order to preserve the peace; but a private person is not justified in arresting, or giving in charge to a policeman without a warrant, a party who has been engaged in an affray, unless the affray be still continuing or there be reason to apprehend that it will be renewed.¹⁰

3. Mutual consent of the parties is not essential to an affray. Cash v. State, 2 Overt. (Tenn.) 198; Saddler v. Republic, Dall. (Tex.) 610. See supra, this title, Definition.

Evidence of Agreement—Indiana.—Where the only evidence was that the parties were seen in close combat, lying on the ground, it was held that these circumstances would not warrant the presumption that the parties fought by agreement. Klum v. State, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 377.

4. Public Place.—Reg. v. Hunt, 1 Cox C. C. 177; McClellan v. State, 53 Ala. 640; State v. Weekly, 29 Ind. 206; State v. Sumner, 5 Strobb. (S. Car.) 53; Simpson v. State, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 356; State v. Heflin, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 84; Pollock v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 29. See also State v. Priddy, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 429.

The Essential Ingredient of the Offense is that it is done in some public place, whereby terror and alarm may be occasioned to other persons. Childs v. State, 15 Ark. 204. This case was decided in 1854.

By the Arkansas Act of 1868 it is provided that "if two or more persons shall, by agreement, fight to the terror of any citizen of this state, the person or persons so offending shall be deemed guilty of an affray." Ark. Dig. of Stat. 1884, § 1798; State v. Brewer, 33 Ark. 176.

A Field Surrounded by a Forest, and one mile from any highway or any other public place, does not lose its private character by the casual presence of three persons, so as to make two of them, who fight together willingly at such place, guilty of an affray. Taylor v. State, 22 Ala. 15.

Place at Considerable Distance from Highway.—Where a fight took place in the presence of a great crowd of persons, but at a considerable distance from any highway, and ceased on the appearance of the peace officers, it was held to be no affray, the place being to all intents and purposes private. Reg. v. Hunt, 1 Cox C. C. 177.

An Enclosed Lot Ninety Feet Distant from the Street of a country town, and visible from the street, is a public place, within the common-law definition of affray. Carwile v. State, 35 Ala. 392. See also the title PUBLIC PLACE.

State, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 356; State v. Heflin, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 84; Saddler v. Republic, Dall. (Tex.) 610; Wilkes v. Jackson, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 355.

7. Need Not Originate in Public Place.—State v. Billings, 72 Mo. 662; Wilson v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 278.

8. Must be to the Terror of the People.—State v. Warren, 57 Mo. App. 502; Simpson v. State, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 356. See also Hawkins v. State, 13 Ga. 322, 58 Am. Dec. 517.

It is not the mere fighting that constitutes the gravamen of the offense; it is because the violence is committed in a public place, to the terror of the people, that the crime is called an affray, instead of an assault and battery. Cash v. State, 2 Overt. (Tenn.) 198; Saddler v. Republic, Dall. (Tex.) 610.

9. State v. Sumner, 5 Strobb. (S. Car.) 53.

10. Price v. Seeley, 10 Cl. & F. 28; State v.

Separating Combatants—Killing.—Any person present is justified in endeavoring to part the combatants, whatever consequences may ensue; ¹ but, as a general rule, he will not be justified in killing one to protect the other. ²

Arrest by Officer.—A constable may, without a warrant, apprehend a person for an affray; but he has such power only when the affray took place in his presence or was still continuing at the time of the apprehension, ³ or where it is likely a felony will be committed. ⁴

IV. PUNISHMENT.—At common law, affray is punishable by fine and imprisonment, the measure of the punishment being regulated by the circumstances of the case; for where there is a material aggravation, the punishment proportionally increases. ⁵ The aggravation may result from the dangerous tendency of the affray, from the character of the persons against whom it is committed, or from the place where it occurs. ⁶ In many of the states, the punishment for affray is prescribed by statute. ⁷

AFFREIGHTMENT.—See the titles CHARTER-PARTY; FREIGHT.

AFORE.—This term signifies priority in point of time. ⁸

8. The statute 3 Hen. VII., c. 10, enables a defendant in error "to recover his costs and damages for his delay" if a writ of error be sued out "afore execution had." It was held that the writ is sued out "afore execution had" if an execution has issued before the writ, but has been rendered ineffectual by proceedings taken adversely to the plaintiff below. Newlands v. Holmes, 4 Q. B. 859, 45 E. C. L. 859.

9. Simpson v. Robert, 35 Ga. 181.

Purposes Aforesaid.—The words "purposes aforesaid" in § 32 of the English Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, refer to the purposes mentioned in the former part of the same section only. Fenwick v. East London R. Co., L. R. 20 Eq. 544.

Places Aforesaid.—Aforesaid naturally refers to places named immediately before. Peake v. Screech, 7 Q. B. 610, 53 E. C. L. 610.

As Aforesaid.—12 and 13 Vict., c. 92, § 3, enacts that any person who shall keep or use or act in the management of any place for fighting or baiting animals shall be liable to a penalty; and by way of proviso, in order to obviate the difficulty of proving who such person was, defines that every person who receives money for the admission to any place kept or used for any of the purposes aforesaid "shall be deemed to be a keeper thereof," and then adds that every person who shall encourage, aid, or assist at the fighting or baiting of any bull, etc., "or other animal aforesaid," shall be also liable to a penalty. Mellor, J., said: "Looking to the frame of the section, and considering also that it is a penal enactment, I think that the words 'as aforesaid' mean, 'in any place kept or used for any of the purposes aforesaid.'" Morley v. Greenhalgh, 3 B. & S. 379, 113 E. C. L. 379; affirming Clark v. Hague, 2 El. & El. 281, 105 E. C. L. 281.

County Aforesaid—Deed.—By a parish indenture which purported to be made between the church-warden, etc., of D. parish in the county of N. of the one part, and A. B. of C., in the county of L., of the other part, it was witnessed that the said church-warden, etc., of D. parish, with the consent of two of his majesty's justices of the peace for the said county, dwelling in or near said parish, had bound, etc. The justices in their written consent on the margin of the indenture described themselves as justices "of the county aforesaid." It was held that the words "county aforesaid" had the same meaning as the words "said county," and that it sufficiently appeared by reference to the latter words that the consenting justices were justices of the county of N. Rex v. Countesthorpe, 2 B. & Ad. 487, 22 E. C. L. 128.

County Aforesaid—Indictment. (See also ENCYC. OF PLEADING AND PRACTICE, titles INDICTMENT and VENUE.)—Where two counties have been mentioned in the body of the indictment, and the offense is stated to have been committed in the county aforesaid, without showing certainly which county is meant, the indictment is insufficient. State v. McCracken, 20 Mo. 411.

Thus in Bell v. Com., 8 Gratt. (Va.) 605, it is said: "So that two counties had been previously mentioned before the county in which the larceny was committed is stated, and then the county where the larceny was committed is stated by the words 'in the county aforesaid,' without stating to which of the previously named counties the word aforesaid had reference. This manner of stating the county where the theft was committed is insufficient. 1 Chitty's Cr. Law 160; Archbold's Pleading and Evidence in Criminal Cases 49; 2 Gabbett's Cr. Law 205; 1 Wms. Saund. 308, note 1. According to some of these authorities, the word aforesaid refers to the county last before named. If this be the correct construction, the word aforesaid referred to the county of Roanoke, and then the Circuit Court of Campbell had no jurisdiction; and according to a part of these authorities, it is uncertain to which of the counties before named the word referred; and the court cannot say in which county the offense was committed. But whichever of these may be the true construction, all the authorities agree that the indictment is bad."

In Reg. v. Hunt, 10 Q. B. 926, 59 E. C. L. 926, the first count of the indictment charged a conspiracy to defraud the prosecutor of his money by bringing an unfounded action on promises against him, which came on to be tried at the assizes for "the county of Surrey." The second count charged another conspiracy "at the parish aforesaid in the county aforesaid;" and the objection was, that as the county last named was Surrey, it appeared that the Middlesex jury could have had no jurisdiction to try the indictment. The court pointed out that the only "parish aforesaid" was alleged to be in the county of Middlesex.

In Reg. v. Albert, 5 Q. B. 41, 48 E. C. L. 41, Denman, C. J., said: "The objection as now presented to us brings the question to this: whether the parish of St. Stephen, Coleman Street, sufficiently appears by the indictment to be in the city of London. The act 22 Car. II., c. 11, shows that it is within the city; and where an indictment mentions a parish in a county, and afterwards an act is alleged to have been done in the 'county aforesaid,' that averment as to place is sufficient."

Where but one county has been named, a reference to the county aforesaid is sufficient, aforesaid being synonymous with "last named," "before named." Reeves v. State, 20 Ala 35.

Same—Declaration.—It was held in Sutton v. Fenn, 2 W. Bl. 847, that in declarations the county aforesaid, where more than one is named, always refers to the margin.

Brought up as Aforesaid.—The provision of the English Bankruptcy Act was to apply when the prisoner was "brought up as aforesaid" before the registrar. In Bramwell v. Eglinton, 5 B. & S. 56, 117 E. C. L. 56, it was said: "It is difficult to see how the words 'brought up as aforesaid' can apply where the registrar goes to the prisoner."

Will—When and So Soon as She shall Marry as Aforesaid.—Under a will a rent charge was devised to L. for life, subject to a restriction as to her marriage (mentioned in one of the preceding items of the will); the testator then said: "When and so soon as she shall marry as aforesaid, then upon trusts," etc. It was held that the clause "when and so soon as she shall marry as aforesaid" did not make the marriage of L. according to the terms of the previous devise to her a condition precedent to the vesting of the estates. Beaumont v. Squire, 17 Q. B. 906, 79 E. C. L. 906.

Will—Her Part Aforesaid.—Testator devised as follows: "I give and bequeath to my daughter, Mary Gell, all the houses, out-houses, garden and other property which I now hold under the trustees of the poor of the township of Almondbury, for the term of 999 years; and I also give one half part of my books to my daughter, Mary Gell, aforesaid, the other half to my widow, Sarah Gell, to be equally divided by T. S. If my daughter Mary should happen to die unmarried, it is my will then that her part aforesaid shall be equally divided," etc. Abbott, C. J., said: "I think the expression 'her part aforesaid' applies to the whole, which by the former part of the will had been given to the daughter." Doe v. Gell, 2 B. & C. 680, 9 E. C. L. 218.

Will—Under Age as Aforesaid.—Where a will having contemplated the possibility of the death of testator's daughter under twenty-one years of age without leaving a husband, gave certain directions "in case of the death of his daughter under age as aforesaid," it was held that "as aforesaid" meant "under age and not leaving a husband." Weddell v. Mundy, 6 Ves. Jr. 341.

Will—Gift for Life.—A successive gift in manner aforesaid following a prior gift for life was held also to be a gift for life. Doe v. Woodall, 3 C. B. 349, 54 E. C. L. 349.

Aforesaid in the Sense of Such.—For the use of "as aforesaid" in the sense of "such," see Walker v. Petchell, 1 C. B. 652, 50 E. C. L. 652.

Time Aforesaid.—A sheriff's deed recited that the grantor, having taken on execution the equity of redemption which J. S. had at 9 A.M. on January 27, 1865, "being the time when the same was attached on mesne process," in certain land, having given specified notices, and "having for sufficient cause duly adjourned the sale once not exceeding seven days," sold the said equity on December 23, 1865. The grant in the deed was of all the right to redeem which J. S. had at the "time aforesaid." It was held that the "time aforesaid" referred to the time of attachment, and not to the day of sale. Sanborn v. Chamberlin, 101 Mass. 409.

AFORETHOUGHT.—Premeditated, or thought of before.²

From the Day and Year Aforesaid.—It has been held that "from" was to be taken as including the day on which the contract containing the above clause was entered into. Wilkinson v. Gaston, 9 Q. B. 137, 58 E. C. L. 137.

Voyage or Voyages Aforesaid.—The United States chartered a vessel to go to N. and return. It was further stipulated that the charter should continue so long as the vessel was required by the United States. The United States also agreed to employ the vessel "for the voyage or voyages aforesaid." It was held that the contract only embraced the employment of the vessel when on such voyage or voyages, and did not extend to demurrage. Mitchell v. U. S., 96 U. S. 162. See the titles CHARTER-PARTY; DEMURRAGE.

1. Simpson v. Robert, 35 Ga. 181; Rex v. Bellamy, 1 B. & C. 505, 8 E. C. L. 214.

The words "as aforesaid" do not necessarily apply to the preceding section alone, but may refer to others also. Reg. v. Eastern Counties R. Co., 2 Q. B. 347, 42 E. C. L. 706.

So as Aforesaid.—In Reg. v. Craddock, T. & M. 361, Williams, J., was of the opinion that the words "so as aforesaid" meant "as I said before;" but Pollock, C.B., doubted whether they were intended to refer to the matter immediately preceding.

The National Bank Act Provides that "every association may take, receive, reserve, and charge on any loan or discount made, or upon any note, bill of exchange, or other evidences of debt, interest at the rate allowed by the laws of the state or territory where the bank is located. * * * And when no rate is fixed by the laws of the state or territory, the bank may take, receive, reserve, or charge a rate not exceeding seven per centum, and such interest may be taken in advance, reckoning the days for which the note, bill, or other evidence of debt has to run. And the knowingly taking, receiving, reserving, or charging a rate of interest greater than aforesaid shall be held and adjudged a forfeiture," etc. The question before the court was whether aforesaid applied only to the immediately preceding clause, "when no rate is fixed by the laws of the state or territory," or to the whole section. It was held that there was no rule of grammatical construction which limited its reference to the paragraph immediately preceding. Central Nat. Bank v. Pratt, 115 Mass. 544, 15 Am. Rep. 138. See also Hintermister v. Chittenango First Nat. Bank, 64 N. Y. 212, overruling Whitehall First Nat. Bank v. Lamb, 50 N. Y. 95, 10 Am. Rep. 438; also the title NATIONAL BANKS.

2. Malice Aforethought. (See the title MURDER.)—"Premeditated" and aforethought are synonymous, and 'premeditated malice' and 'malice aforethought' are in sense and meaning the same." Edwards v. State, 25 Ark. 446; People v. Ah Choy, 1 Idaho 319; State v. Curtis, 70 Mo. 598.

In Brannigan v. People, 3 Utah 493, the court said: "Webster says, 'To premeditate is to think, consider, resolve in the mind beforehand; to have formed in the mind by previous thought or meditation; previously contrived, designed, or intended; deliberate; wilful.' That is, 'premeditated' includes within its meaning meditation and deliberation. He says that 'aforethought is premeditated; prepenze; as malice aforethought.' That is, aforethought includes premeditated; malice aforethought is malice premeditated; and that malice premeditated is malice aforethought. He uses them interchangeably. Bouvier says 'premeditation' is a 'design formed to commit a crime, or to do some other thing, before it is done. A deliberation and a continual persistence which indicates more perversity than will.' That is, premeditation is more than will, and includes deliberation. He says: 'Aforethought is premeditated, prepenze; that is, aforethought includes premeditation.' Both of these standard authors give substantially the same or equal force and effect to the meaning of the word aforethought that they do to the word 'premeditated.'"

The legal meaning of malice aforethought in cases of homicide is not confined to homicide committed in cold blood, with settled design and premeditation, but extends to all cases of homicide, however sudden the occasion, when the act is done with such cruel circumstances as are ordinary symptoms of a wicked, depraved, and malignant spirit. U. S. v. Cornell, 2 Mason (U. S.) 91.

"Murder is the voluntary killing of any person, of malice prepenze or aforethought, either express or implied by law; the sense of which word 'malice' is not only confined to a particular ill-will to the deceased, but is intended to denote, as Mr. Justice Foster expresses it, an action flowing from a wicked and corrupt motive, a thing done malo animo." East P. C., c. 5, § 2, quoted in Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 306, 52 Am. Dec. 711.

So malice aforethought is not so properly spite or malevolence to the deceased in particular, as any evil design in general; the dictate of a wicked, depraved, and malignant heart. State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 404, 6 Am. Rep. 533; Com. v. Drum, 58 Pa. St. 9; Jones v. State, 29 Ga. 594.

3. Action for Slander.—"The statement that the plaintiff had been caught afoul of a cow does not warrant the innuendo that he was guilty of the crime of bestiality. The most usual signification of the word 'foul,' as an adjective, is unclean, filthy, dirty. The phrase 'to fall foul' is not an uncommon one. The definition of it given in Webster's Dictionary is, to rush on with haste, rough force, and unreasonable violence; to run against, as, 'the ship fell foul of her consort.' Dr. Johnson gives the following example: 'In his sallies, their men might fall foul of each other.' If the defendant had been in the practice, by the words laid, to impute the crime of bestiality, or if he had used them on this occasion in that sense, and they were so understood by the hearers, there should have been a special averment to that effect." Harper v. Delp, 3 Ind. 231.

AFRICAN.—See NEGRO; MULATTO; COLORED PERSONS; and the titles SLAVERY; CIVIL RIGHTS; SCHOOLS.

AFTER. (See also the title TIME, COMPUTATION OF.)—This word is used in reference to time to denote a sequence; it also refers to order in point of right or enjoyment; subject to.¹

1. Subject to Order in Point of Right or Enjoyment.—Where a clause in a will was: "It is my will that, after settling my estate, my wife have the interest of the remainder of my personal estate," the court said: "'After settling my estate' seems equivalent to 'subject to the settlement.' The word after does not always or necessarily refer to time, but to order in point of right or enjoyment." Lamb v. Lamb, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 378. See also King v. King, 14 R. I. 146.

In Hooper v. Hooper, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 128, the fourth clause of the will was: "I give to my sons each one ninth part of my estate, real and personal, after providing for the bequest to my wife." It was said that the word after used in such a connection is often and properly construed to mean "subject to," "after taking out, deducting, or appropriating."

In Treadwell v. Cordis, 5 Gray (Mass.) 353, it was said: "The term after does not always designate the time at which one thing is to be done in reference to something else, but it expresses the relative priority and subordination of one claim to another in matter of right. So we think it does here; the residue is to be formed subject to the payment of debts and charges, although they may be actually paid afterwards."

"Many cases turn upon the use of the term after in a will; that is, after the payment of debts and legacies, as if that fixed the time for the payment of the residue. Here, it may be remarked, that phraseology is not used, but when that phrase is used it is obvious that it does not necessarily or commonly fix the time of payment, but rather the order and priority of claims." Minot v. Amory, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 387.

After the Payment. (See also the titles LEGACIES AND DEVICES; WILLS.)—The words in a will, "after my debts and funeral charges are paid, I devise and bequeath as follows," amount to a charge upon the real estate for the payment of debts. Fenwick v. Chapman, 9 Fet (U. S.) 461.

In Shallcross v. Finden, 3 Ves. Jr. 738, Arden, M.R., said: "The words 'after payment of my debts' mean that he will not give anything until his debts are paid. He could not help paying his debts out of his personal estate; he could not give a pecuniary legacy, but after his debts paid. Therefore, if I do not make that construction, part of the will is perfectly nugatory. I agree that if a testator does manifest in any part of his will that his debts shall be paid, they are to be paid before any disposition of what he has power to dispose of. 'After payment of his debts' means that until his debts are paid he gives nothing; that everything he has shall be subject to his debts. To give those words any effect, they must charge the real estate. I am very clearly of opinion that wherever a testator says he wills that his debts shall be paid, that will ride over every disposition, either as against his heir-at-law or devisee; and the words 'after my debts paid' mean the same thing."

Where a testator directed his trustees to pay the annual sum of one hundred pounds to his mother for life, and from and "after the payment" of the said annual sum of one hundred pounds, and subject thereto, he declared that they should stand possessed of his estate upon trusts, the income of the whole estate proving insufficient to pay the annuity, it was held that the terms of the gift over made the annuity a charge upon the corpus, out of which it must be paid annually. Birch v. Sherratt, L. R. 2 Ch. 644.

After in Sense of Upon.—A contract to pass title to a chattel after payment of the purchase price is by the law regarded as if it read "upon" such payment. However, the promise on the one part cannot be enforced until that on the other part is performed. Hawley v. Kenoyer, 1 Wash. Ter 609.

After the Fact Committed—Trespass—Illegal Distraint.—Under the statute 53 Geo. III., c. 127, § 12, which requires that an action for anything done in pursuance of the act shall be commenced within three calendar months after the fact committed, an action of trespass for seizing, taking and carrying away, and distraining and selling the plaintiff's goods, under a warrant of distress for arrears of a church rate, may be brought within three calendar months after the sale. For, said the court: "The fact committed under color or in pursuance of the statute is not merely the seizure, but the sale also. The seizure of the goods is made not absolutely, but with a view to their detention only until the amount should be paid, and their subsequent sale if it should not; and the seizure, when a sale has taken place, is but a part of the entire act complained of, and which forms the real grievance to the plaintiff. And this circumstance distinguishes the present case from those in which the seizure was for a forfeiture, and was in its nature absolute, and must be considered as intended to deprive the plaintiff of his property immediately." Collins v. Rose, 5 M. & W. 194.

After Conviction. (See also CONVICTION, and the title PARDON.)—Under the governor's

The word "after," like "from," "succeeding," "subsequent," and similar words, where it is not expressly declared to be exclusive or inclusive, is suscep-power to grant a pardon conferred by the Constitution of Virginia, art. 4, § 5, which declares that "he shall have power to remit fines and penalties in such cases, and under such rules and regulations, as may be prescribed by law; and, except when the prosecution has been carried on by the house of delegates, to grant reprieves and pardons after conviction," it was held that the governor has authority to pardon a person "convicted" of a felony by a verdict of the jury, before sentence is passed upon him by the court. Moncure, J., said: "It thus appears that the word 'conviction,' as used in our laws, ordinarily signifies the finding of the jury by verdict that the prisoner is guilty, or something equivalent thereto; but the word sometimes denotes the final judgment." Blair v. Com., 25 Gratt. (Va.) 850.

Under a similar provision it was held that a pardon may be granted pending an appeal; and when the case is called for argument upon the merits, the pardon may be pleaded in bar, since the words "after conviction" denote a verdict of guilty rendered by a jury. State v. Alexander, 76 N. Car. 231, 22 Am. Rep. 675.

In Arkansas it has been held that the power to pardon "after conviction," vested in the governor by the Constitution of 1864, is not prohibitory of the exercise of that power by the legislature before conviction. State v. Nichols, 26 Ark. 74, 7 Am. Rep. 600.

After Repairs.—A lease provided that all after repairs were to be at the expense of the lessee. The court, in construing this, said: "To what does the word after refer? It is very clear—to all the expenses which may be necessary after the property is thoroughly repaired. Thus the contract is, that the lessor shall put it in complete order, and the lessee shall keep it so until the termination of the lease." Mattocks v. Cullum, 6 Pa. St. 457.

After the Passing or Passage. (See also the title STATUTES.)—An act in contemplation of law comes into effect from the commencement of the day on which it received the royal assent; and inasmuch as the law takes no notice of the fractions of a day, where the right of a single woman who is delivered of a bastard child to apply for an order of affiliation depends on the birth of her child "after the passing of the act," it is sufficient if the child is born on the day the act receives the royal assent. Tomlinson v. Bullock, 4 Q. B. Div. 230.

"From the impracticability of deciding at what particular moment of time the president gives his seal to a bill, we have never heard of such inquiry being made, and the least which courts have ever said on such occasions is that where an act is to take place from the day of its passing, * * * it must embrace the whole of that day." U. S. v. Williams, 1 Paine (U. S.) 261.

"The statute was to take effect from its passage; and it is a general rule that where the computation is to be made from an act done, the day on which the act is done is to be included." Arnold v. U. S., 9 Cranch (U. S.) 120.

After Which.—The terms "after which," "whereupon," "upon which," are interchangeable. Lee v. Cook, 1 Wyoming 419.

After Verdict.—The statute Geo. IV., c. 50, enacts that the party who shall apply for a special jury shall pay the costs occasioned thereby, unless the judge before whom the cause is tried shall immediately after the verdict certify that the cause was proper to be tried by a special jury. It was held that a defendant who had applied for a special jury was not entitled to the costs of that jury, where the judge who tried the cause nonsuited the plaintiff on his opening, even though the judge had certified as above. Wood v. Grimwood, 10 B. & C. 700, 21 E. C. L. 151.

After Work.—Under a fire-insurance policy which required an examination of the mill "thirty minutes after work," it was held that the assured were bound, by their representation that the mill was examined thirty minutes after work, to make such examination thirty minutes after the extra work as well as after regular work; and also that the question what is a cessation of work at the factory, from which the thirty minutes are to be computed, is a question for the jury, under all the circumstances of each particular case. Houghton v. Manufacturers' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 8 Met. (Mass.) 114, 41 Am. Dec. 489. See the title FIRE INSURANCE.

After Death.—"Generally a bequest after the death of a particular person, to whom an antecedent interest is given in the same will, is held not to denote a condition that the legatee shall survive such a person, not to define when the interest shall vest, but only to mark the time when the gift shall take effect in possession, that possession being deferred merely on account of the life interest limited to the person on whose death the gift is to take full effect. See note to Malin v. Keighley, 2 Ves. Jr. 335, and cases there collected; King v. King, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 205." Chew's Appeal, 37 Pa. St. 29.

After Date. (See also the titles BILLS AND NOTES; DATE; TIME, COMPUTATION OF.)—"It is entirely clear, from Pugh v. Leeds, Cowp. 714, that the words 'from' or 'after the date,' or 'the day of the date,' include the day when they are used in a conveyance to create an estate; but it is just as clear, from other cases about to be noticed, that they exclude it when they are used in an instrument to perpetuate the evidence of a debt. Indeed, it seems, from what is said in Preston on Conveyancing, p. 387, that the distinction sprung out of that decision, previous to which the general rule was to exclude the day in both cases. * * * It is now a settled rule that as the law rejects fractions of a day, it views it for most purposes as an indivisible point, and consequently that 'the date,' or 'the day of the date,' being coextensive with tible of different significations, and is used in different senses and with an exclusive or inclusive meaning, according to the subject to which it is applied; and as it would deprive it of some of its proper significations to affix one invariable meaning to it in all cases, it would, of course, in many of them, pervert it from the sense of the writer or speaker. Its true meaning therefore, in any particular case, must be collected from the context and subject matter, which are the only means by which the intention is ascertained.¹

the entire day, excludes it when it occurs in a bill, note, or bond." Taylor v. Jacoby, 2 Pa. St. 495, 45 Am. Dec. 615.

The words in the Stamp Act, 55 Geo. III., c. 184, schedule pt. 1 (title "Bill of Exchange"), which imposes a certain duty on bills "exceeding two months after date," mean the time expressed on the face of the bill, not the time when it actually issued. Williams v. Jarrett, 5 B. & Ad 32, 27 E. C. L. 26.

The words "after date of appointment," and "from such date," which occur in § 1556 of the U. S. Rev. Stat., fixing the annual pay of passed assistant surgeons of the navy, refer not to the original entry of the officer into the service as an assistant surgeon, but to the notification by the secretary of the navy that he has passed his examination for promotion to the grade of surgeon, and will thereafter, until such promotion, be considered a passed assistant surgeon. U. S. v. Moore, 95 U. S. 760.

Within and After.—"For the space of one month after the return day," and "within one month from the return day," are equivalent expressions. Gore v. Hedges, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 521.

After Peace.—The words "ten days after peace is made between the United States and the Confederate States," used in a bond to specify the time at which the money is payable, means "ten days after peace," and does not render the ratification of a treaty of peace between the powers mentioned a condition precedent to the payment. Chapman v. Wacaser, 64 N. Car. 532.

Sunday. (See also the title SUNDAY.)—On the question, under the Georgia statute giving four days within which appeals may be entered, as to whether Sunday is to be counted as one of the "four days after," etc., the court said: "Our judgment, therefore, is that four clear days, as they are called in the old books, or working days, as they might perhaps be more appropriately designated, are allowed for entering appeals; and that whether Sunday be the first or last or an intervening day, it is not to be counted." Neal v. Crew, 12 Ga. 100.

After Judgment.—Under a motion by persons who had given bond, under Stat. 1 and 2 Vict., c. 110, § 8 (for abolition of arrest on mesne process), to be allowed to render their principal after verdict against him and before judgment (said section reading as follows: "If a creditor of a trader shall file an affidavit in the court of bankruptcy that his debt is justly due, * * * and if such trader shall not within twenty-one days * * * enter into a bond * * * to pay * * * or to render himself * * * according to the practice of such court * * * after judgment shall have been recovered," etc.), the court said: "Some doubt existed as to the words 'after judgment' in the eighth section; namely, whether they apply to the whole preceding matter or not; as to which we think that, at all events, they do not apply to a render 'according to the practice of such court;' and as bail would by that practice have been at liberty to render a defendant after verdict and before judgment, we think that the obligors in this bond must be at liberty to do the same." Owston v. Coates, 10 Ad. & El. 193, 37 E. C. L. 88.

An order discharging a defendant from imprisonment, under "the act for the relief of persons imprisoned on civil process," though entered by the judge of another court, who is authorized by law to take jurisdiction of such proceedings, is a "special order made after final judgment," within the meaning of the three hundred and thirty-sixth section of the Practice Act, and an appeal therefrom taken more than sixty days after the entry of the order is too late. Wells v. Anthony, 35 Cal. 696.

1. Sands v. Lyon, 18 Conn. 27. To the same effect see State v. Mounts, 36 W. Va. 190; Arnold v. U. S., 9 Cranch (U. S.) 119; Pearpoint v. Graham, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 240; Webster v. French, 12 Ill. 304. See also the title TIME, COMPUTATION OF.

Exclusive of First Day.—Where a statute enacted that warrants of attorney to confess judgment should be filed "within twenty-one days after the execution," it was held that the twenty-one days for filing are to be reckoned exclusive of the day of execution. Williams v. Burgess, 12 Ad. & El. 635, 40 E. C. L. 142.

"The language of the statute is that writs of fi. fa. may be issued, etc., 'after the expiration of thirty days from the entry of such judgment.' According to the rule of construing statutes adopted by this court, the computation of the thirty days excludes the day of entering the judgment; in other words, as to the first and last days, one is to be counted exclusively and the other inclusively." Commercial Bank v. Ives, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 355. See also Butts v. Edwards, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 164; Page v. Weymouth, 47 Me. 238; Judd v. Fulton, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 117; Sheets v. Selden, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 190.

Where an act has to be done within so many days after a given event, the day of such event is not to be reckoned, and the party to do the act has the whole of the last day of the described time in which to do it. Williams v. Burgess, 10 L. J. Q. B. 10, 13 Ad. & El. 635, 40 E. C. L. 142; Robinson v. Waddington, 18 L. J. Q. B. 250. And if a time after an event has to expire before something else is done, that means clear time. Blunt v. Heslop, 7 L. J. Q. B. 216, 8 Ad. & El. 577, 35 E. C. L. 461.

1. Intoxicating Liquors. (See also the title INTOXICATING LIQUORS).—Under an act of parliament prohibiting the keeping open a place for the sale of liquor during "the usual hours of afternoon divine service" in the parish church, where the evening service was read in the church at six P.M., but there was an afternoon service at two P.M. in the parish workhouse, and the innkeeper had his place open for the reception of customers at half-past six o'clock P.M., Erle, J., said: "The question is, What was the usual hour of afternoon divine service? The word afternoon has two senses. It may mean the whole time from noon to midnight, or it may mean the earlier part of that time as distinguished from the evening. I think that in this act it is used in the latter sense, and that the intention of the legislature was to prohibit the opening of public-houses during the usual hour of divine service in the afternoon, if there was one in the church. In Newport Pagnell divine service was in the workhouse." Crompton, J., said: "The legislature has not said that it shall be penal to keep open an inn during evening service, but during afternoon divine service. * * * Was, then, this evening service, performed at six o'clock, afternoon service? No; it certainly was evening service. In the parish of Newport Pagnell since 1836 there is no afternoon service in the church; it is in the workhouse; and the hours at which the evening service is performed in the church are no more the usual hours of afternoon divine service than they would be if the afternoon divine service, instead of being performed in the workhouse, was performed in the church." The conviction was quashed. Reg. v. Knapp, 2 El. & Bl. 447, 75 E. C. L. 447.

Same—Complaint.—In People v. Husted, 52 Mich. 626, it was held that a complaint for not closing a saloon "at the hour of nine o'clock" on a specified day, and for keeping it open "until twenty minutes past eleven o'clock in the afternoon of said day," was not bad for failing to show that nine o'clock at night was meant, and for using the word afternoon. The court said: "Counsel for defendant insists that the complaint names an impossible time, and he cites Webster's and Worcester's unabridged dictionaries to prove that the word afternoon signifies from 'noon' until 'evening,' and that 'night' is the time from sunset until sunrise. Accurately and properly speaking the definitions are correct.

But we think the distinction as applied to the complaint in this case is too critical. The pleader was not referring to the period of time between 'noon' and 'evening,' but to the hours that had elapsed since the hour of noon, and when that is stated to be until twenty minutes past eleven o'clock, it is pretty certain that in this latitude it was after the hour of nine o'clock at night."

Adjournment—Hour.—In Edwards v. Hance, 12 N. J. L. 108, it was held that if a justice, after hearing a cause, takes time to consider the same, he must either make an adjournment to a regular day and hour, or give notice to the parties of the day and hour when judgment will be rendered; and it is not sufficient that the justice should say that he will render judgment on Monday afternoon.

2. As Soon Afterwards as Practicable. (See also SOON; REASONABLE TIME; and the title FIRE INSURANCE.)—Under a Canadian statute requiring the assured to give notice of his loss, and to deliver "as soon afterwards as practicable" a particular account, it has been held that the words "as soon afterwards as practicable" mean within a reasonable time. Parsons v. Queen Ins. Co., 43 U. C. Q. B. 271. See also Cammell v. Beaver, etc., Mut. F. Ins. Co., 39 U. C. Q. B. 1.

Immediately Afterwards.—Where an act of parliament prohibited the recovery of any costs on a verdict of less than forty shillings, unless the judge certified "immediately afterwards" on the back of the record that the trespass was malicious, etc., it was held that "immediately afterwards" meant within a reasonable time, and that a delay of ten days, during which no application was made to the judge, although there was nothing to prevent it, was not a compliance with the statute, and that a certificate made after such lapse of time was too late and must be set aside. Forsdike v. Stone, L. R. 3 C. P. 607.

There Afterwards—Assault and Battery.—A count in a declaration, after stating the assault by the defendant, alleged that he beat the plaintiff with a plank, and there afterwards continued his assault with four parts of a two-and-a-half-inch rope. It was held that the count was not defective as alleging assault and battery with a continuando. The court said: "Unless the declaration can be shown to allege the trespass with a continuando in form, there is no ground for arresting the judgment. An action is said to be laid with a continuando when the injury is alleged to have been committed by continuation from one day to another, or at divers days and times between such a day and such a day. It does not appear that the trespass in this case is so alleged as to be brought within the legal and technical import of a continuando. 'There afterwards continuing his said assault' may be understood to imply nothing more than a continuance of the trespass, without intermission of time longer than was sufficient to change the instruments used; first beating the plaintiff with the plank, and afterwards with the rope; he continuing, the whole time of the beating with both the instruments, lashed over the cask, so that there never was a cessation of the first assault nor of the beating." Benson v. Swift, 2 Mass. 53.

Synonym of Thereafter.—In Sleigh v. Strider, 5 Call (Va.) 442, the court said: "The word afterwards can never be applied but to a thing spoken of before. * * * If the sense contended for by Mr. Call were the proper sense of the law, the word afterwards would be construed as the word 'hereafter.' But I am confident that there is not a lexicon in the English language in which it will be found in that sense. Its synonym is 'thereafter.'"

1. Where an indictment charged that the defendant "in and upon one" A B, "did feloniously, purposely, and with premeditated malice make an assault, and then and there, at and against the said" A B, "did feloniously, purposely, and with premeditated malice shoot a certain pistol, then and there loaded with gunpowder and leaden shot, which he," the defendant, "then and there in his hand had and held, with intent," etc., the court held that the indictment sufficiently charged an assault and battery, saying: "The particular meaning of the word against depends, to a very considerable extent, on the connection in and the purposes for which it is used. To push or run against a person implies, in common parlance, a coming in contact or collision with the person so pushed or run against. To say that a stone was hurled at and against a person would very naturally make the impression that such person was hit by the stone. It is said that where one person wilfully pushes a drunken man against another person, from which an injury ensues, it constitutes an assault and battery. See 1 Russell on Crimes 1021. Although the words used in this indictment are not the most appropriate that might have been selected for the purpose, we are of the opinion that an assault and battery is sufficiently charged against the appellee." State v. Prather, 54 Ind. 63.

Testifying Against. (See also the title WITNESSES).—In Seabright v. Seabright, 28 W. Va. 415, it was held that the word against, as testifying against executors, administrators, heirs-at-law, etc., did not mean on opposite sides of the suit, but as having opposite interests in the suit. See also Coffman v. Hedrick, 32 W. Va. 124.

The exception, in the statute removing the disqualification of parties as witnesses, that neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to transactions with a deceased person, does not prevent a party from being called to testify for the other. Dudley v. Steele, 71 Ala. 426.

Proceedings Against. (See also the title UNITED STATES COURTS).—The Revised Statutes of the United States provide that, pending habeas corpus in the federal courts, or appeals thereupon, the proceedings in a state court against the prisoner shall be deemed null and void. It was held that the settlement of a state of facts at the request of the defendant and a hearing of an appeal brought by him were not proceedings against him. State v. Humason, 4 Wash. 413. The court in that case said: "No precedent in such a case as this is cited to our attention, but we are inclined, under the circumstances, not to grant the motion. It is clear that, inasmuch as the appellant had voluntarily betaken himself to another and a superior jurisdiction for the adjudication of the question at issue, he had no right to demand or have, at the hands of the superior judge, any action whatever in his case. But the action taken was not one against him in the sense of the statute. He moved for it himself, no objection was made by the other side, and the act of settling the statement was performed solely for his benefit, and no possible result of the action can make his condition worse than it was before."

Against the Form of the Statute. (For an exhaustive treatment of this subject see ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR., title INDICTMENT).—Technical words which must be used in framing an indictment for a breach of the statute complained of.

If one statute subjects an act to a pecuniary penalty, and a subsequent statute makes it a felony, an indictment for the felony concluding "against the form of the statute" (in the singular number only) is right. Rex v. Pim, Russ. & R. C. C. 425. To the same effect is State v. Wilbor, 1 R. I. 199, 36 Am. Dec. 245.

Where, in trover by the assignees of a bankrupt, the defendant pleaded that before the bankruptcy he advanced the bankrupt a sum of money upon the deposit of the goods in respect of which the action was brought, and the assignees filed a replication that it was corruptly and "against the form of the statute," and agreed between the defendant and the bankrupt that the latter should pay the defendant for the loan of the money £10 per cent, it was held, on a special demurrer, that the averment of the contract being against the form of the statute was not a sufficient allegation that it was illegal; and that the replication should have alleged what particular statute it was in contravention of. Turquand v. Moseden, 7 M. & W. 504.

In an action upon the case for infringement of copyright, although the court refused to allow a count founded on a common-law right to be joined with counts under a statute upon the same cause of action, it was held that, notwithstanding the words "against the form of the statute" in counts framed upon the statute, a plaintiff might give in evidence, under those counts, an infringement of his common-law right. Boozey v. Tolkien, 5 C. B. 476, 57 E. C. L. 476.

Same—North Carolina.—The constitution of North Carolina omitted the provision that an indictment should conclude "against the peace and dignity of the state." In State v. Kirkman, 104 N. Car. 911, it was held that a judgment would not be arrested for the omission of the words. The court said: "The omission in the present constitution of the requirement that indictments shall conclude 'against the peace and dignity of the state,' was not made without a purpose, and is in accord with the manifest tendency to simplify criminal as well as civil proceedings, and to try all causes upon their merits, stripped of useless refinements and technicalities, which never aid, and often hinder, the due administration of justice. This tendency is shown in many decisions of this court, which hold to be sufficient indictments concluding 'against the act of assembly,' 'against the statute,' 'against the form of the statute,' etc. (State v. Tribatt, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 151; State v. Moses, 2 Dev. (N. Car.) 452; State v. Smith, 63 N. Car. 234; State v. Evans, 69 N. Car. 40; State v. Davis, 80 N. Car. 384.) In State v. Parker, 81 N. Car. 531, above cited, the court held sufficient an indictment concluding 'against the peace and dignity,' omitting the words 'of the state,' though it would seem that the omitted words were precisely the material ones required by the constitutional provision of 1776."

Complaint.—Where a complaint was made in this form: "F., on oath, complains against P., at M., on the first of February in the year 1844 did sell to C. one glass of spirituous liquors," etc., it was held that the word against might be rejected as surplusage, and that the complaint without that word was sufficient. Com. v. Penniman, 8 Met. (Mass.) 519.

Against her Will. (See also the title RAPE.)—In statutes defining the crime of rape, this expression means "without her consent," and the crime is committed if the woman's consent has not been obtained, even though no violence has been used. "The earlier and more weighty authorities," says Gray, J., in a case where a woman had been ravished while insensible, "show that the words 'against her will,' in the standard definitions, mean exactly the same thing as 'without her consent;' and that the distinction between these phrases, as applied to this crime, which has been suggested in some modern books, is unfounded. * * * We are therefore unanimously of the opinion that the crime which the evidence in this case tended to prove, of a man's having carnal intercourse with a woman without her consent, while she was, as he knew, wholly insensible, so as to be incapable of consenting, and with such force as was necessary to accomplish the purpose, was rape." Com. v. Burke, 105 Mass. 376, 7 Am. Rep. 531. To the same effect are Fizell v. State, 25 Wis. 364; Whittaker v. State, 50 Wis. 521, 36 Am. Dec. 856; Com. v. Burke, 105 Mass. 380, 7 Am. Rep. 531.

So the inducing a woman, by misrepresentation, fraud, and falsehood, to go to the house where she was defiled, although no force was used to take her there, is within the provision of the New York statute (2 Rev. Stat. 664, § 25) declaring the punishment for the offense of taking a "woman unlawfully, against her will, with the intent to compel her by force, menace, or duress to be defiled." Beyer v. People, 86 N. Y. 369.

In the Sense of Without.—In a devise on marrying "with consent," followed by a gift over on marrying against consent, the latter word was construed as "without" to effect the alternative. Long v. Ricketts, 2 Sim. & S. 179; Creagh v. Wilson, 2 Vern. 573.

Against Law. (See also ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR., titles NEW TRIAL; VERDICT.)—Where it appears that the jury, in rendering their verdict, must either have disregarded the law as given in the instructions of the court, or else have found a fact wholly contrary to the evidence, the verdict is "against law." Sweeney v. Central Pac. R. Co., 57 Cal. 15.

Whatever else may be meant by the expression "decision against law," we think there is no doubt that it includes a case where the decision is based upon findings which do not determine all of the material issues of fact raised by the pleadings. Knight v. Roche, 56 Cal. 18.

When a court draws erroneous conclusions of law from its finding of facts, it is a "decision against law," for which a new trial should be granted under Code Civ. Pro., § 657, subdiv. 6. Simmons v. Hamilton, 56 Cal. 493.

In the Extradition Act of 1870 (33 and 34 Vict., c. 52), which enumerated as extraditable crimes "crimes by bankrupts against bankruptcy law," no mention was made of accessories; and in 1873 it was held that this could not be extended to complicity, by a person not himself a bankrupt, in a fraudulent bankruptcy. In re Counhay, L. R. 8 Q. B. 410.

An English act of 1873 authorized that indictable offenses under the laws for the time being in force in relation to bankruptcy might be made the subject of extradition treaties. By such a treaty, among other crimes for which extradition was to be granted were "crimes against bankruptcy law." A warrant for the apprehension of a fugitive criminal by virtue of such a treaty, which described the offense as "the commission of crimes against bankruptcy law" within the jurisdiction of the foreign power demanding the extradition, was held good. Ex p. Terraz, 4 Exch. Div. 63.

The words, "any crime or offense against the laws of China," in the provision of the Hong Kong ordinance No. 2 of 1850, must be limited to those ordinary crimes and offenses which are punished by the laws of all nations, and which are not peculiar to the laws of China. Atty.-Gen. v. Kwok-a-Sing, L. R. 5 P. C. 179.

A verdict contrary to an instruction of the court upon a point of law is a verdict against law. Declez v. Save, 71 Cal. 553, citing Emerson v. Santa Clara County, 40 Cal. 546. In that case (Emerson v. Santa Clara County, 40 Cal. 546), Crockett, J., dissented because no injury had been done the party.

I. DEFINITION.—The term “age” signifies in the law those periods in the lives of persons of both sexes which enable them to do certain acts which, before they had arrived at those periods, they were prohibited from doing. As, for example, a male at the age of twelve years may take the oath of allegiance; at fourteen, which is his age of discretion, he may consent to marriage or choose his guardian; and at twenty-one he may alien his lands, goods, and chattels. A female at nine years of age is dowable; at twelve may consent to marriage; at fourteen is at years of discretion, and may choose a guardian; and at twenty-one may alien her lands, etc. But the full age of either male or female is twenty-one, until which time they are considered as infants.¹

II. TIME AT WHICH A CERTAIN AGE IS ATTAINED.—By a large number of authorities it is said that an infant attains the age of twenty-one on the first moment of the day next before the twenty-first anniversary of his birth, and this doctrine has the support of the United States cases.² On the contrary,

1. Brown's Law Dict.; Bouvier's Law Dict.; Co. Litt. 78.

“Twenty-one Years” and “Full Age.”—In Kohne's Estate, Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 408, it is said: “The phrases ‘arrive at twenty-one years’ and ‘arrive at full age’ are synonymous, and would convey to the mind identically the same idea in any question in which our tribunal were acting on our own citizens; and they must always be so considered, at least prima facie, when found in such an instrument as the present, executed by one of our own citizens, within our own territory, and operating on property exclusively within our own jurisdiction.”

(N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 192.

A person who was born on the eighth day of September, 1852, would become of the full age of twenty-one years if he should live to the seventh day of that month in 1873. He would be entitled to be considered as having attained his majority at the earliest minute of that day. Bardwell v. Purrington, 107 Mass. 425.

Illegal Voting.—In State v. Clarke, 3 Harr. (Del.) 557, a presentment was made against the defendant for illegal voting. The presentment set forth that defendant was born on the 7th of October, 1819, and voted at the election held on the 6th of October, 1840. It was held that the defendant was of full age at the time he voted and that the presentment must be quashed. The court said: “When can a person make a valid will; when can he execute a deed for land; when make any contract or do any act which a man may do, and an infant, that is, a person under the age of twenty-one years, cannot do? On this question the law is well settled; it admits of no doubt. A person is ‘of the age of twenty-one years’ the day before the twenty-first anniversary of his birthday. It is not necessary that he shall have entered upon his birthday, or he would be more than twenty-one years old. He is therefore of age the day before the anniversary of his birth; and as the law takes no notice of fractions of a day, he is necessarily of age the whole of the day before his twenty-first birthday; and upon any and every moment of that day may do any act which any man may lawfully do. (1 Chit. Gen. Prac. 766.) 'It is to be observed that a person becomes of age on the first instant of the last day of the twenty-first year next before the anniversary of his birth; thus, if a person were born at any hour of the first of January, A.D. 1801 (even a few minutes before twelve o'clock of the night of that day), he would be of full age at the first instant of the 31st of December, A.D. 1821, although nearly forty-eight hours before he had actually attained the full age of twenty-one, according to years, days, hours, and minutes; because there is not in law in this respect any fraction of a day; and it is the same whether a thing is done upon one moment of the day or another.'

Capacity to Commit Crime.—In Lenhart v. State (Tex. Crim. App., 1894), 27 S. W. Rep. 260, it was held, within a statute providing that the burden of proof should be on the state to show capacity to commit crime, where the person charged was between the age of nine and thirteen, that where the prisoner was born between twelve and two o'clock A. M. of October 27, 1880, and the crime was committed at ten o'clock at night October 26, 1893, he was thirteen years of age. The court said: "It is insisted that, under the evidence, appellant was between the ages of nine and thirteen years at the time of the burglary, and therefore the burden of proof was on the state to show appellant 'had discretion sufficient to understand the nature and illegality of the act constituting the offense.' Pen. Code, art. 34. If appellant was under thirteen years of age at the time the offense was committed, the contention is sound, and the court erred in refusing to give special instructions requested by appellant. If he had passed or reached that age, then the statute does not apply. The statute has fixed the age for the purpose indicated, and there is no question of legislative authority to do so. But the position is not well taken. He was thirteen years of age the day before the anniversary of his birthday. Such is the view expressed in all the authorities accessible."

3. Minor's Theory.—"By the common law, the precise period when one attains the age of twenty-one years is on the first moment of the twenty-first anniversary of his birth; for the law in general admits no fraction of a day (Sir Robert Howard's Case, 2 Salk. 625, 1 Ld. Raym. 480) and the doctrine of Blackstone and his annotator (1 Bl. Com. 463, and note 12), that full age is attained on the first moment of the day preceding such anniversary, depends on dicta only, is contrary to reason and good sense, is capable (by going back one day at a time) of being refuted by the reductio ad absurdum, and is at war with the only direct adjudication on the subject (Sir Robert Howard's Case, just mentioned).

"The confusion of thought in reference to the subject seems to arise from not distinguishing between the last moment of the day preceding the twenty-first anniversary of birth and the first moment of the anniversary itself. Hence it becomes customary to say loosely that the infant attains his age on the last moment of the day preceding, when in fact it is not so until that last moment is past and the first moment of the next day is begun. The conclusion is then drawn from this unwarranted assumption, that, as the law knows no fraction of a day, the infant is of age on the first moment of the day preceding the twenty-first anniversary of birth. But it is apparent that, if it is allowable to confound thus the first moment of the anniversary with the last moment of the day preceding, it is, by parity of reason, in like manner allowable to confound the first moment of such preceding day with the last moment of the day before that; and thus, as no fraction of a day is acknowledged, the party is of age on the first moment of this last-named day, and by parity of reason, on the first moment of the day before that, etc.; thus, it is apprehended, reducing the proposition to an absurdity.

"The citations in 1 Bl. Com. 463, note 12, all refer to the same case—Herbert v. Turball—which is reported most at large in 1 Keb. 589. The proposition is a mere dictum, not necessary to the decision of the case, nor, so far as it appears, involved in it at all; and, although not denied (for there was no occasion to contest it), was stated by only two of the four judges. In the case as reported in Raym. 84 the dictum is wholly omitted.

"The doctrine is repeatedly mentioned afterwards, as by Lord Holt in Fitz-Hugh v. Dennington, 2 Ld. Raym. 1094, and by the Court of C. B. in Roe v. Hersey, 3 Wils. 274, but always by way of illustration only, without any direct adjudication on the point." 1 Minor's Inst. 514.

Lile's Comment.—Professor Lile, in his Notes on 1 Minor's Institutes, p. 103, says: "It is indeed true that one may, in law, attain his majority before he is, in fact, twenty-one years old,—but not before the arrival of the twenty-first anniversary of his birth. Thus, if one were born at 11.59 P.M., on the first day of January, 1870, he would attain his majority at 12.01 A.M. on January 1, 1891,—twenty-three hours and fifty-eight minutes before he has actually lived twenty-one years,—because the law knows no fraction of a day. If he is twenty-one years of age at any moment of January 1, he is legally of age on every moment of that day. Whatever happens during the twenty-four hours of the day is, in law, considered as happening on the first moment of that day—the day being considered as a unit of time. But to say, in the case stated, that the propositus attains his majority on December 31, 1890, because the law knows no fraction of a day, is a non sequitur. And, as our author clearly shows, by such reasoning one may be proved to be twenty-one years old on the day before he was born. The day of which the law knows no fraction consists of the twenty-four hours between twelve o'clock midnight and twelve o'clock the next midnight, and not of any other combination of twenty-four hours that may be selected. And herein lies the fallacy of the rule laid down by Blackstone and his followers. They make a new and unwarranted combination of twenty-four hours, embracing parts of two days, and in attempting to apply the very reasonable maxim that the law knows no fraction of a day, they reach a conclusion as absurd as it is unwarranted."

Sir Robert Howard's Case.—Though Mr. Minor's reasoning is strong, the case cited by him, Howard's Case, 2 Salk. 625, hardly bears him out. That case was as follows: A policy of insurance was made to insure the life of Sir Robert Howard for one year from the day of the date thereof; the policy was dated on the 3d day of September, 1697. Sir Robert died on the 3d day of September, 1698, about one o'clock in the morning. Et per Holt, C.J., in an action hereupon it was ruled at the sittings at Guildhall: 1st. That from the day of the date excludes the day, but from the date includes it, so that the day of the date is excluded. 2d. That the law makes no fraction in a day; yet in this case, he dying after the commencement and before the end of the last day, the insurer is liable, because the insurance is for a year, and the year is not complete till the day be over. Yet if A. be born on the third day of September, and on the second day of September twenty-one years afterwards he makes his will, this is a good will; for the law will make no fraction of a day, and by consequence he was of age.

Redfield's Theory.—"Where a term of time is allowed for the accomplishment of any required duty, as a general thing, the full term is to be computed, exclusive of the day from which it is reckoned. Thus, if a period of accumulation is reckoned by years, it will be completed upon the recurrence of the anniversary of the day from which it is computed. Gorst v. Lowndes, 11 Sim. 434.

"But there seems to be one remarkable exception. The early case cited by Lord Holt, Ch.J., Fitz-Hugh v. Dennington, 6 Mod. 259, 2 Salk. 585, wherein his lordship said: 'It has been adjudged that if one be born on the first of February at eleven o'clock at night, and the last day of January in the one and twentieth year, at one of the clock in the morning, he makes his will and dies, yet such will is good, for he then was of age,' seems to have maintained its ground for nearly two centuries without question. * * * It is safe to say that this presents an unbroken array of authority which will not be liable to be affected by any dissent from us. But we feel compelled to declare that the rule thus established in computing the age of capacity seems to us to form a very singular departure, both from all other legal modes of computing time, and equally from the commonly received notions upon the subject. We cannot comprehend why this reckoning should be carried back any further, in computing a period from one's birth, than in computing the same period from his death, where the actual period may be carried back or forward, as the case may be, nearly a whole day. But to carry it back two full days beyond the real date, as the computation of the age of majority does, in certain contingencies, seems scarcely less than a blunder; which, for the good sense of the thing, we should be glad to see set right. It has also been decided that one attains his twenty-fifth year at the end of his twenty-fourth year. Grant v. Grant, 4 Y. & C. 256." Redfield on the Law of Wills, p. 19.

I. DEFINITIONS¹—1. Contract of Agency.—Agency² is the relation, created either by express or implied contract,³ or by law,⁴ whereby one party sui juris,⁵ called the principal, constituent, or employer, delegates the transaction of some lawful business, with more or less discretionary power, to another

1. Explanation of the Scope of this Title.—The treatment of the title "Agency" which is contained in the following pages is confined to an exhaustive presentation of the general principles of the subject. A statement of the law relating to the particular classes of agents, as "Auctioneers," "Brokers," etc., is to be found under other titles in this work, and is not within the limits or purpose of this article. Authorities upon these topics are used only as illustrating general doctrines. Occasionally precision of statement has rendered it necessary to point out and differentiate the rules of law peculiar to certain classes of agents; but this has been done only in connection with a general exposition of the subject in hand, and in all such cases the reader should refer for a complete discussion to the title treating of the special class of agents indicated. An examination of the table of cross-references given at the head of this article will, in connection with this explanation, indicate what the reader should or should not look for in these pages.

2. Story on Agency, § 3.

The Popular Idea of the Term "Agency" is a relation created by an agreement, express or implied, made between the parties before the performance of the act in question and with reference to it. Pells v. Snell, 31 Ill. App. 164.

Claim of Title in Principal Sufficient.—To constitute a valid agency, where property is its subject, it is not essential that the principal should have a legal or equitable title, or more than a naked claim of title. It may be created for the acquisition of title, legal or equitable, or for the protection of an asserted title. Hardenbergh v. Bacon, 33 Cal. 356.

Under the Civil Law—Mandate or Procuration.—A mandate is defined as "a contract of agency, by which the mandator confides a matter of business, or his business generally, to an agent called the mandatary. If the authority or appointment be in writing, the mandate is also called procuration. Mandatary qualifications exist where a person induces another to repose credit in a third person. It answers somewhat to our modern letter of credit." Century Dictionary.

Under the Codes—Georgia.—"The relation of principal and agent arises whenever one person, expressly or by implication, authorizes another to act for him, or subsequently ratifies the acts of another in his behalf." Ga. Code, § 2178.

California, Dakota, and Montana.—An agent is one who represents another, called the principal, in dealings with third persons. Such representation is called "agency." Cal. Code, § 2295; Dak. Code, § 1337; Mont. Code, § 3070. See Wisp v. Hazard, 66 Cal. 461.

Louisiana.—A mandate, procuration, or letter of attorney is an act by which one person gives powers to another to transact for him, and in his name, one or several affairs. A mandate may take place in five different manners: for the interest of the person granting it alone; for the joint interest of both parties; for the interest of a third person; for the interest of such third person and that of the party granting it; and finally, for the interest of the mandatary and a third person. La. Code, arts. 2985, 2986.

Ostensible Agency.—Under the California Code, as also under the codes of Dakota and Montana, agency is either actual or ostensible. An agency is actual when the agent is really employed by the principal. An agency is ostensible when the principal intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, causes a third person to believe another to be his agent who is not really employed by him. Cal. Civil Code, §§ 2298, 2299, 2300; Dak. Code, §§ 1340, 1341, 1342; Mont. Civil Code, §§ 3073, 3074, 3075. See further, as to the definition and application of ostensible agency, Wisp v. Hazard, 66 Cal. 460; Quinn v. Dresbach, 75 Cal. 159, 7 Am. St. Rep. 138; Robinson v. Nevada Bank, 81 Cal. 106; Quay v. Presidio, etc., R. Co., 82 Cal. 1; Harris v. San Diego Flume Co., 87 Cal. 526; Heald v. Hendy, 89 Cal. 634; World's Columbian Exposition v. Richards, 57 Ill. App. 601; Hurd v. Marple, 10 Ill. App. 418; Pardridge v. LaPries, 84 Ill. 51; Wilcox v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 24 Minn. 269; Farmers', etc., Bank v. Butchers', etc., Bank, 16 N. Y. 149, 69 Am. Dec. 678; Kasson v. Noltner, 43 Wis. 646. See also Green v. Hinkley, 52 Iowa 633.

See infra, this title, Nature and Extent of Authority.

The Law of Partnership is logically a branch of the law of agency. See Cox v. Hickman, 8 H. L. Cas., at pp. 303, 311; Worrall v. Munn, 5 N. Y. 240. See also the title PARTNERSHIP.

An agreement to manage the business of another for a certain per cent. of the income, bearing the same proportion of the losses, does not necessarily render the agent a partner. Grinton v. Strong, 148 Ill. 587.

3. Noyes v. Landon, 59 Vt. 569, 2 Kent's Com. 612.

The Contract of Mandate may be Tacit as well as Expressed, and the acts of the principal must be fairly and liberally construed toward those who contract with the agent as well as toward the agent; and where the law does not require the contract to be in writing, the power to execute it may be in the simplest form, and the intention of the parties may be gathered as much from their acts as from their agreements. Ball v. Bender, 22 La. Ann. 493.

4. As where the law authorizes the wife to pledge her husband's credit even against his will, see infra, this title, Appointment—Implied from the Relation of the Parties.

party, called the agent, attorney, proxy, or delegate, who undertakes to manage the affair and render to him an account thereof.¹

2. Principal.—The principal is the party whom the agent represents and from whom he derives his authority; he is the one primarily and originally concerned in the contract of agency.²

3. Agent.—The term "agent" is one of very wide application, and includes a great many classes of persons to which distinctive appellations are given—as factors, brokers, attorneys, cashiers of banks, clerks, consignees, etc.³ Indeed, any one who undertakes to transact some business or to manage some affair for another, by authority and on account of the latter, and to render an account of it, is denominated an agent.⁴ He is a substitute, a deputy, appointed by the principal, with power to do the things which the principal might or could do.⁵

Subagent.—A subagent is a person selected by an agent to perform a part or all of the duties of the employment.⁶

4. The Power or Authority.—The right on the part of the agent to act in the name or on behalf of another is termed his authority or power to act, and this, if conferred formally by an instrument in writing and under seal, is said to be conferred by a letter of attorney or power of attorney.⁷

Illustrations—Contracts Held to Constitute Relationship of Principal and Agent.—An agreement whereby a committee who were to represent creditors and were authorized to take possession of mines, employ men, purchase horses, carts, etc., prepare for market and sell kaolin, and appropriate the proceeds in accordance with the scheme of distribution adopted by the creditors and made a part of the agreement—said agreement fixing the committee's compensation and reserving a right to revoke their powers—was held not to be a mere license to work the mines, but a contract of agency. Hickman v. Bingaman (Pa., 1889), 17 Atl. Rep. 20.

Where money was furnished to a party with which to purchase grain, and the understanding was that his compensation should be a share of the property remaining after paying back the sum furnished, with eight per cent. interest, it was held not to be a loan, but a contract of agency, and that the grain so purchased belonged to the person who furnished the money. Van Sandt v. Dows, 63 Iowa 594, 50 Am. Rep. 759.

A contract between B. and S. stipulated that B. should appoint S. his agent for the sale of harvesters, for which S. was to pay one third in cash on delivery, and give his note for the balance. As he made sales he was to deduct the amount of cash advanced by him from the cash proceeds, and have the notes received by him made in the name of B., his own notes being taken up as he transmitted those of the parties to whom he sold. The court held that the relation between B. and S. was that of principal and agent, and that the transactions between them were not conditional sales. Bayliss v. Davis, 47 Iowa 340. See also Eldridge v. Benson, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 483.

Contracts Held Not to Constitute Relationship of Principal and Agent.—The plaintiffs gave to the defendant an option of five days to endeavor to sell a block of land for whatever sum it would bring, and upon whatever terms he might make, provided they should receive therefor the sum of ten thousand dollars, and agreed that defendant should have whatever sum he could realize from the land above that amount. The court held that the relation thus created between them was rather that of vendor and purchaser, under a contract of sale, than one of principal and agent. Robinson v. Easton, 93 Cal. 82.

It was held in Gibney v. Curtis, 61 Md. 192, that a person to whom goods are consigned to be sold, and who is at liberty to sell them at any price and on any terms he pleases, he paying a fixed price for them to the owner, is not an agent, but a vendee. See also Ex p. White, L. R. 6 Ch. 397.

5. Board v. Cronk, 6 N. J. L. 122.

"An Agent is a substitute, or a person employed to manage the affairs of another. The test on this inquiry is, Who derives the benefit? The person receiving goods or employing workmen, for his own advantage, is a principal; and he who receives or employs workmen for another, is an agent." Adams v. Whittlesey, 3 Conn. 567.

Peculiar Meaning of "Agent" may be Shown.—It is competent to show that a word has acquired a peculiar meaning in a certain business—as, for instance, "agent," in the piano trade; and to construe it accordingly when it is made use of in reference to that business. Whittemore v. Weiss, 33 Mich. 348.

II. CLASSES OF AGENTS.—Agents have various duties and liabilities, dependent upon the nature and extent of the authority delegated to them and the end sought to be accomplished by their appointment. They are, accordingly, variously classified.¹ The most broadly recognized division is that based upon the extent of the authority, and includes universal, general, and special or particular agents.² Other classifications, made for convenience of treatment, are based upon the nature of the agency, including public³ and private,⁴ mercantile and nonmercantile agents;⁵ upon the obligations of the agent in selling, including del credere agents and agents not del credere;⁶ and upon the degree of skill required of them, including gratuitous and remunerated or paid agents,⁷ professional and nonprofessional agents.⁸

III. COMPETENCY OF PARTIES—1. Competency to be Principal—a. INDIVIDUALS—(1) In General.—By the common law, whenever a person has power to do a thing in his own right, he may do it by an agent.⁹ In general, any person sui juris, unless prohibited by the municipal law to which he is subject, is capable of becoming either principal or agent.¹⁰

How Disability Determined.—To determine who may or who may not be a principal or an agent, recourse must be had to the rules of disability recognized by the law of contracts generally.¹¹ The same disabilities, however, do not apply to both principal and agent.

Kinds of Incompetency.—Incompetency to contract is of two kinds—natural or legal. Natural incompetency is directly traceable to a mental defect, whether chronic or temporary, curable or incurable, and may arise from a variety of causes, as in the case of lunatics, idiots, and drunkards. Legal incompetency is traceable to some provision of law, as in the case of aliens, infants, married women, outlaws, and convicts. Incompetency to contract may be either absolute or limited; its effect may be either to make a contract altogether void, or to give to one party the rights denied to the other.¹² kinds of authority and their construction, infra, this title, Nature and Extent of Authority. See also the title POWER OF ATTORNEY.

Proof of one's "acting" for another, without proof of his authority so to act, does not show the relation of principal and agent. Walsh v. St. Paul Trust Co., 39 Minn. 23.

Acts in the Presence of Principal.—An act done by one in the presence and under the control of another is regarded not as the exercise of a delegated authority, but as the personal act of the party in whose behalf it is performed; but it is otherwise where the act is done by a person's direction, in his absence, and beyond his control. Kidder v. Prescott, 24 N. H. 263; Hanson v. Rowe, 26 N. H. 327; People v. Smith, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 63; Ball v. Dunsterville, 4 T. R. 313. See also Andover v. Grafton, 7 N. H. 298.

Naked Authority.—A naked authority is where the principal delegates the power to the agent wholly for the benefit of the former. 1 Bouv. Inst. 1302.

Authority Coupled with an Interest.—An authority is coupled with an interest when it is given to the agent for a valuable consideration or when it is a part of a security. Such an authority is irrevocable. 1 Bouv. Inst. 1303; Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174; Boone v. Clarke, 3 Cranch (C. C.) 389; Marziou v. Pioche, 8 Cal. 522; *Creager v. (2) Persons Naturally Incompetent—(a) Persons Non Compos Mentis—In General.—A lunatic, idiot, or other person of unsound mind, cannot appoint an agent.¹ The reason given for this is, that they are generally incapable of executing a perfectly valid contract.²

(b) Drunkards—Their Contracts Generally.—Drunkenness does not make a contract void, but voidable only,³ and it may be ratified by the intoxicated party⁴ or his representative⁵ when he becomes sober.⁶

(3) Persons Legally Incompetent—(a) *Infants*⁷—Appointment of Agents.—An infant, being unable to enter into a binding contract, cannot appoint an agent⁸

For a full discussion of the question of capacity to contract see, generally, the title CONTRACTS, and the titles treating of the various classes of persons incapacitated—e.g., MARRIED WOMEN.

1. Married women, lunatics, infants, and other persons not sui juris are incapable of appointing an agent or attorney. Snyder v. Sponable, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 567.

A note executed by the son of an adjudged lunatic, in the assumed character of her agent, is void. Lee v. Morris, 3 Bush (Ky.) 211.

2. Story on Agency, § 6; Tarback v. Bispham, 2 M. & W. 2.

The Power of Attorney of a Lunatic, or of a non compos mentis, is void. Dexter v. Hall, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 9.

Whether Lunatic Wholly Incapable of Appointing Agent.—Mr. Evans, in his work on Agency, p. 10, says: "Mr. Justice Story lays it down broadly that idiots, lunatics, and other persons not sui juris are wholly incapable of appointing an agent. This cannot be accepted without qualification as the law of this country [England], for it has been distinctly laid down by the Court of Exchequer Chamber, after a review of the cases, that when one of the parties to a contract is of unsound mind, and the fact is unknown to the other contracting party, no advantage having been taken of the lunatic, this unsoundness of mind will not vacate a contract, especially where the contract is not merely executory, but executed in whole or in part, and the parties cannot be restored altogether to their original position. (Molton v. Camroux, 4 Exch. 17.) It is conceived that the same result would take place if the contract were made through another, who acted upon the authority of the lunatic, without having been aware or taken advantage of his state of mind. The principle of the above decision was acted upon in a more recent case. Beavan v. M'Donnell, 9 Exch. 309."

Cause of Lunacy Immaterial.—It seems to be immaterial from what cause such a state of mind arises, whether by the act of Providence, or from the party's own imprudence. Menkins v. Lightner, 18 Ill. 282; Wigglesworth v. Steers, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 70, 3 Am. Dec. 602. See also Bliss v. Connecticut, etc., R. Co., 24 Vt. 424.

Codes.—It has also been enacted by the codes of several states that infants cannot delegate authority. California Civil Code, § 2296; Dakota Rev. Code (1885), § 15; Montana Civil Code, § 3071.

Rescission by Agent.—In Towle v. Dresser, 73 Me. 252, it was held that the rescission of a minor's contract, through the intervention of an agent employed by him for that purpose, was not manifestly or necessarily prejudicial, and therefore not void.

Ratification.—In Ward v. Steamboat "Little Red", 8 Mo. 358, it was held that an infant can become party to a contract, not required to be made by deed, made without authority from him, by his subsequent adoption of it, as well as by his previous express consent. Although, as was said in Armitage v. Widoe, 36 Mich. 124, an infant cannot affirm what he cannot authorize.

Infant Partner.—The infant member of a firm cannot recover his portion of the purchase money paid to a vendor, the contract being binding as to the other partners, and they having the right to control the firm's funds. Sadler v. Robinson, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 520.

So where the adult member of a firm made a promissory note in the name of the firm and the infant, after coming of full age, ratified it, it was held good against the infant. Whitney v. Dutch, 14 Mass. 462, 7 Am. Dec. 229. But see Furlong v. Bartlett, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 401. See also Moley v. Brine, 120 Mass. 324.

or an attorney;¹ and a power or warrant of attorney made by an infant is not voidable only, but absolutely void.²

Where an agent of an insurance company makes a fraudulent settlement with the infant member of a firm, for a loss occasioned to the firm property, the firm cannot maintain an action on the policy, without first restoring, or offering to restore, what has been received under the settlement. Brown v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 117 Mass. 479.

Prejudicial and Beneficial Agents.—If an infant should execute a letter of attorney to another, to take livery of lands on a feoffment to him, it will be good, because intended for his benefit. See Com. Dig. tit. Infant, B. 1; 1 Roll. Abr. 730, 1-10; Zouch v. Parsons, 3 Burr. 1808; Combes' Case, 9 Coke 76 b; 2 Kent's Com. 233.

But if an infant should make a feoffment, and execute a letter of attorney to another, to make livery in his name to the feoffee, it will be void, for such feoffment and livery will be intended to be to his prejudice. See Waple v. Hastings, 3 Harr. (Del.) 403; Pyle v. Cravens, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 18; Bennett v. Davis, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 393; Lawrence v. McArter, 10 Ohio 37; Knox v. Flack, 22 Pa. St. 337; Zouch v. Parsons, 3 Burr. 1804; Combes' Case, 9 Coke 76; Doe v. Roberts, 16 M. & W. 778.

In Pottenger v. Stuart, 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 347, Kilty, C., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "In cases of intestacy, or there being no contrary direction by will, a female above the age of sixteen would be capable of authorizing any person, by a common order, to receive her estate, by which she would be bound as far as any payment or delivery should be made. But it is not so clear that she would be bound by a settlement made by her agent, although specially authorized by her."

Delivery by Agent.—It seems an infant cannot make delivery of a chattel sold by him, by attorney, but must make manual delivery of it in person. Stafford v. Robt, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 626; Fonda v. Van Horne, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 631, 30 Am. Dec. 77. But see 1 Am. Lead. Cas. (4th ed.) 248, where the doctrine is questioned.

Parent Acting for Infant.—In Benziger v. Miller, 50 Ala. 206, it was held that the infant's parent may make a contract of employment for him, and either the infant or parent may sue for the breach of such contract. But see Patterson v. Lippincott, 47 N. J. L. 460, 54 Am. Rep. 178. See also the title MASTER AND SERVANT.

As to conveyances made by parent for minor child, see Elliott v. Horn, 10 Ala. 348, 44 Am. Dec. 488; Hall v. Jones, 21 Md. 439; Alsworth v. Cordtz, 31 Miss. 32; Belton v. Briggs, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 465.

A contract made by a father in the name of his infant son, but without the knowledge of his son, does not bind the son until he has assented to it, and does not confer rights upon him. Armitage v. Widoe, 36 Mich. 124; Fonda v. Van Horne, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 631, 30 Am. Dec. 77.

Infant Appearing by Attorney, without Guardian ad Litem.—In Townsend v. Cox, 45 Mo. 403, the court, by Wagner, J., said: "A judgment rendered against an infant, appearing by attorney, may be set aside or recalled. (Powell v. Gott, 13 Mo. 458, 53 Am. Dec. 153; Randalls v. Wilson, 24 Mo. 76.) * * * Judge Napton, in Fulbright v. Cannefox, 30 Mo. 425, in speaking on the subject of judgments against infants, where there was an appearance by attorney, says: 'Such judgments are not nullities, but may be set aside on terms.' And it is the conceded and established rule, that all judicial acts against an infant, as judgments and decrees, without a guardian ad litem, are not void, but are voidable or confirmable at the option of the infant. Austin v. Charlestown Female Seminary, 8 Met. (Mass.) 196, 41 Am. Dec. 497; Bloom v. Burdick, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 131, 37 Am. Dec. 299; Barber v. Graves, 18 Vt. 292; Porter v. Robinson, 3 A. K. Marsh. Cook*, 18 Md. 130, 79 Am. Dec. 681; Swan v. Horton, 14 Gray (Mass.) 179."

Appearance by Attorney of Infant Executor.—Executors must join in an action, though some of them are under age; and they may all sue or appear by an attorney; and such as are of full age may make an attorney for those who are under age. Foxwist v. Tremaine, 2 Saund. 213.

(b) Married Women—By Common Law.—By the common law a married woman could not appoint another to act in her stead, since all her contracts were not voidable, but void.¹

By Statute.—The disability of the wife has, however, in many of the states been removed by statute, and she is now capable of acting not only for herself, but by an agent, with generally no express limitation upon her power of appointment. She may now undoubtedly appoint her husband or other person² as agent, to perform those business acts which she may lawfully do for herself.³

(c) Alien Enemies—Appointment of Agents.⁴—No agent can be appointed by a citizen of one government or state to act in the territory of the other during the Feoffment by Attorney.—Thus, if an infant makes a feoffment by letter of attorney, it is nil operatur; but it is otherwise if he makes a feoffment in person. Doe v. Roberts, 16 M. & W. 778.

Warrant of Attorney by Infant and Another.—Where a joint warrant of attorney is given by two or more persons, one of whom is an infant, the court may order it to be vacated as against the latter, and to stand against the other parties. Ashlin v. Langton, 4 M. & S. 719, 30 E. C. L. 362; Motteux v. St. Aubin, 2 W. Bl. 1133; Yates v. Lyon, 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 205.

Infant's Acts by Agent Held Valid.—Some authorities permit an infant to act by agent, or attorney, within limits not well defined, yet including the signing of a promissory note; for example, when the authorization is not under seal. Hastings v. Dollarhide, 24 Cal. 195; Hardy v. Waters, 38 Me. 450; Whitney v. Dutch, 14 Mass. 457, 7 Am. Dec. 229; Welch v. Welch, 103 Mass. 562. See also Belton v. Briggs, 4 Desaus. (S. Confessing Judgment.—A bond and warrant of attorney to confess judgment by a married woman and her husband was void as to her, and a sale of her real estate upon such a judgment and execution did not divest her title. Read v. Jewson, cited in 4 T. R. 362, note; Roberts v. Pierson, 2 Wils. 3; Patton v. Stewart, 19 Ind. 233; Caldwell v. Walters, 18 Pa. St. 79, 55 Am. Dec. 592; Dorrance v. Scott, 7 Whart. (Pa.) 313, 31 Am. Dec. 509.

But in Maclean v. Douglas, 3 B. & P. 128, the court refused to set aside upon summary application a judgment entered upon a warrant of attorney given by a feme covert. See also Wilkins v. Wetherill, 3 B. & P. 220.

Agent to Contract with Husband.—A married woman cannot appoint an attorney for the purpose of contracting with her husband for her separate maintenance. Wallingsford v. Wallingsford, 6 Har. & J. (Md.) 485.

A Conveyance of a Wife's Lands must be executed by her in person, and she cannot appoint an agent to convey for her to a third person. Gillespie v. Worford, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 638. See Sumner v. Conant, 10 Vt. 9; and compare Holladay v. Daily, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 606.

2. Wife may Appoint Attorney in Relation to Her Separate Estate.—A married woman may manage her separate estate as well by an agent as in person, and may appoint her husband agent for that purpose. Kenton Ins. Co. v. McClellan, 43 Mich. 564; Patten v. Patten, 75 Ill. 446; McLaren v. Hall, 26 Iowa 297; Porter v. Haley, 55 Miss. 66, 30 Am. Rep. 502; Wilcox v. Todd, 64 Mo. 388; *Hall v. In Vail v. Meyer, 71 Ind. 159, the court said: "It may be conceded, as a general rule, that a married woman cannot appoint an agent. But a married woman holds and enjoys her real estate as if she were sole, and it becomes essential to its enjoyment that she have the power to make improvements by building new or repairing old buildings upon it. Contracts for this purpose * * * she can make whereby the builder, mechanic, or materialman may acquire a lien under the law. And we think it follows that she may make such contracts in person, or by an agent whom she may appoint for that purpose. So far as she is enabled to contract, she may contract in person or by agent." See also Buckley v. Wells, 33 N. Y. 525.

existence of war between such governments or states;¹ but, according to the weight of authority, the existence of war between two governments does not, ipso facto, terminate an agency established prior thereto by residents respectively of the hostile sections.²

b. PARTNERSHIPS³—(1) Generally.—Partners are competent to be principals, and may appoint agents for the conduct of their business.⁴

War does Not Ipso Facto Terminate Agency.—In Buford v. Speed, 11 Bush (Ky.) 341, it was held that a person serving in the army of one belligerent cannot have an agent within the territory of the other to transact ordinary business, but may for some purposes. The court said: "It was distinctly held in Ward v. Smith, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 452, that a bank which had been appointed the agent of the creditor before the commencement of the war, to collect certain bonds, might lawfully receive payment pending the war, although the creditor was then a public enemy; and the same doctrine was again recognized in Montgomery v. U. S., 15 Wall. (U. S.) 395."

But it was held in Blackwell v. Willard, 65 N. Car. 555, 6 Am. Rep. 749, that where a citizen and resident of New York had a suit pending in North Carolina previous to the civil war and during the war, payment of the indebtedness to the attorney or agent of such nonresident was void, as the war terminated the relation of attorney and client.

In New York L. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 95 U. S. 425, it was held that an agent of a northern life insurance company had no right to receive premiums in a southern state which was in insurrection. The court, by Bradley, J., declared that war suspends all commercial intercourse between the citizens of two belligerent countries or states, except so far as may be allowed by the sovereign authority; and that, disregarding contracts for ransom and other matters of absolute necessity, the only exception to this rule recognized by authority is that of allowing the payment of debts to an agent of an alien enemy, where such agent resides in the same state with the debtor. "But this indulgence," proceeded the learned judge, "is subject to restrictions. In the first place, it must not be done with the view of transmitting the funds to the principal during the continuance of the war; though if so transmitted without the debtor's connivance he will not be responsible for it. Washington, J., in Conn v. Penn, Pet. (C. C.) 496; Buchanan v. Curry, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 137, 10 Am. Dec. 200."

See also Stoddard's Case, 4 Ct. of Cl. 511, to the effect that war suspends the relation of principal and agent between citizens of belligerent states. Also Howell v. Gordon, 40 Ga. 302, and Conley v. Burson, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 145, to the effect that war revokes an agent's authority.

Mutual Consent Essential.—In order for the relationship of principal and agent to continue during a state of warfare between the countries of which the respective parties are citizens, the mutual consent of the parties is essential.

In New York L. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 95 U. S. 425, the court said: "In order to the subsistence of the agency during the war, it must have the assent of the parties thereto—the principal and the agent.* * * It is not enough that there was an agency prior to the war. It would be contrary to reason that a man, without his consent, should continue to be bound by the acts of one whose relations to him have undergone such a fundamental alteration as that produced by a war between the two countries to which they respectively belong." See also Fretz v. Stover, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 198.

Partnership Dissolved by War.—A partnership between persons residing in two different countries is at least suspended, if not ipso facto determined, by the breaking out of war between those countries; and one partner could not, therefore, bind the firm by any act of his as the agent of the firm during the continuance of the war. Griswold v. Waddington, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 57; New Orleans Bank v. Matthews, 49 N. Y. 12.

3. For a full discussion of this subject see the title PARTNERSHIP. See also infra, this title, Appointment.

4. Story on Agency, §39; Chemung Canal

(2) Implied Power to Appoint Agents.—Each partner has implied power to appoint an agent, and engage such services as are necessary to conduct the ordinary business of the joint enterprise;¹ and an agent thus appointed is the agent of the partnership as a whole, and not of the partners individually.²

c. *JOINT TENANTS AND TENANTS IN COMMON.*³—A joint tenant or tenant in common has no implied authority to appoint an agent to act for the other co-owners,⁴ and the appointment of an agent by one will therefore bind that one only;⁵ but all may join in the appointment of an agent.⁶

d. *CORPORATIONS.*⁷—A corporation as well as an individual may be a principal, and since it is a mere artificial being, and can only act through the instrumentality of an agent, it has the power to appoint such agents as are necessary to conduct the business for which it was organized.⁸

Bank v. Bradner, 44 N. Y. 680; North America Bank v. Embury, 21 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 14.

Partnerships.—"The law as to partnership is undoubtedly a branch of the law of principal and agent; and it would tend to simplify and make more easy of solution the questions which arise on this subject if this true principle were more constantly kept in view. Mr. Justice Story lays it down in the first section of his work on Partnership." Per Lord Wensleydale in Cox v. Hickman, 8 H. L. Cas. 268.

So far as a partner acts for himself, in his own interest in the common concerns of the partnership, he may properly be deemed a principal; and so far as he acts for his partners, he may properly be deemed an agent. Partners may Appoint Agents.—Each partner is a principal, and it is implied in the very nature of their connection that each has a right to depute and appoint an agent to act for both in matters relative to their joint interests. Tillier v. Whitehead, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 269.

An attorney employed by one of the partners to make collections is the attorney of the firm, and accountable as well to one partner as another, and equally subject to the direction and control of one as the other of the partners. Ayer v. Ayer, 41 Vt. 346. See also Holloway v. Turner, 61 Md. 217; Beste v. Creditors, 15 La. Ann. 55.

Treated as Natural Persons.—The force of modern decisions seems to place corporations, with regard to their mode of appointing agents and making contracts in general, upon the same footing with natural persons. Angell and Ames on Corporations, § 138; Argenti v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 266.

Mutual Companies.—It is as indispensable that mutual companies, as others, shall transact their business through officers and agents, and in the absence of express provisions in their charters limiting their appointment or the scope of their powers and duties it must be presumed that each person, in becoming a member of the company, impliedly consents that it shall be represented

2. Competency to be Agent—a. IN GENERAL.—Agents are not required to possess the same qualifications as principals. It is by no means necessary for a person to be sui juris, or capable of acting in his or her own right, in order to qualify himself or herself to act for others. Indeed, it may be stated as a general rule that all persons of sane mind are capable of becoming agents. Thus, at common law, monks, infants, femes covert, persons attainted, outlawed, or excommunicated, villains or aliens, might be agents for others. Any one, in fact, except a lunatic, imbecile, or infant of tender years, may be an agent.¹

b. VARIOUS PERSONS—(1) Alien Enemies.—The principle that, during the existence of war between two governments or states, no person can be appointed by a citizen of one government or state to act as his agent in the territory of the other has been fully treated elsewhere.²

(2) Infants.³—An infant may be an agent, and contracts made in that character by an infant are binding upon the principal.⁴

(3) Persons Non Compos Mentis.⁵—An idiot, lunatic, or other person other-

by such officers and agents as are reasonably necessary for the transaction of its business, and that they shall possess the powers and perform the duties ordinarily possessed and performed by such officers and agents. Protection L. Ins. Co. v. Foote, 79 Ill. 368.

Member of Corporation as Agent.—A corporation may employ one of its members as an agent. Stoddert v. Port Tobacco Parish, 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 227. And in Lathrop v. Commercial Bank, 8 Dana (Ky.) 117, 33 Am. Dec. 481, it is said that a corporation may exist wherever the law of its creation shall be recognized, and may act, there being no local law to the contrary, wherever an agent may go and could act in his own right.

Modern Doctrine as to Corporation Agents.—In San Antonio Gas Co. v. Harber, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas., § 1123, the court, by Quinan, J., said: "It was an ancient and technical rule that a corporation could act and speak only by its common seal; but that rule is long ago repudiated, and it is now well settled that acts of a corporation evidenced by vote, written or unwritten, are as complete authority to its agents as if done under the corporate seal, and that it may be as well bound by express promises made through its agents as by deed, and that promises may as well be implied from its acts and the acts of its agents as in case of individuals. (Maine Stage Co. v. Longley, 14 Me. 444; Merrick v. Burlington, etc., Plank Road Co., 11 Iowa 74; Blunt v. Walker, 11 Wis. 334; 78 Am. Dec. 709; 2 Kent 288; Story on Agency 61.) And an agent of a corporation acting within the scope of his authority may bind his principal in the same way as if he were the agent of a natural person. The general rule is that the declarations and admissions of an agent of a corporation stand upon the same footing as those of an individual. (Henderson v. San Antonio, etc., R. Co., 17 Tex. 560, 67 Am. Dec. 675.)" Codes.—By the codes of several of the states it is enacted that any person may be an agent. California Civil Code, § 2296; Dakota, § 1338; Montana, § 3071. Under the Georgia Code, § 2181, any person may be appointed an agent who is of sound mind.

The Reason that persons not sui juris may be agents is that "the execution of a naked authority can be attended with no manner of prejudice to the persons under such incapacities or disabilities [as monks, infants, etc.], or to any other person who by law may claim any interest of such disabled persons after their death." Bacon's Abridgment, Authority, B.

Mechem on Agency, § 60; Wharton on Agency, § 14. In Chastain v. Bowman, 1 Hill (S. Car.) 270, the court said: "It is not questioned that a master may constitute his slave his agent, and I cannot conceive of any distinction between the circumstances which constitute a slave and a freeman an agent; they are both the creatures of the principal, and act upon his authority. There is no condition, however degraded, which deprives one of the right to act as a private agent; the master is liable even for the act of his dog, done in pursuance of his command."

Rotch v. Miles, 2 Conn. 638; Switzer v. Valentine, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 96. The court continued: "As a qualification of the rule last stated, it seems to be satisfactorily established by the cases, that where the wife incurs the indebtedness, and the credit is given to her exclusively, and where, therefore, there can be no presumption that she was acting as the agent of the husband merely, the husband is not liable;" citing *Bentley v. Contra.—Georgia Code (1882), § 2181: "A feme covert cannot be an agent for another than her husband except by his consent, in which case he is bound by her acts." See also Tucker v. Cocke, 32 Miss. 184.

A Feme Covert may Execute a Power without her Husband's Co-operation or consent, and her acts, as agent or trustee, impose no legal liability on him. His knowledge and consent do not confer, by operation of law, any authority on him to do any act in the scope of his wife's agency, so as to bind her principal; nor does the unity of the marriage relation operate to delegate to him an agency specially and personally conferred upon the wife. *Pullman v. IV. APPOINTMENT—1. Necessity.—In order to create an agency there must be an appointment of the agent by the principal, and an acceptance of such appointment.¹ This follows from the fact that agency is one form of contract,² and must possess the essential elements of every contract.³ Like other contracts it may be implied as well as express; and the appointment is, in some cases, presumed by law.⁴ Subject to these exceptions, however, an agency cannot exist but by the will of the principal.⁵

2. Requisites—a. WHEN MADE BY NATURAL PERSONS—Intention.—An appointment presupposes an intelligent act on the part of the principal. There must be either an actual intention to appoint,⁶ or an apparent intention nat-

South Carolina.—Greig v. Smith, 29 S. Car. 436; McCord v. Blackwell, 31 S. Car. 125; Brown v. Thomson, 31 S. Car. 436, 17 Am. St. Rep. 40.

Virginia.—Penn v. Whiteheads, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 74.

West Virginia.—Miller v. Peck, 18 W. Va. 95.

Wisconsin.—Dayton v. Walsh, 47 Wis. 113, 32 Am. Rep. 757; Livesley v. Lasalette, 28 Wis. 38; Austin v. Austin, 45 Wis. 523; Lavassar v. Washburne, 50 Wis. 200.

In Weisbrod v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 18 Wis. 35, 86 Am. Dec. 743, the court said: "If it is no violation of the common-law principle of the unity of husband and wife for the wife to act as the agent or attorney of her husband, the conclusion would seem irresistibly to follow that it is no infringement of the same principle to allow the husband to act as the agent of the wife in cases where by law she is sui juris, and capable of acting for herself."

1. Must be Appointment by Principal and Acceptance by Agent.—Markwick v. Hardingham, 15 Ch. Div. 349, 43 L. T. 647; Hermann v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 100 N. Y. 411, 53 Am. Rep. 197; Anderson v. State, 22 Ohio St. 305; Farmers', etc., Bank v. Chester, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 458, 44 Am. Dec. 318; Marks v. Sullivan, 8 Utah 406. In this last case the court, by Zane, C.J., said: "The employment of an agent is a transaction in the making of which the principal and agent each represents himself."

One cannot be liable as agent when he has never accepted the appointment as such. Collar v. Ford, 45 Iowa 331.

The appointment of an agent does not go into effect until it has been accepted by the appointee. Cameron v. Seaman, 69 N. Y. 396, 25 Am. Rep. 212; Beebe v. De Baun, 8 Ark. 510.

Presumption of Acceptance.—But acceptance may ordinarily be presumed from the exercise of the power conferred. Delano v. Smith Charities, 138 Mass. 63. Compare Blake v. Bayley, 16 Gray (Mass.) 531.

In general the agent is presumed to have accepted unless he declines. Lockwood v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank, 9 R. I. 308, 11 Am. Rep. 253.

2. Robinson's Elementary Law, § 179.

3. Agency must Have Essential Elements of Other Contracts.—Central Trust Co. v. Bridges, 6 C. C. A. 539, 57 Fed. Rep. 764. Here the court, by Taft, J., said: "An agency is created—authority is actually conferred—very much as a contract is made: i.e., by an agreement between the principal and agent that such a relation shall exist. The minds of the parties must meet in establishing the agency. The principal must intend that the agent shall act for him, and the agent must intend to accept the authority and act on it, and the intention of the parties must find expression either in words or conduct between them."

4. Created by Law.—Anderson v. Sanderson, 2 Stark. 204, 3 E. C. L. 377; Beigh v. Warner, 47 Minn. 250, 28 Am. St. Rep. 362; Olcott v. Gabert, 86 Tex. 121.

5. General Rule—Will of Principal Necessary.—Evans on Principal and Agent (2d ed.), s.p. 20; Pole v. Leask, 33 L. J. Ch. 155, 9 Jur. N. S. 829, 8 L. T. 605; Rust v. Eaton, 24 Fed. Rep. 830; Rochester First Nat. Bank v. Bentley, 27 Minn. 87; Graves v. Horton, 38 Minn. 66; Dugan v. Lyman (N. J. Eq., 1892), 23 Atl. Rep. 657; Stringham v. St. Nicholas Ins. Co., 4 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 315; McGoldrick v. Willits, 52 N. Y. 612.

Where there is No Evidence of Express Appointment, ratification, or facts constituting an estoppel, there is no proof sufficient to establish agency. Alexander v. Rollins, 84 Mo. 657, 14 Mo. App. 109.

The Authority is Complete where Permission to do a thing is given; there need be no direction or request on the part of the principal. Fay v. Richmond, 43 Vt. 25.

The Principal cannot be Bound by a False Agent's Conduct Alone, even though the third party believes from such conduct that he has authority; on which belief he acted. Leu v. Mayer, 52 Kan. 419.

Possession of Stock.—One is not made the agent of the purchaser simply by having been placed in possession of stock sold, until such time as the agent of the purchaser should arrive. Lowenstein v. Goodbar, 69 Miss. 808.

In Order to Transfer the Property of Another a person must have been clothed with authority to act as agent or owner, which authority may be real or apparent. McGoldrick v. Willits, 52 N. Y. 612.

One in Possession of Mortgaged Property, with Power to Collect Rents, etc.—A person is not constituted the agent of a junior mortgagee from the fact that the latter consented to the placing of such person in possession of the mortgaged property, with authority to collect rents and pay expenses and interest on the first mortgage loan. Kansas, etc., Coal Co. v. Millett, 50 Mo. App. 382.

6. Actual Intention.—Felton v. McClave, 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 53.

usually inferable from the words or actions of the alleged principal;¹ otherwise there is, in general, no agency.²

Correspondence as to Sale of Real Estate.—Thus, correspondence between a property owner and a real-estate agent, mentioning prices and terms, but evincing no intention on the part of the former to make the latter his agent, would not constitute an appointment.³

Advancing Money to Carry on Business.—Similarly, advancing money to another to enable him to carry on business does not make such person an agent.⁴

An Agreement to Become a Surety on a Bond does not make the principal an agent to negotiate the loan.⁵

Promise to Accept Indorsement.—Nor does the promise to accept the indorsement of a third party make the debtor an agent to secure such indorsement.⁶

A Mere Contractor is not the agent of the one with whom he contracts.⁷

One Employed to Receive and Report Bids.—Nor is one employed to receive and report bids an agent to deal with the property.⁸

An Agreement by a Purchaser Made with a Vendor that a third party shall have a mortgage lien does not make the vendor the purchaser's agent to execute the mortgage.⁹

The Agent need Not be Appointed Directly, however, but the relation may arise out of an agreement to employ the agent of another, such person then becoming the agent of the first party;¹⁰ but, in order to have the effect of appointment, a contract between other persons must be clearly made with that intention.¹¹

Agent Appointing Agent.—Where a known agent appoints one as agent of the common principal, the relation is with such principal, not with the appointing agent.¹²

1. Intention Implied from Conduct of Principal.—Central Trust Co. v. Bridges, 6 C. C. A. 539, 57 Fed. Rep. 764, where the court, by Taft, J., said: "One may be liable for the acts of * * * his agent on one of two grounds: first, because by his conduct * * * he has held the other out as his agent; or, second, because he has actually conferred authority on the other to act as such."

The private intentions or understanding of the parties will not affect the relation of agency, if the conditions which constitute agency exist. Bradstreet Co. v. Gill, 72 Tex. 115, 13 Am. St. Rep. 768.

2. Security Co. v. Graybeal, 85 Iowa 543; Matteson v. Gillett, 86 Hun (N. Y.) 386.

A statement by one of several landowners to the others that he would give the right of way across his land to a railroad was held not sufficient to constitute such other persons his agents to make a tender of such right of way to the railroad. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Estes, 71 Iowa 603.

3. Bosseau v. O'Brien, 4 Biss. (U. S.) 395. In this case the expression "I will sell," or its equivalent, accompanied by a specification of terms, by the owner of land was held not to confer authority on another as agent to make a contract of sale.

So the Sending of a Price-list of Lands by the owner, in response to an inquiry, does not establish an agency in the inquirer. Stewart v. Pickering, 73 Iowa 652.

4. Perkins v. Huntington (Supreme Ct.), 15 N. Y. Supp. 71.

5. Hayes v. Burkam, 94 Ind. 311.

6. Hunter v. Fitzmaurice, 102 Ind. 449; Harris v. Bradley, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 310.

7. Hughes v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 39 Ohio St. 461.

8. Chadburn v. Moore, 67 L. T. 257; Dempster v. West, 69 Ill. 613.

One who Merely Solicits Orders for Sales, for a commission to be allowed upon sales to be effected through such solicitation, is not thereby constituted an agent with authority to make an absolute sale. Clough v. Whitcomb, 105 Mass. 482.

9. Hyde v. Boston, etc., Co., 21 Pick. (Mass.) 90.

10. Thus the agents of a bank that had stipulated with a shipper of cotton that shipments should be made only to such agents, are made, by such stipulation, pro re nata, the agents of the shipper. Ball v. State Bank, 8 Ala. 590.

11. Thus A is not the agent of B by virtue of a verbal agreement whereby A was to purchase property at a sale of which B was to take possession for the purpose of making a resale and to retain the surplus, if any, after the return of the purchase price to A. Haynes v. Crutchfield, 7 Ala. 189. See also Cravens v. Cravens, 1 Morr. (Iowa) 285.

12. Hobson v. Jones, L.R. 9 Eq. 456; Jones v. U. S., 1 Ct. of Cl. 383; Murphy v. Emigration Com'rs, 28 N. Y. 134; Olifiers v. Belmont, 12 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 160, 275; Bingaman v. Hickman, 115 Pa. St. 420.

But the Appointing Agent must Have Authority.—Thus the officer of a lessee railroad company has no authority to bind the lessor company by an agreement with one employed as a claim agent of such company as to his expenses to a designated amount, in the absence of special authority. Galveston, etc.,

If the Requisites of an Appointment are Found, it is immaterial what terms were used or by what name the transaction was called.¹

Intention to Create Agency.—The agency is to be established or disproved by the facts taken as a whole, and elements apparently characterizing the transaction as of a different nature must often be disregarded where the general intention to create an agency appears.² The converse of this is true; and, if such general intention does not appear, the relation will not be created although there exist some elements of agency.³

Duration.—There is no implied agreement, from the mere fact of employment, that the business in which the agent is employed shall be carried on for any particular period;⁴ but such an agreement may be expressly made or implied from the terms used.⁵

Compensation.—It is not necessary that the agent be paid by salary or commission; the law does not look at the compensation.⁶

b. WHEN MADE BY CORPORATIONS—General Rule as to Power to Appoint.—A corporation, as well as a natural person, may have an agent.⁷

R. Co. v. Scheidemantel (Tex. Civ. App., 1893), 24 S. W. Rep. 328.

A lighterman who was employed by a vendor to carry away corn from a storehouse for the purchaser, though such conduct was not usual, but who was afterwards paid by the purchaser, was held to be the agent of the purchaser for the transportation of the grain, possession having passed to the purchaser according to custom while the grain was yet in store. McCready v. Wright, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 571.

1. Willcox, etc., Sewing Mach. Co. v. Ewing, 141 U. S. 627; Banks v. Flint, 54 Ark. 40; Indiana Ins. Co. v. Hartwell, 100 Ind. 566; Van Sandt v. Dows, 63 Iowa 594, 50 Am. Rep. 759; Hart v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 27 L. R. A. 86. In this last case it was held that although a policy issued by an insurance company provides that no person shall be deemed its agent "unless authorized in writing," it cannot deny that one sent out to solicit business is its agent.

One who is told to get certain articles and take them to another, which he agrees to do is, in respect to that matter, an agent. Cooksie v. State, 26 Tex. App. 72.

2. How Established or Disproved.—Davis v. Patrick, 122 U. S. 138; American Mortg. Co. v. King (Ala., 1895), 16 So. Rep. 889; Miller v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 83 Ala. 274, 3 Am. St. Rep. 722; Gist v. Harkrider (Ark., 1891), 15 S. W. Rep. 187; Van Sandt v. Dows, 63 Iowa 594, 50 Am. Rep. 759. See Bayliss v. Davis, 47 Iowa 340.

B purchased A's outstanding draft in pursuance of an agreement by A to pay him liberally for his time and expenses while engaged in assisting him out of a financial difficulty, and took A's note as payment. It was held that B was the agent of A in purchasing the draft, and the discount at which it was secured must enure to the benefit of A. Noyes v. Landon, 59 Vt. 569. See also supra, this title Definitions—Contract of Agency, where illustrations of contracts held to constitute the relation of agency are collected in the notes.

3. Presence of Some Elements of Agency—Intention.—Ex p. White, L. R. 6 Ch. 397, 24

L. T. 45; Evans v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 78 Ala. 341; Ex p. Robinson, 86 Ala. 622; Merck v. American Freehold Land Mortg. R. Co., 79 Ga. 213; Storm Lake Bank v. Missouri Valley L. Ins. Co., 66 Iowa 617; Willis v. Toledo, etc., R. Co., 72 Mich. 160; Fortescue v. Makeley, 92 N. Car. 56.

Instances.—Where A leased a hotel from the owners, paying them twenty per cent. of the gross results of the whole business after deducting two hundred dollars a month for his services, it was held that third parties were not justified in dealing with A as agent of the owners for the purpose of purchasing supplies for the hotel. But it would be otherwise if the company in its relations with such person treated him as its agent for the procurement of supplies, notwithstanding the character of the contract. Freiberg v. Beach Hotel, etc., Imp. Co., 63 Tex. 449. See also Beecher v. Venn, 35 Mich. 466.

The relation is that of purchaser and vendor, and not principal and agent, where a person has goods consigned to him to sell, and he is bound if he sells to pay a fixed price to his employer within a limited time after the sale, but under an agreement that he may sell to his customers upon any price and for any time he pleases. *Ex p. 6. Where one bid off property at a sheriff's sale, in pursuance of an agreement previously made with another by which the latter was to receive a portion of the property at a certain price, the relation is that of principal and agent, and not vendor and vendee. Wright v. Calhoun, 19 Tex. 412.

7. Authority of Corporation to Appoint Agents.—McWilliams v. Detroit Cent. Mills Co., 31 Mich. 275.

Under a general allegation in pleading, where a corporation is said to have done an act, it may be shown that proper authority had been given by it to an officer or agent to perform an act similar to the one which has been done. Partridge v. Badger, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 146; Nelson v. Eaton, 26 N. Y. 410.

Seal—Early Doctrine.—It was formerly held that in appointing such agent the corporation must act under its corporate seal.¹

Modern Doctrine.—This is no longer the rule; and corporations, so far as the necessity of a seal is concerned, are subject to the same rules as private individuals.²

Vote of Directors.—Appointments are regularly made by vote of the corporation directors,³ but such vote is not essential; the corporation will be bound by the acts of its officers in making appointments, either express or implied, so long as such appointments fall within the scope of their duties.⁴

Ratification.—In Reynolds v. Collins, 78 Ala. 94, it was held that one may be proved to be the agent of the corporation the same as in the case of a natural person. A ratification of his acts will be sufficient.

Parol.—Where it appears that the appointment of an agent of a corporation has not been in writing, and the act of incorporation does not require that such appointment should be in writing, it may be proved by parol evidence. Richardson v. St. Joseph Iron Co., 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 146, 33 Am. Dec. 460.

No Formalities are Required in the appointment of agents by a corporation, but they may be appointed in the same manner as by an individual; and the use of the corporate seal is not necessary unless it be so expressly provided by the company's charter. Santa Clara Min. Assoc. v. Meredith, 49 Md. 389, 33 Am. Rep. 264; Crowley v. Genesee Min. Co., 55 Cal. 273; White v. State, 69 Ind. 273. 3. Green's Brice's Ultra Vires (2d Am. ed.) 451.

Implied Appointment.—The doctrine of implied appointments applies to corporations in the same way that it does to individuals.¹

Authority to Execute Sealed Instruments.—Authority to execute an instrument under seal may be conferred without affixing the corporate seal.² A vote of the directors is sufficient.³ This applies to both private and public corporations.⁴ Such a vote may be proved by evidence other than the corporation records.⁵

3. Modes—a. IN GENERAL.—Appointments are either express or implied. If the former, they may be under seal, in writing not under seal, or oral.⁶

b. EXPRESS—(1) Under Seal—General Rules.—It is an almost invariable rule of the common law, that authority to execute an instrument under seal must be conferred by an instrument under seal,⁷ and that even a written authority

The Appointment as well as the Authority may be implied from the adoption of the agent's acts by the corporation or by its directors. Equitable Gaslight Co. v. Baltimore Coal Tar, etc., Co., 65 Md. 73.

Where One Openly and Notoriously Acts as Agent of a corporation, he will be presumed to have been appointed as such. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Holdfodt, 86 Ill. 455, 29 Am. Rep. 43.

Officers Making Promissory Notes.—The authority of the officers of a corporation to issue its promissory note can be inferred from its acquiescence in, or recognition of, the acts of the accredited officers in the regular course of its authorized business, and need not be expressly provided for in the by-laws, or conferred by formal resolution of the board of directors. Hannibal First Nat. Bank v. North Missouri Coal, etc., Co., 86 Mo. 125.

ratification of Acts of Supposed Agent.—It is sufficient to establish the agency, and the appointment will be implied, if the corporation has confirmed the acts of the supposed agent, or accepted his services without objection; and in such case it is liable for the amount of his services, and cannot, by denying the validity of the appointment, evade payment. *Alabama G. will be insufficient.¹ The instrument claimed to have been executed cannot go to the jury until this authority is proved.² This rule applies to deeds of land, bonds, and all other instruments requiring seals.³

Exception—Executed in Presence and at Request of Principal.—If, however, the execution is in the presence of the principal and at his request, the actual signing and sealing may be done by another having merely a parol authority, the execution being regarded as the immediate act of the principal.⁴

Seal Regarded as Surplusage.—If the contract, to which one having parol authority only affixes a seal, would be good as a simple contract, its validity will not be affected by the presence of the seal, which will be regarded as surplusage.⁵

In such a case the act itself is the act of the principal, not of the agent."

Filling Blanks.—So if blanks be filled in the presence of the principal the act is valid. Hudson v. Revett, 5 Bing. 368, 15 E. C. L. 467.

Insertions in Deeds.—Deeds are frequently delivered into the hands of others to be filled in. The question whether such insertions may be made by an agent not holding authority under seal, has given rise to much discussion. The earlier view, and the one still held to by many courts, is that they cannot.¹ Many authorities take the opposite view, however, and regard the principal as bound on the ground of estoppel.²

In Davis v. Lee, 26 Miss. 505, 59 Am. Dec. 267, it is held that where a blank paper is signed by one party and delivered to another, the holder is made the agent as upon a general letter of credit, to fill up the paper as he thinks proper.

But see Davidson v. Lanier, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 447, which held that such holder is not thereby given power to fill up such paper at pleasure.

A Court of Equity can Reform the Deed and do away with any doubts where blanks are filled in by one having verbal authority only. Burnside v. Wayman, 49 Mo. 356.

A Surety is Bound by anything that may be inserted in a bond which he has intrusted to his principal to be filled up and delivered to the obligee, although such insertion be contrary to his orders, if the obligee has no notice of the breach of instructions. White v. Duggan, 140 Mass. 18.

The Power to Fill Blanks is Exhausted when the blanks have been filled; thereafter the agent has no authority to make changes. Matter of Decker, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 60.

An Assignment of a Mortgage acknowledged and executed in blank, and delivered to the mortgagee's son to find a purchaser, fill in the assignee's name, and deliver the instrument, which he did, the assignee having no knowledge of the son's agency in the transaction, was held to be a valid assignment.

When Conveyances by Agents with Parol Authority Binding as Contracts of Sale.—In cases where a seal is required conveyances made by agents having parol authority are often binding on the principal as contracts of sale, by creating equities in favor of the grantees, which a court of chancery will confirm and protect.¹

(2) By Parol—General Rule.—Except in cases where the statute expressly provides that a seal is necessary, or where the exercise of the authority must be under seal, a parol appointment is sufficient.² This appointment may be made orally if there is no statutory provision requiring it to be in writing.³

Instances.—Thus parol appointment is sufficient to authorize an agent to assign a patent,⁴ to seize chattels under a mortgage,⁵ to redeem land sold for taxes,⁶ to make an entry on lands to toll the statute of limitations,⁷ to confess judgment in a suit already brought,⁸ or to fill blanks in negotiable and other unsealed instruments.⁹ An appointment of an agent to make a binding contract for the sale of lands may be made either orally¹⁰ or in writ-

Phelps v. Sullivan, 140 Mass. 36, 54 Am. Rep. 442.

By virtue of an oral agreement between two parties to a deed for the sale of a lot of gravel, a surveyor was held to be authorized to fill in the quantity of gravel from specifications and profiles made by him, after the delivery of the deed, and in the plaintiff's absence. Vose v. Dolan, 108 Mass. 155, 11 Am. Rep. 331.

4. Contract for Lease.—Taylor on Landlord and Tenant, § 137; Paley on Agency (Lloyd, 3d ed.) *159, *189. See infra, this title, Nature and Extent of Authority—Construction and Scope of Certain Particular Authorities, subdivision To Lease.

5. Statute Requiring Writing—Executing Verbal Authority in Presence and at Request of Principal.—Durrell v. Evans, 31 L. J. Exch. 337, 1 H. & C. 174; Meyer v. King, 29 La. Ann. 567; Price v. Durin, 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 647; Harvey v. Stevens, 43 Vt. 653.

6. Written Authority to Convey Land must be Unequivocal.—Sullivan v. Leer, 2 Colo. App. 141. See also infra, this title, Nature and Extent of Authority—Construction and Scope of Certain Particular Authorities, subdivision To Sell Real Estate.

In order to authorize one in writing to sign a principal's name to a contract to sell land, the words used must be unequivocal in their meaning and import, and must manifest the intention to do something more than to employ a broker. Verbal authority "to sell," or "to close a bargain" is not enough. 1 Warvelle on Vendor and Purchaser, p. 213; Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 240, 6 Am. Rep. 617.

Where the authority of an agent to sell land is required by statute to be evidenced by a writing, that requirement is not complied with by letters written by owners of the property to third persons showing merely that a certain real-estate agent was employed by him to solicit and negotiate for prices, nor by a telegram to such agent to "hold on," in reply to one from him asking if the Construction.—Such instruments are construed according to the rules governing the construction of writings generally.¹ The writing need not employ apt terms in creating the agency, but will be read in connection with surrounding circumstances, and, if the meaning can be ascertained, will stand.²

The English Statute of Frauds did not require an authority in writing, except in cases falling under the first and third sections.³

Indirect Appointment.—An agent may be appointed, not only directly, but through another, as by referring an applicant to that other, with the information that such other will make all arrangements and give directions as to work.⁴

c. IMPLIED—(1) From the Relation of the Parties.—The appointment of an agent need not be by express language, but may be, and often is, implied from the relation of the parties.⁵

Presumption of Law.—Certain relations are so well defined that, upon proof of their existence, an agency will arise as a presumption of law.⁶

Authority by Letter—When it Commences.—Authority of an agent contained in letters sent to him begins at the time of mailing the letters. Ruggles v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 114 N. Y. 415, 11 Am. St. Rep. 674.

2. Writing Conferring Authority Read in Connection with Surrounding Circumstances.—Bissell v. Terry, 69 Ill. 184; Trickett v. Tomlinson, 13 C. B. N. S. 663, 106 E. C. L. 663, 7 L. T. 678.

The Word "Sell" in a power of attorney to "sell or lease any and all real estate" was held to be proof of ample authority to execute a deed of conveyance. Hemstreet v. Burdick, 90 Ill. 444.

And where the power of attorney contained no words of conveyance it was held to be otherwise. Tharp v. Brenneman, 41 Iowa 251.

A written agreement reciting that the first party appoints the second party agent for the sale of wagons, requiring the latter to indorse all commercial paper taken in payment, and to guarantee payment, and to make an account of sales, giving the second party's own note for balance due for a certain time, and expressly providing that the transaction shall be an absolute sale, creates a mere agency. Lenz v. Harrison, 148 Ill. 598, affirming 47 Ill. App. 170.

Instances.—Where the manager of a company refers one applying for employment to another whom he represents as having charge of the salesmen, he is estopped to deny that such person had authority to employ the applicant as a drummer. Mook v. Parke, 9 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 90.

One who, on going to another's place of business in response to an invitation in writing, finds a person assuming to employ hands, who gave him employment for several weeks, for which he was paid from time to time, has a right to assume that the person employing him had authority, notwithstanding private instructions from the owner to the employer, of which he had no knowledge, and the owner is liable for the amount of his wages. *Cox v. an authority to secure them as his agent arises from necessity.¹ As to other matters she may act as his agent the same as another, in which case she must be appointed.²

Husband as Agent of Wife.—The husband may be constituted the agent of the wife in the management, control, and disposal of her separate estate, but he is not such merely by virtue of the marital relation.³ It may, however, be shown to the jury as a circumstance, and may, with other facts shown, tend to prove agency.⁴

Other Relations.—So may any other near relationship.⁵

An Attorney who assumes to act for a party in court is presumed to be authorized, until the contrary is shown.⁶

Brother.—In Sheanon v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co., 83 Wis. 507, the insured being helpless in a distant country, on account of injuries sustained, with no friend or relative at hand except his brother, and it being important to wind up the business relating to the insurance before he was removed to his home, it was held that the agency of the brother to act for him in the matter might be implied from the circumstances.

A sufficient presumption of agency for the application of the rule that notice to agent is notice to principal is not raised in a contract for the purchase of land by a son, merely from the fact that the father gave information and advice with reference to the purchase. McNamara v. McNamara, 62 Ga. 200.

A widow was not bound to sell, where the son of her late husband, who was also executor of his father's estate, represented that he was attorney in fact for his mother, and that title to the land owned by her was good. Stewart v. Pickering, 73 Iowa 652.

A son has no authority to act as the agent of his father in making a contract merely on account of the relationship. Walsh v. Curley (C. Pl.), 16 N. Y. Supp. 871.

Mere Relationship is not a ground upon which agency can be assumed. Le Count v. Greenley (Supreme Ct.), 6 N. Y. St. Rep. 91.

Father.—Where a son, being the owner of land, sent a prospective purchaser to his father with the statement that he would agree to any bargain they made, the acts of the father in making the sale were binding on the son. Reeves v. Kelly, 30 Mich. 132.

Where the power to execute a contract was given to a firm, and the member who signed the principal's name added his own name as agent, the principal was bound; he could have bound the principal by merely signing virtue of the relation alone.¹ He may do so, however, with the assent of his copartners, or his act may become binding through their ratification or implied acquiescence, to prove which parol evidence is admissible.²

An Agent Appointed by a Partnership is not thereby made the agent of the individual members of the firm.³

Co-owners are not agents for each other.⁴

(2) From Conduct—General Rule—Estoppel—Acquiescence.—In a great proportion of cases agency arises, not from the use of express language nor from the existence of a well-defined relation, but from the general conduct of the parties.⁵ Where one person holds another out as his agent with certain authority been procured from another company and contained a printed statement that the former company was the agent of the latter, the applicant is justified in crediting such statement, although it was in fact unauthorized by the company issuing the policy. Mesterman v. Home Mut. Ins. Co., 5 Wash. 524.

Son.—A son is the agent of his father, notwithstanding his testimony to the contrary, where he acts for the father in procuring a mortgage, undertakes the whole negotiation, decides upon the security, satisfies himself as to the title, attends to the execution of the papers, receives the money from his father and pays it over to the mortgagor, and the father accepts the benefits of the transaction. It is idle, under such circumstances, for the son to claim to have been the agent of the person giving the mortgage. Mateson v. Blackmer, 46 Mich. 393.

Where one stands by and permits another to make a contract in his name without objection, he is bound thereby. James v. Russell, 92 N. Car. 194.

In general, one is estopped from denying the agency where from his conduct he has led another to believe that he has appointed some one to act as his agent, and, knowing that such other person is about to act in reliance upon that belief, does not interpose to undeceive such person. *Pole v. ing his father's name to promissory notes made by himself as indorser, and the father knew the fact, and took no steps to prevent it, and gave no notice, the presumption was created that the son had authority to sign his father's name, and the father was liable. Weaver v. Ogletree, 39 Ga. 586.

Carrying on Business in Name of Another.—One is estopped from denying that another who conducts a business in the name of the former to avoid the creditors of the true owner is conducting the business as his agent, as against one who does not know that all the property belonged to the latter, although he is informed as to the purpose of the parties. Goetz v. Goldbaum (Cal., 1894), 37 Pac. Rep. 646.

The fact that one allows his name to stand over the door of another who sells goods of his manufacture and buys in his name is a circumstance which, taken with others, may be considered as tending to show agency. Gilbraith v. Lineberger, 69 N. Car. 145.

But it has been held that an agency is not implied so as to create a liability for the agent's debts, by permitting a debtor from whom a creditor has taken a store in satisfaction of a debt to take out a license in the creditor's name, in order to sell off a stock of liquors which remained in the building. Ilff v. Stover, 4 N. Mex. 54.

Where a railroad company allowed a person without objection to rent an office on its right of way, and display a sign styling it the office of the company, although he was in fact the agent of a foreign corporation of the same name, the company was held bound by the purchase of goods by him in its name. Florida Midland, etc., R. Co. v. Varnedoe, 81 Ga. 175.

Where one has knowledge that another in conducting a business represents himself as the agent of the former, and he acquiesces therein, the former will be liable for indebtedness incurred in such business with third parties dealing with the agent in good faith and relying upon such representation. Garner v. A. Fisher Brewing Co., 6 Utah 332.

Knowledge of Representations.—It is essential, in order to create an agency by representation or estoppel, where a person held himself out to be and assumed to act as agent, that the principal shall have had full knowledge of such facts. Middletown First Nat. Bank v. Council Bluffs City Water Works Co., 56 Hun (N. Y.) 412.

The Rule of Presuming an Agency where one has been suffered to be recognized as another's general agent in buying and selling in the principal's line of business was applied where the son of a grocer and saloon-keeper ordered a lot of cigars and ale in his father's name, but used the same himself. Thurber v. Anderson, 88 Ill. 167.

Where One Fails to Notify the Seller within a reasonable time, when he knows that another is ordering goods in his name without authority, he is estopped from denying the agency. Cooper v. Mulder, 74 Mich. 374.

1. Agency Implied from Single Transaction.—Story on Agency (7th ed.), § 94; Shoninger v. Peabody, 57 Conn. 42, 14 Am. St. Rep. 88; Wilcox v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 24 Minn. 269. Compare Graves v. Horton, 38 Minn. 66.

But it was held, in an action against a married woman for seeds, fertilizers, etc., sold and delivered to her husband and used on her farm, on which both resided, that evidence that she had paid a bill for similar goods bought by him during the time covered by the transactions in question was incompetent on the issue as to whether or not he acted as her agent in carrying on the farm. Lovell v. Williams, 125 Mass. 439.

Limitation.—The law raises no inference, in the case of a special agency, limited to one transaction, that the agency continues or extends to other matters occurring years after. Reed v. Baggott, 5 Ill. App. 257. See also Gregg v. Wooliscroft, 52 Ill. App. 214; Malburn v. Schreiner, 49 Ill. 69.

A third party is justified in dealing with one as the agent of another where the latter has intimated to him that the former was his agent, and it is known that such party had at or about that time transacted similar business with other persons as agent for the same principal; and any contract entered into within the scope of such supposed agency will bind the principal. Thompson v. Clay, 60 Mich. 627.

There is a Strong Presumption in favor of one who has acted for a long time as an agent, with the knowledge of the principal. Smith v. White, 5 Dana (Ky.) 376; McDonnell v. Montgomery Branch Bank, 20 Ala. 313; Cobb v. Lunt, 4 Me. 503; Warren v. Ocean Ins. Co., 16 Me. 439, 33 Am. Dec. 674; Valentine v. Packer, 5 Pa. St. 333.

Indorsing Notes.—An agent who has been in the habit of indorsing notes with his principal's name, with the knowledge and assent of the principal, will be presumed to have that authority. Weaver v. Ogletree, 39 Ga. 586. See also Friedlander v. Cornell, 45 Tex. 585.

Payment of Assessments for the benefit of a society to the wife of the officer empowered to receive them is binding on the society when it has been common practice to pay to the wife in the course of business. Anderson v. Supreme Council, 135 N. Y. 107.

The Previous Course of Dealing by or through

Third Person must have Relied upon Agency.—A party seeking to hold one as principal must have believed in the existence of and relied upon the agency.¹

The Inference of the Existence of the Relation must have been one naturally drawn.²

The Authority will be Limited to acts within the scope of the agent's apparent duty.³

Limit of Principal's Responsibility.—The alleged principal is responsible, however, only for the appearance of authority which he allows to exist, not for that which the agent may assume.⁴

Circumstances Which Justify the Inference of Agency.—An agency may be implied, in accordance with the principles which have been stated, from the fact that one is put in possession of real property,⁵ given the custody of personal property,⁶ an agent is proper evidence for the jury, as tending to show the existence of an agency and its extent. Doan v. Duncan, 17 Ill. 272.

Husband Acting for Wife.—Evidence that a husband generally managed his wife's business affairs, doing business in the city where her property was located, while she lived in the country and gave the property no attention, looked after the rents and had sold portions of such property for her, is sufficient to establish the agency of the husband to employ a broker to sell the wife's real estate. Barnett v. Gluting, 3 Ind. App. 419.

Renewal of Agency.—A written contract creating a commercial agency for one year, at a fixed compensation for services, is tacitly renewed from year to year by having been expressly renewed for the second year, and continued for several successive years in conformity to the contract without express renewal. Standard Oil Co. v. Gilbert, 84 Ga. 714.

1. Good Faith Required of Third Party.—Norton v. Richmond, 93 Ill. 367; Ladd v. Grand Isl. (Vt., 1895), 31 Atl. Rep. 34; Dugan v. Lyman (N. J., 1892), 23 Atl. Rep. 657; Bickford v. Menier, 107 N. Y. 490; Friedlander v. Hillcoat (Tex., 1890), 14 S. W. Rep. 786. In this last case it was held that one who deals with another in possession of sheep, under a contract with the owner, by the terms of which he is to care for, manage, and control them at his own expense, with the exclusive right to sell the marketable product of such sheep, dividing the net proceeds equally, cannot charge the owner with liability as principal, when such dealer has full knowledge of the contract.

But in an action for the price of goods sold to an alleged agent, it has been held that where the plaintiff seeks to prove agency as an inference from certain facts, it is not necessary for him to show his knowledge of those facts at the time of the sale. Doan v. Duncan, 17 Ill. 272. See also Thomas v. Moody, 57 Cal. 215.

2. Plant v. McEwen, 4 Conn. 544.

Agency is Not Sufficiently Shown by evidence of the mere fact that the purchaser of standing timber was the president of a lumber company and gave the seller a draft of the company in part payment, in order to bind the company, where the authority is denied. Wisconsin Marine, etc., Ins. Co. Bank v. Filer, 83 Mich. 496.

The appearance of the name of an individual on a heading as "General Western Manager" is not in itself sufficient to prove agency in any transaction in which such paper may be used. Gaynor v. Pease Furnace Co., 51 Ill. App. 292.

A purchase of goods from and payment to one who had formerly been authorized by the owners to solicit orders, but never held out as authorized to sell, confer no right on the purchaser. Abrahams v. Weiller, 87 Ill. 179. See also Merck v. American Freehold Land Mortg. Co., 79 Ga. 213.

5. Putting One in Possession of Realty.—Johnson v. Johnson, 80 Ga. 260; Goss v. Helbing, 77 Cal. 190. In this latter case it was held that when a pump is sold and delivered to one in charge of waterworks for use at the works, without anything being said as to his acting for others; he must be held to have acted for the owners of the property, so as to charge them with a lien therefor.

6. Giving One Custody of Personalty.—Bynum v. Miller, 89 N. Car. 393. Here it was held that the act of a mortgagee in accepting a mortgage deed on a stock of goods of another, and any other goods he might buy to replenish the stock, was equivalent to an assent that the mortgagor should continue the business as his agent.

But where goods are consigned to a party to be sold under an arrangement by which he is at liberty to sell them at any price and on any terms he pleases, paying a fixed price to the owner, such consignee is not an agent, but a vendee. Gibney v. Curtis, 61 Md. 192.

1. Giving One a Note to Collect.—Where the agent has the possession of a promissory note, it may be inferred that he has authority to receive payment of it; but the burden is on the debtor who makes payment to the agent, relying upon such inference, to show that the promissory note was in his possession when the payment was made. Stiger v. Bent, 111 Ill. 328; Haines v. Pohlmann, 25 N. J. Eq. 179; Smith v. Kidd, 68 N. Y. 130, 23 Am. Rep. 157; Adams v. Humphreys, 54 Ga. 496.

Where the owner of a promissory note delivers it indorsed in blank to another with authority to dispose of it, the proceeds to be equally divided between them, a release of the note subsequently executed by the owner to the payee is a defense to an action against him by the agent, he being a mere agent for collection. Flanagan v. Brown, 70 Cal. 254.

Bookkeeper Indorsing Drafts.—Where the bookkeeper of a concern, who had authority to indorse drafts for deposit, indorsed certain drafts and delivered them to the office boy for deposit, who received the money thereon and delivered it to the bookkeeper, who appropriated it, it was held that the payment was valid, and that the concern was bound by the indorsement of their bookkeeper as their agent. Johnson v. Donnell, 90 N. Y. 1. The same principle appears in Doubleday v. Kress, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 181; Guilford v. Stacer, 53 Ga. 618.

Bank.—One is quoad hoc the servant of a bank that delivered to him certain notes with a request that he pass them for the benefit of the bank, or return them if he cannot do it, and who agrees to such terms. Towson v. Havre-de-Grace Bank, 6 Har. & J. (Md.) 47, 14 Am. Dec. 254; Bridenbecker v. Lowell, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 9.

But the customer of a bank was held not to be the agent of it in procuring the usurious renewal of a note payable to himself and held by the bank as collateral for his note, the renewal note having been made at the maker's request and substituted as collateral for the original. Rochester First Nat. Bank v. Bentley, 27 Minn. 87.

The Mere Mailing of a Copy of an Account to a third person does not of itself constitute such person the agent for collection. Dutcher v. Beckwith, 45 Ill. 460, 92 Am. Dec. 232.

An Insurance Company makes itself liable as principal by giving one all necessary blanks and papers, responding to his acts, approving permits of removal given by him, and paying his rent. Hardin v. Alexandria Ins. Co., 90 Va. 413.

Where it was shown that a salesman had authority to make a certain contract on behalf of a defendant concern, evidence of a letter written in response to a letter from the plaintiff, by such salesman, on the letter paper of such concern, which stated that a certain contract had been made with the salesman, and admitted the contract to be as stated by the plaintiff, was held to be sufficient to sustain a finding for the plaintiff. Thomas v. Wells, 140 Mass. 517.

The Request of a Purchaser of Land Sold for Taxes under the Iowa Code, § 894, to the foreman of a newspaper publishing the notice of sale to make affidavit, does not constitute him his agent. Chambers v. Haddock, 64 Iowa 556.

The Superintendent of a Mine has authority, by virtue of his position, to bind the owner for supplies furnished to the keeper of a boarding-house necessary to the working of the mine. Heald v. Hendy, 89 Cal. 632.

Husband Selling Wife's Property.—A wife who owns a herd of cattle is bound by sales made by a herder under authority from the husband, when it is shown that the husband had the entire management and control of such herd of cattle, and generally conducted the business and made sales of cattle as the owner. Parker v. Freeman, 11 Colo. 576.

Clerks, Servants, etc.—One employed in a broker's office apparently as a clerk or attaché, and doing business with the broker's customers, is an agent of the broker. Timpson v. Allen, 7 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 323, 27 N. Y. Supp. 915.

The dress of a railroad trainman indicates his character as such. Hughes v. New York, etc., R. Co., 36 N. Y. Super. Ct. 222.

The master of a barge properly presumes one to be the agent of the wharf owner who directs him where to moor his barge and whom he sees in charge directing the moving of vessels, etc., and to whom, after the mooring, he is referred by the clerk of the owner as his representative, and the wharf owner is liable in damages if the barge sustains injury by reason of the unsafe condition of the mooring place. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Atha, 22 Fed. Rep. 920.

The presence of a servant on a steamer is some evidence of his employment there. Svenson v. Atlantic Mail Steamship Co., 57 N. Y. 108.

One at work on a locomotive with his coat off is presumed to be an agent of the company. McCoun v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 338.

A young man standing behind the counter of his father and dealing with his customers, may be considered as his clerk or agent, and his acts in the line of his duty are binding on his father. Elsner v. State, 30 Tex. 524.

Where one claiming to be the agent of the defendant habitually took care of the defendant's warehouse, and sold and delivered to pay over to another,¹ given an account against another to secure,² or intrusted with a deed by another with authority to close a real-estate transaction.³ The acceptance by the creditor from the debtor's agent, of money due, does not make such agent the agent of the creditor;⁴ nor does a creditor render another his agent by sending for money left with such other by the debtor to pay the debt.⁵

By the Ratification of Past Acts, others of a similar nature may be held to be binding, on the ground of an implied authority.⁶ If, however, the nature of the act or the conduct of the alleged principal is not such as naturally to lead another to rely upon the agency, he is not responsible.⁷ Thus an appointment customers the goods therein, evidence of such facts is competent to prove agency. Kent v. Tyson, 20 N. H. 121.

When a traveler goes to a hotel at night and finds a clerk in charge of the office, assigning rooms, etc., he properly assumes that such clerk has authority to take charge of money handed him by a guest for safe keeping, and the proprietor is liable. Curtis v. Murphy, 63 Wis. 4, 53 Am. Rep. 242.

Where a party contracted for cars to transport a herd of cattle, and in consideration of reduced rates signed a contract restricting the liability of the company, and delivered part of the herd, it was presumed that other persons who delivered the remainder of the herd acted as his agents, and had authority to sign a similar contract. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Morrison, 19 Ill. 136.

One who establishes a retail store in a place distant from the owner's residence, placing an agent or clerk in sole charge, which he visits about once a month, is presumed to hold out such clerk as authorized to sell goods at retail, and also to keep the stock replenished by purchases, according to the usual course of business. *White v. Where Parties Sign an Application for a Loan, agreeing to pay all expenses, the person employed to negotiate the loan is the agent of the borrower. Thomas v. Desney, 57 Iowa 58.

One Who Buys Exchange for a Principal is the agent of that principal, and not of the seller of the exchange. Horstmann v. Baltzer, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 367.

A Direction by a Surety on a Note to the party's agent not to deliver it until time for investigation had elapsed, does not constitute such agent the agent of the surety. Murray v. Kimball, 10 Ind. App. 141.

One Who, Buying Goods from the Agent of a Seller, requests the agent to write a note and contract in his (the buyer's) book, which the agent does and signs it with his own name, does not constitute such agent his own agent. Graham v. Musson, 5 Bing. N. Cas. 603, 35 E. C. L. 243.

Where an Insurance Agent, upon application, agreed to give insurance to a certain amount on specified property, he to distribute the risk among several companies which he represented, it was held to be a valid contract of insurance with each company as soon as the policy was signed, although the policies were not delivered until after the property was destroyed by fire, since the agent acted for the insured in distributing the risks. Michigan Pipe Co. v. Michigan F., etc., Ins. Co., 92 Mich. 482, 494.

To the same effect is Hart v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 9 Wash. St. 620.

But where an insurance agent delivered a policy to the insured, containing a provision that "the company will not be liable until the premium be actually paid at the home office," received the premium and failed to pay it over, it was held that he was the agent of the insured and not of the company, that the company was not bound, and the agent was liable to the insured for the loss. Criswell v. Riley, 5 Ind. App. 496.

The Agent of a Grantee is made the agent of the grantor where the grantor consents to an arrangement whereby the lands are sold to a third party with instructions to such agent to receive payments therefor and apply them to the indebtedness due the original grantor, and such grantor is bound by payments made to the agent. Miller v. Wilson, 126 Mo. 48.

Brokers.—A broker who is employed to sell produce and who effects a sale is agent of both parties. Merrit v. Clason, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 102, 7 Am. Dec. 286.

A broker may be regarded as the agent of purchasers, where the purchase of goods was made through him by means of telegrams and letters, and completed by bought and and then becomes the agent of another, in the same transaction.¹ In general, the law requires strict proof of the appointment of one who, at the same time or just prior thereto, acted for another.²

5. Evidence—a. IN GENERAL—When Question for Court—When for Jury.—If the evidence adduced to support a claim of agency is undisputed, the question of whether it exists or not is one of law for the court.³ Whenever it is disputed, however, it is one of mixed law and fact for the consideration of the jury, aided by instructions from the court.⁴ The court is to decide sold notes signed by other brokers who were employed by the purchasers. Trent Valley Woollen Mfg. Co. v. Oelrichs, 23 Can. Supreme Ct. 682.

A provision broker, having specific instructions as to the terms of sale, acts as agent for both the seller and purchaser where, after procuring a purchaser, he has the goods sent to his own order and indorses the bill of lading to the purchaser. Ulmer v. Ryan, 137 Pa. St. 309, 27 W. N. C. (Pa.) 26, 48 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 47.

Upon a sale of goods by the plaintiff's factor to the defendant, the factor drew up a note of sale in which he entered the name of the defendant as purchaser and delivered it to him, who requested an alteration to be made in it, which was done and he then accepted it; this was held to be evidence of the authority of the factor to write the name. Darrell v. Evans, 6 H. & N. 660, 1 H. & C. 174, 30 L. J. Exch. 254, 31 L. J. Exch. 337.

Where one, as agent for another, sold but did not transfer stock to a third person, promising to be accountable to the other for such dividends as he or his agent should receive before transfer, it was held that he thereby became the agent of the third party to receive such dividends. Cropper v. Adams, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 40.

Where the Cashier of a Bank is employed to purchase certain railroad bonds, he is the agent for the purchase of the bonds; but after the bonds have been deposited as a special deposit he ceases to be the agent of the purchaser and becomes the agent of the bank; and if he afterwards, to hide his embezzlement of the funds of the bank, takes the bonds from the special deposit and reports them as assets of the bank, the depositor may recover their value from the bank. Monmouth First Nat. Bank v. Dunbar, 118 Ill. 625.

Where a contract between a coal company and a railroad company provided that the latter should transport the coal of the former to a certain point and there deliver it on board boats in accordance with orders given by the coal company to the agent of the railroad company at that point, it was held that such agent was not the agent of the coal company so as to bind the latter by his acts and declarations in the delivery of the coal. Kelly v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co., 8 Daly (N. Y.) 291.

A creditor by accepting money from the agent of a debtor does not thereby render such agent his agent; so that if at another time the agent should appropriate the money, the loss would be that of the creditor and not of the debtor. Fisher v. Schiller Lodge, 50 Iowa 459.

3. When Facts Undisputed—Agency Question for Court.—Gulick v. Grover, 33 N. J. L. 463, 97 Am. Dec. 728, which holds that, where the facts are undisputed, the question as to whether an agent has the requisite authority to bind his principal is one of law for the court; and that this is equally true whether such authority is sought to be sustained by a previous authorization or by a subsequent ratification.

Commercial Agency.—Where a party's letters, coupled with testimony that he had made reports to a commercial agency of the status of merchants, would support a finding that he was an agent, if there was other evidence from which the jury might conclude that he was not such agent, the question of agency should be left to the jury. Bradstreet Co. v. Gill, 72 Tex. 115, 13 Am. St. Rep. 768.

Officer Serving Process upon Corporate Employee.—The fact that an officer made service upon a corporation by delivery to an individual who was supposed to be managing agent, is no evidence to show agency, and a return based upon such service is not conclusive. Boynton v. Keeseville Electric Light, etc., Co., 5 Misc. Rep. (Essex County Ct., N. Y.) 118.

Connecting Carriers.—Evidence tending to show that the roads of several connected railroad companies formed a "line," and had a common office in charge of a general agent, and where his chief clerk for the transportation of goods was found, is properly submitted to the jury on the question as to whether one assuming to act as general agent had authority to bind the companies. Merely Assuming to Act as Agent.—The mere fact that one has assumed to act as agent is not sufficient to show the relation,¹ unless his acts are so open and notorious that it is evident that they must have been known to the principal and assented to by him.²

Circumstances and Conduct of the Parties.—The circumstances and apparent relations of the parties, and their treatment of each other, may be shown in evidence.³

Competency of Principal and Agent as Witnesses.—Both the principal and agent are competent witnesses as to the existence or nonexistence of the relation;⁴ the admissions of the former being also competent evidence.⁵

Particularly where the agent relies upon implied or parol authority to charge real property. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Masten, 3 Fed. Rep. 881; Challoner v. Bouck, 56 Wis. 652.

1. Merely Assuming to Act as Agent Not Sufficient.—Huntsville Belt Line, etc., R. Co. v. Corpening, 97 Ala. 681; Reynolds v. Continental Ins. Co., 36 Mich. 131; Walsh v. St. Paul Trust Co., 39 Minn. 23; Petrie v. Wright, 6 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 647; Whiting v. Lake, 91 Pa. St. 349; International, etc., R. Co. v. Prince, 77 Tex. 560, 19 Am. St. Rep. 795.

The fact that a person assumed to act as the agent of another in receiving a payment of money does not prove his agency. McDougald v. Dawson, 30 Ala. 553; Doonan v. Mitchell, 26 Ga. 472; Coburn v. Paine, 36 Me. 105.

Declarations.—As to the declarations of an agent to prove agency, see the title ADMISSIONS, Vol. I, p. 674.

A Prima Facie Case of Agency is Made out by evidence that one acts openly for another under such circumstances as would imply a knowledge on the part of the other. Barnett v. Gluting, 3 Ind. App. 415.

Where a Person Acts Openly and Publicly as the agent of a corporation, and in such capacity employs a party to perform certain work, and the work when completed is appropriated and used by the corporation, the work being done with the knowledge of its agents, it is held that the agency and authority of such person so permitted to act must be presumed. Rockford, etc., R. Co. v. Wilcox, 66 Ill. 417; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Holdford, 86 Ill. 455, 29 Am. Rep. 43; Franklin v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co., 52 Mo. 461; U. S. Bank v. Dandridge, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 64.

Affixing Corporate Seal.—Where a corporation officer affixes the corporate seal it will be presumed that he was authorized to do so. Flint v. Clinton Co., 12 N. H. 430.

3. Circumstances and Apparent Relations and Conduct of the Parties may be Shown.—Brown v. Prude, 97 Ala. 639; Wright v. Solomon, 19 Cal. 64, 79 Am. Dec. 196; Arthur v. Gard, 3 Colo. App. 133; Olcott v. Tioga R. Co., 27 N. Y. 546, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 179, 84 Am. Dec. 298; Forsyth v. Day, 41 Me. 382; Strimpfer v. Roberts, 18 Pa. St. 283, 57 Am. Dec. 606; North v. Metz, 57 Mich. 612.

Illustrations.—Where there is a question whether one is principal or agent in a commercial transaction, evidence showing him to have been in possession of the property, and the commercial correspondence relating to it, is clearly admissible to prove the character in which he dealt with the property. Turner v. Yates, 16 How. (U. S.) 14.

Evidence that a landowner told a broker to sell property at a price named; that a year or two afterward the owner wrote the broker, naming a specified price for the property and offering a certain commission; that about a year later the broker telegraphed to the owner asking if he would take a less price, and the owner refused, whereupon the broker made a contract for that price, which the owner refused to carry out—is sufficient to justify a finding of authority of the broker to make the sale. Holden v. Starks, 159 Mass. 503.

And where it was sought to charge one as agent after a certain period, and the agent offered to prove that prior to that period another person had acted as agent, such evidence was held to be irrelevant. Beasley v. Downey, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 284.

4. Principal and Agent as Witnesses.—Collins v. Lester, 16 Ga. 410; Van Sickle v. Keith, 88 Iowa 9; Howe Mach. Co. v. Clark, 15 Kan. 492; Cowles v. Burns, 28 Kan. 32; *French v. The agent will be permitted to testify as to his appointment. Indianapolis Chair Mfg. Co. v. Swift, 132 Ind. 197.

And is a competent witness to prove his authority to sign an instrument. Rice v. Gove, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 158, 33 Am. Dec. 724.

Also to prove contracts made by him for the principal, if he be not personally interested. Cadwell v. Meek, 17 Ill. 220.

An agent is a competent witness to prove his authority to sell real estate. McDowell v. Simpson, 3 Watts (Pa.) 129, 27 Am. Dec. 338; McGunnagle v. Thornton, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 251; Miles v. Cook, 1 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 58.

5. Admissions.—Phleger v. Ivins, 5 Harr. (Del.) 118; Haughton v. Maurer, 55 Mich. 323; Wild v. New York, etc., Silver Min. Co., 59 N. Y. 644.

Testimony of an agent that principal stated to a third party that he would leave the prop-

Evidence of General Reputation is not admissible to show agency.¹

An Adjudication of the Fact of Agency in a suit against the agent, to which the principal is not a party, does not estop the principal from contesting such fact in a suit against him.²

b. WHERE THE APPOINTMENT IS IN WRITING—Loss of Original Document.—If the appointment is in writing, or where a writing is by law necessary to the appointment, in a suit between principal and agent, parol testimony is only admissible as secondary evidence upon proof of the loss of the original document.³

As between Other Parties, however, agency, as a question of fact, may be proved by the acts, declarations, and conduct of the principal or agent, although the agent was appointed by power of attorney.⁴

If the Appointment is under Seal, better authorities hold that it may be proved by erty in the hands of the agent for disposal, was held to be competent as tending to prove the agent's authority. Wallace v. Nodine, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 239, 32 N. Y. St. Rep. 657.

The statements and dealings of the principal in recognition of the agent's authority are relevant where such authority is the question at issue. Haughton v. Maurer, 55 Mich. 323.

Communications between principal and agent in which the latter's authority is expressly or impliedly admitted, or any other facts going to show recognition by the principal of authority, may establish agency where no better evidence is forthcoming. Arthur v. Gard, 3 Colo. App. 133.

Where one who claimed to be the president of a mining company employed another, and the question was whether the former had authority, an answer verified by him as president of the company which admitted that such person went into the employ of the company, was held to be prima facie evidence of sufficient authority. Steel v. Solid Silver Gold, etc., Min. Co., 13 Nev. 486. See also Norton v. Richmond, 93 Ill. 367.

Admissions of the principal generally as to the agency of a person are not proof of the agency at a particular time. Irvine v. Buckaloe, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 35. See the title ADMISSIONS.

1. Evidence of General Reputation.—Saussy v. South Florida R. Co., 22 Fla. 327; Graves v. Horton, 38 Minn. 66; Perkins v. Stebbins, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 523; Clark v. Farmers' Woolen Mfg. Co., 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 256.

It has been held that general reputation may be shown in connection with other facts. Abbott's Trial Evidence, p. 41; Litchfield Iron Co. v. Bennett, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 234.

Agency is a fact to which a witness having knowledge of its existence may testify; but mere general reputation is not such knowledge. Central etc., Co. v. Smith, 76 Ala. 572, 52 Am. Rep. 353.

2 Marks v. Sullivan, 8 Utah 406. See also the title RES JUDICATA.

3. When Parol Evidence Admissible.—Wharton on Agency, §§ 44, 225; 2 Greenleaf on Evidence (14th ed.), § 63; Nicholl v. American Ins. Co., 3 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 529; Elliott v. Stocks, 67 Ala. 336; McNeill v. Arnold, 17 Ark. 155; Neal v. Patten, 40 Ga.

363; Rawson v. Curtis, 19 Ill. 456; Richardson v. St. Joseph Iron Co., 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 146, 33 Am. Dec. 460; Downer v. Button, 26 N. H. 338; Nicholson v. Mifflin, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 246, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 38; Walsh v. Pierce, 12 Vt. 130.

When, for want of proof of its due execution, a written power of attorney is rejected from the evidence on a trial, parol evidence of the agency to prove that for which it was offered is inadmissible. Hovey v. Deane, 13 Me. 31.

Parol Directions to Agent.—When parol directions to the agent are the best evidence to be obtained, they may be introduced to prove the authority conferred upon the agent. Lunsford v. Smith, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 554.

Parol directions from the principal to the agent are admissible to prove authority in the purchase of certain articles; and an unsigned writing purporting to have come from the principal, directed to the agent in these words, "Buy me the following articles" (enumerating them), is not such as defines or limits the authority of the agent. Snow v. Warner, 10 Met. (Mass.) 132, 43 Am. Dec. 417.

It is Competent in Order to Charge the Principal, to ascertain from evidence dehors a written contract made by an agent, who the real principal is. New York, etc., Steamship Co. v. Harbison, 16 Fed. Rep. 688.

4. When Fact of Agency Not Directly Involved.—Reynolds v. Collins, 78 Ala. 94; Kaskaskia Bridge Co. v. Shannon, 6 Ill. 15. Compare Curtis v. Ingham, 2 Vt. 287; Columbia Delaware Bridge Co. v. Geisse, 38 N. J. L. 39.

In order to relieve one from liability as a person acting for another without authority, where a bill of exchange purported to have been drawn under a special written authority, other evidence was allowed to establish the agent's authority. Page v. Lathrop, 20 Mo. 589.

The principal may also show by parol that an agent was acting for him in a contract made by the agent in his own name. Barker v. Garvey, 83 Ill. 184; King v. Handy, 2 Ill. App. 212.

But where the witness testified that he was such, and had the authority in his pocket, his oral testimony was properly excluded. Lee v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 79 Iowa 379.

parol acknowledgment of the principal,¹ while others take the opposite view.²

V. DELEGATION—1. Delegation of Authority by Principal—a. GENERAL RULE.—Delegation, in the sense assigned to the term at common law, means the act of investing one or more persons with authority to do some act or acts. An authority or power is either original, or it is delegated. Where the authority is original, the general maxim of the common law applies that whatever a person may do of his own right, he may do by another.³

b. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE—(1) Personal Acts.—The rule stated above is subject to certain exceptions, and there are acts of so peculiarly personal a nature that their performance cannot be delegated. Thus, according to the ancient common law, the duty of rendering homage or fealty, or the lord's right of inflicting personal chastisement, with or without cause, upon his villain, could not be performed by an agent.⁴

More modern illustrations of this class of cases are, making a will, or contracting a marriage.⁵

(2) Illegal and Immoral Acts*.—The relation of principal and agent does not appertain to transactions which are illegal, immoral, or opposed to public policy.⁶ Parties to such transactions are both liable as tortfeasors or crimi-

4. Combes' Case, 9 Coke 76a. Another instance noted in this case is as follows: "That where an infant of the age of fifteen years may make a feoffment, that he cannot do it by attorney, because a custom which enables a person disabled by the law ought to be pursued, and an infant can do nothing to pass anything out of him by attorney. Vide 11 H. Certificates of Acknowledgment of Married Women.—The private examination of a married woman being designed for her protection from the influence of fear or coercion, is in its nature personal, and is therefore not a matter in which she may be represented by another, and, under statutes requiring such examination, acknowledgments made by married women through an attorney in fact have been held void. *Wambole v. nals and all contracts thus entered into are null and void.¹

2. Delegation of Authority by Agent—a. GENERAL RULE: DELEGATUS NON POTEST DELEGARE.—In general, the power conferred upon an agent is based upon the special confidence or trust which the principal has in the agent's personal ability or integrity, and such power, in the absence of authority express or implied, cannot be redelegated by the agent so as to bind the principal.²

West Virginia.—Smith v. Lowther, 35 W. Va. 309, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 368.

Wisconsin.—McKinnon v. Vollmar, 75 Wis. 82, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 368.

Authority to Make Promissory Notes.—An agent upon whom is conferred authority to give a note cannot delegate the authority. Emerson v. Providence Hat Mfg. Co., 12 Mass. 237; Brewster v. Hobart, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 302; Blore v. Sutton, 3 Meriv. 237; Henderson v. Barnewall, 1 Y. & J. 387.

So One Authorized to Accept for Accommodation must himself determine the propriety of the act. Commercial Bank v. Norton, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 501.

A Verbal Authority to Sell Land cannot be delegated. Carroll v. Tucker (C. Pl.), 21 N. Y. Supp. 952; Tynan v. Dullnig (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 25 S. W. Rep. 465, 818.

Nor can an Agent Having Power of Attorney to Sell Real Estate by a similar power delegate that authority to another. Bocock v. Pavey, 8 Ohio St. 270.

Authority to Sell Personalty.—The same rule applies to agents to sell personal property. Atlee v. Fink, 75 Mo. 100, 43 Am. Rep. 385.

And Bailees with power of sale have a non-delegable trust. Hunt v. Douglass, 22 Vt. 128; Barret v. Rhem, 6 Bush (Ky.) 467.

A Keeper of Goods Taken under Attachment, having authority from the sheriff, cannot turn the trust over to another. Connor v. Parker, 114 Mass. 331.

General Superintendent of Building.—In Crozier v. Reins, 4 Ill. App. 564, it was held that a general agent of the owner, having superintendence of a certain building, and clothed with judgment and discretion to employ an engineer, may not delegate this authority to another.

Civil Engineer.—In Wilson v. York, etc., R. Co., 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 74, a civil engineer was selected to make certain measurements, and he attempted to delegate his powers. The court said: "In his skill and integrity, or the person who might succeed him in the responsible station which he occupied, full and implicit confidence might have been reposed, which the plaintiff [his principal] at least might, for valid reasons, be unwilling to repose in a different and subordinate officer; and the execution of the trust by a different person was an assumption of power not warranted, we think, by the express terms of the contract."

California—Agent to Secure Tenant for Ranch.—The case of a person employed to secure a tenant for a ranch does not furnish one of the exceptions laid down in California Civ. Code, § 2349, to the general rule that delegated power may not be redelegated. Fairchild v. King, 102 Cal. 320.

Joint Power of Attorney.—Where a joint power of attorney is given to two or more persons one of them may not delegate to another authority to act for him in the execution of the power. Loeb v. Drakeford, 75 Ala. 454; White v. Davidson, 8 Md. 169, 63 Am. Dec. 699.

Agent to Receive Money.—In Lewis v. Ingersoll, 1 Keyes (N. Y.) 347, it was held that the authority of an agent to receive money is most clearly a personal trust and confidence which cannot be delegated without certain and plain authority. See also Stephens v. Badcock, 3 B. & Ad. 354, 23 E. C. L. 93.

But in Grinnell v. Buchanan, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 538, where A agreed with B that if, within a certain time, the latter should make an arrangement for the tearing down of certain buildings, he would pay him a sum of money, *in General*¹—Discretionary Powers.—The discretionary powers conferred upon public agents are in the nature of a trust, and unless authorized so to do the persons chosen for their execution cannot delegate them.² The duties, therefore, of judges,³ justices of the peace,⁴ sheriffs,⁵ and clerks of courts,⁶ in so far as they are judicial and official, cannot be delegated.

So Committees or agents authorized by statute to perform discretionary duties must personally execute the authority.⁷

which sum was to be paid as a bonus to the party taking down the buildings, and this arrangement was effected, it was held that the agency of B to receive and pay over the money was not one of personal trust and confidence, and might be delegated. 1. See the title PUBLIC OFFICERS.

2. Rule as to Delegation by Public Agents.—A Commissary General has been denied the right to perform his official duties by a deputy. State v. Buffalo, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 434.

Officers of a County elected to supervise an issue of bonds may not delegate their trust. Jackson County v. Brush, 77 Ill. 59.

Nor can a County Commissioner delegate the power to organize plantations. State v. Shaw, 64 Me. 263.

Nor can a Board of Health, having power to employ a physician, delegate it to a committee of persons not members of the board. Young v. Blackhawk County, 66 Iowa 460.

So a Board of Charities cannot by resolution authorize its clerk to commence and carry on all prosecutions of alleged bastardy in the name of the board. People v. Davis, 15 Hun (N. Y.) 209.

Board of Supervisors.—In Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 41 Mich. 454, Cooley, J., said that the statutory authority conferred upon boards of supervisors to regulate the bridging of navigable streams is a trust that must be executed by themselves. In so far as such a board exercises governmental functions, as the imposition of a tax, it cannot delegate its powers. People v. Rensselaer County, 52 Hun (N. Y.) 447.

A Tax List, however, made up by one who is not a member of the taxing body, but who acts under its direction and as its agent, is not thereby made invalid. Covington v. Rockingham, 93 N. Car. 134.

Treasurer.—Where a statute prescribes certain duties to be performed by the treasurer, such duties cannot be discharged by another. People v. Bank of North America, 75 N. Y. 547.

A milk inspector cannot authorize another person, in his absence, to take samples of milk from wagons used for its conveyance. Com. v. Smith, 143 Mass. 169.

But see Holland v. State, 23 Fla. 123.

3. Judges.—Smith v. Frisbie, 7 Iowa 486; Michales v. Hine, 3 Greene (Iowa) 470; Wright v. Boon, 2 Greene (Iowa) 458; Jacquemine v. State, 48 Miss. 280; Bradley Fertilizer Co. v. Taylor, 112 N. Car. 141; State v. Jefferson, 66 N. Car. 309.

The judge cannot delegate to the clerk, to the stenographer, or to any one else the authority to put a written instrument into a bill of exceptions. This is an important delegation of duty, inasmuch as it devolves upon the clerk the duty of determining what part of the record shall go into the bill, as well as the duty of determining what is actually evidence. Seymour Woollen Factory Co. v. Brodhecker, 130 Ind. 389.

Nor can a court delegate its judicial functions to its clerk, so that he may set aside a judgment upon the performance of a condition. Strickland v. Cox, 102 N. Car. 411.

The Signing of a Bill of Exceptions is so far a judicial act that the judge cannot perform it by an attorney or deputy. Darling v. Gill, Wright (Ohio) 73. See also Pressley v. Lamb, 105 Ind. 171. See the title JUDGE.

4. Justices of the Peace.—Entick v. Carrington, 19 How. St. Tr. 1063.

Writs.—A justice of the peace cannot delegate to his clerk authority to issue writs. Borrodale v. Leek, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 611.

Nor can he leave blanks in writs and confer upon others power to fill them. People v. Smith, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 63; Kirkwood v. Smith, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 228; Ex p. Kellogg, 6 Vt. 509.

But he may fill up blanks, it seems, or sign by another acting in his presence and under his direction. Borrodale v. Leek, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 611; People v. Smith, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 63; Achorn v. Matthews, 38 Me. 173; Hanson v. Rowe, 26 N. H. 329. But see Chapman v. Limerick, 56 Me. 391, and Kidder v. Prescott, 24 N. H. 263.

5. Sheriffs.—Wilson v. Thorpe, 6 M & W. 721; Perkins v. Reed, 14 Ala. 536; McGuffie v. State, 17 Ga. 508.

A Sheriff may Empower an Assistant to certify a copy of a warrant of attachment and make notice thereof, Gibson v. National Park Bank, 49 N. Y. Super Ct. 429; or to summon jurors, McGuffie v. State, 17 Ga. 508. See also Allen v. Smith, 12 N. J. L. 159. See the title SHERIFFS.

6. Clerks of Courts.—Jackson v. Buchanan, 89 N. Car. 74.

In the Absence of Statutory Authority a clerk of court cannot delegate to a deputy power to make probate of deeds. Piland v. Taylor, 113 N. Car. 1. See Abrams v. Ervin, 9 Iowa 87. See the title CLERKS OF COURTS.

7. Committees and Commissioners.—Power given pilot commissioners to examine pilots and grant or refuse licenses is incapable of delegation. The California, 1 Sawy. (U. S.) 596.

The same is true of the authority given a committee to make alterations in fish dams, Stoughton v. Baker, 4 Mass. 522, 3 Am. Dec. 236; or to a committee to construct and repair canals, Lyon v. Jerome, 26 Wend. (N.

Agent Appointed by Court to Sell Property.—The same rule applies to one commissioned by a court to make sale of property. The person authorized to make the sale is invested with a discretion as to the time, place, and manner of sale, which cannot be delegated,¹ and the officer so appointed to sell must himself be present, and superintend and control the transaction.²

(2) Officers and Agents of Municipal Corporations³—Rule Stated.—The governing board, or other department or agent, of a municipal corporation, having powers calling for the exercise of discretion and judgment, cannot delegate the execution of such powers to other departments or persons.⁴

Hence, a Common Council, or other board, to which is intrusted the duty of making public improvements, as the construction, repairing, and grading of streets, or the construction and repairing of sewers, cannot delegate to the superintendent of streets, city engineer, or other person, its authority to determine what improvements are necessary.⁵ And where the city council or board of Instances.—Legislative powers conferred upon a municipal corporation cannot be delegated. Such powers are in the nature of public trusts given the legislative assembly of the corporation for the public benefit, and cannot be vicariously exercised. Matthews v. Alexandria, 68 Mo. 118, 30 Am. Rep. 776.

Power conferred upon the common council to issue and sell bonds cannot be delegated.

State v. Hauser, 63 Ind. 155. The same is true of the power to regulate tolls, Lord v. Oconto, 47 Wis. 386; and of the power to grant licenses, Brooklyn v. Breslin, 57 N. Y. 594; Darling v. St. Paul, 19 Minn. 389. See also In re White, 43 Minn. 250, 29 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 514.

Where the common council is authorized to regulate a calling or business—e.g., the sale of liquors—it cannot delegate its authority. East St. Louis v. Wehrung, 50 Ill. 28.

The mayor of Buffalo was not permitted to transfer the duty of approving ordinances to his clerk. Lyth v. Buffalo, 48 Hun (N. Y.) 175. And it was held not competent for the Board of Supervisors of San Francisco, by resolution, to delegate its proper functions to the clerk of the board. Meuser v. Risdon, 36 Cal. 239. A city engineer may not delegate his discretionary powers. Sheehan v. Gleeson, 46 Mo. 100.

But a common council may appoint a committee to procure the necessary furniture for its rooms. Edwards v. Watertown, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 426; Kramrath v. Albany, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 206. And agents of a town appointed to prosecute a suit, unless restricted, have the power of substitution or delegation so far as to appoint attorneys and employ counsel. *Buckland v. aldermen and the mayor have a joint power, the mayor cannot delegate his power to the council or board, and vice versa.¹

The Selectmen of a Town are bound to exercise their personal discretion in discharging the duties of their office, and are not permitted to delegate their authority.²

(3) Officers and Agents of Private Corporations.—General Rule.—These officials are selected by the stockholders in order that the corporation may have the benefit of their wisdom and integrity; their discretionary duties, therefore, are personal and nondelegable.⁴

Calls—Dividends—Purchase of Stock—Appointment and Removal of Agents.—Thus power to make calls and assessments,⁵ to declare dividends,⁶ to purchase stock,⁷ and to appoint and remove agents⁸ is incapable of delegation.

The Same Rule Applies to Liquidators of a company, who cannot authorize one of their number to accept bills.⁹

Conveyance of Real Estate.—But a committee or agent may be appointed to convey real estate belonging to the corporation.¹⁰

(4) Arbitrators.¹¹—Rule Stated.—The general principle, Delegatus non potest delegare, is peculiarly applicable to arbitrators. They can neither delegate their trust to others,¹² nor leave a part of the matter in controversy to the

A city council cannot appoint a committee of its number to determine the location of street lights. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Riordan (Tex. Civ. App., 1893), 22 S. W. Rep. 519.

But see the case of Hitchcock v. Galveston, 96 U. S. 341, where it is held by a divided court that a city council, empowered "to establish, direct, construct, regulate, and keep in repair bridges, culverts, and sewers, sidewalks and cross-ways," after determining upon the materials and the manner in which the work should be done, might appoint another to make a contract according to the terms laid down by the council.

Allotment of Shares.—Directors cannot substitute others in their place to allot shares. In re Leeds Banking Co., L. R. 1 Ch. 561.

Receiving Subscriptions.—In Crocker v. Crane, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 211, it was held that commissioners to open books and receive subscriptions to stock must act personally. But in Lohman v. New York, etc., R. Co., 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 39, where the directors substituted others to receive subscriptions to the capital stock, the substitution was said to be valid. See also Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 190.

Vestrymen of a Church may empower a committee of three of their number to borrow money and give notes therefor. Johnson v. Smith, 21 Conn. 632.

5. Power to Make Calls and Assessments.—Exp. Winsor, 3 Story (U. S.) 411; Silver Hook Road v. Greene, 12 R. I. 164; Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Chase, 56 N. H. 341.

See Read v. Memphis Gayoso Gas Co., 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 545, where the court said the directors could "authorize the president to make such call on the stock subscribed as may be necessary for carrying on suits of the company, and do such other acts as, in his judgment, are for the interest of the company."

Sale of Shares.—In York, etc., R. Co. v. Ritchie, 40 Me. 425, the statute authorized, upon failure of the shareholders to pay assessments, a sale of the shares at auction, under an order from the board of directors to the treasurer. A sale made by the treasurer under the authority of a committee appointed by the directors was adjudged void, as the directors could not thus delegate their authority.

Award "Subject to the Opinion" of Another.—An arbitrator improperly delegates his determination of others.¹ Nor can they elect others to act with them.²

Scientific and Technical Matters.—If, however, scientific or technical questions arise, they may properly consult persons of skill and experience, and may adopt the report of such persons to enable them to correctly decide the dispute.³ So when the duties of their office require the performance of ministerial or mechanical acts, as for example the taking of measurements or the examination of accounts, they may transfer the performance of such acts to others.⁴

(5) Personal Representatives and Trustees⁵—General Rule.—The office of personal representative and trustee is in a high degree personal, and must be executed according to the discretion of the persons authorized. This being the case, such delegates cannot appoint others to act for them.⁶

Joint Trustees.—And where two trustees or personal representatives have joint power, one cannot delegate his power to the other, so as to enable that other to act alone.⁷

Where there is No Element of Trust.—But where the power conferred has in it no element of trust and confidence it may be transferred.⁸

authority when he makes his award "subject to the opinion" of another. Ellison v. Bray, 9 L. T. 730.

Where Power is Given to Three Arbitrators, or any two of them, two of such arbitrators cannot transfer their power to the third. Little v. Newton, 2 M. & G. 351, 40 E. C. L. 407.

But if, after agreeing to be bound by the decision of another on a disputed point, the agreement is not regarded, their award will be good. Haff v. Blossom, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 559.

If the parties, pending a reference, by an agreement to which the arbitrator assents, stipulate that a certain part of an account in dispute shall be adjusted by a third person, whose finding shall be adopted by the arbitrator as conclusive evidence, and the arbitration is so conducted, there is no wrongful delegation of authority by the arbitrator. Sharp v. Nowell, 6 C. B. 253, 60 E. C. L. 253.

2. Calling in Others to Act with Them.—Lingood v. Eade, 2 Atk. 501; In re Hare, 8 Scott 267.

Illustrations.—A lay arbitrator cannot appoint an attorney-at-law to aid him throughout the arbitration and to be present for the purpose of regulating the conduct of the hearing. Proctor v. Williams, 8 C. B. N. S. 386, 98 E. C. L. 386.

Nor can an arbitrator employ the attorney of one of the parties to the reference to aid him in framing the award. In re Underwood, 11 C. B. N. S. 442, 103 E. C. L. 442, 31 L. J. C. P. 10, 5 L. T. 581, 10 W. R. 106.

He may draw the award, however, by the person who under the terms of the submission attended him as attorney. Baker v. Cotterill, 7 D. & L. 20, 18 L. J. Q. B. 345, 14 Jur. 1120.

Where two arbitrators were to sit, and in case of disagreement had power to call in a third person as umpire, it was held that upon disagreeing they could not call in such third person to act with them as an arbitrator. Lyon v. Blossom, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 319.

(6) Attorneys at Law.¹—It follows from the idea of personal confidence reposed in an attorney, retained to manage and argue a cause, that he must personally perform the duty, and may not transfer it to another without the express assent of his client.² But it would seem that the retainer of one member of a firm, unless otherwise stipulated, is a retainer of all, and in such case the duties may be performed by any of them.³

(7) Factors and Brokers.⁴—As a factor or broker is employed by reason of his superior knowledge and skill in his special business, he may not delegate his authority, unless expressly or impliedly authorized to employ subagents.⁵

c. QUALIFICATIONS OF GENERAL RULE—(1) Ministerial, Executive, or Mechanical Duties—General Rule.—When an agent is engaged to perform acts of a purely ministerial or mechanical character, or acts which do not call for the exercise of judgment, discretion, or skill, in respect to acts other than such as are ministerial, he may authorize another to perform them.⁶

Accommodation Acceptances.—Thus, an agent authorized to bind his principal by accommodation acceptances may direct another to write them, having himself first made up his mind as to the propriety of the act.⁷

In Warner v. Martin, 11 How. (U. S.) 223, the court said: "The utmost relaxation of the rule, Potestas delegata non potest delegari, in respect to mercantile persons is, that a consignee or agent for the sale of merchandise may employ a broker for the purpose when such is the usual course of business. True-man v. Loder, 11 Ad. & El. 589, 39 E. C. L. 173. Or where the usual course of the management of the principal's concerns in the employment of a subagent has been pursued for a length of time, and been recognized by the owners of property, they will be taken to have adopted the acts of the subagent as the acts of the agent himself. Blore v. Sutton, 3 Meriv. 237; Combes' Case, 4 Coke 77; * * *

Palliser v. Ord, Bunb. 166. Lord Eldon, in Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. Jr. 236, repudiates the notion that if an auctioneer is authorized to sell, all his clerks are, during his absence, in consequence of any such usage in that business."

A General Freight Agent may authorize others to sign bills of lading in his name. Bennitt v. The Guiding Star, 53 Fed. Rep. 936. But in Pendall v. Rench, 4 McLean (U. S.) 260, the court held that an agency to make contracts for transportation was one of special trust and confidence, and could not be discharged by a substitute; and where the agent swore that he made the contracts for transportation, and adopted the signatures of his confidential clerk to the bills of lading, the court permitted the bills to go to

Bills of Exchange—Subscription Paper—Insurance.—The same principle is applicable in case of agents empowered to execute bills of exchange,¹ to sign subscription papers,² to sign insurance policies,³ to contract for risks, to deliver policies and renewals, to collect premiums and to give security therefor.⁴

Sales of Land.—And an agent authorized by the owners to sell lands may, having exercised his own discretion as to price and terms, after an examination of the property, delegate to his subagent authority to find a purchaser,⁵ or to point out the land to intending purchasers.⁶

Auctioneer.—An auctioneer may employ another person to use the hammer and make the outcry under his immediate direction and supervision, but he may not delegate his power to sell.⁷

(2) Authority to Redelegate Implied—(a) Usage of Trade.—Another exception to the general principle that an agent may not delegate his authority is found in those cases where he is allowed to do so by virtue of a lawful usage or custom.⁸

Merchandise Broker.—When, therefore, it is according to the course of trade for a merchandise broker to employ another to sell goods consigned to himself, the maxim Delegatus non potest delegare is relaxed to the extent of the usage.⁹ And such an agent may send goods consigned to him to another to be taken care of.¹⁰

A Stockbroker may act through a subagent where the purchase or sale is to be made in a distant city.¹¹

Banks.—Where the holder of a note payable at a distant point deposits it with a local bank for collection, he thereby assents to the course of banks to collect through the instrumentality of correspondents.¹²

Departure from Express Directions Not Justified.—But a custom or usage of trade will not justify the agent in departing from the express directions of his principal, or in changing the intrinsic character of the contract.¹³

(b) Necessity—General Rule.—It is a general principle that an agent's authority is the jury, not as bills of lading, but as part of the deposition of the agent, showing the contract for the transportation. See also Blore v. Sutton, 3 Meriv. 237; Henderson v. Barnewall, 1 Y. & J. 387.

construed to embrace all the means usual and necessary for its proper execution.¹ Accordingly, whenever the agent can show that the instructions of his principal could not have been properly executed without the employment of deputies, he will be warranted in delegating so much of his authority as the character of the agency demands.²

Banks.—Where a draft, payable at a distant place, is left with a bank for collection, it must be presumed that it is intended to be transmitted to a sub-agent at the place where it is payable, and not that the bank is to employ its own officers to proceed there for the purpose of obtaining payment.³ And a bank may place a note in the hands of a notary for demand and protest.⁴

Master of Vessel.—Where the master of a vessel carried merchandise to a distant port, with instructions to dispose of it to the best advantage, and was unable to find a purchaser, he was held to be justified in leaving it in the care of a responsible merchant, to be sold for the owner.⁵

Agent to Charter Ship.—An agent appointed to charter a ship may avail himself of the services of a ship broker.⁶

(c) Nature of Agency.—When, at the time of the appointment of an agent, the principal knows, or should know, that from the nature of the duties and powers of the agency it may be necessary for the agent to avail himself of the services of subagents, authority to that effect will be implied.⁷

3. Subagents⁸—a. DEFINITION.—When an agent employs a person as his agent, to assist him in transacting the affairs of his principal, the person so employed is called a subagent.⁹ The term is indifferently applied where a privity exists between such person and the principal, and where it does not exist.

b. RESPONSIBILITY OF PRINCIPAL FOR ACTS OF SUBAGENT—General Rule.—The principal is liable for the negligence of his agent's assistant whenever he has either expressly or impliedly authorized the employment of the assistant, and the assent of the principal to the employment of the assistant may be implied from slight circumstances.¹⁰

10. Acts of Subagent Binding upon the Principal.—Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. Jr. 234;

Authority to Appoint Implied from Nature of Agency.—Authority is sometimes implied from the very nature of the duties and powers committed to a general agent to employ subagents, and, when this is the case, the principal is bound by the acts of the subagent.¹

Agent of Independent Contractor.—The principal, however, is not responsible for the acts of an agent of an independent contractor.²

c. RESPONSIBILITY OF AGENT FOR ACTS OF SUBAGENT—General Rule.—Where an agent has authority to employ subagents, he will not be liable for their acts or omissions unless in their appointment he is guilty of fraud or gross negligence, or improperly co-operates in the acts or omissions.³

Where a Broker is Employed to Dispose of a Note, and employs an agent to sell it for him, such agent becomes the subagent of the principal, and his fraudulent representations in negotiating the sale of the note are binding on the principal. Elwell v. Chamberlain, 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 230. See also Mayer v. McLure, 36 Miss. 389.

Insurance Agents.—Although an insurance agent cannot delegate his authority to another, or sublet it, he may employ clerks and subagents, whose acts, if done in his name and recognized by him, either specially or according to his usual method of dealing with them, will be regarded as his acts, and, as such, binding on the principal. *Lingenfeiter v. 2. Agents of Independent Contractors.—In Blake v. Ferris, 5 N. Y. 48, 55 Am. Dec. 304, Mullett, J., said: "When a man is employed in doing a job or piece of work with his own means and his own men, and employs others to help him or to execute the work for him and under his control, he is the superior who is responsible for their conduct, no matter whom he is doing the work for. To attempt to make the primary principal or employer responsible in such cases would be an attempt to push the doctrine of respondere superior beyond the reason on which it is founded." Employment of Commission Merchants.—Where it is customary for an agent to whom goods are consigned to employ a commission merchant to dispose of them, the agent will not be responsible for the failure of the commission merchant to account for the goods provided he uses reasonable care in the selection of the merchant. Davis v. Languier, 2 La. Ann. 326; Bailey v. Baldwin, 8 Martin N. S. (La.) 115; Whitlock v. Hicks, 75 Ill. 460; Maxwell v. Evans, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 399; McCants v. Wells, 4 S. Car. 381.

But where an agent mingles goods of his principal with those of others, and consigns them to another party to be disposed of, he will be liable upon the failure of the latter to account for the full value of the goods. Williams v. White, 70 Me. 138.

Appointment by Principal.—Nor will an agent be responsible for the defaults of subagents employed by the principal and placed under his control, unless the default is committed with his knowledge.¹

Necessity or Emergency.—The same rule will apply where the employment, although not so authorized, arises from unforeseen exigencies or emergencies, imposing upon the agent the necessity of employing subagents.²

No Authority to Appoint.—But where an agent has no authority, express or implied, to appoint a subagent, he will be responsible to his principal for the acts of a subagent appointed by him.³

Public Officers Not Liable.—It is a well-settled doctrine that public officers and agents are not responsible for the misfeasances, negligences, or omissions of Employment of Broker.—Where it is customary for a commission merchant to employ a broker to make purchases for him, the commission merchant will not be liable for any damage which may result to his principal from the negligence of the broker, provided he employs a broker of experience and good reputation. Darling v. Stanwood, 14 Allen (Mass.) 504.

A consignee of goods is liable to the consignor for the value of the goods placed by him in the hands of a broker for sale, where the consignee takes the broker's note for the amount of the sales without the assent of the consignor. Amory v. Hamilton, 17 Mass. 103.

Masters of Ships—Exception to Rule.—An important exception to the rule that agents are not responsible for the misconduct of subagents is found in the case of masters of ships, and is founded upon the principles of maritime law. They are liable for the negligence and misfeasance of those employed under them, in navigating a vessel, whether such subagents are appointed by themselves or the owners of the vessel. Story on Agency (9th ed.), §§ 314-316; *Denison v. If an agent undertakes to do the work of his principal, and employs a subagent to assist him on his own account, he is answerable to the principal for the wrongdoing of the subagent, although the principal has knowledge of the fact of the employment of the subagent. Barnard v. Coffin, 141 Mass. 37, 55 Am. Rep. 443. See also Campbell v. Reeves, 3 Head (Tenn.) 226.

It was held in Mark v. Bowers, 4 Martin N. S. (La.) 95, that where goods are shipped to commission merchants, and, before they were disposed of, the firm dissolves, and turns over the goods to a third person for sale, without the order of the principal, the firm is responsible.

Where a principal gave to his agent a promissory note to be discounted, with instructions not to let it go out of his hands without receiving the proceeds, and the agent delivered the note to a third person, directing him to discount it and return the money to him, upon the appropriation by the subagent of the money received in discounting the note it was held that the agent was liable for the conversion of the note. Laverty v. Snethen, 68 N. Y. 522, 23 Am. Rep. 184.

Where booksellers undertook to manage the sale of a library, prepare catalogues, employ auctioneers, etc., they were held responsible for the acts of such auctioneers, although one of them was appointed at the request of their principal for whom the library was being sold. Cholmondeley v. Payne, 8 C. & P. 482, 34 E. C. L. 490.

Employment of Attorney.—Where an attorney is employed to collect a claim, and he places the claim in the hands of another attorney, through whose negligence or misconduct the claim is lost, he is liable therefor to the principal in the absence of any agreement that such other attorney should be employed. Stephens v. Badcock, 3 B. & Ad. 354, 23 E. C. L. 93; Simmons v. Rose, 31 Beav. 1; Cummins v. McLain, 2 Ark. 402; Pollard v. Rowland, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 22; Abbott v. Smith, 4 Ind. 452; *Wilkinson v. duty of the subagents, servants, or other persons properly employed by and under them, in the discharge of their official duties.¹

d. RESPONSIBILITY OF SUBAGENT—(1) To Principal.—Where, by usage of trade, or otherwise, a subagent is employed with the express or implied consent of the principal, the subagent will be responsible directly to the principal, since a privity under such circumstances exists between them.²

(2) To Agent.—Where no privity exists between the subagent and the principal, the subagent is merely a subaltern of the primary agent, and as such is directly responsible to the latter.³

Where an agent has the power of substitution, the same discretion may be vested in the subagent that is vested in the agent, and the subagent will not be liable to an action where he exercises due discretion and good faith. Wicks v. Hatch, 62 N. Y. 535.

Collection of Money by Subagent.—Whenever, by express agreement of the parties, a subagent is to be employed by an agent to receive money for the principal, or where an authority to do so may fairly be implied from the usual course of trade or the nature of the transaction, the principal may treat the subagent as his agent, and, when the subagent has received the money, may recover in an action for money had and received. Wilson v. Smith, 3 How. (U. S.) 763; Miller v. Farmers', etc., Bank, 30 Md. 392; Cecil Bank v. Farmers' Bank, 22 Md. 148. See also Jackson Ins. Co. v. Partee, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 296.

A subagent has no right to retain money belonging to the principal in order to satisfy a debt due from the original agent to himself. Grant v. Seitsinger, 2 P. & W. (Pa.) 525. See also Bank of the Metropolis v. New England Bank, 1 How. (U. S.) 234; Cockran v. Irlam, 2 M. & S. 301.

In McKenzie v. Nevius, 22 Me. 138, 38 Am. Dec. 291, the court held that a foreigner, upon whose vessel an insurance had been effected by a subagent, might recover the amount of the policy from him after the lien of the subagent had been satisfied.

The agent of a minor's guardian, who was intrusted by the guardian with money belonging to the minor, was held to owe a duty to the guardian as agent, and to the minor as trustee, for the funds which came into his hands, and was held responsible to the latter for the collection of money, due the minor, in depreciated currency. Turner v. Turner, 36 Tex. 41.

Nonliability of Subagent—Want of Privity.—In Robbins v. Fennell, 11 Q. B. 248, 63 E. C. L. 248, it was held that where a claim was placed in the hands of an attorney in the country, and by him sent to an agent in London for collection, that the client could not recover money from the London agent, because there was no privity between them. The same doctrine was laid down in Stephens v. Bacon, 7 N. J. L. 1. See also Stephens v. Badcock, 3 B. & Ad. 354, 23 E. C. L. 93; Cobb v. Becke, 6 Q. B. 930, 51 E. C. L. 930; Tickel v. Short, 2 Ves. 239.

A, of Cincinnati, being entitled to receive £705 from B in England, arranged with C, a financial agent in Cincinnati, that he (A) should receive the money from him. A wrote to B directing him to pay the money to D, the London agent of C. C wrote to D directing him to receive the money, and to advise him of the receipt. B paid the money to D, who credited C (who owed him money) with it in his books and informed him that he had done so. In the mean time, C had gone into liquidation. In an action by A against D for the £705, it was held that there was no privity between A and D, D receiving the money as C's agent, and that consequently the action could not be maintained. Crowther v. Ladenburg (English Court of Appeals), 13 Cent. L. J. 26. See also New Zealand, etc., Land Co. v. Watson, 7 Q. B. Div. 374, reversing New Zealand, etc., Co. v. Ruston, 5 Q. B. Div. 474.

In Bissell v. Roden, 34 Mo. 63, 84 Am. Dec. 71, it is held that subcontractors, not contracting with the owner of the building, but with the person with whom the owner agrees for the construction, are not liable to the owner in an action for negligently and unskilfully doing their work by which the owner is injured, there being no privity between the parties, and that such an action should be brought against the principal who contracted.

c. RIGHTS OF SUBAGENT—(1) Against Principal—For Compensation.—Whenever, by the usage of trade, or express or implied agreement of the parties, a subagent is to be employed, then a privity is created between the subagent and the principal, and the subagent is, under such circumstances, entitled to compensation from the principal, unless exclusive credit is given to his immediate employer.¹

Right of Subagent to Lien.—Wherever a privity exists between a subagent and the principal, the former will have a lien against the latter to the extent of the services performed and the advances and disbursements properly made by him on account of the subagency.² A subagent, however, has no general lien upon the property of the principal on account of any balance due to him from the primary agent, who employs him, when he knows or has reason to believe that the latter is acting for another person at the time of his subagency.³

wright v. Hateley, 1 Ves. Jr. 292; Porter v. Peckham, 44 Cal. 204; Stephens v. Bacon, 7 N. J. L. 1.

In general, subagents, acting ex contractu, are responsible only to the immediate agents who employed them, and not to the principal, and there is no privity between them. Traf-ton v. U. S., 3 Story (U. S.) 646.

Attorneys.—An attorney confided a note to another attorney for collection, but failed to give instructions in regard to the ownership of the note. The second attorney collected the money and remitted it to the payee, whose name was indorsed on the note. The court held that this remittance (the payee not being the owner of the note) did not discharge the collecting attorney from liability to his immediate principal. Lewis v. Peck, 10 Ala. 142.

Insurance Companies.—Where a contract made by an agent of an insurance company for his principal, for the services of another party in the business of the principal, provided that as part compensation for such services the party so employed should receive a specified per cent. of the amount paid by the principal for the services of the agent so making the contract, it was held that the contract for such percentage was the contract of the principal, not of the agent, and that the former was therefore liable to the subagent for such compensation. Ætna Ins. Co. v. Church, 21 Ohio St. 492.

Where a general agent of a life-insurance company charged with the duty of appointing subagents, made a contract obligating the company to pay the subagent a fixed sum per month, and signed the contract as the general agent of the company, it was held that the company and not the general agent was liable for the salary of such subagent. Cotton States L. Ins. Co. v. Mallard, 57 Ga. 64. Compare U. S. Life Ins. Co. v. Hesseberg, 27 Ohio St. 393.

See also Beyers v. Hodge, 1 Misc. Rep. (Buffalo Super. Ct.) 76, where it was held that a principal cannot be held to pay a specific sum to a subagent (contracted for by a general agent) unless the principal has ratified the contract.

In Homan v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co., 7 Mo. App. 22, it was held that where persons were employed by an agent the mere fact that the agent's principal knows that the person so employed is acting in the business committed by the principal to his agent and accepts such employment as beneficial, does not prove an agreement on the principal's part to pay for the services of the person so employed; and that in order to hold the principal liable for such payment the element of privity of contract between the principal and subagent should appear.

Officers and Agents Employing Surgical Aid.—The general rule is that the general manager or superintendent of a railway or other company has, as incidental to his employment, authority to bind the company to pay for surgical attention bestowed, at his request, on a servant of the company injured by an accident. Walker v. Great Western R. Co., L. R. 2 Exch. 228; McCarthy v. Missouri R. Co., 15 Mo. App. 385; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. McVay, 98 Ind. 391, 49 Am. Rep. 770.

(2) Against Agent.—It is a general rule that where agents employ sub-agents in the business of the agency the latter are clothed with precisely the same rights in regard to their immediate employers as if they were the sole and real principals; and unless exclusive credit is given to the principal, the immediate agent will be liable to the subagent.¹

VI. NATURE AND EXTENT OF AUTHORITY—1. Authority, General and Special
—a. DISTINCTION BETWEEN GENERAL AND SPECIAL AGENCIES—General Agent.—A general agent is one who is authorized to do all acts connected with a particular trade, business, or employment.²

Special Agent.—A special agent is one who is authorized to do one or more specific acts in pursuance of particular instructions, or within restrictions necessarily implied from the act to be done.³

goods, who becomes such by indorsement to him of the bill of lading of the goods by the consignor after he has directed his correspondent to make the insurance, takes it subject to the lien of the correspondent of the consignor for his general balance; and can only claim, subject to that lien, the money received on such policy by the broker, in whose hands it was deposited for that purpose by the correspondent. But the broker has no sub-lien on the policy for the general balance of his own account with such correspondent, if he knew at the time that the policy was effected for another person. Man v. Shifner, 2 East 523.

Agent Representing Himself as Principal.—It was held in Westwood v. Bell, 4 Campb. 349, that where A employed B to effect a policy of insurance for his benefit, and B, without A's knowledge, employed C to effect the policy, representing himself to C as the principal, C had a lien on the policy, as against A, for the general balance due to him from B, since he had no knowledge that B was not the real principal.

But see Lanyon v. Blanchard, 2 Campb. 597, where it was held that if an agent, employed to effect an insurance on goods, should represent himself as the owner of the goods to another person, whom he employed to effect the policy, the latter would not have a general lien on the policy for a balance due to him from the agent.

1. Liability of Agent to Subagent for Compensation.—Farrell v. Campbell, 3 Ben. (U. S.) 8; Miles v. Mays, 15 Colo. 133; Wilkins v. Duncan, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 168; Clay v. Hopkins, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 485; Cleaves v. Stockwell, 33 Me. 341; Taylor v. Nostrand, 134 N. Y. 108.

Where a broker in one city is commissioned by his principal to buy pork in another, and effects the purchase through another broker, the second broker is the agent of the first broker, and has a right to look to him for his compensation. Hill v. Morris, 15 Mo. App. 322.

Where a contract is made with the leader of a band to furnish a given number of musicians at a fair, and afterwards payment is refused, the individual members of the band must look to the leader thereof for their pay. Corbett v. Schumacker, 83 Ill. 403.

Agents of Trustees.—Agents of trustees must look to them for compensation, and have no lien upon the trust estate for the value of their services. Worrall v. Harford, 8 Ves. Jr. 4; Jones v. Dawson, 19 Ala. 672; Fearn v. Mayers, 53 Miss. 458. Compare Coopwood v. Wallace, 12 Ala. 790; Noyes v. Blakeman, 6 N. Y. 567.

2. Story on Agency, § 17; Dearing v. Lightfoot, 16 Ala. 28; Witcher v. Brewer, 49 Ala. 119; Gregg v. Wooliscroft, 52 Ill. App. 221; Manning v. Gasharie, 27 Ind. 411; Bell v. Offutt, 10 Bush (Ky.) 632; Lobdell v. Baker, 1 Met. (Mass.) 193, 35 Am. Dec. 358; McAlpin v. Cassidy, 17 Tex. 462.

A General Agent is one authorized to transact all his principal's business, or all his business of some particular kind. Gibson v. Snow Hardware Co., 94 Ala. 346, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 348; Lattomus v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 3 Houst. (Del.) 404; Noble v. Nugent, 89 Ill. 522; National Furnace Co. v. Keystone Mfg. Co., 110 Ill. 427; Fatman v. Leet, 41 Ind. 138; Union Stockyard, etc., Co. v. Mallory, etc., Co. (Ill., 1895), 41 N. E. Rep. 888, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 349; Cruzan v. Smith, 41 Ind. 288; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Owen, 43 Ind. 408; Sawin v. Union, etc., Bldg. Assoc. (Iowa, 1895), 64 N. W. Rep. 401, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 348; Jeffrey v. Bigelow, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 518, 28 Am. Dec. 476; Loudon Sav. Fund Soc. v. Hagerstown Sav. Bank, 36 Pa. St. 498, 78 Am. Dec. 390; Walker v. Skipwith, Meigs (Tenn.) 502, 33 Am. Dec. 161.

General Agent as to Particular Business.—The authority of an agent being limited to a particular business does not make it special. It may be as general in regard to that business as though its range were unlimited. Crain v. Jacksonville First Nat. Bank, 114 Ill. 516; Cruzan v. Smith, 41 Ind. 297; Bell v. Offutt, 10 Bush (Ky.) 632; Anderson v. Coonley, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 279; Jeffrey v. Bigelow, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 518, 28 Am. Dec. 476; Rountree v. Denson, 59 Wis. 522.

Territorial Limitation of Authority.—An authority to an agent to buy an article in a certain locality and its vicinity, and to buy, generally, from whomsoever he may choose, not having in view a single transaction, but a number of separate transactions, constitutes a general agency. Butler v. Maples, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 766. See also Cruzan v. Smith, 41 Ind. 288; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Owen, 43 Ind. 405.

3. United States.—Butler v. Maples, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 766.

Distinction.—In short, the former imports not an unqualified authority, but an authority which is derived from a multitude of instances, whereas the latter is confined to an individual instance.¹

Principal Bound According to Extent of Apparent Authority.—In either case the principal is bound to the extent of the apparent authority he has conferred upon the agent, and not by the actual or express authority where that differs from the apparent authority;² and in either case, if the agent exceeds the authority conferred, his acts will not bind his principal.³

Alabama.—Dearing v. Lightfoot, 16 Ala. 28; Golding v. Merchant, 43 Ala. 705; Witcher v. Brewer, 49 Ala. 119; Gibson v. Snow Hardware Co., 94 Ala. 346, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 348.

Tennessee.—Walker v. Skipwith, Meigs (Tenn.) 507, 33 Am. Dec. 161.

Code Definitions.—An agent for a particular act or transaction is called a special agent. All others are general agents. California Civ. Code, § 2297; Montana Civ. Code, § 3092.

The Distinction between a General and a Special Agent is said to be this: The former is appointed to act in the affairs of his principal generally, and the latter to act concerning some particular object. Wood v. McCain, 7 Ala. 800, 42 Am. Dec. 612.

Where the authority conferred is for a special purpose and confined to a single act, it is a special agency. Martin v. Farnsworth, 49 N. Y. 555.

Character of Agency—Question of Law or Fact.

—The fact of agency and the scope of the agent's power are properly questions for the court, where the authority is created by writing; but where the authority is to be implied from the conduct of the parties, or the agency is to be proved by witnesses, the fact and scope of the agency are for the jury. Loudon Sav. Fund Soc. v. Hagerstown Sav. Bank, 36 Pa. St. 498, 78 Am. Dec. 390. See also, upon the latter point, Nicoll v. American Ins. Co., 3 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 529; Dickinson County v. Mississippi Valley Ins. Co., 41 Iowa 286; Nicholson v. Golden, 27 Mo. App. 155; Glenn v. Savage, 14 Oregon 576.

When the fact of agency has been established by uncontroverted testimony, the court may decide whether the agency is general or special, and charge the jury accordingly. Witcher v. Brewer, 49 Ala. 122. See also infra, this title, Construction of Authority.

Presumption.—The fact of agency being proved, the agency is to be presumed general. Methuen Co. v. Hayes, 33 Me. 169; Trainer v. Morison, 78 Me. 160. But see Dickinson County v. Mississippi Valley Ins. Co., 41 Iowa 286.

The extent of the agent's authority, whether limited or unlimited, is to be distinguished from the nature of the agency, whether general or special. Doan v. Duncan, 17 Ill. 274.

The same agent may be special as to the nature of the acts to be performed, and general as to the manner of performing those acts. Jeffrey v. Bigelow, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 518, 28 Am. Dec. 476.

Whether Principal Bound Determined by Same Principles whether Agent is General or Special.—"Whether the authority be general or limited, the servant cannot charge the master if he exceeds it. He is of course, more likely to transcend the bounds of a narrow

Universal Agents.—General are carefully distinguishable from universal agents—that is, from such as may be appointed to do all the acts which the principal can personally do, and which he may lawfully delegate the power to another to do.¹

b. THIRD PARTIES MUST ASCERTAIN AGENT'S AUTHORITY.—Third parties dealing with an agent are put upon their guard by the very fact, and do so at their own risk.² They cannot rely upon the agent's assumption of authority,³ but are to be regarded as dealing with the power before them, and must, at their peril, observe that the act done by the agent is legally identical with the act authorized by the power.⁴

than of an extended power, but the principle in either case is the same. Within his commission he binds his master, beyond it he does not. Whilst, then, we must distinguish clearly between a general agent and a special agent, it is not because there is a diversity in the leading principle which determines the master's liability, but merely in order to adjust the actual measure of it." 1 Minor's Inst. 206.

In Mechanics' Bank v. New York, etc., R. Co., 13 N. Y. 632, Comstock, J., said: "There are in the books many loose expressions concerning the distinction between a general and special agency. The distinction itself is highly unsatisfactory, and will be found quite insufficient to solve a great variety of cases. * * * Underlying the whole subject there is this fundamental proposition, that a principal is bound only by the authorized acts of his agent. This authority may be proved by the instrument which creates it; and beyond the terms of the instrument, or of the verbal commission, it may be shown that the principal has held the agent out to the world in other instances as having an authority which will embrace the particular act in question. I know of no other mode in which a controverted power can be established. But in whichever way this is done, it cannot be limited by secret instructions of the principal on the one hand, nor can it be enlarged by the unauthorized representation of the agent on the other."

1. Story on Agency, § 21.

Such an universal agency may potentially exist, but it must be of the very rarest occurrence. It will never be inferred from any general expressions, however broad; but the law will restrain them to the particular business of the party, in respect to which, it is presumed, his intention to delegate the authority was principally directed. Wood v. McCain, 7 Ala. 803, 42 Am. Dec. 612; Gielick v. Grover, 33 N. J. L. 463, 97 Am. Dec. 728. See also Barr v. Schroeder, 32 Cal. 609.

A general authority to do an indefinite number of acts of a particular kind by no means constitutes a universal agency. Farmers', etc., Bank v. Butchers', etc., Bank, 16 N. Y. 149.

2. Reid v. Rigby (1894), 2 Q. B. 40; Rust v. Eaton, 24 Fed. Rep. 830; Fisher v. Campbell, 9 Port. (Ala.) 210; Van Eppes v. Smith, 21 Ala. 317; Bohart v. Oberne, 36 Kan. 284; Chaffe v. Stubbs, 37 La. Ann. 656; Mussey v. Beecher, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 511; Chase v. Buhl Iron Works, 55 Mich. 139; Earp v. Richardson, 81 N. Car. 5. See also McNeill v. Easley, 24 Ala. 455; and infra, this section, When Principal is Bound—Special Agencies.

Duty to Inquire as to Agent's Authority.—It is the duty of all having transactions with an agent in his representative character to inquire into the extent of his authority. Vanada v. Hopkins, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 287, 19 Am. Dec. 92; Tidrick v. Rice, 13 Iowa 214.

One buying an overdue note from an agent is thereby put on inquiry about the extent of the agent's authority. Earp v. Richardson, 81 N. Car. 5. And receipting in a firm name, but in the form used by agents, puts the person making payment on inquiry as to the authority to take the payment. Chase v. Buhl Iron Works, 55 Mich. 139; Jones v. Harris, 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 98.

Especially is This the Case with one dealing with an agent whose authority he knows to be special. Michael v. Eley, 61 Hun (N. Y.) 180; Nester v. Craig, 69 Hun (N. Y.) 543.

Principal Not Liable to One Neglecting Inquiry.—Carelessness of the principal in reposing confidence in his agent does not make him liable to a third party who, in dealing with such agent, fails to exercise the diligence usual with good business men under the circumstances. Hurley v. Watson, 68 Mich. 531. See also Aldrich v. Londonderry, 5 Vt. 441.

Agent with Authority in Case of Emergency.—A lender of money to an agent authorized to borrow for the purpose of carrying on business, including power to borrow on exceptional terms outside the ordinary course of business, in an emergency is not bound to inquire whether, in a particular case, the emergency has arisen. Montaignac v. Shitta, L. R. 15 App. Cas. 357.

Power in Writing.—Where the authority is necessarily in writing, such person is presumed to know its scope, and if he neglects to call for the power and judge for himself, it is his own fault.¹

Public Officers.—These rules apply with equal force to public officers, and persons dealing with them are presumed to know their authority.²

c. WHEN PRINCIPAL IS BOUND—(1) In General—Acts Authorized Directly or by Implication.—A principal is bound by the acts of the agent, whether general or special, within the authority he has actually given him, which includes not only the precise act which he expressly authorizes him to do, but also whatever usually belongs to the doing of it, or is necessary to its performance.³

West Virginia.—Dyer v. Duffy, 39 W. Va. 148, 24 L. R. A. 339; Curry v. Hale, 15 W. Va. 867.

And see Herring v. Skaggs, 62 Ala. 185, 34 Am. Rep. 4; Cummins v. Beaumont, 68 Ala. 204; Burks v. Hubbard, 69 Ala. 379; Bohart v. Oberne, 36 Kan. 284; Bryant v. Moore, 26 Me. 84, 45 Am. Dec. 96; Craighead v. Peterson, 72 N. Y. 283, 28 Am. Rep. 150; Rathbun v. Snow, 123 N. Y. 343.

Agents of Private Corporations.—This rule applies with equal force to parties dealing with agents of private corporations. Victoria Gold Min. Co. v. Fraser, 2 Colo. App. 14.

As to the authority of the officers of private corporations, and when they can bind their principals, see the title OFFICERS OF PRIVATE CORPORATIONS.

An Agent Appointed by a Writing which defines and limits his authority is subject to its terms, and acts done by him not within the scope of the authority cannot bind his principal. And a person who trades with such agent must examine for himself whether the agent is acting under written instructions, and the principal will not be bound because such person is ignorant of their existence. Snow v. Warner, 10 Met. (Mass.) 136, 43 Am. Dec. 417; Reese v. Medlock, 27 Tex. 120, 84 Am. Dec. 611.

One Dealing with Agent Bound by Limitations of Authority.—Where one deals with another acting under delegated authority, it is his own folly if he does not inform himself of the scope of the authority. Dozier v. Freeman, 47 Miss. 660. He must determine at his own risk whether the particular acts are within the authority. Davidson v. Porter, 57 Ill. 300; Claflin v. Continental Jersey Works, 85 Ga. 27. And he is bound to take notice of limitations not only upon its power, but also as to the mode of contracting, Craycraft v. Selvage, 10 Bush (Ky.) 708; and the law will presume, in such case, that he knows the limits of the agent's power. Brown v. Johnson, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 398, 51 Am. Dec. 118. So persons dealing with officers of a bank. Salem Bank v. Gloucester Bank, 17 Mass. 29, 9 Am. Dec. 111.

1. Sanford v. Handy, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 267; Nixon v. Hyserott, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 58.

Duty to Examine Authority.—One dealing with an agent is chargeable with knowledge of the legal effect of the authority, and must therefore inspect it, if in writing, or learn its language as best he can, if by parol. North River Bank v. Aymar, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 262.

Where Real Estate is the Subject of Sale the person purchasing of an agent must see that the power to convey is of equal dignity with the deed to be executed, Peabody v. Hoard, 46 Ill. 242; and that the agent is acting within the scope of his authority. Baxter v. Lamont, 60 Ill. 237; Bosseau v. O'Brien, 4 Biss. (U. S.) 395; and see Reese v. Medlock, 27 Tex. 120, 84 Am. Dec. 611.

A Duly Recorded Power of Attorney to sell and convey real estate is notice to subsequent purchasers dealing with the agent in relation to the property, of the terms of the agency. Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 296.

From Public Records.—Where the extent of the power of an agent may be known by public records, as in the case of public officers, any restriction on his powers so created will be binding. Woodward v. Campbell, 39 Ark. 580; Sprague v. Cornish, 59 N. H. 161; Lewis v. Bourbon County, 12 Kan. 186; New York, etc., Steamship Co. v. Harbison, 16 Fed. Rep. 688.

2. An Agency Conferred by Statute and growing out of it must be ascertained from the statute, and persons dealing with an officer of the state are presumed to know his authority. State v. State Bank, 45 Mo. 528. See also Backman v. Charlestown, 42 N. H. 125; Baltimore v. Reynolds, 20 Md. 1, 83 Am. Dec. 535.

The Agent of a County to contract for repairs on county buildings has no power to bind the county to pay more in county warrants than the cash value of the labor and materials in United States currency; and parties contracting with such agent must take notice of the limits of his authority. Barton v. Swepston, 44 Ark. 437. See also Bowe v. U. S., 42 Fed. Rep. 761, and the title PUBLIC OFFICERS.

3. Edmunds v. Bushell, L. R. 1 Q. B. 97; Napier v. Poe, 12 Ga. 170; Broadway Sav.

Acts within Apparent Authority.—Beyond that, he is bound by the acts of the agent within the apparent authority which the principal himself knowingly permits the agent to assume, or which he holds the agent out to the public as possessing.¹

All the acts of an agent within the scope of his authority will bind the principal. Goodrich v. Hanson, 33 Ill. 499; Taylor v. Taylor, 20 Ill. 650; The Ship Portland v. Lewis, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 197. And see infra, this section, Authority as Affected by Usage or Custom; and Powers Prima Facie Incident to Every Authority.

Authority Determined by Nature of Act.—The scope of the authority is to be measured by the nature and necessities of the thing to be accomplished. Geylin v. De Villeroi, 2 Houst. (Del.) 311.

If sent to summon a certain physician, the agent may, in case of extraordinary emergency, summon another and bind his principal. Bartlett v. Sparkman, 95 Mo. 136.

Authority Necessarily Implied in Agent's Character.—Those dealing with an agent may rely on his having those powers, and those only, which necessarily, properly, and legitimately belong to the character in which he is held out by the principal. Harrison v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 50 Mo. App. 332.

Theory upon Which the Principal is Held Liable.—For the acts of his agent within his express authority the principal is liable, because the act of the agent is the act of the principal. For the acts of the agent within the scope of the authority which he holds the agent out as having, or knowingly permits him to assume, the principal is made responsible, because to permit him to dispute the authority of the agent in such case would be to enable him to commit a fraud upon innocent persons.¹

(2) General Agencies—Authority Not Unlimited.—The authority of a general agent is not unlimited, but must necessarily be restricted to the transactions and concerns within the scope of the business of the principal;² and if he ex-

Wisconsin.—Kountz v. Gates, 78 Wis. 415.

See also Keenan v. Missouri State Mut. Ins. Co., 12 Iowa 126; Morrison v. Taylor, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 85; Wells v. Welter, 15 Nev. 276; Smith v. Frank, 2 Robt. (N. Y.) 626; and infra, this title, Rights, Duties, and Liabilities as to Third Parties.

It is essential in order to bind the principal that the contracts by one held out by him as his general agent shall be within the scope of the agent's authority as such. It is not enough that they be made with regard to the business of the agency. Richmond v. Greeley, 38 Iowa 666.

Apparent Authority Renders Principal Liable to Third Persons.—When one holds another out to the world as his agent, in determining the liability of the principal the question is not what authority was intended to be given to the agent, but what authority was a third person dealing with him justified, from the acts of the principal, in believing was given to him. Griggs v. Selden, 58 Vt. 561; Walsh v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 73 N. Y. 5; Dodge v. McDonnell, 14 Wis. 553.

Though an agent must act within the scope of his authority, yet when his acts affect innocent third parties the principal will be bound to the extent of the apparent authority conferred by him upon the agent. He is bound equally by the authority which he actually gives and by that which, by his own acts, he appears to give. Webster v. Wray, 17 Neb. 579; Columbia Mill Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, 52 Minn. 224. And see Lister v. Allen, 31 Md. 543, 100 Am. Dec. 78.

Where one deals with an agent, whether general or special, in ignorance of private instructions, the principal is bound if the act of the agent be within the apparent power which the principal holds him out to the world to possess. Carmichael v. Buck, 10 Rich. (S. Car.) 333, 70 Am. Dec. 226; Howell v. Graff, 25 Neb. 130; Milne v. Kleb, 44 N. J. Eq. 378; Stovall v. Co., 84 Va. 246. See also Routh v. Agricultural Bank, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 161.

If one holds out to the world another person as his agent to receive payments, it makes no difference what was the private or actual understanding and relation of the parties. McAlpin v. Ziller, 17 Tex. 508.

Apparent Powers and Acts Apparently within Powers Distinguished.—In Mechanics' Bank v. New York, etc., R. Co., 13 N. Y. 633, Comstock, J., said: "The distinction is not always attended to between the apparent powers of an agent and his acts apparently but not really within the power. An agent's apparent powers are those which are conferred by the terms of his appointment, notwithstanding secret instructions, or those with which he is clothed by the character in which he is held out to the world, although not strictly within his commission. Whatever is done under an authority thus manifested is actually within the authority as to third persons, and the principal is bound for that reason; but it is obvious that an agent may clothe his act with all the indicia of authority and yet the act itself may not be within the real or apparent power. The appearance of the power is one thing, and for that the principal is responsible; the appearance of the act is another, and for that, if false, I think the remedy is against the agent only. The fundamental proposition, I repeat, is that one man can be bound only by the authorized acts of another. He cannot be charged because another holds a commission from him and falsely asserts that his acts are within it."

Party Not Relying on Agent's Ostensible Authority.—If the party dealing with the agent does not rely upon his ostensible authority, the principal will not be bound by his unauthorized acts. Tallmadge v. Lounsbury (Super. Ct.), 21 N. Y. Supp. 908, 50 N. Y. St. Rep. 531.

Appearance of Authority Caused by Agent Only.—The principal is responsible only for the appearance of authority which is caused by himself, and not for an appearance of conformity to the authority caused only by the agent. Edwards v. Dooley, 120 N. Y. 540; Leu v. Mayer, 52 Kan. 419.

How Apparent Authority Determined.—The apparent authority of the agent is to be gathered from all the facts and circumstances in evidence, and is a question of fact for the jury. Nicholson v. Golden, 27 Mo. App. 132. See supra, this title, Appointment—Evidence; also infra, this title, Rights, Duties, and Liabilities as to Third Parties—Of Principal to Third Parties. Powers of General Agent are Restricted.—A general agency does not import an unqualified authority. Whitehead v. Tuckett, 15 East 408.

A general agency is a restricted service, and the agent cannot go outside the proper scope of the principal's business. Stewart v. Woodward, 90 Vt. 78. He is not a universal agent having the complete disposal of all the rights and property of his principal. LaPoint v. Scott, 36 Vt. 604. And in order to bind his principal the act must be within the line of his agency. Brosnahan v. Philip Best Brewing Co., 26 Mo. App. 386.

Cannot per se Sell Property of Principal.—The appointment of a general and special agent to do and transact all manner of business does not necessarily authorize the agent to sell stock or other property of the principal. Hodge v. Combs, 1 Black (U. S.) 192.

Neither the president nor cashier of a bank has the power, by virtue of the office, to sell the safe of the bank for a debt of the bank. Asher v. Sutton, 31 Kan. 286.

The Conductor of a Passenger Train is not a general agent of the company with authority to waive the conditions of the contract set forth on a passenger's ticket. Cloud v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 14 Mo. App. 136.

Station Agent Pledging Company's Credit for Wounded Brakeman.—The station agent of a railroad company is not authorized, by virtue of his position, to employ a hotel-keeper, at the expense of the company, to attend to one of its brakemen injured while working for the company; nor to furnish such employee with board and lodging while disabled. Atlantic, etc., R. Co. v. Reisner, 18 Kan. 458.

A Physician of a Railroad Company cannot bind the company for his patient's board: St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hoover, 53 Ark. 377; Mayberry v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 75 Mo. 492; Boyle v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 13 Mo. App. 574. See also Shriver v. Stevens, 12 Pa. St. 258.

Cannot Pervert Funds.—A power to act for another, however general its terms or wide its scope, cannot be enlarged into a power to pervert funds coming into the agent's hands. Williams v. Whiting, 92 N. Car. 683.

Violating Law.—Nor, if capable of being executed in a lawful manner, is it ever to be extended by construction to acts prohibited by law, so as to render his innocent principal liable in a criminal action or prosecution. Clark v. Metropolitan Bank, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 241.

Forming Partnership.—An authority to act as an agent confers no authority to form a partnership in the name of the principal with a third person. Wright v. Boynton, 37 N. H. 9, 72 Am. Dec. 319.

Accepting Service of Process.—A general agent, constituted under the Louisiana Civil Code, cannot accept service of process against the principal. Leblanc v. Perroux, 21 La. Ann. 26.

Power to Employ Counsel.—Nor is he authorized to employ counsel on the credit of his principal to prosecute a suit in favor of a servant of the principal, for a personal injury done to such servant while engaged in the principal's business. Cochran v. Newton, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 482.

May Purchase Goods for Debt.—A general agent specially directed to look after a certain claim and collect something on it, or to arrange it in some way, may purchase and sell a stock of goods in settlement thereof. Knowles v. Street, 87 Ala. 357.

Act must be within Power to Bind Principal.—It must be shown that the act was done during the agency, and was within the scope of the authority. Hough v. Doyle, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 291; Taylor Mfg. Co. v. Brown (Tex. App., 1889), 14 S. W. Rep. 1071.

The power must be limited to acts within the scope of the particular business to which it relates. Mechanics' Bank v. Schaumburg, 38 Mo. 228.

The principle is a general one, that the conduct of an agent only binds his employer when he acts within the limits of the power granted to him, and with reference to the subject matter of the agency. Hough v. Doyle, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 291; Taylor Mfg. Co. v. Brown (Tex. App., 1889), 14 S. W. Rep. 1071; Mechanics' Bank v. Schaumburg, 38 Mo. 228; Goodloe v. Godley, 13 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 238, 51 Am. Apparent Authority—Estoppel.—The act of an agent in excess of his authority never binds the principal, unless third persons,

Principal Bound if Such Agent Acts within General Authority.—But the principal is responsible for the acts of his general agent when acting within the general scope of his authority, and the public cannot be supposed cognizant of his private instructions.¹ having a right to believe that the agent was acting within his authority, would sustain loss if the act was not considered that of his principal. Walsh v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 73 N. Y. 5; Nixon v. Brown, 57 N. H. 39. See also supra, this title, When Principal is Bound—in General.

Illustrations—Principal Not Bound.—If an agent for the purchase of grain buys tobacco, the principal cannot be held responsible. Hopkins v. Blane, 1 Call (Va.) 361. And a release of a debt by a general agent to sell will not bind the principal. Smith v. Perry, 29 N. J. L. 74. See also Clark v. Couser, 29 N. H. 170.

It has been held under the New Hampshire statutes that selectmen cannot lawfully act as agents for the purchase of spirituous liquors, or appoint one of their number to be such agent, and cannot bind the town for the price of spirituous liquors so purchased. Richards v. Columbia, 55 N. H. 96.

The General Agent of a Corporation, clothed with a certain power by the charter, or the lawful act of the corporation, may use that power for an unauthorized or even a prohibited purpose in his dealings with an innocent third party, and yet render the corporation liable for his acts. Per Gregory, J., in Madison, etc., R. Co. v. Norwich Sav. Soc., 24 Ind. 457.

Principal Liable to Extent of Agent's Authority.—Where an agent authorized in writing to draw on his principal for $75 raised the figures to $175, and thereby induced an innocent third party to indorse a draft on the principal for $150, which being protested for nonpayment was paid by the indorsee, it was held that the principal was liable to the latter for $75. *Wilson v. judgment. Merrimac Paper Co. v. Illinois Trust, etc., Bank, 129 Ill. 296, affirming 30 Ill. App. 268.

He may make an entry on lands for his principal. Richards v. Folsom, 11 Me. 70.

Illustrations—Principal Bound.—If an agent, authorized to make a certain contract, makes one differing in its precise terms, but of the same legal effect, or securing additional benefits to his principal, the latter will be bound thereby. Simonds v. Clapp, 16 N. H. 222.

A general agent intrusted by his principal with power to make and enter into contracts for the purchase of grain has power to modify or waive a contract made by him in respect thereto. Anderson v. Coonley, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 279.

The principal cannot revoke a rescission of a contract made by his general agent and acquiesced in by the other party. St. Paul Second Nat. Bank v. Larson, 80 Wis. 469.

And a general agent to purchase may purchase on credit and bind his principal, notwithstanding instructions to purchase only for cash, if unknown to the party dealing with him. Fatman v. Leet, 41 Ind. 133.

Public Officer as Special Agent.—If a special agent whose authority is conferred by statute or orders of court, acting in the capacity of a public officer, with limited and well-defined powers, acts outside of the authority conferred, the principal will not be bound by his acts. Dart v. Hercules, 57 Ill. 449; Keyes v. Westford, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 273; Nixon v. Hyserott, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 58.

Act in Disregard of Instructions.—A principal is not bound by the act of a special agent when done in disregard of his instructions, unless perhaps where the principal's own negligence has enabled the agent to perpetrate a fraud thereby. *Saginaw, etc., R. Inquiry as to the Extent of Authority.—And it is the duty of all parties dealing with an agent to inquire into the nature and extent of his authority, and deal with him accordingly.¹

d. AUTHORITY MODIFIED BY INSTRUCTIONS—(1) General Agents—Instructions Not Known to Third Parties.—Private instructions to a general agent circumscribing his power will not avail to shield the principal from liability to parties dealing with him in ignorance of the limitation.²

Act within Authority.—But while acting within the scope of his authority a special agent binds his principal as effectually as a general agent can do. Morton v. Scull, 23 Ark. 289.

Authority to Make Restricted Indorsement of Check.—Authority to a clerk to make restricted indorsements of checks drawn to the principal's order for deposit in a certain bank, confers no right to make a general indorsement thereof whereby the clerk receives the proceeds. Schmidt v. Garfield Nat. Bank, 64 Hun (N. Y.) 298.

A Local Freight Agent has no power to bind a railroad company by a contract for the transportation of freight to a point beyond the terminus of the company's road, unless such authority has been expressly conferred upon him by the company, or can be implied from his previous acts and conduct. *Grover, etc., Sewing Mach. Instructions Known to Third Parties.—But if such persons are aware of the instructions the principal is not bound.¹

(2) Special Agents — Instructions Contravening Apparent Authority.—In special agencies, also, the principal cannot restrict his liability for acts of the agent within the apparent scope of his authority, by private instructions intended to be kept secret and not communicated to those with whom he may deal. Such instructions are not to be regarded as limitations upon the authority.²

Instructions Properly a Part of Authority.—But where the instructions are given at the same time with the commission, and are of a character which it would not be incongruous to make known, they will, as a rule, be part of the authority, and an agent's contract in violation of them will not bind his principal.³

The authority of an agent cannot be narrowed by private, undisclosed instructions, unless there is something in the nature of the business, or the circumstances of the case, to indicate that the agent is acting under special instructions or limited powers. Markey v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co., 103 Mass. 78; Murphy v. Southern L. Ins. Co., 3 Baxt. (Tenn.) 440, 27 Am. Rep. 761.

If a general agent for the purchase of wheat buys wheat to be paid for on demand, at the current price at the time of demand, his principal will be liable, though he may have instructed the agent to purchase only for cash and has paid him for the wheat, if the contract is made in good faith upon the credit of the principal, and in ignorance of the private instructions. Cruzan v. Smith, 41 Ind. 288. And see Stapp v. Spurlin, 32 Ind. 442.

Public Agents.—It has been held that the rule stated in regard to undisclosed instructions does not apply to public agents. Parsel v. Barnes, 25 Ark. 261.

Evidence of Instructions is admissible to prove the extent of the agency. Bensberg v. Harris, 46 Mo. App. 404.

1. Instructions of Which Third Parties are Aware.—U. S. v. Williams, Ware (U. S.) 175; American Lead Pencil Co. v. Wolfe, 30 Fla. 360; Longworth v. Conwell, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 469; Bryant v. Moore, 26 Me. 84, 45 Am. Dec. 96; Barnard v. Wheeler, 24 Me. 412; Leathers v. Springfield, 65 Mo. 507; Stainer v. Tysen, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 279.

2. Secret Instructions to Special Agents.—Hatch v. Taylor, 10 N. H. 538. Parker, C. J., in delivering the opinion in this case, said: "No man is at liberty to send another into the market to buy or sell for him as his agent, with secret instructions as to the manner in which he shall execute his agency, which are not to be communicated to those with whom he is to deal, and then, when his agent has deviated from those instructions, to say that he was a special agent, that the instructions were limitations upon his authority, and that those with whom he dealt in the matter of his agency acted at their peril, because they were bound to inquire where inquiry would have been fruitless, and to ascertain that of which they were not to have knowledge. It would render dealing with a special agent a matter of great hazard. If the principal deemed the bargain a good one, the secret orders would continue sealed; but if his opinion was otherwise, the injunction of secrecy would be removed and the transaction avoided, leaving the party to such remedy as he might enforce against the agent."

The principal is bound if the act of his special agent be within the scope of the authority which he holds him out to the world to possess, notwithstanding his private instructions. Carmichael v. Buck, 10 Rich. (S. Car.) 332, 70 Am. Dec. 226. And see Lister v. Allen, 31 Md. 543, 100 Am. Dec. 78.

3. Munn v. Commission Co., 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 44, 8 Am. Dec. 219; Lance v. Barrett, 1 Hill (S. Car.) 204.

Where the owner of a horse sends a stranger to a fair with it for sale, with express directions not to warrant it, and he acts contrary to his orders, the owner would not be liable on the warranty. Fenn v. Harrison, 3 T. R. 757.

Secret Instructions Distinguished from Limitations of Authority.—"The practical difficulty is that, with special agents, the instructions often accompany the authority, being conveyed, it may be, in the same sentence, so that considerable embarrassment sometimes ensues in discriminating between instructions

e. AUTHORITY AS AFFECTED BY USAGE OR CUSTOM.—Parties in entering into contracts are presumed to have in view the established usages and customs of the particular trade or business with reference to which they are contracting.¹ Third persons in dealing with an agent have a right, therefore, to presume that he has been clothed with all the powers with which, according to the custom of that particular business, similar agents are clothed;² and the and limitations of the power." 1 Minor's Inst. 208.

It is to be observed that a distinction is to be taken between the limited authority of a special agent, when appointed for specific acts, and private instructions given to such agent. Where the authority is limited in a bona fide manner, and the limitation is to be first disclosed by the agent, and is disclosed, either with or without inquiry, any departure from such authority or instructions will not bind the principal; but where the authority or instructions given are in the nature of private instructions, and so designed to be, they will not be binding upon the parties dealing with the agent. And if the instructions are of such a nature that they would not be communicated if an inquiry was made (even though it be the duty of the person dealing with the agent to make the inquiry), it is not necessary that it should be made, for it would not be communicated if made. Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 374, 55 Am. Dec. 195.

Effect of Subsequent Instruction.—A subsequent written instruction does not supersede or extinguish a prior parol instruction which it is evident the written instruction was not intended to interfere with or to displace. McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. Dak. 497.

1. See the title USAGES AND CUSTOMS, where the requisites of a valid usage and the necessity of knowledge thereof are fully treated; Milwaukee, etc., Invest. Co. v. Johnston, 35 Neb. 554.

Custom Unknown to Party and Not Recognized in the Place of Contract.—In an action for the breach of a written contract, made by an agent of the defendant in another state, for the sale of goods to the plaintiff, evidence of a custom among dealers in such goods in this commonwealth to accept or reject contracts made by their selling agents is inadmissible, in the absence of evidence that such a custom was known in the place where the contract was made, or that any notice of it was given to the plaintiff. Byrne v. Massasoit Packing Co., 137 Mass. 313.

2. Usage and Custom—England.—Jones v. Bowden, 4 Taunt. 847; Bayliffe v. Butterworth, 1 Exch. 425; Sutton v. Tatham, 10 Ad. & El. 27, 37 E. C. L. 25; Raitt v. Mitchell, 4 Campb. 146.

Wisconsin.—Roche v. Pennington (Wis., 1895), 62 N. W. Rep. 946, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 354.

May Employ Means Justified by Usage.—It is well settled that an agent has authority to adopt the usual and ordinary means of accomplishing the business with which he is intrusted. Williams v. Getty, 31 Pa. St. 461, 72 Am. Dec. 757; Pickert v. Marston, 68 Wis. 465, 60 Am. Rep. 877.

And all the means justified by usage in such cases may be employed by him, unless such implied authority be expressly negated by the principal. Franklin v. Ezell, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 497.

Powers Restricted by Usage of Trade.—And his powers may be restricted by a usage of the trade to which the transaction relates. Greely v. Bartlett, 1 Me. 179. See also Harris v. San Diego Flume Co., 87 Cal. 526.

Usage Binds Principal, Although Not Known to Him.—A person who employs another to act for him at a particular place or market, must be taken as intending that the business to be done will be done according to the cususages of the business are properly admitted for the purpose of interpreting the powers given the agent.¹

2. Powers Prima Facie Incident to Every Authority.—The principle is elementary and uniform that a power given an agent in a transaction carries with it the authority to do whatever is usual² and necessary to carry into effect the principal power.³ And this applies as well to special as general agents, tom and usage of that place or market, whether the principal in fact knew of the usage or custom, or not. Bailey v. Bensley, 87 Ill. 556.

Usage of Business Measures Authority.—The usage of the business in which the general agent is employed furnishes the rule by which his authority is measured. Upton v. Suffolk County Mills, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 589, 59 Am. Dec. 163. See also Quinn v. Carr, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 259.

The Officers of a Bank are held out to the public as having authority to act according to the general usage, practice, and course of their business. And their acts within the scope of such usage, practice, and course of business will, in general, bind the bank in favor of third persons possessing no other knowledge. Minor v. Mechanics' Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 46.

Custom of Shipmasters to Insure.—Effect will be given to a custom of captains of steamboats at a large river port to insure their boats and give premium notes therefor, binding the owners of the boat. Adams v. Pittsburgh Ins. Co., 95 Pa. St. 348, 40 Am. Rep. 662.

The Agent of an Insurance Company authorized to issue policies and to consummate the contract binds the principal by any act, agreement, representation, or waiver within the ordinary scope and limit of the insurance business which is not known by the assured to be outside the authority granted the agent. American Cent. Ins. Co. v. McLanathan, 11 Kan. 533. See the title INSURANCE.

Limitation of the Doctrine.—The rule of the text does not apply where the inference of such powers is expressly excluded by the instrument creating the agency, or by the circumstances of the business to which the agency relates. Collins v. Cooper, 65 Tex. 460; Byne v. Hatcher, 75 Ga. 289.

Illustrations of Powers Necessarily Implied.—The employment of an agent to deliver all freights necessarily includes the authority to make terms in regard to the delivery. Michigan Southern, etc., R. Co. v. Day, 20 Ill. 375, 71 Am. Dec. 278; Deming v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 48 N. H. 455, 2 Am. Rep. 267.

A foreman intrusted with the general man-unless the manner of doing the particular act is prescribed by the power.¹

3. Construction of Authority—a. WRITTEN AUTHORITIES—Question for Court.—Where the authority is created by power of attorney, or other writing, the instrument itself must, in general, be produced; and since the construction of writings belongs to the court and not to the jury, the fact and scope of the agency are, in such cases, questions of law to be decided by the court.²

agement of a trade or business has an implied general authority from his employer to enter into all such contracts as are usually and necessarily entered into in the ordinary conduct and management of the business. Richardson v. Cartwright, 1 C. & K. 328, 47 E. C. L. 328.

An authority to pay an award and to do what is needful implies also authority to carry the award into effect by the execution of a release. Dawson v. Lawley, 4 Esp. 65.

The general agent in the management of an estate may bind his principal by the employment of an attorney to save property sold for taxes, and this although there was an understanding between the principal and agent that the latter was to be responsible for all attorneys' fees. Farrar v. Duncan, 29 La. Ann. 126.

And a power "to sue or otherwise collect all claims" implies authority to employ counsel. Morgan v. Brown, 12 La. Ann. 159.

Authority to collect a debt carries with it authority to sue for it and issue execution upon the judgment obtained. Joyce v. Duplessis, 15 La. Ann. 242, 77 Am. Dec. 185.

The power conferred upon a committee to investigate the affairs and accounts of a corporation implies everything necessary to execute it, such as employing an accountant and obtaining clerical assistance for him. Star Line v. Van Vliet, 43 Mich. 364.

If an agent is authorized to get immediate possession of a certain store-room, and his principal and he understand that a bonus will have to be paid for such possession, he is authorized to contract to pay such bonus. Shackman v. Little, 87 Ind. 181.

And where the manager of a railroad is authorized, in case of accident, to clear the road, he acts within the general scope of his authority in putting a lot of swine, let loose by an accident, into a farmer's yard. Hawks v. Locke, 139 Mass. 205.

An agent sent to hurry forward goods may bind his principal to pay a sum for which they are held under a claim of lien. Robinson v. Springfield Iron Co., 39 Hun (N. Y.) 634. And see Collins v. Cooper, 65 Tex. 460.

Where goods are shipped to a consignee, and on account of an accident to a vessel carrying them it becomes necessary to execute a general average bond to the owners of the vessel, the consignee or agent has the right, and it is his duty, to execute the bond in order that he may carry out the instructions of his principal with regard to shipment and sale of the goods. Hardee v. Hall, 12 Bush (Ky.) 327.

A committee appointed by a town to sell land belonging to the town has implied authority to require a deposit to bind the sale. Goodale v. Wheeler, 11 N. H. 424.

A clause in a bank charter providing that the funds of the company shall not in any case be liable for any contract or engagement whatever, unless the same shall be signed by the president and countersigned by the cashier, does not apply to such contracts or engagements as occur or are necessary to the ordinary business of a cashier or agent, such as drawing and indorsing bills of exchange, checks, and drafts. Merchants' Bank v. Central Bank, 1 Ga. 418, 44 Am. Dec. 665.

The general power given a broker to negotiate the sale of a promissory note includes by implication the power to give such information relating thereto as would ordinarily be called for. McBean v. Fox, 1 Ill. App. 177.

Power Not Necessarily Involved.—But the authority given an agent for the management of property gives him no authority to borrow money even in a case of absolute necessity. Hawtayne v. Bourne, 7 M. & W. 595. See also Sawyer v. Wayne (Supreme Ct.), 6 N. Y. St. Rep. 745; White v. Madison, 26 N. Y. 117.

Implied Powers of Special Agents.—Every agency carries with it, or includes in it, as incident, all the powers which are necessary or proper, or usual, as means to effectuate the purposes for which it was created, and in this respect there is no distinction whether the authority is general or special, express or implied. McAlpin v. Cassidy, 17 Tex. 449; Benjamin v. Benjamin, 15 Conn. 347, 39 Am. Dec. 384.

A Special Agent to Obtain Subscriptions to a project of forming a joint-stock company to purchase lands may use the ordinary means of accomplishing the object of his appointment, such as representing the location and quality of the lands, and the like. Sandford v. Handy, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 260.

The Object of the Power.—In construing the power the court must have in view the design and object of the power and the means most usual and proper for carrying it into effect.¹

Subject to Strict Interpretation.—A formal instrument delegating powers is ordinarily subjected to strict interpretation, and the authority is not extended beyond that which is given in terms, or which is necessary to carry into effect that which is expressly given.²

A Letter by the Principal to His Agent, directing a sale of real estate, is sufficient authority for the agent to make a sale according to its terms; but if the authority be denied, the letter itself must be produced; or, if lost, its contents must be clearly proved. Stadlerman v. Fitzgerald, 14 Neb. 290.

1. Vanada v. Hopkins, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 285, 19 Am. Dec. 92; Le Roy v. Beard, 8 How. (U. S.) 468.

Intention of Parties.—In construing the power, the court must be governed by the intention of the parties. Marr v. Given, 23 Me. 55, 39 Am. Dec. 600.

"Undoubtedly it is a rule that a special power of attorney is to be strictly construed so as to sanction only such acts as are clearly within its terms; but it is also a rule of equal potency that the object of the parties is always to be kept in view, and, where the language used will permit, that construction should be adopted which will carry out instead of defeating the purpose of the appointment." Per Field, J., in Holladay v. Daily, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 606. See also Spect v. Gregg, 51 Cal. 198.

Evidence.—In order to arrive at the intention of the parties and to interpret the scope and meaning of the power, the court may receive evidence as to the relative positions of the parties, their obvious design as to the objects to be accomplished, and the nature of the business or transaction in which the principal was engaged, when the power of attorney relates to that. Brantley v. Southern L. Ins. Co., 53 Ala. 554; Maynard v. Mercer, 10 Nev. 33.

Lex Loc.—Every authority given to an agent to transact business for his principal must, in the absence of any counter proof, be construed to be to transact it according to the laws of the place where it is to be done. Owings v. Hull, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 607.

An instrument creating an agency is subject to strict construction, and, like other contracts, must be read in the light of surrounding circumstances. Bissell v. Terry, 69 Ill. 184.

Not Subject to Liberal Interpretation.—Such instruments are not subject to that liberal interpretation which is given to less formal instruments, as letters of instruction, etc., in commercial transactions, which are interpreted most strongly against the writer, especially when they are susceptible of two interpretations, and the agent has acted in good faith upon one of such interpretations. Craighead v. Peterson, 72 N. Y. 284, 28 Am. Rep. 150.

Construction must Not Defeat Intention.—But this rule does not require a construction that will defeat the intention of the parties, and where the intention fairly appears from the language used, it must control. Hemstreet v. Burdick, 90 Ill. 444.

Authority to Cite and Appear confers power to prosecute and defend suits brought by or against the principal. Miller v. Marmiche, 24 La. Ann. 30.

A Power of Attorney to Execute an Injunction Bond according to a certain order of the judge, which directs the condition to be according to law, does not authorize a bond to secure the damages that may be awarded on the dissolution of the injunction, where that is not required by the statute. Dehart v. Wilson, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 577.

An Agent to Confess Judgment cannot do so at a different time from that authorized in the power. Rankin v. Eakin, 3 Head (Tenn.) 229. But he may confess judgment with a stay of execution. Calwells v. Shields, 2 Rob. (Va.) 305.

A power of attorney authorizing an attorney "to negotiate any loan or loans of money, etc., or to contract any debt or debts, and to secure the same by executing" a mortgage on real estate, is sufficient to justify the agent in, and bind his principal by, receiving a draft instead of cash in payment of the money agreed to be loaned; the draft being paid at maturity, the securities given for payment of the loan are binding from their delivery. Roelfson v. Atwater, 1 Disney (Ohio) 346.

A general power of attorney is sufficient to authorize the agent to execute a general release in the name of his principal. Quesnel v. Mussy, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 449.

A power of attorney under seal authorizing an agent to sign his principal's name to

Restricted to Individual Business and Use of Principal.—A power of attorney, therefore, to act generally in the name and on behalf of the principal must, in the absence of anything showing a different intention, be construed as giving authority to act only in the separate individual business of the principal, and for his use.¹

General Words.—General words are to be construed with reference to the object to be accomplished; and where a power is given to do a particular act, followed by general words, such words are not to be extended beyond what is necessary for accomplishing the particular act for which the power is given.²

a contract, authorizes him to execute a contract under seal. Wickham v. Knox, 33 Pa. St. 71.

The powers of the agent are limited to doing the acts authorized for the use and benefit of the principal only, as much as if it were so expressed. Adams Express Co. v. Trego, 35 Md. 48; Hewes v. Doddridge, 1 Rob. (Va.) 152.

A power of attorney authorizing an agent to issue notes in the name of the principal will be construed as extending only to notes issued in the business of the principal, or for his benefit. North River Bank v. Aymar, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 262; Camden Safe Deposit, etc., Co. v. Abbott, 44 N. J. L. 257. Such an agent is not authorized to draw and indorse notes for the mere accommodation of third persons. Wallace v. Mobile Branch Bank, 1 Ala. 565.

General Words are to be construed as giving general powers for carrying into effect the special purpose for which the power is given. Attwood v. Munnings, 7 B. & C. 278, 14 E. C. L. 42.

Powers of Attorney and All Special Powers are to be strictly construed, and general words therein are to be construed in reference to the particular terms which form the subject matter of the instrument in furtherance of, but in subordination to, the general power conferred. Geiger v. Bolles, 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 129. And see Adams Express Co. v. Trego, 35 Md. 47.

Illustrations—General Powers Construed with Reference to Subject Matter.—A Power of Attorney to Collect Debts Due, arising from certain notes secured by a mortgage, and to compromise, settle, and arrange them, either in law or otherwise, as to the attorney should seem fit, does not authorize him to forgive the debt or postpone or discharge the security, except in fulfilment of some arrangement for its satisfaction. Chilton v. Willford, 2 Wis. 1, 60 Am. Dec. 399.

To Transact All Business.—And an agent with a general authority to transact all the business of his principal, with certain books and accounts for professional services "for settlement," was held not authorized to transfer such books and accounts to a surety of his principal to indemnify him against the consequences of his suretyship. Wood v. McCain, 7 Ala. 800, 42 Am. Dec. 612.

A Power Authorizing the Collection of Debts and of personal property, and containing a clause that "upon the receipt of any such debt, dues, or issues of money, acquittances or other discharges for me, and in my name, to make, seal, execute deeds of conveyance, and deliver, and generally do all and every act or acts, thing or things, device or devices in the law, whatsoever needful and necessary to be done in and about the premises, for me, and in my name, to do, execute, and perform," does not authorize a sale of real estate, but only allows deeds of release for mortgages or to affect contracts previously made. Berry v. Harnage, 39 Tex. 638.

An Authority to Attend to the Business of the Principal Generally, or to act for him with reference to all his business, does not authorize a sale of real estate, or allow the agent to sell or otherwise dispose of the personality of his principal, unless as a means necessary and proper to conduct the business to which the agency applies. Coquillard v. French, 19 Ind. 274.

A power of attorney "to act in all my business as if I were personally present, and to stand good in law, on all my lands and other business," does not authorize the sale of land and the making of binding covenants in relation thereto. Ashley v. Bird, 1 Mo. 640, 14 Am. Dec. 313.

And if one constitutes another his "general and special agent to do and transact all manner of business," it does not necessarily authorize him to sell stocks or other property of the principal. Hodge v. Combs, 1 Black (U. S.) 192.

To Collect Debts and Do All Acts Which the Principal could Personally Do.—A power of attorney to collect debts, execute deeds of lands, and accomplish a complete adjustment of all concerns of the principal in a particular place, and to do all other acts which the principal could do in person, does not authorize the giving of a note by the agent in the name of the principal; the larger power conferred by the general words must be construed with reference to the matters specially mentioned.

Parol Evidence.—Contemporaneous parol evidence is inadmissible to vary or enlarge a written authority,¹ but parol evidence may be admitted to show a further special agency to do a particular act,² or a subsequent enlargement of the original authority.³

Usage or Custom.—Nor can the nature and extent of a written authority be enlarged by parol evidence of a usage of other agents in like cases. It must be ascertained from the instrument itself.⁴ But such evidence may be admitted for the purpose of interpreting the powers actually given, or the manner of their execution.⁵

b. WHERE AUTHORITY IS AMBIGUOUS.—Where the authority is ambiguous and capable of two constructions, it should be construed according to the usual course of dealing in such matters.⁶ But if the agent has bona fide and in good faith adopted and acted upon one construction, it will bind the principal.⁷

Rossiter v. Rossiter, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 494, 24 Am. Dec. 62.

A Power to Receive All Salary and money, with all the principal's authority to recover, compound, and discharge, and give releases, does not authorize the agent to negotiate bills received in payment, or indorse them in his own name, and this though the power contained a clause authorizing him to transact all the business of the principal. Hogg v. Snaith, 1 Taunt. 347.

Duration of Power.—Where the operative part of a power of attorney contained no limitation on the duration of the power, but it was preceded by a recital that the principal was going abroad and was desirous of appointing agents to act for him during his absence, it was held that the recital controlled the generality of the operative part of the instrument and limited the exercise of the power to the period of the principal's absence. Danby v. Coutts, 29 Ch. Div. 500.

1. Hogg v. Snaith, 1 Taunt. 347; Claflin v. Continental Jersey Works, 85 Ga. 27; Ashley v. Bird, 1 Mo. 640, 14 Am. Dec. 213; State v. State Bank, 45 Mo. 528; Mechanics' Bank v. Schaumburg, 38 Mo. 228; Pollock v. Cohen, 32 Ohio St. 514; Reese v. Medlock, 27 Tex. 120, 84 Am. Dec. 611.

Parol Evidence to Interpret Powers.—But parol evidence, though inadmissible for the purpose of enlarging the authority or conferring other powers, may be admitted to interpret the powers conferred. Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 296.

The subject matter and general intention of the maker must first be shown by the writing, without the aid of extrinsic evidence, and then such evidence may be received to ascertain the particular subject in view at the time the writing was made, wherever its terms are equivocal or applicable indifferently to more than one subject. Gee v. Bolton, 17 Wis. 610.

2. Williams v. Cochran, 7 Rich. (S. Car.) 45.

3. Subsequent Enlargement of Power.—Where the parol evidence seeks to establish a subsequent enlargement of the original authority, or to give an authority for another object, or where the express power is ingrafted on an existing agency, affecting it only sub modo to a limited extent, the maxim excluding parol evidence loses its force and application. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Wilcox, 57 Ill. 180.

Where an agent was authorized in writing to sell, or procure a purchaser for, land at sixteen hundred dollars, and execute a contract for such sale, it was held that it might be shown that he was afterwards orally authorized to accept six hundred dollars in cash and the balance on time secured by a mortgage. Magill v. Stoddard, 70 Wis. 75.

4. Reese v. Medlock, 27 Tex. 123, 84 Am. Dec. 611; Delafield v. Illinois, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 192.

Evidence of a usage of the navy office to pay bills indorsed by the agent in his own name and negotiated by him under a special limited power cannot be received to enlarge the operation of the power. Hogg v. Snaith, 1 Taunt. 347.

5. Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 296.

In Reese v. Medlock, 27 Tex. 123, 84 Am. Dec. 611, it is said that there may be some qualifications and limitations to the general rule excluding parol evidence, especially in cases of general or implied agencies, where the usages of a particular trade or business or of a particular class of persons are properly admissible—not, indeed, for the purpose of enlarging the powers of the agents employed therein, but for the means of interpreting and understanding those powers which are actually given. And see supra, this section, Authority as Affected by Usage or Custom.

Merchants' Bank, 6 Met. (Mass.) 13; Mann v. Laws, 117 Mass. 293; Johnson v. Jones, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 369; Winne v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 91 N. Y. 185; Bessent v. Harris, 63 N. Car. 542; Longmire v. Herndon, 72 N. Car. 629.

Principal Responsible for Ambiguities.—The principal should give his instructions in clear and unambiguous terms, and is himself responsible for any error arising from ambiguous instructions. Ireland v. Livingston, L. R. 5 H. L. 416. And see infra, this title, Duties and Liabilities Inter Se—Of Agent to Principal—Fidelity to Instructions.

c. IMPLIED AUTHORITIES.—The nature and extent of an implied authority are deemed to be limited to acts of a like nature with those from which it is implied,¹ and an implied agency is never construed to extend beyond the obvious purposes for which it is apparently created.² The

If a construction be in some doubt, the agent may do what seems, from the instrument, plausible and correct; and though it turn out in the end to be wrong as understood by the principal, the latter is still bound by the conduct of the agent. The persons dealing with an agent are required, like him, to look to the instrument to see the extent of the power, and if it be ambiguous, so as to mislead them, the injurious consequences should fall on the principal for not employing clearer terms. LeRoy v. Beard, 8 How. (U. S.) 468; Very v. Levy, 13 How. (U. S.) 345; Lorraine v. Cartwright, 3 Wash. (U. S.) 151; Courcier v. Ritter, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 551; Marsh v. Whitmore, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 178; Andrews v. Kneeland, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 358.

Ascertained by Course of Dealing.—It is to be ascertained by investigating the course of dealing pursued between the several parties to the transaction. Pole v. Leask, 28 Beav. 562.

Recognition of Similar Acts.—A single act of an assumed agent and a single recognition of his authority by the principal, if sufficiently unequivocal, positive, and comprehensive in their character, may be sufficient to prove the agency to do other similar acts. Wilcox v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 24 Minn. 269. But see Bank of Deer Lodge v. Hope Min. Co., 3 Mont. 146, 35 Am. Rep. 458; Billings First Nat. Bank v. Hall, 8 Mont. 341.

A continuing agency is not to be presumed from the fact that one has occasionally been temporarily employed for special purposes. Campbell v. Sherman, 49 Mich. 534. And the law raises no inference that the agency continues or extends to other matters occurring years after. Reed v. Baggott, 5 Ill. App. 257.

In an action for the price of goods furnished on a forged order the plaintiff may show that the purchaser was the general agent of the defendant, who had frequently paid for goods purchased by the agent on his credit. Williams v. Mitchell, 17 Mass. 98.

Where a merchant's clerk makes sales, receives payment, and gives receipts in the name of his employer with the sanction of the latter, or the merchant in any manner holds him out to the community as his agent for those purposes, he is bound by the acts of such clerk in the same course of trade without his authority; but to apply this rule to a case where a purchasing clerk, having been employed in a single instance to make a sale, fifteen months afterwards made another, wholly unauthorized, is to carry the doctrine to an unwarranted extent, especially where the price asked and other circumstances are such as should have aroused the suspicions of ordinarily prudent persons. Cupples v. Whelan, 61 Mo. 583.

Authority Implied from Nature of Particular Act.—An implied authority may be deduced from the nature and circumstances of the particular act done by the principal. If the principal sends his commodity to a place where it is the ordinary business of the person to whom it is confided to sell, it will be intended that the commodity is sent thither for the purpose of sale; and where the article is sent in such a way and to such a place, as to exhibit an apparent purpose of sale, the principal will be bound and the purchaser will be safe, although the agent may have acted wrongfully and against his orders or duty, if the purchaser had no notice of it. Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 373, 55 Am. Dec. 195; Pickering v. Busk, 15 East 38. See also Lambert v. Carroll, Wright (Ohio) 108.

Illustrations—Implied Powers.—Power to sign bills, notes, etc., and manage the principal's business, carries with it power to indorse notes. Auldjo v. McDougall, U. C. Q. B. 3 O. S. 199.

Power to collect money implies power to give a receipt. Bedson v. Smith, 10 Grant Ch. (Can.) 292.

Authority to execute a deed of trust carries with it by implication power to acknowledge it for registration. Robinson v. Mauldin, 11 Ala. 977.

An agent who makes an offer is also the agent to receive the response. Ferguson v. Hemingway, 38 Mich. 169.

2. Story on Agency, § 87.

Implied Authority Limited to Like Acts or Like Dealings.—If the agency arises by implication from acts done by the agent with the tacit consent or acquiescence of the principal, it is deemed to be limited to acts of a like nature; if from the general habits of dealing between the parties, it is deemed to be limited to dealings of the same kind. McAlpin v. Cassidy, 17 Tex. 449.

The implied authority of an agent is limited by the usual course of dealing in the business in which he is employed. Jones v. Warner, 11 Conn. 40.

To the same effect see Rankin v. New England Silver Min. Co., 4 Nev. 78. See also Tidrick v. Rice, 13 Iowa 214; Waldworth County Bank v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 14 Wis. 325.

As to how an agency may be created by implication, see supra, this title, Appointment—Modes.

Agent to Import cannot Sell.—An agent employed merely to import goods from a foreign country has no implied authority to sell them. Dyer v. Pearson, 3 B. & C. 38, 10 E. C. L. 13.

A Receiving and Forwarding Merchant, unless under some special contract, custom, or usage of trade, cannot forward cotton to a port without instructions from his principal, and direct its delivery to a commission merchant on arrival. Love v. Davis, 25 Ala. 335.

fact and scope of such an agency is for the jury.¹

4. Construction and Scope of Certain Particular Authorities—a. To SELL GENERALLY—(1) Consideration must be in Money.—All sales, whether of real or personal property, by an agent appointed generally to sell, must be for a consideration in money,² and such an agent cannot bind his principal by receiving payment in bonds, notes, or other paper.³

An Agent Intrusted with the Possession of the Property of Another, with his consent, and with the apparent ownership, does not thereby acquire authority to pledge it if it is not left with him for the purposes of sale, and such apparent ownership has not been permitted by the true owner with fraudulent intent. Nickerson v. Darrow, 5 Allen (Mass.) 419.

Power to Collect a Note does not authorize an agent to bind his principal by an expression of his opinion as to the correct reading of a doubtful word. Van Vechten v. Smith, 59 Iowa 173.

Authority to draw a bill of exchange is not of itself authority to receive notice of dishonor. Hockaday v. Skeggs, 2 Phila. (Pa.) 268.

Power of Attorney to Settle Certain Claims.—A power of attorney given to an agent to represent the principal's interest in the settlement of certain claims does not authorize the attorney to bind the principal for the debts of third persons. Hart v. Dixon, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 336. See also Gouldy v. Metcalf, 75 Tex. 455, 16 Am. St. Rep. 912.

To Exchange.—A power to change old issues of stock for new issues does not authorize the transfer of the property to a third person. Quay v. Presidio, etc., R. Co., 82 Cal. 1. Nor will authority to negotiate an exchange of lands authorize a binding contract to exchange or the receipt of a deed to be given the principal on exchange. Swain v. Burnette, 89 Cal. 564.

Authority to trade off a mule if the agent could get anything to suit him does not authorize him to exchange him for another, and bind the principal to pay a sum of money as the estimated difference in value. McMillan v. Wooten, 80 Ala. 263.

To Contract.—Authority to contract confers no authority to sue upon the contract, Markham v. Burlington Ins. Co., 69 Iowa 515; nor to release any material benefit thereunder in order to avoid a lawsuit, there being no dispute as to the validity of the contract. Kountz v. Gates, 78 Wis. 415.

To Accept Performance.—And authority to accept performance of a contract gives no authority to add to the contract. Carson v. Mitchell, 41 Ill. App. 243.

Authority to Receive Money does not imply power to pay it out. Knowlton v. School City of Logansport, 75 Ind. 103.

To Protect Interest.—A power to "protect all the interest in and title to" certain land owned by the principal authorizes the agent to redeem the land from a purchaser at a tax sale. Townshend v. Shaffer, 30 W. Va. 176.

1. Lovejoy v. Middlesex R. Co., 128 Mass. 480; Loudon Sav. Fund Soc. v. Hagerstown Sav. Bank, 36 Pa. St. 498, 78 Am. Dec. 390; Seiple v. Irwin, 30 Pa. St. 515; Wilkins v.

Commercial Bank, 6 How. (Miss.) 217. See also Kaufman v. Farley Mfg. Co., 78 Iowa 679, 16 Am. St. Rep. 462; Partridge v. Sterling, 79 Mich. 302; White v. King, 87 Mich. 107.

The sufficiency of the evidence to establish the extent of the agent's powers is a question for the jury, under appropriate instructions from the court. Golding v. Merchant, 43 Ala. 705; Jacobson v. Poindexter, 42 Ark. 97.

For evidence held sufficient to justify finding of jury that agent had apparent authority to bind his principal, see Ellinger v. Rawlings (Ind. App., 1895), 40 N. E. Rep. 146; Harris v. Nations, 79 Tex. 409. For evidence held insufficient, see Wood v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. (Iowa, 1885), 24 N. W. Rep. 46.

L. 329; Lumpkin v. Wilson, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 555; Fitzhugh v. Franco-Texas Land Co., 81 Tex. 306; Frost v. Erath Cattle Co., 81 Tex. 505, 26 Am. St. Rep. 831.

In Absence of Special Provision, Sale must be for Money.—An agent authorized to sell property must sell for money, unless otherwise specially instructed. Brown v. Smith, 67 N. Car. 245.

The same rule applies in the absence of special custom, whether or not the agent is a del credere agent. Catterall v. Hindle, L. R. 1 C. P. 186.

The very word "sale" implies a moneyed consideration. Hampton v. Moorhead, 62 Iowa 91.

Agent Given Discretion as to Terms.—But where the agent was authorized to sell "on such terms as to him shall seem meet," and it appeared that the principal owned a great deal of other property in the town, which was young, and the growth of which he was desirous of advancing, thus increasing the value of his remaining property, it was held that the agent might stipulate for the payment of a certain sum in money and the establishment of a lumber yard on the lot. Carson v. Smith, 5 Minn. 78, 77 Am. Dec. 539.

As to power to give credit, see infra, this section, To Sell Real Estate; To Sell Personally.

3. Payment in Negotiable Paper.—The agent cannot bind his principal by a sale of the property for bonds which are not circulating as money, Brown v. Smith, 67 N. Car. 245; nor by receiving payment in notes, Buckwalter v. Craig, 55 Mo. 71; or bills of exchange, Sykes v. Giles, 5 M. & W. 645.

Payment by check is not a payment in cash. Hall v. Storrs, 7 Wis. 253. And the agent is liable if loss results from accepting a check. Harlan v. Ely, 68 Cal. 522.

If authorized to receive a note he cannot

Agent cannot Give Away.—The agent, therefore, cannot give away the property or make a conveyance in consideration of love and affection in the principal for the grantee.¹

Nor Barter or Exchange.—Nor can the agent barter or exchange the property,² even in part.³

Nor Pledge or Dispose of the Property to be Sold in Payment of his Own Debts.—A valid exercise of the authority requires the transaction to be for the benefit of the principal, who is not bound by a pledge or transfer of the property by the agent as security for or in payment of his own debts,⁴ but may maintain trover against the creditor without a previous demand.⁵

assign it. Wright v. Ray, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 68.

1. Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 557.

A Gift of the Property is not authorized, nor its transfer for any purpose, except in completion of a sale. Dupont v. Wertheman, 10 Cal. 354.

And the owner of land may treat as a nullity a conveyance made by the agent without consideration. Randall v. Duff, 79 Cal. 115, 3 L. R. A. 754; Campbell v. Campbell, 57 Wis. 288; Meade v. Brothers, 28 Wis. 639.

Custom.—Nor can this rule be overturned by a custom of land agents to barter or exchange property placed in their hands for sale. Reese v. Medlock, 27 Tex. 120, 84 Am. Dec. 611.

Exchanging Money.—He has no authority, after receiving payment in cash, to exchange the money with third parties for bills of a different denomination. Kent v. Bornstein, 12 Allen (Mass.) 342.

3. Hampton v. Moorhead, 62 Iowa 91, where the consideration was in part cash and the balance in a patent right.

Transaction Held Cash Sale.—Where A gave B a power of attorney to sell and convey land, B conveyed the land to C, and under an arrangement contemporaneously made, whereby D was to make a loan to C to enable him to pay for the land, took notes and a mortgage from C payable to himself (B), and immediately indorsed the notes and assigned the mortgage in his individual capacity to D, and received the money, it was held to be a sale for cash, and not a barter, nor sale on time. Plummer v. Buck, 16 Neb. 322.

Property of Agent and Principal Sold for Part Cash.—Where an agent sold his own goods and those of his principal in one sale, receiving part payment in goods, his principal was held bound, provided the money received amounted to the value of his goods. Moore v. Thompson, 32 Me. 497.

An agent for the sale of real property cannot convey it in trust for the payment of his own debts. Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 296. Nor can an agent for the sale of personal property pledge it for his own indebtedness, for goods sold to him for his own use. Victor Sewing Mach. Co. v. Heller, 44 Wis. 265.

Note for Sewing-machine—Boarding Agent No Defense.—In a suit upon a note given for the purchase of a sewing-machine, bought of plaintiff's agent, it is no defense that the maker furnished board to the agent, in payment of the note, under an agreement to that effect made at the time of the sale. Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Givan, 65 Mo. 89.

5. Rodick v. Coburn, 68 Me. 170; Gould v. Blodgett, 61 N. H. 115.

Or the Debts of the Principal.—Nor does an authority to sell property authorize a transfer of it in payment of the debts of the owner.¹

(2) Time of Sale.—If the time within which the sale is to be made is specified in the power, it will, of course, govern;² but even though no time be limited, a sale several years afterwards and after the property has greatly increased in value will not be sustained.³

(3) Power Exhausted by Sale.—After once entering into a contract of sale, the powers of the agent are exhausted, and he cannot afterward cancel it and make another contract for the sale of the same property.⁴

b. TO SELL REAL ESTATE⁵—(1) Sufficiency of Power.—As has been stated, written powers are to be strictly construed, and will not be enlarged by general words beyond the particular act to be done.⁶

Replevin.—Parsons v. Webb, 8 Me. 38, 22 Am. Dec. 220.

1. Butts v. Newton, 29 Wis. 632.

A salesman and confidential clerk in a retail store has no authority, in the ordinary and usual course of business, to sell by wholesale in payment of a debt owed by his employer, Lee v. Tinges, 7 Md. 215; Hampton v. Matthews, 14 Pa. St. 105; nor, in the absence of his employer, to deliver goods in payment of, or as security for, a note signed by his employer. Nash v. Drew, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 422.

2. Clements v. Machebocuf, 92 U. S. 418; Thornton v. Boyden, 31 Ill. 200; Reed v. Baggott, 5 Ill. App. 257.

Committee Authorized to Sell on Certain Day.—A committee authorized by a vote of the proprietors of a meeting-house to sell it on a day named have no authority to make the sale on any other day. Bliss v. Clark, 16 Gray (Mass.) 60.

Short Time.—Where a sale is authorized within "a short time," a sale within two weeks will be held a compliance with the power. Smith v. Fairchild, 7 Colo. 510.

Immediately.—Where an agent is authorized to sell at a certain price if he can find a purchaser "immediately," a sale one month afterwards is unauthorized, especially where the agent had written the principal that he could not sell for the price named, and requested permission to sell for considerably less, or, if the permission were not given, "to let the matter drop." Matthews v. Sowle, 12 Neb. 398.

3. Sale after Several Years and Increase of Value.—If an agent authorized to sell land at a given price, three years afterwards, when the value has greatly increased and is rapidly rising, sells at the price named and at a great sacrifice, without informing his principal of the rise in value, it is such a fraud upon the principal that a court of equity will refuse to enforce the conveyance. Proudfoot v. Wightman, 78 Ill. 553.

4. Luke v. Griggs, 4 Dakota 287; Diversy v. Kellogg, 44 Ill. 114, 92 Am. Dec. 154. And see Stilwell v. New York Mut. L. Ins. Co., 72 N. Y. 385; Fullerton v. McLaughlin, 70 Hun (N. Y.) 568.

Agent to Sell cannot Rescind.—The rule that there is no presumption that an agent to sell has power to rescind the sale or materially modify its terms after it has become an executed contract is well settled. Adrian v.

Lane, 13 S. Car. 183; Andrews v. Himrod, 37 Ill. App. 124.

A traveling salesman for a commercial house will not, in the absence of proof, be presumed to have authority to rescind his contracts and take back goods furnished by the house for which he is agent, when they prove unsatisfactory to the customer. Diversy v. Kellogg, 44 Ill. 114, 92 Am. Dec. 154.

Contra of General Agent.—But it has been held that a general agent selling a chattel may rescind the contract of sale with the consent of the purchaser, Scott v. Wells, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 357, 40 Am. Dec. 568; and that the principal will be liable to refund the money paid. Bloomer v. Denman, 12 Ill. 240. And see Palmer v. Roath, 86 Mich. 602.

Releasing from Liability.—Nor can an agent to sell release the purchaser from liability and accept another in his stead. Ludwig v. Gorsuch, 154 Pa. St. 413.

May Correct Description.—When an agent to sell all the principal's lands in a certain parish sells part of them, and it is afterwards discovered that the portion intended had not been conveyed, he may remove the obstacle to a perfect sale and correct the description of the land by agreeing to a different location, so as to carry out the original intentions of the purchaser and himself. Until this be done the sale is not complete and his power not terminated. Boykin v. Wright, 11 La. Ann. 531.

5. For a detailed treatment of the requisites, sufficiency, and interpretation of powers of attorney, see the title POWERS OF ATTORNEY.

6. Supra, this section, Construction of Authority—Written Authorities. Dupont v. Wertheman, 10 Cal. 354, Bissell v. Terry, 69 Ill. 184; Sweigart v. Frey, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 299.

A power to sell real estate will not be implied from a power to purchase. Tod v. Benedict, 15 Iowa 591.

Authority to Assign Certificate of Mortgage Sale.—But a power to "grant, bargain, sell, and convey any and all personal or real property" gives authority to sell and convey by assignment of the certificate of sale the interest or estate which a purchaser at a mortgage sale has in the premises prior to the expiration of the period of redemption. Cooper v. Finke, 38 Minn. 2.

Power to Redeem.—An agent with a power of attorney to sell land has authority to redeem it when sold as unseated for the pay-

Authority must be Clear.—An authority, therefore, to sell real estate must be clear and distinct and of such a character that a fair and candid person must see, without hesitation, that the authority is given.¹ Hence an authority given in general terms to manage real estate, make contracts, and do all things which concern the principal's interest in any way, gives no power to convey land,² ment of taxes. McCord v. Bergautz, 7 Watts (Pa.) 487.

No Power to Create Equitable Estate.—Authority to take charge of and sell land does not authorize an agent to create an equitable estate therein. Bohn v. Hatch (Buffalo Super. Ct.) 39 N. Y. St. Rep. 404.

1. Bosseau v. O'Brien, 4 Biss. (U. S.) 395; Burlington, etc., R. Co. v. Sherwood, 62 Iowa 309. And see Treat v. De Celis, 41 Cal. 202.

Naked Power, Prescribing Manner of Execution.

—Where one gives a naked power, prescribing in the instrument creating it the manner in which it is to be exercised, every requirement must be strictly complied with, or the power does not arise. And a power of attorney to sell certain real estate in "lots as surveyed by B," where the land was about to be surveyed as an addition to a town, gives the agent no authority to sell the entire tract for a certain sum or at a certain price per acre. Rice v. Tavernier, 8 Minn. 248, 83 Am. Dec. 778.

Subject Matter of Power Uncertain.—Under a power by a husband to his wife "to bargain, purchase, sell, grant, lease, and convey, to accept and receive all sums of money, to collect and pay, to sue and be sued, to give notes and receipts, and to accept the same of * * * all and every person or persons, and in my name to make, seal, and deliver, and acknowledge for me," she has no authority to convey real estate, inasmuch as the form of the instrument does not exclude the hypothesis that the subject matter of the power was to be something else than land. Gee v. Bolton, 17 Wis. 604, distinguishing Marr v. Given, 23 Me. 55, 39 Am. Dec. 600.

Authority to Negotiate Special Sale Insufficient.

—Nor will a power to sell be implied from the fact that in a particular instance the agent was authorized to negotiate a sale to one person on certain terms, the actual transfer to be made by the owner. Graves v. Horton, 38 Minn. 66. Nor does a mere special employment to effect a sale confer authority upon the agent to agree upon the terms of the sale. Michael v. Eley, 61 Hun (N. Y.) 180.

Authority to Sell Subject to Approval.—Where a real-estate broker wrote to the plaintiff's attorney in fact: "Do you have charge of the lands in this county belonging to the estate of S.? If so, are they for sale? If the title is all right we can possibly find a customer for the list this year; let us hear from you as to price, etc.," to which he received the reply: "I herewith inclose you a price-list of our land in your county; my mother is the widow of S., * * * and is the sole devisee * * * I am executor of my father and attorney in fact of my mother; the titles are all strictly clear and good," attached to which letter was: "Western land for sale, Winnebago county, Ohio," followed by a list of lands with the prices, terms, and name of the party to whom application should be made—it was held that the correspondence did not, on its face, contain authority to sell the lands, but that at most it was an authority to sell subject to the approval of the widow of S., or that of her attorney in fact. Stewart v. Pickering, 73 Iowa 652.

Authority to Make Contract of Sale.—The owner of lots in Kansas City wrote from his home in another state to his agent, saying that he would leave the sale of the lots pretty much with the agent; that if any one was willing to buy on specified terms, he thought he was willing to have the agent make out a deed, and that he would perfect it; that if the agent thought better to wait, then to hold on; that the above price was only for the present; and it was held that the letter authorized the agent to make a contract for the present sale of the lots. Smith v. Allen, 86 Mo. 178.

To Sell "Claims and Effects."—A power of attorney to sell "claims and effects" cannot be construed to authorize a sale of land or real estate. De Cordova v. Knowles, 37 Tex. 19.

Power to Grant Discharges or the Execution and Delivery of Deeds.—A power authorizing the collection of debts and the granting of acquittances or other discharges, or the execution and delivery of deeds of conveyance, upon receipt of the claims, only allows deeds of release for mortgages, or to affect contracts previously made, and is insufficient to authorize a sale of real estate. Berry v. Harnage, 39 Tex. 638.

To Locate and Survey.—A power to locate and survey lands confers no power to sell. Moore v. Lockett, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 67, 4 Am. Dec. 683.

Advertisement Referring to Owner and Another.—An advertisement put up upon land, offering it for sale, and referring to the owner and another person, is not, in opposition to the denial of the owner of the agency of such third person, sufficient to imply in him power to make a sale of the land. Mortimer v. Cornwell, Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 351.

2. Power to Superintend Real Estate, etc.—A power of attorney to S. "to superintend my real and personal estate, to make contracts, to settle outstanding debts, and generally to do all things that concern my interest in any way, real or personal, whatsoever, giving my said attorney full power to use my name to release others or bind myself, as he may deem proper and expedient, hereby making the said S. my general attorney and agent, and by these presents ratifying whatsoever my said attorney may do by virtue of this power," contains no authority to convey real estate. Billings v. Morrow, 7 Cal. 171, 68 Am. Dec. 235; Hunter v. Sacramento Valley Beet Sugar Co., 11 Fed. Rep. 15; Lord v. Sherman, 2 Cal. 498.

and neither will an authority to attend to all the business of the principal generally.¹

Power to Contract for Sale.—But though a power may be insufficient to authorize a conveyance of real estate, it may yet be sufficient to authorize a contract for the sale of it, specific performance of which will be enforced in equity.²

(2) Certainty and Extent of Power.—The power should be as certain as it is necessary for the deed to be which is to be executed by virtue of it.³

Though such a power will authorize the execution of a lease for a term exceeding one year. Jones v. Marks, 47 Cal. 242. And in De Rutte v. Muldrow, 16 Cal. 505, the court refused to extend the rule laid down in Billings v. Morrow, 7 Cal. 171, 68 Am. Dec. 235, and hold the power sufficient to authorize a lease of real estate with the privilege of purchasing any part of it during the continuation of the lease.

An authority to represent the principal in all that concerns his interests in California, together with letters written afterward referring to the propriety of a sale of land, does not authorize the attorney to execute a contract for its sale. Treat v. De Celis, 41 Cal. 202.

Power to Recover, etc., Part of a Decedent's Estate.—A power of attorney to ask, demand, recover, or receive the maker's lawful part of a decedent's estate, giving and granting thereby to his said attorney his sole and full power and authority to make, pursue, and follow such legal course for the recovery, receiving, and obtaining the same, as he himself might or could do were he personally present, and upon the receipt thereof, acquittances, and other sufficient discharges for him in his name, to sign, seal, and deliver, does not authorize the conveyance of real estate. Hay v. Mayer, 8 Watts (Pa.) 203, 34 Am. Dec. 453.

A Power to Do Everything to Secure Title to a certain piece of property does not warrant a sale of and contract to sell any portion of it. Blum v. Robertson, 24 Cal. 127.

1. Power to Attend to All the Principal's Business Insufficient.—Watson v. Hopkins, 27 Tex. 637; Coquillard v. French, 19 Ind. 274. Even though the land was acquired in carrying on the business. Smith v. Stephenson, 45 Iowa 645.

A power of attorney "to act in all my business, in all concerns, as if I were present myself, and to stand good in law, in all my land and other business," gives no power to sell land. Ashley v. Bird, 1 Mo. 640, 14 Am. Dec. 313.

2. Power Authorizing Contract to Sell.—Where A. wrote C., "I wish you to manage [my property] as you would with your own; if a good opportunity offers to sell everything I have, I would be glad to sell; it may be parties will come into S. who will be glad to purchase my gas stock and real estate," C. was held thereby authorized to contract for the sale of the real estate, but not to convey it; and a deed executed to a purchaser, though invalid as a conveyance, was held good as a contract for the sale of the property therein described. Lyon v. Pollock, 99 U. S. 668. And see Jones v. Marks, 47 Cal. 242; De Rutte v. Muldrow, 16 Cal. 505; Jackson v. Badger, 35 Minn. 52.

In Vanada v. Hopkins, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 285, 19 Am. Dec. 92, the power, though insufficient to authorize a conveyance by the agent, was held to authorize him to bind his principal by a bond for title.

"I authorize you to sell * * * my house and lot; if you sell it, do not take less than one thousand four hundred dollars; if you rent it, get all you can in money, and no repairs;" written by the owner of land to his agent, is a sufficient authority to the agent to make a valid contract and sale for one thousand four hundred dollars, binding his principal to make a title to the purchaser, upon the payment of the purchase money. Matherson v. Davis, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 443.

A Verbal Authority is sufficient to authorize an agent to sell land; and a contract to sell land, made by an agent so authorized, may be valid to transfer the equitable title, although the writing which evidences the contract may not be under seal. Ledbetter v. Walker, 31 Ala. 175. See also Brock v. Pearson, 87 Cal. 581.

3. Clark v. Graham, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 577; Lumbard v. Aldrich, 8 N. H. 31, 28 Am. Dec. 381; Gage v. Gage, 30 N. H. 420; Gee v. Bolton, 17 Wis. 612.

Illustrations of Descriptions of Property—All of the Principal's Land.—But an authority to sell all of the land belonging to the principal is good without a particular description of the property. Roper v. McFadden, 48 Cal. 346; Munger v. Baldrige, 41 Kan. 236, 13 Am. St. Rep. 273.

Three Certain Lots in the Village of P.—A power of attorney to sell "three certain lots of land in the village of P. in said county of O. belonging to me," was held sufficiently precise to support sales from three tracts, two of forty acres each, and one of eighty, lying within an unincorporated settlement called the village of P., but all belonging to the person who gave the power, who could not repudiate this construction after taking the benefit of the sales. Any ambiguity which might arise from the previous platting of one of the tracts into smaller lots was said to be latent merely, and might be removed by parol evidence. Vaughn v. Sheridan, 50 Mich. 155.

Power Silent as to Subject Matter to be Conveyed.—And a power "to bargain, sell, grant, release, and convey," which was silent as to what the attorney was to sell or convey, was held sufficiently broad to authorize him to sell and convey whatever estate the grantor might then own. Marr v. Given, 23 Me. 55, 39 Am. Dec. 600. But in such a case it must appear with certainty that a power to convey land was intended. Gee v. Bolton, 17 Wis. 604.

After-acquired Land.—A power to sell real estate generally, authorizes a sale of after-acquired land.¹

(3) Must be in Manner Authorized.—The agent must sell in the manner prescribed by his power² and for the price limited.³

(4) When may Receive Payment.—An agent empowered under seal to sell and convey for cash may receive the purchase money, or so much thereof as is to be paid in hand at the time of the sale, or in payments to be made prior to the execution of the conveyance.⁴ But an agent empowered by parol to sell

Half a Lot of Land.—A power of attorney authorizing the sale of the half of a lot of land, without specifying which half, or whether the sale is to be one half in severalty or an undivided one half, empowers the agent to sell half of the lot in severalty, exercising his own discretion as to which half. Aleman v. Daly, 36 Cal. 90.

General Power by Two, Conveyance of Property of One.—A power of attorney to sell and convey real property, given by a husband and his wife, in general terms, without any provision against a sale of the interest of either separately, or other circumstance restraining the authority of the attorney in that respect, authorizes a conveyance by the attorney of the interest of the husband by a deed executed in his name alone. Holladay v. Daily, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 606. But a power to sell made by two jointly, without mention of the separate property or business of either, gives no authority to sell land owned solely by one and in which the other has no interest. Gilbert v. How, 45 Minn. 121.

Indefiniteness Cured by Deed.—Indefiniteness of the description of property in a power of attorney is cured by definiteness of description in the deed executed by virtue of the power. Valentine v. Hawley, 37 La. Ann. 303.

1. Fay v. Winchester, 4 Met. (Mass.) 513; Bigelow v. Livingston, 28 Minn. 57; Berkey v. Judd, 22 Minn. 287; Benschoter v. Lalk, 24 Neb. 251; Benschoter v. Atkins, 25 Neb. 645.

Power to Buy and Sell Authorizes Sale Only of Property Bought under Power.—Where the power given the attorney was "to buy and sell real estate, and in my name to receive and execute all necessary contracts and conveyances therefor; and further, to do all things necessary to the transaction of a general mercantile, trading, money-lending, and other lawful and proper business," it was held not to authorize him to sell and convey lands to which the principal acquired title before the execution of the power, but rather that it was the intention of the parties to authorize him to sell and convey such lands only as he should buy under the power. Greve v. Coffin, 14 Minn. 345, 100 Am. Dec. 229.

Conveyance of Land Mortgaged to Principal.—Where the authority to sell is limited to property owned by the principal at the time of the execution of the power, a deed subsequently made to land which the principal then owned, but in which his only interest at the time of the execution of the power was that of a mortgagee, does not convey a perfect title. Turner v. McDonald, 76 Cal. 177.

To Sell Land Not Previously Sold.—An agent empowered to sell and convey all of certain land not before sold and conveyed, may convey a parcel previously sold but not conveyed by the principal. Mitchell v. Maupin, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 188.

2. Siebold v. Davis, 67 Iowa 560.

A Sale on Different Terms from those authorized, though more favorable to the principal, does not bind him. Dayton v. Buford, 18 Minn. 126; Thornton v. Boyden, 31 Ill. 200.

Authority for Written Contract does Not Authorize Parol.—If authorized to enter into written contracts of sale, he cannot enter into a parol agreement to sell. Baring v. Peirce, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 548, 40 Am. Dec. 534.

Directions as to Time of Payments.—An agent authorized to sell and make the payments payable in three years cannot make them payable "on or before" three years. Jackson v. Badger, 35 Minn. 52. Nor, when authorized to make them payable in one, two, and three years, can he make them payable "on or before" those dates. Dana v. Turley, 38 Minn. 106; Monson v. Kill, 144 Ill. 248, affirming 44 Ill. App. 306. But where authorized to make one half payable "on or before" one year, he may make it payable "in one year." Deakin v. Underwood, 37 Minn. 98, 5 Am. St. Rep. 827. And if authorized to sell for "about one half cash," he may sell and contract for the entire price to be paid in cash on delivery of the deed. Witherell v. Murphy, 147 Mass. 417. But see Everman v. Herndon, 71 Miss. 823. If authorized to sell for one half cash, he cannot bind the principal by a sale on ninety days' time. Monson v. Kill, 144 Ill. 248.

Power to Sell Whole—Sale of Part.—Where the agent disobeys positive instructions and undertakes to sell a portion of the property instead of the whole, specific performance will not be decreed against the principal. Davis v. Gordon, 87 Va. 559, 15 Va. L. J. 241.

3. An agent to sell for a specified sum cannot sell for less. Bush v. Cole, 28 N. Y. 261, 84 Am. Dec. 343; Holbrook v. McCarthy, 61 Cal. 216.

4. Peck v. Harriott, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 146, 9 Am. Dec. 415. See Morrill v. Cone, 22 How. (U. S.) 81; Mann v. Robinson, 19 W. Va. 55, 42 Am. Rep. 771; Dyer v. Duffy, 39 W. Va. 148; Farquharson v. Williamson, 1 Grant Ch. (Can.) 93.

Agent Empowered to Sell and Convey on Terms within His Discretion.—An agent empowered under seal to sell and convey upon such terms as to him seem meet may make the sale either for cash or on credit, and in either case receive the purchase money. Carson v. Smith, 5 Minn. 78, 77 Am. Dec. 539.

land—that is, to contract for its sale—or empowered under seal merely to contract for sale, has no power to receive the purchase money.¹

(5) When may Sell on Credit.—Whether or not the agent may sell on credit depends very largely upon the wording of his power.² Where it is silent upon the subject, the agent is authorized to sell upon such terms as are usual and customary;³ where he is expressly authorized to sell on credit, the credit must be reasonable.⁴

1. Mann v. Robinson, 19 W. Va. 55, 42 Am. Rep. 771; Dyer v. Duffy, 39 W. Va. 148. See Minn v. Joliffe, 1 Moo. & R. 327; Ireland v. Thomson, 4 C. B. 149, 56 E. C. L. 149; Johnson v. Craig, 21 Ark. 533; 1 Sugden on Vendors (8th Am. ed.) 70.

Authorities Contra Examined.—In Yerby v. Grigsby, 9 Leigh (Va.) 387, the head-note of the case states it to have been decided that an agent to contract for the sale of land has authority to receive so much of the purchase money as is paid in hand, and this head-note, although unsupported by the opinion or decree (see the comments of the court upon this case in Mann v. Robinson, 19 W. Va. 49, 42 Am. Rep. 771), has been made the basis of obiter statements of doctrine. Thus, in Alexander v. Jones, 64 Iowa 207, the same rule was laid down, citing Yerby v. Grigsby, 9 Leigh (Va.) 387; Johnson v. McGruder, 15 Mo. 365; Higgins v. Moore, 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 344; Goodale v. Wheeler, 11 N. H. 424; Hoskins v. Johnson, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 469; Story on Agency, § 58.

These authorities do not support the proposition announced. Higgins v. Moore, 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 344, and Hoskins v. Johnson, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 469, are cases of agencies to sell personal property.

Johnson v. McGruder, 15 Mo. 365, was a case where the agent was authorized to sell the land and loan the purchase money, and the court, while expressly declaring that the general implied powers of an agent employed to make a contract for the sale of land were not involved in the case, held that the express power to loan clearly implied the power to receive the purchase money.

Goodale v. Wheeler, 11 N. H. 424, decided only that a committee appointed by a town meeting to sell at auction certain real estate belonging to the town, had authority to prescribe that a certain deposit should be made by the purchaser at the time of the sale, to be forfeited to the town if the purchaser should not complete the contract. The deposit was not in fact made.

Mr. Justice Story, in the passage cited from his work on Agency, states only the rule as regards agents to sell and convey, citing Peck v. Harriott, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 146, 9 Am. Dec. 415.

Not only do the authorities cited in Alexander v. Jones, 64 Iowa 207, not support the rule announced, but the point decided in that case does not call for so broad a statement of principle. It there appeared that the conveyance was signed by the principal living at a distance and forwarded to the agent, to be by him delivered to the purchaser. The actual decision here might well proceed upon the grounds of the decision in Johnson v. McGruder, 15 Mo. 365, namely, that from the powers expressly delegated, a power to receive the money was necessarily implied.

As is well pointed out by Green, J., in Mann v. Robinson, 19 W. Va. 49, 42 Am. Rep. 771, some of the seeming confusion in the cases upon this point is attributable to the ambiguity of the word "sell," a power to contract for sale, as well as a power to give a perfected conveyance, being loosely called a power to sell. See also, infra, this section, Powers Implied. It is also to be observed that in some of the cases general principles are announced without regard to the form of the power as under seal or simply by parol.

An Attorney Employed to Obtain Authority to Sell Realty is not, by force of such an employment, authorized to receive the purchase money offered for the estate sold. Nolan v. Jackson, 16 Ill. 272.

2. Where the agent was authorized to sell "on such terms as to him shall seem meet," he was held authorized to sell on credit. Carson v. Smith, 5 Minn. 78, 77 Am. Dec. 539. And see Morrill v. Cone, 22 How. (U. S.) 80; Silverman v. Bullock, 98 Ill. 11; Etheridge v. Binney, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 272; Rundle v. Cutting, 18 Colo. 337. See, as to a power of attorney held insufficient to authorize an agent to sell lands on credit, Rodburn v. Swinney, 16 Can. Supreme Ct. 297.

3. Where a power of attorney for the sale of land is general, containing no limitation upon the attorney and no directions whether the sale shall be for cash or on time, it is in the discretion of the attorney to make sales according to the usual custom in such matters, and a sale on credit made in good faith by such attorney will be upheld. Silverman v. Bullock, 98 Ill. 11.

It has, however, been stated by respectable text writers that unless there is some language in the power of attorney justifying the inference that other than cash sales were contemplated by the parties, a power to sell imports that the sale is to be for cash. Devlin on Deeds, § 370. See also Dyer v. Duffy, 39 W. Va. 148, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 360; Riley v. Wheeler, 44 Vt. 189.

It was held in Henderson v. Beard, 51 Ark. 483, that where an agent is simply authorized to sell land, he has no authority to sell it on credit, without retaining a lien by contract for the security of the purchase money, and his agreement to make such unauthorized sale, although in writing, will not bind his principal.

4. The discretion of the agent in such case is not unlimited, but, is subject to the condition that the credit must be reasonable and such as is usual and customary in sales of real estate in his vicinity. Brown v. Central Land Co., 42 Cal. 257.

(6) Authority Not Extended by Construction.—The rule requiring powers of attorney to be strictly construed¹ prevents any extension of the power beyond what is legitimately necessary to carry the particular power into effect.² Hence a power of attorney to sell land does not authorize a mortgage by the agent.³ Nor can he dedicate a portion of it to the public for a highway or other use,⁴ nor make a partition of lands of which the principal is a tenant in common.⁵ Nor can an agent to rent or sell bind his principal by agreeing to a change of boundary.⁶ Nor, if specially authorized to sell at a fixed price, has he authority to give an option on it.⁷

(7) Powers Implied — To Execute Conveyances—Power to Sell Authorizes Conveyance.—As we have seen, every power carries with it authority to do whatever is necessary to carry into effect the principal power,⁸ and hence an agent empowered under seal to sell real estate is, unless his authority is otherwise limited, authorized to execute the proper instruments required by law to carry the sale into effect.⁹

2. Wood v. Goodridge, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 117, 52 Am. Dec. 771.

Waste—License to Cut Timber.—An agent authorized to bargain and sell lands has no right, under such power, to grant a license to a proposed purchaser, previous to a conveyance, to enter and cut timber, although such license be given with a bona fide intent to effect a sale of the lands. Hubbard v. Elmer, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 446, 22 Am. Dec. 590.

Agreement to Pay Taxes.—An agent to sell land for a specific sum has no power to bind his principal by a sale for a less sum and an agreement to pay taxes. Holbrook v. McCarthy, 61 Cal. 216.

3. Haldenby v. Spofforth, 1 Beav. 390; Stroughill v. Anstey, 1 De. G., M. & G. 635; Wood v. Goodridge, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 117, 52 Am. Dec. 771; Morris v. Watson, 15 Minn. 212; Albany F. Ins. Co. v. Bay, 4 N. Y. 9; Bloomer v. Waldron, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 367.

There can be no implication, from the principal authorizing a sale of his land, that he intends to allow the agent to charge him at his discretion with the responsibilities and duties of a mortgagor. Jeffrey v. Hursh, 49 Mich. 31.

A power of attorney authorizing the attorney, in the name of the principal, to buy and sell real property, and to execute and deliver deeds to transfer the same; to move and institute all necessary suits for the recovery and collection of his demands, and to assert and vindicate his rights, and to appear and defend in all suits against him; especially to carry on his saw-mill and buy and sell logs, timber, and lumber, and do all necessary things in and about the same; and, in general, to make such contracts, for the profitable improvement and use of such property and other means as he possessed, for the enlargement of his estate, does not authorize the attorney to mortgage the real estate of his principal, unless there is evidence that such power is necessary to the execution of the authority given. Wood v. Goodridge, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 117, 52 Am. Dec. 771. See also the title POWERS.

Nor Discharge or Foreclose Mortgage.—Nor can an agent to sell, discharge a mortgage. Barger v. Miller, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 280; nor foreclose a mortgage taken to secure deferred payments. Aultman v. Jones, 1 Woolw. (U. S.) 99.

Some Old Cases affirm the doctrine that a power of sale includes the power to mortgage. Mills v. Banks, 3 P. Wms. 9; Williams v. Woodward, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 492.

It has been held that if a mortgage is given under a general power to sell, as a part of the same transaction with the conveyance creating the power to sell, and for the purpose of securing the payment of the purchase money, it is valid. Coutant v. Servoss, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 128.

4. Gosselin v. Chicago, 103 Ill. 623.

Unless such authority is expressly authorized or necessarily incident. Wirt v. McEnery, 21 Fed. Rep. 233.

But an agent authorized to purchase a town site and lay out a town has implied authority to lay out streets and dedicate them to the use of the public. Barreau v. West, 23 Wis. 416.

And so, it has been held, has an agent authorized to "lay out" the grounds of the principal in order to dispose of them. State v. Atherton, 16 N. H. 203.

Smith v. Tate, 82 Va. 657.

A power to sell and convey property implies a power to deliver possession. Indiana Cent. Canal Co. v. State, 53 Ind. 575.

Employment of Counsel.—The agent may employ counsel so far as may be necessary to prepare such instruments as he is authorized to execute, but he is not authorized to employ and advise with counsel relative to the principal's interests. Harrett v. Garvey, 36 N. Y. Super. Ct. 327.

9. Hemstreet v. Burdick, 90 Ill. 444; Valentine v. Piper, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 85, 33 Am. Dec. 715; Farnham v. Thompson, 34 Minn. 315. And see Yale v. Eames, 1 Met. (Mass.) 486; Burrill v. Nahant Bank, 2 Met. (Mass.) 163; Plummer v. Buck, 16 Neb. 322; Benschoter v. Lalk, 24 Neb. 251; Delano v.

Power Not under Seal.—Where the instrument is insufficient, for want of a seal, to enable the agent to convey, he may bind his principal by an executory contract to convey.¹

Jacoby, 96 Cal. 275, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 360.

Power to Convey Incident to Power to Sell.—Where the terms "sale" or "to sell" are used in the ordinary sense, and the general tenor and effect of the instrument is to confer a power to dispose of real estate, the authority to execute the proper instruments required by law to carry such sale into effect is necessarily incident. Farnham v. Thompson, 34 Minn. 335.

Meaning of "To Sell" Includes Completion by Conveyance.—In Hemstreet v. Burdick, 90 Ill. 449, Walker, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The whole question turns on the meaning that shall be given to the word 'sell.' Its popular meaning, we think, clearly embraces the power to contract to sell, and to convey or transfer the thing sold. To complete the sale, there must be a transfer of the title as well as the thing sold. When the term is applied to personal property, there is no doubt it embraces the delivery as well as the bargain for the sale—that it, in such cases, means the bargain for the sale, the receipt of the purchase money, and the delivery of possession, by which the sale is completed and the title vested in the purchaser. So, in regard to real estate, the word 'sell' in its popular sense implies the contract and its completion by conveyance."

Power to Sell and Convey—Conveyance without Sale.—A power to "sell and convey" land, which shows that it is for the purpose of transferring title to an association for certain purposes, authorizes a conveyance, although the agent does not sell. Hull v. Glover, 126 Ill. 122.

Powers Insufficient to Authorize Conveyance.—But a power of attorney may be so drawn as to authorize the attorney to negotiate for the sale of an estate, leaving it to the constituent afterwards to ratify it and to execute deeds. Should it appear, either from the restricted words used or from the tenor of the whole instrument, that such was the intent, it ought to be construed as conferring such a restricted power only. Valentine v. Piper, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 92, 33 Am. Dec. 715. And see Dworak v. More, 25 Neb. 735.

Though insufficient to authorize a conveyance by the agent, a power may yet authorize a bond, in the name of the principal, to make a sufficient title. Vanada v. Hopkins, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 285, 19 Am. Dec. 92.

Power of Sale in Mortgage.—A power of sale in a mortgage authorizing the mortgagee to sell the premises upon default of payment, it is well settled, includes the power to execute a conveyance to the purchaser. Fogarty v. Sawyer, 17 Cal. 589.

Sale by Sheriff.—And the authority to sell lands, conferred by a writ in the hands of a sheriff, carries with it authority to execute all the instruments required by law to complete the sale. People v. Boring, 8 Cal., 406, 68 Am. Dec. 331.

Quitclaim Deed of Lands Not Owned.—A power to sell one's real estate authorizes a quitclaim deed of land which may not have been owned by the person giving the power. Alexander v. Goodwin, 20 Neb. 216.

Trust Deeds.—An authority to an attorney for and in the name of his principal to transact all business, to collect and receipt for all moneys, "and to sell and dispose of all property, real and personal, for such price and on such terms as he may choose, whenever he may think it advisable," authorizes the attorney to execute a deed to a trustee of all the property of the principal in trust to secure and pay off the debts of the latter. Lamy v. Burr, 36 Mo. 85, 88 Am. Dec. 135.

But a power to sell does not authorize the execution of a deed of trust with power of sale in the trustees. Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 524.

Deed with Preference.—Where an attorney who had power to convey land for the payment of debts had executed a deed in trust to secure certain specified creditors and to pay all the debts of the principal, inserting a provision excluding from the benefit of the instrument all creditors who should bring suits for their claims, it was held that the provisions of the instrument involving preference of certain creditors and forfeiture of certain claims were in excess of the authority conferred, although the deed was valid in other respects. Gimell v. Adams, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 283.

Power to Sell Lands does Not Imply Power of Exchange.—A power of attorney from a married woman to her husband authorizing him to sell her lands does not authorize him to exchange such lands for others or to bind her to pay off incumbrances on the land received in exchange. McMichael v. Wilkie, 18 Ont. App. Rep. 464, reversing 19 Ont. Rep. 739.

Or to Grant License.—An agent authorized to bargain and sell lands has no right under such power to grant a license to the purchaser, previous to a conveyance, to enter and cut timber, although such license be given with a bona fide intent to effect the sale of the lands. Hubbard v. Elmer, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 446, 22 Am. Dec. 590.

Where an agent whose authority is by parol has the power to sell real estate, he has the authority to sign an agreement in his principal's name and to bind him thereby. Smith v. Allen, 86 Mo. 178; Haydock v. Stow, 40 N. Y. 363. See also Ledbetter v. Walker, 31 Ala. 175; Remington v. Palmer, 62 N. Y. 31, reversing 1 Hun (N. Y.) 619.

Authority of Real Estate Agent.—A general authority to a real estate agent to sell real property is only an authority to find a pur-

Warranties and Representations.—A power without restrictions to sell and convey real estate gives authority to the agent to bind the principal by a covenant of general warranty inserted in the deed, where, under the circumstances, this is the common and usual mode of assurance.¹ But it has been held that an agent to sell land is not necessarily empowered to bind his principal by representations as to the quality or title of the land.²

c. TO SELL PERSONALTY—(1) Must Act within Authority.—An agent to sell personal property must act within his authority,³ and sell, in the absence chaser, and not to conclude and execute a contract binding on his principal. Ryon v. McGee, 2 Mackey (D. C.) 17; Hamilton v. Cutts, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 208; Armstrong v. Lowe, 76 Cal. 616; Morris v. Ruddy, 20 N. J. Eq. 236. See also Ryan v. Sing, 7 Ont. Rep. 266; and the title BROKERS.

1. LeRoy v. Beard, 8 How. (U. S.) 451; Taggart v. Stanbery, 2 McLean (U. S.) 549; Vanada v. Hopkins, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 285, 19 Am. Dec. 92; Bronson v. Coffin, 118 Mass. 156; Ward v. Bartholomew, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 409; Backman v. Charlestown, 42 N. H. 125; Schultz v. Griffin, 121 N. Y. 294, 18 Am. St. Rep. 825; Peters v. Farnsworth, 15 Vt. 155, 40 Am. Dec. 671; California Civ. Code, § 2324; Taylor v. Gardiner, 8 Manitoba 310.

Illustrations.—It was so held, where the power authorized a conveyance to be made in as full and ample a manner as the principal could execute. Taggart v. Stanbery, 2 McLean (U. S.) 543. And also where the agent was empowered to execute conveyances to transfer the title "as sufficiently in all respects, as we ourselves could do personally in the premises * * * on such terms, in all respects, as he may deem most eligible," especially where it was the usage of the country to insert such covenants. LeRoy v. Beard, 8 How. (U. S.) 466. And also where the agent was authorized "to do and perform all such acts and things for perfecting such sale or sales thereof, or any part thereof, as shall be requisite and necessary in that behalf." Peters v. Farnsworth, 15 Vt. 155, 40 Am. Dec. 671.

Authorities Contra.—In Nixon v. Hyserott, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 58, it was held that a special authority to convey implies no authority to convey with warranty or personal covenants, since the conveyance is perfectly good without either. This case was disapproved in several of the cases cited above in this note, and the Court of Appeals of New York, in Schultz v. Griffin, 121 N. Y. 294, 18 Am. St. Rep. 825, declared that it was opposed to the weight of authority, and after noting that the early New York cases holding that an agent to sell personal property has no power to warrant title, have been overruled, remarked that there seemed to be no distinction requiring a different construction of an agency for sale in the cases of real and personal property. The actual decision in this case, however, went off upon another point.

A decision similar to Nixon v. Hyserott, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 58, has been made in New Jersey. Howe v. Harrington, 18 N. J. Eq. 495.

In Bronson v. Coffin, 118 Mass. 156, Morton, J., delivering the opinion of the court, expressed a doubt whether a mere naked power to sell would give the attorney authority to bind the principal by any covenant, but the power construed in that case was considered to be broader than a mere power to sell.

Where land was conveyed by husband and wife, without covenants or warranty, to an agent, to be by him sold for the wife's benefit, the agent was held to have no power to make covenants binding on her, much less to engage in litigation, or buy in outstanding titles to extinguish liens, without her request. Yazel v. Palmer, 88 Ill. 597.

And where an agent authorized to sell land, subject to a lease, made a written contract of sale to the plaintiff, by which he assumed to bind his principal to convey the land "in fee simple, and with a perfect title free from all encumbrances," it was held that the contract was unauthorized, and not enforceable. Thomas v. Joslin, 30 Minn. 388.

2. Representations as to Quantity or Quality.—But an agent with a restricted power to sell land at a given price has no authority to bind his principal by any representations as to the quantity or quality of the land. National Iron Armor Co. v. Bruner, 19 N. J. Eq. 331.

Representations as to Title.—Nor has he authority to make such representations in regard to title as will bind the principal. Tondro v. Cushman, 5 Wis. 279.

Representations as to Location.—But the principal is responsible for a false representation as to its location, if the purchaser has no opportunity of seeing the land, and also for a misrepresentation as to its cost. Sandford v. Handy, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 260.

3. An Agency for Selling Logs after their arrival in the market does not show authority in respect to operating in the woods or driving logs. Stratton v. Todd, 82 Me. 149.

To Work and Develop Patents.—A sole agent for the United States for the purpose of working and developing the business of certain patents, with power to negotiate their sale on terms to be agreed upon, has no authority to make an absolute sale without the concurrence of the principal, although the sale is made upon the royalty specified to be reserved. Johnson Railroad Signal Co. v. Union Switch, etc., Co., 51 Fed. Rep. 85.

Price.—An agent authorized to sell only at list price cannot bind his principal by an agreement to give a rebate of ten per cent. Taylor Mfg. Co. v. Brown (Tex. App., 1889), 14 S. W. Rep. 1071.

But a general salesman has been held to have implied authority to fix the prices and terms upon a sale. Stirn v. Hoffman House of special instructions, in the usual manner.¹ Where, however, the manner of sale is specified in the agent's authority, the specifications must of course be followed.²

Powers Implied.—In sales of personalty, as in other transactions, an agent has implied authority to do whatever is usual and necessary in such transactions.³

May Sell by Sample.—It has been held that when unrestricted as to the manner of sale the agent may sell by sample.⁴

Sale for Future Delivery.—And a general agent for the sale of the entire product of a manufacturing corporation may contract for the sale of the future product of the corporation.⁵

May Sell on Approval.—The agent, if unrestricted, may sell on approval, with the privilege of returning if not satisfactory.⁶

Co., 8 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 246; Flanders v. Putney, 58 N. H. 358.

Authority to Sell does Not Imply Power to Execute Chattel Mortgage.—Where W. sold a colt to S., and S. subsequently, while the colt was still in W.'s possession, gave W. authority to sell the colt, and W., instead of selling the colt, mortgaged it in his own name to a third person, it was held that the mortgage was void. A power to sell does not authorize an agent to execute a chattel mortgage. Switzer v. Wilvers, 24 Kan. 384, 36 Am. Rep. 259.

Sale of Less than Quantity Authorized.—A principal intrusting an agent with corporate stock for sale cannot object to his selling less than the whole number of shares, where the action is a positive benefit to him, and there was no direction to sell the whole or none. Ulster County Sav. Inst. v. New York Fourth Nat. Bank (Supreme Ct.), 8 N. Y. Supp. 162.

But a written contract to sell a team, wagon, and harness for three hundred and fifty dollars, does not authorize the sale of a part, nor does it justify sale of a part for advances, and sale of the balance under legal process for expenses. Henry v. Buckner, 13 Colo. 18.

Sale of Goods out of Stock.—An agent sent out to sell goods to be manufactured or which are in stock has no ostensible authority to sell goods of an old pattern which the principal has ceased to manufacture and does not carry in stock and which he can only manufacture at a loss. McCord, etc., Furniture Co. v. Wollpert, 89 Cal. 271.

1. An agent must sell in the usual manner, and cannot bind the principal by a sale at auction. Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195.

Goods of Different Principals Sold in Lump.—An agent of two unconnected and independent principals cannot bind them by the sale of the goods of both, differing in kind, in one lot, for a simple lump price, not susceptible of a ratable apportionment except by the mere arbitrary will of the agent. Cameron v. Paxton, 15 Can. Supreme Ct. 622.

Nor have commercial agents a right to sell merchandise of their principals as part of a lot with other goods, the principals having never agreed to be bound by any sales not made separately. Coe v. Nash, 28 Mich. 259.

Sale to Himself.—An agent having authority to sell may purchase from himself; and such purchase will be valid, except as against the principal, who may set it aside within a reasonable time. Eastern Bank v. Taylor, 41 Ala. 93. See also Walker v. Palmer, 24 Ala. 358; and infra, this title, Duties and Liabilities Inter Se.

2. Nester v. Craig, 69 Hun (N. Y.) 543.

If instructed to sell publicly at auction, the principal will not be bound by private sale, The G. H. Montague, 4 Blatchf. (U. S.) 461; although the price received is greater than the price fixed for the sale at auction. See Jaques v. Todd, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 91.

3. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Snell, 23 Ill. App. 79; Hayner v. Churchill, 29 Mo. App. 676. See supra, this section, Powers Prima Facie Incident to Every Authority.

Illustrations.—An agent selling furnaces for a specific use, to be shipped in detached parts, has implied authority to contract for putting them together and putting them into the buildings in which they are to be used. Boyn-ton Furnace Co. v. Clark, 42 Minn. 335.

But an agent having possession of stock for sale has no implied authority to dispose of a previously declared dividend. Wheeler v. Northwestern Sleigh Co., 39 Fed. Rep. 347.

Cannot Advertise Business.—The agent of a brewery employed for the purpose of selling beer, collecting bills, and representing it before the excise board, has no authority to contract for the advertisement of the business. Tarpy v. Bernheimer (C. Pl.), 16 N. Y. Supp. 870.

Cannot Pay Commissions to a Third Person.—An agent to sell has no implied power to bind his principal by an agreement to pay another commissions for making sales. Atlee v. Fink, 75 Mo. 100, 43 Am. Rep. 385.

4. Andrews v. Kneeland, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 354.

5. National Furnace Co. v. Keystone Mfg. Co., 110 Ill. 427.

But an agent authorized to sell his principal's sherry when manufactured, is not authorized to sell it before it is manufactured. Merriam v. De Turk, 66 Cal. 549.

6. Oster v. Mickley, 35 Minn. 245; Deering v. Thom, 29 Minn. 120.

Sales on Approval.—An agent intrusted with harvesters to sell may give a reasonable opportunity to try the machine, and make a contract to take effect as a sale if it prove satisfactory. McCormick v. Kelly, 28 Minn. 135; Murray v. Brooks, 41 Iowa 45; Boothby v.

(2) When can Sell on Credit.—The agent cannot sell on credit unless specially authorized or unless such is the usage of trade;¹ and custom controls the period as well as the fact of the credit.²

(3) May Give Exclusive Right to Sell.—It has been held that it is within the apparent scope of the authority of a general agent to agree with the purchaser not to sell his principal's goods to any others in the same town.³

(4) Guaranty to Maintain Price.—The agent has no authority to guarantee a purchaser that his principal will not sell the same goods to others for a less price.⁴

(5) Power to Warrant.—The power of an agent employed to sell personal property, to bind his principal by warranties, depends upon various considerations, such as the character of the warranty, whether express or implied, the nature of the agency, whether general or special, the usages of trade, and the circumstances of the transaction itself, as being by sample or otherwise.⁵

(6) Power to Receive Payment ⁶—General Rule.—Where the principal has clothed the agent with the indicia of authority to receive payment, as by entrusting him with the possession of the goods to be sold, the purchaser is warranted in paying the price to the agent at the time of the sale.⁷ But when Scales, 27 Wis. 626; The Monte Allegre, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 616.

Where one having general authority to solicit orders for plaster busts, but no authority to guarantee satisfaction, took an order with the understanding that the party ordering would not be obliged to accept it if not satisfied, and the bust was refused as unsatisfactory, it was held that the general authority of the agent would seem to be sufficient to enter into such a contract; still, if the authority was not sufficient, the result would be that there was no special contract; and as the defendant had not accepted the bust, there was no sale. Zaleski v. Clark, 44 Conn. 218, 26 Am. Rep. 446.

May Waive Return or Notice.—Authority to sell threshing-machines on trial, to be returned if not satisfactory, empowers the agent to waive such return. Pitsinowsky v. Beardsley, 37 Iowa 9; Gaar v. Rose, 3 Ind. App. 269; Warder v. Robertson, 75 Iowa 585; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Brower, 88 Iowa 607. And he may also waive a condition requiring notice to be given of the failure of the machine. Acker v. Kimmie, 37 Kan. 276; Heilman Mach. Works v. Dollarhide, 32 Mo. App. 178.

And Give Further Time for Trial.—And give further reasonable time to fix up the machine and test it, and make it work satisfactorily. Bannon v. Aultman, 80 Wis. 307.

But see Bragg v. Bamberger, 23 Ind. 198, where it was held that when a contract of warranty of a machine provides that, if it does not correspond with the warranty, it shall be returned to the vendor or his agent at a specified place, and states that no agent is authorized to make any representations or warranty beyond the terms of the contract, an agent has no authority to release the vendee from the performance of the agreement to return the machine as provided in the contract, upon its failure to correspond with the terms of the contract.

As to authority of commission merchants and factors to sell on credit, see the title COMMISSION MERCHANTS OR FACTORS.

Credit Authorized by Custom.—As a general rule, an agent for sale must sell for cash, unless he has an express authority to sell upon credit; but such authority may be implied where, from the general usage of the trade in which he is employed, it is a custom to sell on credit. Illinois v. Delafield, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 527; on appeal, Delafield v. Illinois, 26 Wend. 192. See White v. Fuller, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 267; Cowan v. Adams, 10 Me. 374, 25 Am. Dec. 242.

the agent has not the possession of the goods, and no other indicia of authority, and is only authorized to sell, the purchaser pays the agent at his peril, and it devolves upon him to show that the agent was authorized to receive payment.¹

Sales on Credit.—An agent selling on credit has no implied authority to subsequently collect the price,² unless the principal has held him out to third persons as having authority to receive payments.³

Rep. 577; Butler v. Dorman, 68 Mo. 298, 30 Am. Rep. 795; Hoskins v. Johnson, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 469; Cross v. Haskins, 13 Vt. 536. And see Taylor v. Nussbaum, 2 Duer (N. Y.) 302; Seiple v. Irwin, 30 Pa. St. 515.

The Authority to Sell Personal Property for Cash would carry with it generally the power to receive the purchase money. Mann v. Robinson, 19 W. Va. 55, 42 Am. Rep. 771; Hackney v. Jones, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 612.

Power to Buy and Sell does Not Imply Power to Borrow on Principal's Credit.—Where an agent was employed for buying goods for the principal, and selling them at the principal's store, and written articles of agreement were drawn up, stipulating that the principal would furnish the capital, or authorize the agent to obtain credit on the principal's name, for the purchase of goods, to an amount not exceeding four thousand dollars; that all purchases should be in the name of the principal, and should not exceed, in cash down and on credit, the sum specified, unless by the express consent of the principal,—it was held that the agent was not authorized by said agreement to borrow money on the credit of the principal. Spooner v. Thompson, 48 Vt. 259.

Sale and Delivery by Agent.—Where the person contracting for the sale has the property in his possession and delivers it, he is clothed with the indicia of authority to receive payment, especially where the owner is unknown. He is then clothed with apparent authority, and that, as to third persons, is the real authority. Higgins v. Moore, 34 N. Y. 417; Rice v. Groffmann, 56 Mo. 434; Lumley v. Corbett, 18 Cal. 494; Capel v. Thornton, 3 C. & P. 352, 14 E. C. L. 343; Pickering v. Busk, 15 East 38.

Brokers and Commission Merchants.—As to the authority of brokers to receive payment, see the title BROKERS; of factors, see the title COMMISSION MERCHANTS OR FACTORS.

Authority to Sell and Collect Implies Authority to Deduct from Price.—An agent having a discretionary power to sell goods and collect the price has implied authority to make any deduction from the original price that could have been made by his principal. Taylor v. Nussbaum, 2 Duer (N. Y.) 302.

As to the powers of traveling salesmen and soliciting agents, see infra, this section.

Power to Make Contracts does Not Include Power to Collect.—The power of an agent to make contracts for his principal does not necessarily include the power to collect moneys due thereon. McKindly v. Dunham, 55 Wis. 515, 42 Am. Rep. 740. See Meyer v. Stone, 46 Ark. 210, 55 Am. Rep. 577.

Where goods ordered through an agent are sent direct to the purchaser accompanied by a bill, the latter is not authorized to pay the agent, in the absence of some other evidence of his authority to collect. Kornemann v. Monaghan, 24 Mich. 36.

Authority Proved by Course of Dealing.—But the authority of the agent to receive payment may be proved by the habit and course of dealing of the principal. Brooks v. Jameson, 55 Mo. 505; Rice v. Groffmann, 56 Mo. 434.

2. Clark v. Smith, 88 Ill. 298; Butler v. Dorman, 68 Mo. 298, 30 Am. Rep. 795; Law v. Stokes, 32 N. J. L. 249, 90 Am. Dec. 655; Seiple v. Irwin, 30 Pa. St. 513.

Agent Receiving Securities—when Authority to Collect Terminates.—Where an agent to sell receives securities for the purchase money and transmits them to his principal, his authority to receive payment on the securities ceases with his possession. Strachan v. Muxlow, 24 Wis. 21; Draper v. Rice, 56 Iowa 114, 41 Am. Rep. 88.

3. Doctrine of "Holding out" Applies.—Authority to receive payment may be shown by proof either that the agent was expressly authorized to receive and discharge debts, or that he was held out by the principal to the public or to the purchaser as having such authority. Law v. Stokes, 32 N. J. L. 249, 90 Am. Dec. 655. And see Packer v. Hinckley Locomotive Works, 122 Mass. 484; Estey v. Snyder, 76 Wis. 624.

Where an agent selling a machine for a company is permitted to transact business in behalf of the company with the knowledge of its controlling representatives, in such a manner that he is held out as an agent with general powers, the purchaser will be protected in subsequent payments made to him. Howe Mach. Co. v. Ballweg, 89 Ill. 318; Sumner v. Saunders, 51 Mo. 89; Brooks v. Jameson, 55 Mo. 505. And see Kasson v. Noltner, 43 Wis. 646.

Where an agent for the sale of safes sold a new one, taking an old one in part payment, and the principal accepted the old safe, and sent the new one to the purchaser without any notice to him that the agent had transcended his authority, the purchaser was held to have reason for supposing that the agent was authorized to receive payment; and that a payment to him was good as against the principal, if made without notice that he had no such authority. Harris v. Simmerman, 81 Ill. 413.

Sales over the Counter.—Where payments are made over the counter of the principal's store to a shopman accustomed to receive money there for his employer, authority to receive payment will be implied in favor of innocent persons.¹ But if a shopman authorized to receive money over the counter only, receives money elsewhere than in the shop, the payment is not good.²

Traveling Salesmen and Soliciting Agents.—Independent of a controlling usage to the contrary, a traveling salesman or agent merely to solicit orders for goods has no implied authority to receive payment therefor.³

Effect of Notice on Bill for Goods.—Where a notice is printed upon the bill sent the purchaser for the goods, that agents are not authorized to receive payment, the purchaser will be presumed to have seen it, and not to have done so is the grossest negligence,⁴ though some cases draw a distinction as to the prominence given to the notice, the size of the type in which it is printed, etc.⁵

But where a traveling agent took from a customer an order for goods, which he forwarded to his principals, who thereupon wrote the agent expressing an unwillingness to fill the order until a former account was settled, and adding that "they should like to draw upon him therefor," and the customer, upon seeing the letter, gave the agent his acceptance at three months, blank as to the name of the drawer, it was held that the payment of such acceptance at maturity to a third person who had become the holder was no defense to an action by the principals, although it was proved that on a previous occasion a similar bill drawn by the agent and accepted by the customer had been received by the plaintiffs as payment. Hogarth v. Wherley, L. R. 10 C. P. 630, 14 Moak 474.

In such case the principal, by his own act, gives to the agent an apparent authority to receive such payment. Law v. Stokes, 32 N. J. L. 252, 90 Am. Dec. 655. And see Hirshfeld v. Waldron, 54 Mich. 651; Davis v. Waterman, 10 Vt. 526, 33 Am. Dec. 216.

3. Clark v. Smith, 88 Ill. 298; Diversy v. Kellogg, 44 Ill. 114, 92 Am. Dec. 154; Abrahams v. Weiller, 87 Ill. 179; Clough v. Whitcomb, 105 Mass. 482; Kornemann v. Monaghan, 24 Mich. 36; Janney v. Boyd, 30 Minn. 319; Kohn v. Washer, 64 Tex. 131, 53 Am. Rep. 745.

Sale by Sample.—An agent selling by sample has no authority to receive payment. Simon v. Johnson (Ala., 1893), 101 Ala. 368, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 355; Butler v. Dorman, 68 Mo. 298, 30 Am. Rep. 795.

Order Given to Agent is Not Sale.—An order solicited by or given to an agent does not constitute a sale, either absolute or conditional, but is a mere proposal to be accepted or not, as the principal may see fit. McKindly v. Dunham, 55 Wis. 515, 42 Am. Rep. 740. See also Deane v. Everett, 90 Iowa 242.

Where an agent is merely employed to solicit orders, the orders being sent to the office of the principal, subject to his approval, this fact alone sufficiently shows that the agent has no authority to make collections, and a payment to him is no defense to an action by the principal to recover the purchase money. Greenhood v. Keator, 9 Ill. App. 183.

The employment of a canvassing agent for the sale of books by subscription confers no authority to receive payment for books sold but not delivered by him, nor in his possession. Chambers v. Short, 79 Mo. 204.

Usage.—But where such is the general and known usage, and has been recognized by the principal, such agent may receive payment. Meyer v. Stone, 46 Ark. 210, 55 Am. Rep. 577.

Contra.—There are a few cases laying down a doctrine at variance with the statements in the text, and holding payments to traveling salesmen to be valid. Trainer v. Morison, 78 Me. 160; Scott v. Hopkins (Supreme Ct.), 2 N. Y. St. Rep. 324; Hoskins v. Johnson, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 469; Collins v. Newton, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 269; Putnam v. French, 53 Vt. 403, 38 Am. Rep. 682. See Daylight Burner Co. v. Odlin, 51 N. H. 56, 12 Am. Rep. 45. See also Haughton v. Maurer, 55 Mich. 323.

Perhaps these cases are to be regarded as variations from the general rule due to the peculiar circumstances of the cases adjudicated and to the recognition of usage.

4. Notice on Bills for Merchandise.—In Law v. Stokes, 32 N. J. L. 249, 90 Am. Dec. 655, it is said that "not to have seen the directions in the billhead was the grossest negligence, and to permit a party to defend under the protection of his own carelessness would be to offer a premium for negligence and open the door to fraud, especially so when the party is himself bound to see to it that the person with whom he transacts business as an agent has the authority which he assumes."

The words "Agents not authorized to collect," stamped in large, legible print on the face of a bill sent to a purchaser of goods, will be presumed to have been observed by him, and whether he saw them or not is notice to him not to pay to an agent. McKindly v. Dunham, 55 Wis. 515, 42 Am. Rep. 740.

5. In Putnam v. French, 53 Vt. 402, 38 Am. Rep. 682, the words "Payable at office" were written on the bill rendered when the last invoice was sent, which the purchaser failed

(7) Powers of Traveling Salesmen—To Hire Horses.—An agent to travel about the country and sell goods has implied authority to hire horses when necessary to carry out the object of his agency.¹

Hotel Bills.—But he cannot bind his principal for hotel bills.²

To Sell Samples.—Nor has a traveling salesman authority to sell the samples furnished him to be exhibited while soliciting orders.³

d. *TO MORTGAGE*⁴—Power to Insert Usual Provisions Implied.—A power to the agent to mortgage goods is a power to insert in the mortgage the provisions which are usual in such instruments.⁵

to see, and it was held, in view of the obscure manner in which they were written on the billhead and the circumstances under which, and the purposes for which, in other respects, the bill was sent, and the terms of the contract as to when and where and to whom payment was to be made, that the purchaser was not guilty of such negligence in not seeing them as to be chargeable with notice which he did not in fact have.

A much stronger case is Trainer v. Morison, 78 Me. 160, where there were printed across the top of a bill, in red ink, the words, "All bills must be paid by check to our order or in current funds at our office." The purchaser did not see the notice, and it was held that, taking into consideration the care ordinarily exercised by prudent men, he was not at fault in not doing so. The court said it was "not so prominent upon the bill as to become a distinctive feature of it—one that would be likely to attract attention in the hurry of business, and that ought to have been seen by the defendants. It would have been an easy matter for the plaintiff to have enclosed the bill in a letter of advice calling the attention of the defendants to the fact that he was unwilling to intrust collections to his agent." And see Kinsman v. Kershaw, 119 Mass. 140, where it was held that in the absence of evidence that the defendant saw the words, "All moneys to be paid to the treasurer, and bills to be receipted by him," printed in fine type upon the billhead, there was evidence of payment to go to the jury.

1. Bentley v. Doggett, 51 Wis. 224, 37 Am. Rep. 827; Huntley v. Mathias, 90 N. Car. 101, 47 Am. Rep. 516, where the principal was held responsible for an injury to a horse hired by his traveling salesman. But see Howe Mach. Co. v. Ashley, 60 Ala. 496.

2. Sampson v. Singer Mfg. Co., 5 S. Car. 465, where it is said that "a contract binding the principal cannot be presumed from the mere fact that an agent has obtained lodging at a hotel while prosecuting the business of his principal, and while having in charge property belonging to such principal. The authority that the law presumes from the fact of an agency is measured by the direct objects contemplated by such agency, on the principle that one having power to perform an act and imposing its performance on another as a duty, or conferring it as a right, must be deemed, where requisite, to have communicated power so to act commensurate with the duty or rights imposed or conferred. Supplies afforded for the personal use of an agent are not among the objects presumed to be included in the agency, but if related to it at all, are merely collateral to it." And in Covington v. Newberger, 99 N. Car. 523, it was held that a drummer, a transient patron at a hotel, could not bind his principal for board furnished him from time to time through an extended period, it being the custom for transient patrons to pay cash.

Board of Horse.—Nor can an agent bind his principal for the board of a horse furnished him for use in the transaction of his business. Grover, etc., Sewing Mach. Co. v. Polhemus, 34 Mich. 247; Sampson v. Singer Mfg. Co., 5 S. Car. 465.

5. Interest Clause.—Where such a provision is not usual in mortgages, an agent has no power to insert in a mortgage that it shall become due at the option of the holder upon default of the payment of interest. Jesup v. City Bank, 14 Wis. 331.

Power of Sale.—A power to mortgage real estate authorizes a mortgage with power of sale in a jurisdiction where such a provision is ordinarily and usually inserted in mortgages. Wilson v. Troup, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 195, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 25, 14 Am. Dec. 458.

Attorney's Fees.—The insertion of a provision for the payment of attorney's fees in a mortgage has been held not authorized by usage nor implied in a general authority to mortgage as granted to an agent. Pacific Rolling Mill Co. v. Dayton, etc., R. Co., 7 Sawy. (U. S.) 61.

Agent Mortgaging for Third Person.—A general power to mortgage the property of the principal will not sustain a mortgage for the benefit of the agent or of a third person. Nippel v. Hammond, 4 Colo. 211; Wolfley v. Rising, 8 Kan. 297; Greenwood v. Spring, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 375.

Second Mortgage.—An authority to mortgage does not imply a power to give a second mortgage. Skaggs v. Murchison, 63 Tex. 348.

An Absolute Sale by an agent authorized only to execute a mortgage does not bind the principal unless ratified by him. Coppage v. Barnett, 34 Miss. 621.

Execution of Mortgage Note.—In Kansas it has been held that a power to mortgage does not include the power to execute a note in the name of the principal for the amount of the mortgage debt, inasmuch as the principal cannot be presumed to have intended to give the agent authority to bind him personally,

When Authority to Mortgage Not Implied.—Authority to mortgage will not be implied from a power to manage and take care of the property of the principal, unless such an authority is shown to be necessary for the execution of the authority given,¹ nor will it be implied from a power to sell.²

To Cancel Mortgage.—A power to cancel a mortgage must be strictly pursued.³

To Redeem from Mortgage.—Authority to redeem from a mortgage empowers the agent to pay any expenses necessarily incurred in enforcing the security.⁴

c. TO LEASE.—While an authority to execute a lease under seal must, of course, be given under seal,⁵ yet an agent appointed by parol may execute a written lease not under seal,⁶ or bind his principal by an executory contract to lease.⁷

Power to Lease Implied.—The power to lease, like any other power, may be implied from the general authority granted to an agent and the recognition of his acts by his principal.⁸

but must be presumed to have authorized him merely to procure money on the security of the land only. Mylius v. Copes, 23 Kan. 617.

In Texas, where an agent with power to mortgage, hypothecate, and create a lien upon all his principal's lands, borrowed a sum of money, for which he executed a note and secured it by a deed of trust, and the principal, upon suit being brought against him upon the note and to foreclose the mortgage, pleaded non est factum as to the note only, it was held that the note was properly admitted in evidence, inasmuch as it was authorized by the power, and the note and mortgage constituted but one transaction and cause of action, and the mortgage and its covenants would alone have enabled the plaintiff to maintain a suit and obtain judgment for his debt with a decree of foreclosure. Taylor v. Hudgins, 42 Tex. 244.

1. General Power does Not Authorize Mortgage.—Despatch Line of Packets v. Bellamy Mfg. Co., 12 N. H. 205, 37 Am. Dec. 203. A power of attorney authorizing an agent, in the name and for the benefit and use of his principal, to buy and sell real and personal property, and to execute and deliver deeds to transfer the same; to move and institute all necessary suits for the recovery and collection of his demands, and to assert and vindicate his rights, and to appear and defend in all suits against him; especially to carry on a sawmill, and buy and sell logs, timber, and lumber; and to do the necessary things in and about the same, and generally to make such contracts for the profitable improvement and use of such property and other means as he possessed, for the enlargement of his estate, does not authorize the agent to mortgage the real estate of his principal, unless such power is necessary to the execution of the authority given. Wood v. Goodrich, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 117, 52 Am. Dec. 771. See also State Bank v. Morley, 19 Wis. 62.

2. Jeffrey v. Hursh, 49 Mich. 31; Morris v. Watson, 15 Minn. 212. See also Stevens v. Cunningham, 3 Allen (Mass.) 491.

See supra, this section, To Sell Real Estate—Authority Not Extended by Construction; also the title POWERS.

3. A Power to Cancel a Mortgage and the notes secured thereby, and to take new notes and a new mortgage, does not authorize the cancellation without taking the renewals. Foster v. Paine, 56 Iowa 622.

Unauthorized Cancellation or Extension.—Such a cancellation is void as against a subsequent mortgagee who is charged by the record with notice of the terms and conditions on which the cancellation is authorized.

The agent cannot surrender the mortgage without payment or other consideration, Harrison v. Burlingame, 48 Hun (N. Y.) 212; nor extend the time of payment, Powell v. Henry, 96 Ala. 412.

Power of Foreclosure Not Implied.—A power to foreclose is not implied from a power to take a mortgage for deferred payments. Aultman v. Jones, 1 Woolw. (U. S.) 99.

4. Shutes v. Woodard, 57 Mich. 213.

5. See supra, this title, Appointment.

Authority to Lease Includes Authority to Contract for Lease.—An agent authorized to lease may bind his principal by an agreement to lease, and this without regard to the question whether the agent intended that the lease should be for his own benefit or that of his principal. Taylor v. Salmon, 4 Myl. & C. 138.

Undisclosed Principal.—A person put in possession of real estate by an agent of the owner without knowing who is the owner or for whom the agent acts, is a tenant of the owner. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. v. Cummings, 13 Mo. App. 76.

As to lease by agent on his own behalf see Ridgley v. De Bough, 83 Iowa 100.

6. Lake v. Campbell, 18 Ill. 109.

7. See Lawrence v. Taylor, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 107; Yerby v. Grigsby, 9 Leigh (Va.) 387. See also the title FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

8. Authority to Lease Implied.—Under a power of attorney authorizing the agent to sell, assign, transfer, trade, and dispose of the principal's lands, either for cash or in exchange for other property, and providing that the agency was to continue for ten months, and that the agent was to receive for his services one half of all he might make out of the property over a certain price, it was held that the agent had such a power, coupled with an interest, as gave him authority to rent lands which he had taken in exchange, at least until such time as he and his principal should

Agent to Lease—Scope of Powers.—An agent to lease cannot bind his principal by representations as to title,¹ nor by a surrender of the lease,² nor by stipulations having reference to the agent's own property.³

Lease for Unauthorized Period.—A lease for a period longer than is authorized by the agent's power has been held good pro tanto to the extent of the power.⁴

close their accounts. Hitchens v. Ricketts, 17 Ind. 625.

Where a general agent for the management of real estate for the owner executed a lease under seal and received some of the rent, though he had no written authority, and the principal then brought an action for subsequent instalments of the rent, it was held that a surrender of the lease to the agent and his acceptance thereof was a bar to the action, notwithstanding the agent's want of written authority to make the lease or accept the surrender. Amory v. Kannofsky, 117 Mass. 351, 19 Am. Rep. 416.

Authority to Renew Lease.—A school society owning a building called the academy, voted in 1824 that the control of such building should thenceforth be vested solely in a committee with power to lease it at their discretion to any person for the purpose of keeping a school. The committee leased the premises for five years, and after the expiration of that time by the authority of the same vote executed another lease to the same tenant for the term of five years from that time. It was held that the committee had authority under the vote of 1824 to make a second lease. Emerson v. Goodwin, 9 Conn. 423.

The Powers of the General Agent of the Owner of a Railroad are such as will warrant him in executing a lease of property to be used as a ticket-office for the road. Ecker v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 8 Mo. App. 223.

Evidence—Similar Acts.—Where the evidence as to the authority of an agent authorized to receive lands in exchange for certain lands of his principal was conflicting as to the right of the agent to rent the lands so received, it is competent to prove that the agent had acted for his principal in renting other lands taken by him in exchange under the power of attorney. Hitchens v. Ricketts, 17 Ind. 625. See Gillis v. Bailey, 17 N. H. 18.

Extent of Implied Authority Tested by Purpose of Lease.—The general agent of a corporation in charge of lands cannot, in virtue of his general authority to manage the affairs of the corporation, make a lease for the purpose of trying title to land upon which he has entered for condition broken under a vote of the corporation especially authorizing him to enter, but containing no provision empowering him to lease. The fact that he has been accustomed to lease land for the corporation for the purpose of obtaining rent, without objection to his acts, is not evidence of authority to make such a lease, because the power to make leases for rents being derived from the exercise thereof with the approbation of the principal is limited to the description of cases in which it has been exercised. Gillis v. Bailey, 17 N. H. 18.

Authority Not Implied.—A mere power to collect rent does not imply authority to make a new lease or change an existing one. Indianapolis Mfg., etc., Union v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 45 Ind. 281; Weil v. Zodiag, 34 La. Ann. 982; Davidson v. Blumor, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 205; Tryon v. Davis, 8 Wash. 106.

Authority to lease will not be inferred from the fact that the agent has given his own receipt for rent due or that he has previously rented the same property. Weil v. Zodiag, 34 La. Ann. 982.

Burden of Proof.—The person seeking to establish a lease from an agent must establish the agent's authority to lease for the term for which the property was rented to him. Weil v. Zodiag, 34 La. Ann. 982.

Contra—Authority must be Express.—In Howard v. Carpenter, 11 Md. 281, it is said that an attorney either at law or in fact has no authority either to make a lease or to ratify or confirm an imperfect one, or to perfect an inchoate agreement for the lease of property of his principal or client, unless authority for such purpose is expressly given. An examination of the facts of that case will show that the court did not have in mind, and did not intend to deny, the existence of such a power as necessarily incident to powers expressly granted.

1. Tondro v. Cushman, 5 Wis. 279.

2. Authority to create, convey, or assign a lease for a term of years does not authorize a surrender of it. Ramsay v. Wilkie (C. Pl.), 13 N. Y. Supp. 554.

3. Agent Leasing His Own Lands with Those of Principal.—A general agent to lease lands cannot, by leasing his own land with that of his principal, make his principal, without his knowledge or assent, a joint lessor of the agent's lands, so as to render the principal jointly liable with him upon the stipulations in the lease in reference to the agent's property as well as the principal's. LaPoint v. Scott, 36 Vt. 604.

An agent authorized to lease lands cannot bind the principal by his attempt to subject the rents to a lien for agricultural supplies advanced to the tenant. Loftin v. Crossland, 94 N. Car. 76.

Implied Powers of Agents to Take a Lease.—Authority to an agent to lease a house does not authorize him to covenant to repair or to rebuild. Halbut v. Forrest City, 34 Ark. 246.

Where A appointed B to take a lease for him to a tract of land lying in another state, and B accordingly took the lease, but the lessor, not being willing to trust A, required B to give his own note for the rent, which he did, and he afterwards paid it, it was held that this was an undertaking by B within the scope of his general authority, and that A was bound to reimburse him. Irions v. Cook, 11 Ired. (N. Car.) 203.

4. Alexander v. Alexander, 2 Ves. 644. But see Roe v. Prideaux, 10 East 158, where a distinction was taken between a general

f. TO PURCHASE—(1) Must Observe Authority.—An agent to purchase, in order to bind his principal, must observe his authority,¹ both as to the quantity² and the kind³ of goods purchased, and if instructed to purchase from a particular party he cannot bind his principal by a purchase from some one else.⁴

(2) To Purchase on Credit—Not Implied.—A mere agency to purchase does not imply authority to pledge the credit of the principal.⁵

power not specifying the kind of lease but adding a restriction to limit the extent of the lease, and a power particularizing the species of lease to be granted.

Agent for Life Tenant Granting Term.—The owner of a reversion acting as agent of the tenant for life demised the premises for a term of years by a letter signed by himself as agent, and the lessee knew that he was acting as such agent. It was held that the estate of the lessee ended with the death of the tenant for life, though the term of years had not expired. Page v. Wight, 14 Allen (Mass.) 182.

Oral Authority to Act during Principal's Absence.—Where an agent orally authorized by the landowner to take charge of the land while he was gone and make it pay the best he could gave a lease for three years, it was held that the lease was terminable by the landowner on his return. Antoni v. Belknap, 102 Mass. 193.

1. McAttee v. Perrine, 48 Ill. App. 548.

Cannot Transfer Title of Property Purchased.—The agent cannot transfer the goods purchased to secure the debts of parties with whom he has become connected, and the title remains in the principal in spite of such an attempted transfer on the part of an agent who has no real nor apparent authority to sell. Edwards v. Dooley, 120 N. Y. 540. See Fraser v. M'Pherson, 3 Desaus. Eq. (S. Car.) 393.

Cannot Purchase Jointly for Separate Principals.—An agent severally authorized by two corporations to make purchases for them has no authority to bind them jointly. Pacific Cable Construction Co. v. McNott, 2 Wash. 216.

Purchase at Higher Price.—An agent authorized to purchase one sixteenth part of a ship at forty dollars a ton does not bind his principal by purchasing two sixteenths at forty-four dollars per ton, one sixteenth being on his own account, unless subsequently ratified. Starbird v. Curtis, 43 Me. 352.

Agent to Complete Purchase.—An agent authorized to complete a purchase of land and receive the deed has no authority to add anything to the consideration named in the contract or attach any new condition to the delivery of the deed. Deering v. Starr, 118 N. Y. 665.

Authority of Station Agent.—A station agent has no authority to bind his company for the payment for timber. Butler v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 60 Mich. 83.

Parol Authority to Purchase will support a written contract. Welch v. Hoover, 5 Cranch (C. C.) 444.

2. An Agent Commissioned to Purchase a Certain Specific Amount is a special agent, and can no more purchase a smaller than a larger quantity of what he is commissioned to purchase. There may be cases where the purchase of a smaller quantity than that ordered would be deemed valid as an execution of the authority pro tanto, but such cases can only arise where an express or an implied discretion was committed to the agent in the exercise of his authority. Olyphant v. McNair, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 446.

Clerk Making out Order for Goods.—The act of a clerk, authorized by his employer, in filling up blanks in a printed order for the purchase of goods is binding on the employer, and the latter cannot defend a suit brought against him for the price of the goods, upon the ground that the clerk made a mistake and ordered more than he wanted, especially where there was nothing to show the plaintiff that the blanks were not filled and the order signed by the defendant in person. Shrimpton v. Brice (Ala., 1894), 15 So. Rep. 452, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 350.

3. Hopkins v. Blane, 1 Call (Va.) 361. See also Butterworth v. Shannon, 11 Ont. App. Rep. 86.

But of course the principal may be bound by the acts of the agent within his ostensible authority. Hill v. Miller, 76 N. Y. 32.

4. A letter of attorney authorizing an agent to purchase a certain steamship from B., and draw bills on the principal for such amounts and payable at such times as shall be agreed upon between them, does not authorize the purchase of the boat from other parties. Peckham v. Lyon, 4 McLean (U. S.) 45.

5. Berry v. Barnes, 23 Ark. 411; Indiana Bank v. Bugbee, 3 Keyes (N. Y.) 461. And see Eckart v. Roehm, 43 Minn. 271; Martin v. Peters, 4 Robt. (N. Y.) 434.

General Agent.—Where the agent is a general agent, it has been held that a limitation upon his authority to purchase on credit will not affect a vendor having no knowledge of such limitation. Liddell v. Sahline, 55 Ark. 627.

And it has been held that an authority to buy and sell, given in the most general terms, will, in the absence of any restriction, authorize the agent to buy for cash or on credit, as he may deem best, and to sell in the same way. Fradley v. Hyland, 37 Fed. Rep. 49.

A Clerk Employed in the General Conduct of a Store, under the supervision of a merchant, cannot purchase goods on credit. Doan v. Duncan, 18 Ill. 96.

A Purchase by a Principal, Personally and on His Own Credit, of goods selected by his agent is no authority for subsequent sales to the agent alone on the principal's credit. Town v. Hendee, 27 Vt. 258.

Guaranty.—Authority to purchase and ship

Where Furnished with Funds.—And where the agent is furnished with funds with which to make purchases, he cannot bind his principal by a purchase on credit, unless such is the custom of trade,¹ or the principal, with knowledge of the facts, ratifies the transaction.²

Where No Funds Furnished.—But where no funds are advanced to the agent to enable him to purchase for cash, he has implied authority to make the purchase on the principal's credit.³

(3) Implied Powers.—An agent to purchase has, if unrestricted, implied authority to do whatever is necessary and usual in the performance of such contracts.⁴ He may give directions for the delivery of the commodity.⁵

Agent to Purchase on Credit.—And, if authorized to purchase on credit, such an agent may acknowledge the indebtedness in his principal's name,⁶ and make specified commodities, and make cash advances thereon, is no authority to guarantee, in the name of the principal, an obligation to pay the vendors for cattle sold on time. Oberne v. Burke, 30 Neb. 581, 1 Neb. L. J. 238.

McIlwain*, 7 Rich. (S. Car.) 525; Greenville First Nat. Bank v. Pennington, 75 Tex. 272; Komorowski v. Krumdick, 56 Wis. 23. And see Sprague v. Gillett, 9 Met. (Mass.) 91; Patton v. Brittain, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 8.

Illustrations.—Where a country merchant ships to his correspondent in town such produce and other articles as he has to sell, and the merchant in town supplies him with such articles of merchandise as he deals in, and fills out his orders by procuring from other merchants, on credit, such articles as he does not deal in, charging them to the country merchant, the latter is not liable to the seller of any articles thus procured if he has funds in the hands of the city merchant and has never authorized him to pledge his credit on the purchase of any articles thus ordered, or recognized such act. Jaques v. Todd, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 83.

But where the agent is furnished with money with which to pay for property procured, there is no such limitation on his authority to buy on credit, as to require him to pay the instant, or on the same day, for property purchased without any understanding or agreement that credit is to be given therefor. Adams v. Boies, 24 Iowa 96.

An agent furnished with funds to build a house cannot build on credit. Proctor v. Tows, 115 Ill. 138.

Evidence of Funds Admissible.—It is error, in an action to charge a principal with goods purchased by his agent, to exclude evidence to show that the agent was at all times in funds sufficient to pay for the goods. Taft v. Baker, 100 Mass. 68.

Agent cannot Mortgage.—An agent to purchase cannot give a mortgage on the property purchased to secure the purchase money. Fraser v. M'Pherson, 3 Desaus. Eq. (S. Car.) 393.

2. Komorowski v. Krumdick, 56 Wis. 23; Jaques v. Todd, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 83. And see Paine v. Tillinghast, 52 Conn. 532.

3. Sprague v. Gillett, 9 Met. (Mass.) 91.

Agent Purchasing in His Own Name.—Where an agent authorized to purchase supplies for the use of his principal, and instructed to purchase only for cash, purchases in his own name upon credit from one who supposes him to be buying for himself only, the principal, having settled with the agent, supposing him to have purchased for cash or upon his personal credit, cannot be held liable to the seller for the price of the supplies. Fradley v. Hyland, 37 Fed. Rep. 49.

Agent Authorized to Barter.—A, the manager of a country store, was authorized by B, the proprietor of the store, to take butter only in exchange for goods. A was also the agent of another party, to buy butter for cash. A bought butter of the plaintiff, to be delivered at the store, agreeing to pay cash therefor. He did not profess to act for B in buying the butter, nor did B ever receive any benefit therefrom. It was held that B was not liable for the purchase so made, although the plaintiff supposed that the purchase was made for him. Cochran v. Richardson, 33 Vt. 169.

Payment by Principal to Agent.—Where a purchase was made through an agent who represented to the vendor that it was necessary to send a receipted bill in order to get the money from the principal, and the vendor accordingly gave the agent a receipted bill which he presented to his principal, who, having no knowledge of the circumstances, paid the amount to him, and the money so received by the agent was never paid to the vendor, it was held that the vendor was entitled to recover the amount of the bill from the principal. Willard v. Buckingham, 36 Conn. 395. But see Adams v. Humphreys, 54 Ga. 496.

4. The power to purchase implies the power to pay or to agree to pay. Johnson v. East Carolina, etc., R. Co., 116 N. Car. 926.

5. Owen v. Brockschmidt, 54 Mo. 285.

May Determine Details of Contract.—The agent to purchase may determine the details of the contract, and agree that the title shall remain in the vendor until the goods are paid for. Wishard v. McNeill, 85 Iowa 474.

Modification of Contract.—A general agent for the purchase of goods may modify a contract of purchase. Spaulding Lumber Co. v. Stout, 86 Wis. 89. See also Anderson v. Coonley, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 279; Standard Oil Co. v. Triumph Ins. Co., 3 Hun (N. Y.) 591, affirmed 64 N. Y. 85.

the necessary representations as to the solvency of the principal.¹

Execution of Negotiable Notes.—But he cannot bind the principal by the execution of negotiable notes for the goods purchased, unless it is indispensable to the execution of the power.²

g. TO MANAGE BUSINESS OR PROPERTY—Power Coextensive with Business.—A general agent for the management of the business of the principal has an authority coextensive in scope with the business. He must necessarily possess and exercise the same power and authority that his principal could, if present,³ Emerson v. Providence Hat Mfg. Co., 12 Mass. 237, 7 Am. Dec. 66.

Illustration.—Where a principal instructed an agent to purchase a lot of pelts, to be paid for in cotton goods, and failed to furnish the goods or any other means of payment, it was held that the agent might give a promissory note for the price thereof, in which it was stipulated that the pelts were to be paid for in cotton goods, on demand, and indorse his personal guarantee of payment, upon which he could make his principal liable for reimbursement if compelled to pay himself. Morris v. Bowen, 52 N. H. 416.

An authority to draw checks on a bank in payment of the agent's purchases does not authorize the borrowing of money on the responsibility of the principal. Mordhurst v. Boies, 24 Iowa 99.

May Assume Mortgage.—An agent having a general authority to purchase real estate may, as part of the purchase price, assume the payment of mortgages upon the property. Schley v. Fryer, 100 N. Y. 71. But see Bucklen v. Hasterlik, 51 Ill. App. 132.

Making Advances to Vendors.—An authority to an agent to purchase hides, wool, furs, and tallow, and to pay for the same with the funds furnished by the principal, does not authorize him to advance the moneys of his principal to his customers, nor to sell the particular accounts that he received in satisfaction of the unauthorized advances, much less to guarantee the payment of such accounts. Bohart v. Oberne, 36 Kan. 284.

1. Such authority is necessarily incident to the power to purchase on credit. Hunter v. Hudson River Iron, etc., Co., 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 493.

Cannot Guarantee his Own Debts in Principal's Name.—The fact that one acts as agent for another, in writing letters, collecting money, etc., does not thereby authorize him to give a written guarantee in the name of his principal for goods purchased by himself. Stevenson v. Hoy, 43 Pa. St. 191.

2. Temple v. Pomroy, 4 Gray (Mass.) 128; Paige v. Stone, 10 Met. (Mass.) 168, 43 Am. Dec. 420.

Special Agent.—As a general rule, a special agent to make purchases has no authority to bind his principal by a negotiable promissory note or bill of exchange. Taber v. Cannon, 8 Met. (Mass.) 456. See also Wider v. Branch, 12 Ill. App. 358.

Clerk Having General Management of Business.

—A principal clerk, having the general management of a store, and accustomed to give due-bills in the name of his employers with their knowledge and consent, who buys goods in the usual course of business, has authority, upon such purchase, to take up due-bills given for former purchases, and give a note therefor, in the name of his employers, including therein the amount of his last purchase. Chidsey v. Porter, 21 Pa. St. 390.

3. Minor v. Mechanics' Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 46; Bice v. Hover, 2 Colo. App. 172; Cummings v. Sargent, 9 Met. (Mass.) 172; Shipman v. Byles, 65 Mich. 690; Badger Lumber Co. v. Ballentine, 54 Mo. App. 172; Bridenbecker v. Lowell, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 9; Baltimore, etc., Steamboat Co. v. Brown, 54 Pa. St. 77; Bailey v. Rawley, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 295; Shepherd v. Milwaukee Gas Light Co., 11 Wis. 234. And see Starr v. Gregory Consol. Min. Co., 6 Mont. 485; Adamson v. Wiggins, 45 Minn. 448; Giles v. Ebsworth, 10 Md. 333.

Power of Agent Determined from Character of Business.—It is not only proper but necessary, in order to ascertain the extent of the powers of such an agent, to consider the character of the business, the manner in which it is usual to carry on such a business, and, where the agency has continued for a long time, the manner in which the particular business has been conducted. Collins v. Cooper, 65 Tex. 460. See Roche v. Pennington (Wis., 1895), 62 N. W. Rep. 946, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 354.

Release and Waiver of Contract Rights.—He may release, vary, or waive a contract when his authority has not been withdrawn. Burley v. Hitt, 54 Mo. App. 272.

Compromise Disputed Claims.—An agent to manage a business may pay a disputed claim though probably not enforceable by suit, but resting only on moral obligation. Bergenthal v. Fiebrantz, 48 Wis. 435.

Repairing, Rebuilding.—An agent to manage property can make such repairs as are necessary to preserve and protect the property from ordinary wear and tear, but he has no authority to rebuild improvements destroyed by fire or make other permanent improvements. Beckman v. Wilson, 61 Cal. 335.

Sue and Defend.—An agent empowered to manage a business may sue for the collection of debts. German F. Ins. Co. v. Grunert, 112 Ill. 68; and employ an attorney to defend suits. Mason v. Taylor, 38 Minn. 32. And see Davis v. Waterman, 10 Vt. 526, 33 Am. Dec. 216. But a managing agent has no power to employ an attorney to bring suit for personal injuries to employees of the principal. Cochran v. Newton, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 482.

An agent to manage property cannot sue in his own name to recover possession thereof. McHenry v. Painter, 58 Iowa 365. But he may bring a suit to restrain a trespass, and may execute an injunction bond in his prinand may conduct the business in the same way as the latter is in the habit of doing when at home.¹ But his authority is limited, as is that of any other principal's name. State v. Banks, 48 Md. 513. He has no authority to confess a general judgment for his principal where an attachment is issued against the property, the owner being a nonresident. Howell v. Gordon, 40 Ga. 302. Nor can he employ counsel in a case concerning property of another person. Perry v. Jones, 18 Kan. 552. Nor has an agent, when left in charge of a store during the absence of his principal, with instructions to do the best he can, authority to sell the entire stock, valued at upwards of ten thousand dollars, to a single creditor of his principal to satisfy a debt of less than seven thousand dollars. Berry v. Hart, 1 Colo. 246.

Make Proof of Loss.—And in case of loss by fire, he may make proof of loss, and sue upon the policy. German F. Ins. Co. v. Grunert, 112 Ill. 68.

Keep up Stock.—He may bind his principal by purchase of goods to keep up the stock, and secret instructions to buy and sell only for cash will not relieve the latter from liability. Watteau v. Fenwick (1893), 1 Q. B. 346; Louisville Coffin Co. v. Stokes, 78 Ala. 372; National Furnace Co. v. Keystone Mfg. Co., 110 Ill. 427; Schmidt v. Sandel, 30 La. Ann. 353; Banner Tobacco Co. v. Jenison, 48 Mich. 459; Hubbard v. Tenbrook, 124 Pa. St. 291, 23 W. N. C. 351, 10 Am. St. Rep. 585.

Has Insurable Interest.—A managing agent has an insurable interest where he is liable to account for the property. Kline v. Queen Ins. Co., 7 Hun (N. Y.) 267.

Surgical Aid.—The manager of a manufacturing company may employ surgical aid for an injured employee. Swazey v. Union Mfg. Co., 42 Conn. 556. But only in case of the necessity for the immediate services of a surgeon. Chaplin v. Freeland, 7 Ind. App. 676. He cannot incur funeral expenses of one who did not die in its service or on its premises. Kipp v. East River Electric Light Co. (C. Pl.), 19 N. Y. Supp. 387.

1. Paying Board of Principal's Employees.—Where it is shown that the principal was responsible for the board of his employees, paying it and deducting it from their wages, his foreman left in the general control and management of his business may employ laborers and make the principal responsible for their board in the same way as the latter has been in the habit of doing when at home. Burley v. Kitchell, 20 N. J. L. 305.

One in Charge of Waterworks and having the management thereof has authority to bind his principal by the purchase of a pump for use in the waterworks. Goss v. Helbing, 77 Cal. 190.

An Agent to Manage a Hotel may bind his principal by a purchase of necessary supplies for the hotel, Beecher v. Venn, 35 Mich. 466; Oliver v. Shoemaker, 35 Mich. 466; and for liquors, wines, and sugar for use at the bar, Cummings v. Sargent, 9 Met. (Mass.) 172. But such authority extends no further than the purchase of such supplies as are reasonably adapted to, or customarily used in, a business of the kind. Wallis Tobacco Co.

v. Jackson, 99 Ala. 460. And he cannot bind his principal for the safe keeping and return of carriages furnished guests of the hotel by a livery-stable keeper. State v. Mullin, 46 N. J. L. 448, 50 Am. Rep. 442. Nor by entering into a contract with an electric-light company to remove the old lighting apparatus and fixtures and replace them with new. Fisk v. Greeley Electric Light Co., 3 Colo. App. 319.

A General Agent and Manager of a Mining Company is presumably authorized to sell its personal property, since purchases and sales of personality for use about mining premises must be of frequent occurrence, and would presumably be under the control of the general manager. Scudder v. Anderson, 54 Mich. 122.

He may purchase on credit the supplies and materials necessary for the usual working of the mine. Stuart v. Adams, 89 Cal. 367; and may bind the owner for supplies furnished the keeper of a boarding-house necessary to the working of the mine. Heald v. Hendy, 89 Cal. 632.

The manager of the milling establishment of a mining corporation has no implied authority to bind the company by the purchase of machinery, for instance mills. Victoria Gold Min. Co. v. Fraser, 2 Colo. App. 14.

To Manage Plantation.—An agent to manage a plantation cannot contract an account on the credit of his principal, Meyer v. Baldwin, 52 Miss. 263; nor bind him for the purchase of goods for the laborers on the farm, Carter v. Burnham, 31 Ark. 212. Nor is he authorized to execute a note in the name of his principal, Scarborough v. Reynolds, 12 Ala. 252; nor bind him for medical services rendered on the plantation, Malone v. Robinson (Miss., 1893), 12 So. Rep. 709. And where a creditor attached certain lands and the grass growing thereon, in a suit upon a note it was held that the agent of the debtor for the management of the farm had no authority to give the attaching creditor leave to cut and gather the grass, and sell it on execution in such suit. Benjamin v. Benjamin, 15 Conn. 347, 39 Am. Dec. 384.

A manager of a plantation cannot dispose of the crops, but the principal must notify the purchaser as soon as he is informed of the fact, that he repudiates the act of the agent. Ball v. Bender, 22 La. Ann. 493.

A power of attorney sufficiently comprehensive to authorize the agent to manage a plantation and disburse the proceeds of the crops, will justify the factor who sells the crops to pay out their proceeds to the orders of the agent. Sentell v. Kennedy, 29 La. Ann. 679.

Overseer.—An overseer of a plantation carried on by slave labor may procure the necessary supplies for the slaves, the owner being absent and having made no provision for their maintenance. Fisher v. Campbell, 9 Port. (Ala.) 210. And see Garratt v. Trabue, 82 Ala. 227.

agent, to the management and transaction of the business under his control, and he cannot bind his principal by the performance of any act beyond the apparent and ostensible scope of his authority.¹

Cannot Dispose of Business.—An agent to manage a business cannot sell or dispose of it.²

Nor Mortgage.—Nor mortgage the property used in carrying it on.³

1. Illustrations of Acts beyond Authority.—

Where it appeared that the amount of sales in plaintiff's business did not exceed fifty thousand dollars a year, it was held that an agent having general charge of the business could not bind the principal by entering into contracts for advertising the business in foreign countries at an expense of over one hundred and thirty thousand dollars a year. Holloway v. Stephens, 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 562.

The fact that an attorney-at-law has loaned money for his principal on mortgage security, and has foreclosed the mortgage and purchased the realty in his principal's name, and the principal has refused to pay his fees until he shall realize them out of a sale of the property, gives him no authority to bind his principal by a contract to sell the same. Scully v. Book, 3 Wash. 182.

An agent having authority under a general power of attorney to manage the personal property of his principal is not authorized to go security for third persons, or to indorse notes in matters foreign to the subject matter of his agency so as to bind his principal. Poirier v. Jobin, 12 Revue Légale, 64 Super. Ct. (Quebec, 1881).

Where the owners of a tannery appointed an agent to act for them in all matters of business relating thereto, it was held that the agent had no authority to bind his principals as receipters to an officer, for horses and other property used in the tannery, which had been attached as the property of a third person, since receipting for goods attached was not a matter relating to the tannery nor to the attending business. Weston v. Alley, 49 Me. 94.

Not Deny Principal's Title.—An agent cannot deny his principal's title, and therefore where creditors of the principal claimed that the principal obtained credit and bought goods of them, making false representations, and they demanded of an agent empowered to carry on the principal's business a return of the goods thus procured, the agent exceeded his authority by admitting upon their ex parte statement his principal's fraud, and by rescinding the sales and restoring the goods to the creditors. Clafin v. Continental Jersey Works, 85 Ga. 27.

2. Vescelius v. Martin, 11 Colo. 391; Henson v. Keet, etc., Mercantile Co., 48 Mo. App. 214.

Nor can an agent to purchase hides, to superintend their manufacture into leather, and generally to manage the tanning business, sell hides purchased for use at the tannery. Holbrook v. Oberne, 56 Iowa 324. See Smith v. Stephenson, 45 Iowa 645.

Cannot Surrender Stock in Trade.—Where a power of attorney expressly states the object of the delegation of authority to be a continuation of the business of the principal during his absence, the agent cannot, under the guise of making payments to creditors whose demands have not yet matured, surrender a large part of the stock in trade, inasmuch as such a surrender would be foreign to the object of the power, against the interests of the business, and in excess of the agent's authority. Clafin v. Continental Jersey Works, 85 Ga. 27. See also Conner v. Littlefield, 79 Tex. 76.

Manager of Corporation may Sell to Pay Debts.—The manager of a foreign corporation, who is its sole representative and the person through whom another has become its creditor, has prima facie authority to sell the property of the corporation to pay such debt. Carey-Hallidy Lumber Co. v. Cain, 70 Miss. 628.

Agent to Manage Property—Disposing of Property.—An agent to manage property cannot dispose of it. Smith v. Stephenson, 45 Iowa 645.

An agent appointed to "take care of personal property and to give notice of any lien upon it," has no authority to make an agreement with a third person to purchase the property of his principal, at a sale to which it is exposed, to satisfy rent under a distress warrant. Brisbane v. Adams, 3 N. Y. 129.

Assigning Cause of Action.—Nor can he assign a cause of action for trespass. Geiger v. Bolles, 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 129.

Cannot Lease.—Authority to manage a farm for the use and benefit of the agent does not authorize a lease. Ward v. Thrustin, 40 Ohio St. 347.

Authority to Exchange Real Estate is Not Authority to Purchase.—A power of attorney to "exchange and convey" a certain lot for other real estate does not authorize the attorney to purchase land to be paid for in part by an assignment of the principal's interest in said lot (under a contract of sale) and the remainder and greater part in money. Long v. Fuller, 21 Wis. 121.

Nor has an agent authorized to "manage" lands for a year prima facie authority to lease them for fifteen years, with a right to quarry and sell stone therefrom. Duncan v. Hartman, 143 Pa. St. 595, 48 Phila. Leg. Int. 441, 24 Am. St. Rep. 570.

Timber Contract.—The fact that an agent had charge of lands, with power to negotiate sales of timber, does not show that he had power to bind the principal to perform a timber contract for the plaintiff with a third party. Gilchrist v. Pearson, 70 Miss. 351.

3. Despatch Line of Packets v. Bellamy Mfg. Co., 12 N. H. 205, 37 Am. Dec. 203.

But the general agent, having the entire superintendence and management of the business of a lumber company, the members of which live abroad, has authority in good

Nor Engage in a Different Business.—Nor can he engage his principal in new and different enterprises.¹

Cannot Borrow.—Such an agent has no authority to borrow money for his principal,² unless it is absolutely indispensable to the execution of the duties delegated,³ and a fortiori he cannot bind him for the debt of a third party.⁴

Nor Execute Notes.—Nor has he authority to bind his principal by the execution or indorsement of negotiable paper.⁵

h. TO RECEIVE PAYMENT.—(1) From What Authority will be Implied—Presentation of Bill.—The mere presentation of a bill by an employee of the vendor of goods does not per se warrant the debtor therein in making payment to such agent.⁶

faith to make a transfer of lumber in trust to pay off the servants in the employ of the company. Taylor v. Labeaume, 17 Mo. 338.

1. Campbell v. Hastings, 29 Ark. 512.

An authority given to an agent to carry on mills for the owner, to permit parties to cut timber on his land and to collect the stumpage therefor, and to claim indemnity from trespassers, does not imply an authority in the agent to embark his principal in lumbering operations by which he would be obligated to pay large sums of money. Hazeltine v. Miller, 44 Me. 177.

A Power to Close up a Business does not authorize a reinvestment of the funds. Stoddart's Case, 4 Ct. of Cl. 511.

2. Perkins v. Boothby, 71 Me. 94; Bickford v. Menier, 107 N. Y. 490. See Stanley v. Sheffield Land, etc., Co., 83 Ala. 260; Tucker v. Woolsey, 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 142.

A Power of Attorney to Wind up the Business of a nonresident principal does not authorize the agent to borrow money on his account. Smith v. McGregor, 96 N. Car. 101.

No Authority to Borrow Money Generally can be implied from the fact that an agent has the management of his principal's store, keeps its accounts, and is authorized to make checks on a special bank account, and overdraw it if necessary in order to pay for goods. Heath v. Paul, 81 Wis. 532.

Principal Accepting Benefits.—Where the agent borrows money and applies it to the payment and discharge of the legal liabilities of his principal, who knowingly retains the benefit of such payment, the principal will be liable therefor to the lender in an action for money had and received. Perkins v. Boothby, 71 Me. 91.

3. Bickford v. Menier, 107 N. Y. 490.

Evidence Showing Authority to Borrow.—Evidence that a person was the financial agent and confidential clerk of another, and had on various occasions, with his assent, in his behalf accepted drafts, and drawn orders upon others, which he afterwards allowed in account, is evidence from which, without any proof of direct authority, a jury may infer a general authority to borrow money to meet the exigencies of the principal's business, even at a usurious rate of interest, and to bind him by a check given therefor. Kelley v. Lindsey, 7 Gray (Mass.) 287. See also Consolidated Nat. Bank v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 95 Cal. 1.

4. Cannot Bind Principal as Surety.—Ruppe v. Edwards, 52 Mich. 411; New York Iron Mine

Question for Jury.—The authority of an agent to collect need not be express, but may be implied; and where a bill for goods previously sold by him for the house he represents, together with a bill for goods sold directly by the house to the same customer, is sent to the agent and both bills are presented by him to the customer, who pays both, whether under all the circumstances the sending of the bill to the agent implies authority for him to collect the money is a question of fact for the jury. The fact that the bills bore on their face in small letters the words "Bills

Making the Contract.—No authority to receive payment under a contract is to be implied from the fact that the agent was employed to make or negotiate it.¹

The Receipt of Interest.—Nor will authority to receive payment of the principal of a debt be implied from a power to receive the interest.²

Possession of Securities.—But a debtor is authorized to infer that an agent employed to negotiate a loan is empowered to receive payment of both principal and interest, from his having possession of the securities.³ But this inference is founded upon possession of the securities, and ceases whenever they are withdrawn by the creditor; and it is incumbent upon the debtor relying upon such inference to show that the securities were in the possession of the agent on each occasion when payments were made,⁴ though it is not necessary that he should have actually seen them.⁵ The mere possession of an payable at this office only," which the debtor did not notice or know of at the time of payment, does not necessarily negative the authority. Luckie v. Johnston, 89 Ga. 321.

Bill of Lading.—Authority to ship cotton and forward the bills of lading to the consignees does not imply authority to receive advances from the consignee. Hill v. Helton, 80 Ala. 528.

Possession of Bond and Mortgage.—He is authorized to infer that the agent is empowered to receive both principal and interest from his having possession of the bond and mortgage given to secure the loan, or from possession of the bond alone. Williams v. Walker, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 325, criticising Spencer v. Wilson, 4 Munf. (Va.) 130; Haines v. Pohlmann, 25 N. J. Eq. 179.

If an agent be intrusted with the custody of a bond, he may receive the interest; and though he fails, yet the mortgagee shall bear the loss. And so it is also, in such cases, if he receives the principal and delivers up the bond. After being intrusted with the security itself, it shall be presumed he is intrusted with power over it, and with the power to receive the principal and interest. If intrusted with the mortgage deed but not the bond, he has only authority to receive the interest, but not the principal; because a giving up the deed is not sufficient to restore the estate, but there must be a reconveyance, whereas the giving up a bond is, in law, an extinguishment of the debt. Whitlock v. Waltham, 1 Salk. 157. See Crane v. Evans (Supreme Ct.), 1 N. Y. St. Rep. 216.

Where the assignee of a mortgage allows it to remain in the hands of the mortgagee, payments to him by the mortgagor, without notice of the assignment, are valid. Van Keuren v. Corkins, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 129.

Possession of Bank-book.—Proof that a depositor in a savings bank left her bank-book with her mother, for the purpose of enabling the latter to draw out money upon special orders, from time to time, and that moneys were at different times deposited and withdrawn by the latter for the former, is not sufficient to authorize a jury to infer an agency on the part of the latter to receive payment of other money due to the former. *Butman v. Withdrawal of Securities.—It is not incumbent upon a creditor to show notice to the debtor of the withdrawal of the papers from the possession of the attorney. Brewster v. Carnes, 103 N. Y. 556.

And it has been held that if the agent has parted with the possession of the securities, though wrongfully, any payment to him will not bind the principal, although the latter supposes the agent to be still in possession of them. Crane v. Gruenewald, 120 N. Y. 274. Compare Shane v. Palmer, 43 Kan. 481, and Quinn v. Dresbach, 75 Cal. 159, 7 Am. St. Rep. 138.

unindorsed note, however, gives the agent no implied authority to receive payment of either principal or interest.¹

(2) Payment must be in Money.—An agent to collect or receive payment can receive nothing but money in satisfaction of the claim.²

Notes, Drafts, Checks, etc.—Hence he cannot bind his principal by accepting from the debtor in discharge of the debt a note, bond, draft, or check,³ nor by

In Hatfield v. Reynolds, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 612, the court said: "This presents the question whether, in such cases, the authority to receive payments is implied from the possession of the securities, or from their production and exhibition to the debtor, at the time of the payment. * * * I do not perceive that if the defendant had taken the precaution to call for the production of the papers whenever he made a payment, he would have strengthened this implication. The authority is implied from the possession of the papers and the continued receipt of money upon them, which are facts, and not from the exhibition of the papers by the agent, which is only the evidence of the facts. * * * To have called for the bond and mortgage, under the circumstances of this case, would have been a very prudent and proper precaution, but it would have been only a precaution. It would have enabled the defendant to verify the authority of Purdy, but it would have been no more than verifying it. By neglecting to do so, the defendant took the risk of making a payment, after Purdy's authority had ceased by his ceasing to have possession of the securities."

Currency of a Particular Kind.—An agent to collect a debt payable in a particular sort of currency has no power to receive payment in any other kind of currency; and if loss ensues he will be liable, even where the currency he receives is the only currency circulating at the time and place of collection. Mangum v. Ball, 43 Miss. 288.

Cannot Set off for Debt Due Himself.—"There is no doubt that where an agent is authorized to receive money for his principal he cannot allow it by way of set-off in accounts between the payer and himself; he must receive it in money." Per Cockburn, C.J., in Bridges v. Garrett, L. R. 5 C. P. 454. And this though specially authorized to compromise and accept personal property in satisfaction of the claim. McCormick v. Keith, 8 Neb. 142. He cannot substitute himself as debtor. Aultman v. Lee, 43 Iowa 404.

Where an underwriter settled a loss with an insurance broker employed to collect it, by setting off in part account against it a debt due him from the broker for premiums, it was held, upon the bankruptcy of the broker and his failure to pay the amount of the policy to the insured, that the underwriter was not entitled to treat the set-off as payment to the assured, who was not bound by a usage of such method of adjustment between insurance brokers and underwriters which was not shown to be known to him. Scott v. Irving, 1 B. & Ad. 605, 20 E. C. L. 453.

In Todd v. Reid, 4 B. & Ald. 210, 6 E. C. L. 455, such a custom was held to be illegal.

Commuting Debt.—An agent to receive payment cannot commute the debt for another thing. Padfield v. Green, 85 Ill. 529.

And one dealing with him is bound to know that he has no such authority. Hurley v. Watson, 68 Mich. 531.

An agent to collect a note cannot sell, barter, or exchange it for drafts, bills of exchange, or other property. Smith v. Johnson, 71 Mo. 382; Rodgers v. Bass, 46 Tex. 505.

(3) Time of Payment.—The agent cannot extend the time of payment,¹ nor receive the payment of an obligation before it is due.²

(4) Powers Implied—May Employ Counsel and Sue.—Authority to collect implies authority to use all the ordinary means of collecting, and among these are the employment of counsel³ and the institution of suits.⁴

Cannot Pledge Note Taken in Payment.—Nor, if authorized to take a negotiable note in payment, can the agent pledge the same for a debt of his own. Jones v. Farley, 6 Me. 226.

1. Cannot Extend Time.—Chappel v. Raymond, 20 La. Ann. 277; Hutchings v. Munger, 41 N. Y. 155; Ritch v. Smith, 82 N. Y. 627; Mallory v. Mariner, 15 Wis. 172. And see Gerrish v. Maher, 70 Ill. 470; Lawrence v. Johnson, 64 Ill. 351; Lockhart v. Wyatt, 10 Ala. 231, 44 Am. Dec. 481.

Consideration for Extension.—Even if the agent is authorized to make the extension, there must be some consideration to support it. If the debt is overdue, payment of a part is no consideration for a promise to give further time for the payment of the balance. Hutchings v. Munger, 41 N. Y. 155.

When Extension Authorized.—But where the owner authorized an agent to procure additional security for a real-estate mortgage, leaving it to his judgment to make the best arrangement he could for that purpose, it was held that the agent was authorized to make an agreement for a reasonable extension of the time of payment. Kane v. Cortesy, 100 N. Y. 132.

And an agent having money in his hands with undisputed power to loan, manage, and collect as he shall deem best, has been held to have power to extend the time of payment. Hurd v. Marple, 2 Ill. App. 402.

Place of Payment.—An agent to receive payments under a contract to be made by him may, in the absence of instructions, provide in the contract that they shall be made at a reasonable and proper place or bank convenient to him. McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. Dak. 497.

2. Cannot Receive Payment before Due.—Smith v. Kidd, 68 N. Y. 130, 23 Am. Rep. 157; Doubleday v. Kreiss, 50 N. Y. 410, 10 Am. Ry. Rep. 502; Schermerhorn v. Farley, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 66; Parnther v. Gaitskell, 13 East 432. See also Holland v. Van Beil, 89 Ga. 223.

Effect of Usage.—If there be a known usage of trade or course of business in a particular employment, or habit of dealing between the parties, extending the ordinary reach of the authority, that may well be held to give full validity to the act. Thompson v. Elliott, 73 Ill. 221; Smith v. Hall, 19 Ill. App. 17.

In Bliss v. Cutter, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 9, it appeared that the plaintiffs were payees and the defendants drawees of a bill of exchange drawn by one B., and held by the P. bank as collecting agents for the plaintiffs, who had discounted the bill for B. In order to secure the plaintiffs for their liability incurred upon the bill of exchange, B. attached thereto a bill of lading for a shipment of flour of which he was consignor, which bill was marked, "Held subject to the order of cashier

P. bank." The defendants accepted the bill of exchange upon its presentation to them, and retained the bill of lading attached thereto, and they subsequently, but before the maturity of the bill of exchange, as commission merchants for B., sold the shipment of flour, but were unable to make delivery without an order from the cashier of the P. bank, in accordance with the indorsement upon the bill of lading. The cashier held the flour as security for the plaintiffs for their liability upon the bill of exchange, and agreed to give the order only upon payment to the bank by the defendants of the present value of the bill of exchange; the defendants made the payment and obtained the order, but before the date of the maturity of the bill of exchange the bank failed. It was held that the loss must fall on the plaintiffs, and that commercial usage authorized a payment to the bank under the circumstances before the maturity of the bill of exchange.

In Campbell v. Hassell, 1 Stark. 233, 2 E. C. L. 94, it was held that payment would not be good if it varied from the original terms of the contract, and that evidence of a custom to that effect was inadmissible.

3. Ryan v. Tudor, 31 Kan. 366. See Merrick v. Wagner, 44 Ill. 266.

Authority to Collect Broader than Authority to Receive Payment.—It should be noted that the implied authority of an agent to collect is broader and more comprehensive than the authority of an agent to receive payment merely; and the authority of an agent of the latter class would seem not to extend per se to the bringing of suit. See Ryan v. Tudor, 31 Kan. 366.

Authority to Receive Shares of Estate, Authorizes Suit for Partition.—Power to receive the shares of the heirs at law in a certain estate, and perform acts requisite, with full power of substitution, authorizes the employment of counsel to bring an action of partition of lands belonging to such estate, and an action to recover the shares. Woerman v. Baas (Supreme Ct.), 12 N. Y. Supp. 59.

4. Authority to Collect Implies Authority to Sue.—Authority to collect a debt carries with it authority to sue, issue execution, and direct seizure of property. Weile's Case, 7 Ct. of Cl. 535; Joyce v. Duplessis, 15 La. Ann. 242, 77 Am. Dec. 185; Moore v. Hall, 48 Mich. 145; Bush v. Miller, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 481; Scott v. Elmendorf, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 317; Hirshfield v. Landman, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 208; Davis v. Waterman, 10 Vt. 526, 33 Am. Dec. 216.

A general authority to collect implies authority to appear as attorney. M'Minn v. Richtmyer, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 236.

Power to Demand Indemnity from Foreign Government.—A power of attorney to demand pecuniary indemnification from a foreign government, with power to do every necessary act, empowers the agent to prosecute the

When in His Own Name.—If the claim is a negotiable instrument, payable to bearer or indorsed in blank, the agent may sue in his own name.¹

May Give Acquittance.—Upon receipt of the money the agent may give an acquittance therefor² or surrender the security.³

And Receive Declarations.—And may receive declarations accompanying the payment.⁴

Part Payment.—Authority to receive the whole of a debt embraces power to receive a part.⁵

No Authority to Indorse.—An agent authorized to accept checks and negotiable paper in payment of debts has no implied authority to indorse the paper, such indorsement not being a necessary incident to the collection.⁶

Nor Transfer Claim.—Nor can the agent sell or transfer the claim.⁷

claim before a commission. Weile's Case, 7 Ct. of Cl. 535.

Attachment.—Power to sue for a debt carries with it power to make the suit effective by attachment, DePoret v. Gusman, 30 La. Ann. 930; Fenn v. Harrison, 4 T. R. 177; to do which he may sign the necessary bond, Merrick v. Wagner, 44 Ill. 266; Trowbridge v. Weir, 6 La. Ann. 706; Alexander v. Burns, 6 La. Ann. 704.

Indemnity.—He has implied authority to indemnify an officer in making a levy. Clark v. Randall, 9 Wis. 135, 76 Am. Dec. 252; Schoregge v. Gordon, 29 Minn. 367.

1. Nisbet v. Lawson, 1 Ga. 275; Brigham v. Gurney, 1 Mich. 349; Boyd v. Corbitt, 37 Mich. 52; Hazewell v. Coursen, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct. 22.

An Indorsement in Blank gives authority to the agent not only to receive and receipt for the money, but to bring a suit in his own name on the instrument. Orr v. Lacy, 4 McLean (U. S.) 244.

Death Not Revocation.—The indorsement for such purpose passes the legal title in trust, and the authority to collect is not revoked by the death of the owner. Moore v. Hall, 48 Mich. 143.

Assignment—Note Unindorsed.—But the agent cannot assign the judgment or sue in his own name on an unindorsed note. Padfield v. Green, 85 Ill. 529.

2. Orr v. Lacy, 4 McLean (U. S.) 244; Scammon v. Wells, 84 Cal. 311; Gentry v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 15 Mo. App. 215.

Acquittance.—But he can only give an acquittance upon receipt of the sum due. Chilton v. Willford, 2 Wis. 1, 60 Am. Dec. 399. See supra, this section, Payment must be in Money.

To Release without Payment, Authority must be Express.—The authority of an agent to discharge a person from execution, without satisfaction of the debt, must be clearly proved and strictly pursued. Crary v. Turner, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 51.

He cannot release notes and accounts held for collection unless authorized by the principal. Randon v. Toby, 11 How. (U. S.) 493.

Receipt from General Agent Prima Facie Good.—A receipt in full from a general agent to receive money will be binding until avoided by proof. Patterson v. Ackerson, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 427.

3. Surrender of Securities.—Padfield v. Green, 85 Ill. 529; Feldman v. Beier, 78 N. Y. 293.

But he cannot surrender the securities without payment. Harrison v. Burlingame (Supreme Ct.), 17 N. Y. St. Rep. 905.

Agent to Receive Legacies cannot Relieve Executor from Liability.—Nor will authority to receive legacies coming from a certain estate authorize the agent to acquiesce in the turning over of the funds and management of the estate by one executor to his coexecutor so as to relieve such executor from liability for the mismanagement of the coexecutor. In re Osborn's Estate, 87 Cal. 1.

4. Receiving Declarations.—He may receive such declarations as necessarily accompany the payment and direct its application. Davis v. Amy, 2 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 412.

An agent to present a claim may receive notice of its acceptance or rejection. Peters v. Stewart, 2 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 357, reversing 1 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. City Ct.) 8.

5. Pickett v. Bates, 3 La. Ann. 627; Whelan v. Reilly, 61 Mo. 565; Williams v. Walker, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 325.

6. Hogg v. Snaith, 1 Taunt. 347; Millard v. National Bank of the Republic, 3 McArthur (D. C.) 54; Ames v. Drew, 31 N. H. 475; Holtsinger v. National Corn Exch. Bank, 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 292; Robinson v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 86 N. Y. 404; McClure v. Ewartson, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 495. And see Thomson v. Bank of British North America, 82 N. Y. 1.

Authority Given a Collector to Receive Checks in lieu of cash, in payment of bills held for collection, confers no authority to indorse and collect the checks; when he receives checks payable to his principal, his duty as collector ceases, and his next duty is to account to his principal for the proceeds of his collections, and turn over the checks to him, to be disposed of as he may judge proper. Graham v. U. S. Savings Inst., 46 Mo. 186; Jackson v. McMinnville Nat. Bank, 92 Tenn. 154.

Nor does power to receive a note in payment of an account imply power to dispose of it. Hays v. Lynn, 7 Watts (Pa.) 524.

Indorsement for Debtor.—An agent for the collection of a note is not authorized to indorse a security for the debtor, to enable him to raise the money. Hines v. Butler, 3 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 307.

7. Texada v. Beaman, 6 La. 85, 25 Am.

i. TO SETTLE.—An agent with full power to settle has implied authority to do what is necessary to secure a settlement,¹ and may allow credits,² and receive personal property.³

Limitations of Powers.—But he can only bind his principal by a settlement of the matters referred to him,⁴ and cannot submit matters in dispute to arbitration,⁵ or assign the claims.⁶

Dec. 204; Quigley v. Mexico Southern Bank, 80 Mo. 289, 50 Am. Rep. 503; Smith v. Johnson, 71 Mo. 382; Stonington Sav. Bank v. Davis, 14 N. J. Eq. 286; Garrigue v. Loescher, 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 578; Rodgers v. Bass, 46 Tex. 505.

No Power to Sell or Transfer Securities.—An agent holding a note for collection has no power to sell it. Smith v. Johnson, 71 Mo. 382; Goodfellow v. Landis, 36 Mo. 168. The possession of the note raises no presumption that he is authorized to assign it, and the burden is upon the party claiming under an assignment to show that it was authorized by the principal. Hardesty v. Newby, 28 Mo. 567, 75 Am. Dec. 137.

And power to collect debts and demands, as well as to sign the principal's name in all business transactions, confers no authority to transfer shares of stock belonging to the principal. Camden F. Ins. Assoc. v. Jones, 53 N. J. L. 189.

1. But he must regularly pursue his authority. Nickles v. Wells, 2 Utah 167.

Possession of Unadjusted Vouchers.—An agent to whom unadjusted vouchers for services rendered a railroad company are sent, with authority to make the best settlement he can, is authorized to determine the amount due and collect and receive the money. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Bates, 68 Md. 184.

A Telegraph Operator cannot settle claims against the company. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rains, 63 Tex. 27.

Power to Sell.—An agent in charge of a plantation for his principal, under a power of attorney to act in all cases as the principal might do, with subsequent verbal instructions, when about to break up the plantation and remove the family to another state, "to settle up or discharge all demands against the family before he (the agent) left, and acting under the power of attorney to do all that might be necessary," is not authorized to sell the slaves of his principal. Dearing v. Lightfoot, 16 Ala. 28.

Cannot Pledge Property of Principal.—Where a debtor leaving the state on account of pecuniary embarrassments gave verbal directions to an individual to assist in settling up his affairs, it was held that such individual was not thereby authorized to pledge the debtor's property as security for a debt. Swett v. Brown, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 178.

Authority to Pay Money to Secure Settlement Authorizes Note.—An agent authorized to pay one thousand dollars to secure the settlement of an attachment suit is authorized to raise the money by the execution of a note and make his principal liable to the indorsers. Tanner v. Hastings, 2 Ill. App. 283.

Indorsing Note Received in Settlement.—The agent cannot accept a note in settlement and indorse it so as to make his principal liable thereon. Essick v. Buckwalter (Pa., 1889), 16 Atl. Rep. 849, 20 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 26.

Distribution among Principals of Money Received.—The agent cannot distribute the money received in settlement amongst his principals according to his own judgment. Hawkins v. Avery, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 551.

2. Anderson v. Coonley, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 279.

3. Oliver v. Sterling, 20 Ohio St. 391.

Cannot Receive More than Discharges Debt.—But not to purchase more of the debtor's property than is necessary to cancel the debt, when by so doing he creates a debt against the principal. Pollock v. Cohen, 32 Ohio St. 514.

Authority to Take Possession of Land in Principal's Name.—A general power authorizing the agent "to finish all the principal's unsettled business" authorizes the agent to take possession of lands to which the principal has claim, in the name of the principal. Chiles v. Stephens, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 340.

4. Powers Limited to Claims to be Settled.—An attorney having in charge certain notes for collection and settlement cannot, without his client's consent, include in the settlement other notes not in his hands. Melcher v. Exchange Bank, 85 Mo. 362.

An agent to adjust a particular loss cannot adjust another loss. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Smith, 3 Colo. 422.

Authority to collect certain notes, "compromise, settle, and arrange them," etc., does not authorize any compromise except such as is consistent with and in furtherance of the collection of the debt. Chilton v. Willford, 2 Wis. 1, 60 Am. Dec. 399.

A special authority from the owner to look up property mislaid or lost by a common carrier does not imply any authority to settle for the damages resulting from the carrier's neglect. Congar v. Galena, etc., R. Co., 17 Wis. 477.

5. Reference to Arbitration.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Gougar, 55 Ill. 503; Huber v. Zimmerman, 21 Ala. 488, 56 Am. Dec. 255; McPherson v. Cox, 86 N. Y. 472, reversing 21 Hun (N. Y.) 493; O'Regan v. Quebec, etc., Steamship Co., 19 New Bruns. 528. And see Trout v. Emmons, 29 Ill. 433, 81 Am. Dec. 326.

An authority to an agent, stated thus: "If you can honorably and fairly settle with R. for me out of court, do so; if not, let the court and jury settle," does not authorize a reference to arbitrators; nor will authority to exercise a reasonable discretion or submit to a reasonable sacrifice confer such power. Scarborough v. Reynolds, 12 Ala. 252. But see Goodson v. Brooke, 4 Campb. 163, where an authority to settle an insurance policy was held to include power to refer to arbitration.

6. Assignment of Securities.—An agent to

Must be Benefit to Principal.—And the settlement must enure to the benefit of the principal,¹ and not be entirely without consideration.²

j. TO DRAW AND INDORSE NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS³—(1) Express or Implied Power.—The power of an agent to draw and indorse negotiable instruments must, as a general rule, be expressly conferred.⁴ Yet in some cases it is necessarily implied from the duties to be performed.⁵

When Implied.—Where the execution or indorsement of negotiable paper is necessary and customary in the transaction of the business, authority in the agent may be implied.⁶

whom are left the books and accounts of his principal "for settlement" is not authorized to assign them to a surety of his principal to indemnify the surety against the consequences of his suretyship. Wood v. McCain, 7 Ala. 800, 42 Am. Dec. 612.

An agent to whom overdue bonds are sent to do the best he can in settlement cannot sell them. Hannon v. Houston, 18 Kan. 561.

1. Must Enure to Benefit of Principal.—The settlement must not be one which enures entirely to the benefit of the agent, Williams v. Johnston, 94 N. Car. 633; who cannot extinguish the claim by setting off his own debt against it. McCormick v. Keith, 8 Neb. 142.

2. Consideration.—The agent cannot give a discharge without receiving any consideration. Patterson v. Moore, 34 Pa. St. 69. And see Baird v. Randall, 58 Mich. 175. But see Middlebury College v. Loomis, 1 Vt. 189, where it was held that if the agent has full power to settle according to his best judgment, he may discharge without payment.

In Scales v. Mount, 93 Ala. 82, it was held that authority to "settle and collect" a claim did not authorize a compromise for less than the full amount.

To Release Liens.—Authority to sign releases of liens where the cash is paid gives no implied authority to sign them without payment. Corr v. Greenfield, 134 Pa. St. 503.

3. Paper Delivered in Blank.—As to the liability of the principal on paper executed in blank and delivered to the agent to be filled up according to instructions, see the titles ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS; BILLS AND NOTES.

Sealed Instrument.—Where an agent with parol authority to fill up a blank signed by his principal converts the blank into a sealed instrument, the principal is not bound thereby. Arrington v. Burton, 19 Ala. 114.

Parol authority is insufficient to authorize an agent to bind his principal by affixing, in his absence, his name and seal to a bond. Gordon v. Bulkeley, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 331.

4. Chicago Electric Light Renting Co. v. Hutchinson, 25 Ill. App. 476; Avery v. Lauve, 1 La. Ann. 457; Nugent v. Hickey, 2 La. Ann. 358; Duconge v. Forgay, 15 La. Ann. 37; Folger v. Peterkin, 39 La. Ann. 815; Torrey v. Dustin Monument Assoc., 5 Allen (Mass.) 327; Paige v. Stone, 10 Met. (Mass.) 160, 43 Am. Dec. 420; Webber v. Williams College, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 302; Savage v. Rix, 9 N. H. 263; Woodbury v. Woodbury, 47 N. H. 11, 90 Am. Dec. 555; Eaton v. Berlin, 49 N. H. 219; Terry v. Fargo, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 114; Lawrence v.

Gebhard, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 575; Park v. Leshner, 16 Alb. L. J. 151. And see Whiting v. Western Stage Co., 20 Iowa 554; Englehart v. Peoria Plow Co., 21 Neb. 41; Palmer v. Yarrington, 1 Ohio St. 253; Bryce v. Massey, 35 S. Car. 127.

Authority to indorse notes need not be under seal. Washington Bank v. Peirson, 2 Cranch (C. C.) 685.

The power must be express and special, and an agent cannot bind his principal on a note given under a general power of attorney. Robertson v. Levy, 19 La. Ann. 327; Hills v. Upton, 24 La. Ann. 427.

Parol Evidence is admissible to show the authority of an indorser's agent to indorse. Miller v. Moore, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 471. See, as to the interpretation of a power of attorney to draw or indorse negotiable instruments, Washington Bank v. Peirson, 2 Cranch (C. C.) 685; Bank of the Metropolis v. Moore, 5 Cranch (C. C.) 518; Knapp v. McBride, 7 Ala. 19.

5. Paige v. Stone, 10 Met. (Mass.) 160, 43 Am. Dec. 420; Rossiter v. Rossiter, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 494, 24 Am. Dec. 62. And see Brantley v. Southern L. Ins. Co., 53 Ala. 554; Miller v. House, 67 Iowa 737; Beaman v. Whitney, 20 Me. 413.

6. Allin v. Williams, 97 Cal. 403; Turner v. Keller, 66 N. Y. 66.

Illustrations of Implied Power.—The general agent of a company may give its note for purchases necessary to carry on the business. Odiorne v. Maxcy, 13 Mass. 182; White v. Westport Cotton Mfg. Co., 1 Pick. (Mass.) 215, 11 Am. Dec. 168.

Power to discount a bill carries with it power to indorse it. Merchants' Bank v. Central Bank, 1 Ga. 418, 44 Am. Dec. 665.

And an authority to sell a negotiable note carries with it power to indorse it "without recourse in the name of the principal." Yale v. Eames, 1 Met. (Mass.) 436.

An agent, authorized to transact a particular affair, may execute a note jointly with others who have a common interest in the subject matter, to pay the necessary expenses for the accomplishment of a common end. Layet v. Gano, 17 Ohio 466.

An agent employed in the manufacture of carriages has no such implied authority, Paige v. Stone, 10 Met. (Mass.) 160, 43 Am. Dec. 420; nor has one authorized "to accomplish a complete adjustment" of all the principal's concerns, Rossiter v. Rossiter, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 494, 24 Am. Dec. 62; nor one employed to manage a grocery and provision store, Smith v. Gibson, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 369;

(2) Subject to Strict Interpretation.—An authority to make or indorse negotiable paper is subject to strict interpretation,¹ and must be strictly pursued,²

Perkins v. Boothby, 71 Me. 91; nor one employed as clerk for a merchant, Terry v. Fargo, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 114; Kerns v. Piper, 4 Watts (Pa.) 222; Heathfield v. Van Allen, 7 U. C. C. P. 346; or to manage a farm, Davidson v. Stanley, 2 M. & G. 721, 40 E. C. L. 594. Such authority will not be implied from a power to borrow money and issue bonds. School Directors v. Sippy, 54 Ill. 287.

An agent to superintend the sale of merchandise and authorized to receive payment in articles of produce has no authority to execute a note payable in such merchandise at a future day and thus bind his principal by his acknowledgment of "value received." Denison v. Tyson, 17 Vt. 549.

Nor will general authority to transact business and to receive and discharge debts confer the power of making notes, or accepting or indorsing bills, so as to charge the principal. Sewanee Min. Co. v. McCall, 3 Head (Tenn.) 619.

But authority to transact all the business of the principal confers power to sign and transfer negotiable paper. Bailey v. Rawley, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 295. See also Auldjo v. McDougall, 3 U. C. Q. B. (O. S.) 199.

Power to Advance Money for a corporation will not authorize signing a note for them. Webber v. Williams College, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 302.

1. Attwood v. Munnings, 7 B. & C. 278, 14 E. C. L. 42; Brantley v. Southern L. Ins. Co., 53 Ala. 554; Deer Lodge Bank v. Hope Min. Co., 3 Mont. 146, 35 Am. Rep. 458; Craighead v. Peterson, 72 N. Y. 279, 28 Am. Rep. 150; Rossiter v. Rossiter, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 494, 24 Am. Dec. 62; Batty v. Carswell, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 48; Sims v. U. S. Trust Co., 103 N. Y. 472; Sewanee Min. Co. v. McCall, 3 Head (Tenn.) 619. And see Lazarus v. Shearer, 2 Ala. 718; Crutcher v. Kentucky Bank, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 436; White v. Westport Cotton Mfg. Co., 1 Pick. (Mass.) 215, 11 Am. Dec. 168; Hamburg Bank v. Johnson, 3 Rich. (S. Car.) 42.

Illustrations of Interpretation of Authorities.—The agent to execute commercial paper cannot bind his principal by the execution of an instrument which is not a commercial note. Trenton First Nat. Bank v. Gay, 63 Mo. 33.

An agent authorized to draw and indorse checks for and in the name of his principal is not authorized to overdraw his bank account, Union Bank v. Mott, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 180; Breed v. Central City First Nat. Bank, 4 Colo. 481; nor to borrow money. Mordhurst v. Boies, 24 Iowa 99.

But authority to bind a corporation by giving a "company note" has been held to authorize a bill of exchange on a person who had no funds. Tripp v. Swanzy Paper Co., 13 Pick. (Mass.) 291.

And power to sign and acknowledge bonds includes power to sign the bonds of a county officer in the name of the principal. Jernegan v. Gray, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 536.

Authority given an agent to draw a bill of exchange in his own name does not authorize him to draw in the name of his principal. Deer Lodge Bank v. Hope Min. Co., 3 Mont. 146, 35 Am. Rep. 458.

Parol authority to sign a note does not empower an agent to make a note under seal containing a warrant to confess judgment and waiving exemption and inquisition laws. Payne v. Robinson, 1 Pa. Dist. Rep. 638, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 544.

An agent authorized by his principal to indorse drafts for collection, and deposit on account of a particular business, or to indorse any draft drawn in favor of his principal in connection with that business, but who is not an unlimited agent, has no authority to indorse a draft not connected with such business, without the knowledge of his principal; and where the proceeds do not come to the hands of his principal, but pass to another party, the principal cannot be held responsible for such proceeds. Chouteau v. Filley, 50 Mo. 174.

Notice of Dishonor.—It cannot be intended, because one is authorized to indorse notes, that he is also an agent for the purpose of receiving notices of their dishonor. Planters', etc., Bank v. King, 9 Ala. 279.

No Authority to Renew.—Nor does authority to execute notes for discount at a certain bank for a certain amount authorize their renewal. Ward v. Kentucky Bank, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 93.

Or Indorse.—Nor does authority to draw a bill of exchange authorize an indorsement. Robinson v. Yarrow, 7 Taunt. 455, 2 E. C. L. 455.

Or Pay.—Authority to execute a note does not include authority to pay it when due. Luning v. Wise, 64 Cal. 410.

2. Hortons v. Townes, 6 Leigh (Va.) 47.

Authority Strictly Pursued.—Authority to indorse and discount a note for one purpose cannot be extended to another. Callender v. Golsan, 27 La. Ann. 311.

If authorized to draw a bill in the name of the principal, he cannot draw one in the joint names of himself and principal, Stainback v. Read, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 281, 62 Am. Dec. 648; or of his principal and others, Mechanics' Bank v. Schaumburg, 38 Mo. 228.

If a joint power is given to two, it must be jointly exercised. Union Bank v. Beirne, 1 Gratt. (Va.) 226. And authority to indorse for several jointly, does not authorize a several and successive indorsement. U. S. Bank v. Beirne, 1 Gratt. (Va.) 234, 42 Am. Dec. 551.

An authority to accept a draft to be drawn for a particular use does not authorize the agent to accept a draft drawn for another purpose. Nixon v. Palmer, 8 N. Y. 398.

If authorized to put the principal's name upon the back of a note as indorser, the agent cannot bind him as a joint maker. Cuyler v. Merrifield, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 559.

Authority to sign as surety does not inand the agent cannot bind his principal by the execution or indorsement of paper differing in amount¹ or time from that authorized.²

(3) Must be for Benefit of Principal.—The power will be construed as extending only to paper executed or indorsed in the business of the principal and for his benefit.³

k. TO SHIP.—Authority to ship carries with it authority to accept the bill of lading and enter into a contract limiting the carrier's liability.⁴

l. TO EMPLOY.—Authority to employ will, in the absence of restrictive words, include authority to make a complete contract definite as to the amount of compensation, terms of employment, etc.⁵

clude authority to sign as maker. Farming-ton Sav. Bank v. Buzzell, 61 N. H. 612.

1. Amount of Instrument must be Pursuant to Authority.—King v. Sparks, 77 Ga. 285, where an agent authorized to sign a note for five hundred dollars, signed one for eleven hundred dollars.

The principal cannot be bound by a note for a greater sum than he authorized, and the payee will be charged with knowledge of the extent of the agent's authority. Blackwell v. Ketcham, 53 Ind. 184.

If authorized to accept a bill for a certain sum to be used for a certain purpose, the principal is not bound by the acceptance of a bill for a less sum to be used for a different purpose. Nixon v. Palmer, 8 N. Y. 398.

2. Provisions as to Date of Maturity.—If authorized to execute a note payable in six months, the agent cannot bind the principal by a note payable in sixty days. Batty v. Carswell, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 48. And if authorized to draw a bill at four months, he cannot bind him by a bill antedated so as to become payable in less than four months. Tate v. Evans, 7 Mo. 419.

Authority to draw bills of exchange payable on time or at sight does not include authority to draw postdated bills. New York Iron Mine v. Citizens' Bank, 44 Mich. 344.

If the difference in time is immaterial, the authority may not be restricted to the exact time. Adams v. Flanagan, 36 Vt. 400.

A power to renew notes payable at sixty or ninety days includes a power to renew a note at eighty-eight days. State Bank v. Herbert, 4 McCord (S. Car.) 89.

3. Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Hart, 32 La. Ann. 22; Humphrey v. Havens, 12 Minn. 298; Camden Safe Deposit, etc., Co. v. Abbott, 44 N. J. L. 257; Stainer v. Tysen, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 279; North River Bank v. Aymar, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 262; Suckley v. Tunno, 1 Brev. (S. Car.) 257; Holden v. Durant, 29 Vt. 184; Stainback v. Virginia Bank, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 269. And see Odiorne v. Maxcy, 13 Mass. 178; German Nat. Bank v. Studley, 1 Mo. App. 260.

Accommodation Paper.—Although an agent is authorized to execute notes in the transaction of his principal's business, he has not authority to make accommodation paper. Wallace v. Mobile Branch Bank, 1 Ala. 565; Bird v. Daggett, 97 Mass. 494; Gulick v. Grover, 33 N. J. L. 463, 97 Am. Dec. 728. See the title ACCOMMODATION PAPER, Vol. I., p. 349.

Joint Transaction.—Nor has he authority to use the name of the principal in joint transactions with other persons and for their benefit. Mechanics' Bank v. Schaumburg, 38 Mo. 228.

Bill for His Own Benefit.—Nor has such an agent authority to draw a bill for his own benefit. Stainback v. Read, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 281, 62 Am. Dec. 648.

And see the title BILLS OF LADING.

Implied Powers.—The authority must be construed to include all necessary and usual means of carrying it into effect. Nelson v. Hudson River R. Co., 48 N. Y. 498; Armstrong v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 53 Minn. 183. The agent may agree that the carrier shall have the benefit of any insurance that may have been effected. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. International Marine Ins. Co., 84 Tex. 149.

To Pledge Bill of Lading.—But a merchant's clerk to do outdoor work, negotiate purchases and charter-parties, and present bills of lading for signature on shipping property, has no authority to pledge such bills of lading or receive advances thereon. Zachrisson v. Ahman, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 68.

To Procure Cargo.—An agent for the charterers of a vessel to procure a cargo in a foreign port has no authority to modify or cancel the charter-party of his principal. Ye Seng Co. v. Corbitt, 7 Sawy. (U. S.) 368.

5. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hill, 76 Ala. 303; Farrington v. Hayes, 65 Vt. 153. But see Beyers v. Hodge, 1 Misc. Rep. (Buffalo Super. Ct.) 76.

The Time for Which the Agent may Employ will depend upon the character of the business. If it is such a business as it is apparent would last but six months, a contract for a year would doubtless not be binding upon the principal, since it would be apparent that such a contract is not necessary to the accomplishment of the object. So, if the business is such as would apparently last for months, an employment for one or more months would seem to be covered by the agent's authority, and will be binding. Williams v. Getty, 31 Pa. St. 461, 72 Am. Dec. 575.

An authority to hire a farm laborer will authorize a contract for two months, for such

m. TO BORROW OR LEND.—A general power to borrow includes power to give ordinary securities for the loan.¹ And a general power to lend will authorize an extension of the time of payment,² but not the receipt of usury.³

VII. MANNER OF EXECUTION OF AUTHORITY—1. General Rule.—The functions of an agent being to represent and act for his principal, he should so execute his authority as to accomplish the same result as would have been effected had the principal himself acted in person; and this result should be a contract mutually binding on his principal and the party with whom he contracts, and not binding on himself.⁴ To accomplish this the agent must act in person,⁵ and within the authority conferred upon him.⁶ Presuming that he has done this, it remains to consider the formal execution of his contracts in behalf of his principal.

2. Formal Execution—a. GENERAL RULE.—The intent of the parties, as legally evidenced by the terms of the contract itself, is always the governing consideration in determining who is bound by the contract; hence a contract by an agent should be in the name of his principal, so as to show beyond question that it is the principal who contracts, and not the agent.⁷ The is not an unusual hiring. Decker v. Hassel, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 528.

Where a party purchased a fruit store and authorized an agent to employ a clerk at eleven dollars a week, nothing being said as to the time, it was held that a hiring for six months exceeded the agent's authority. Pasco v. Smith, 49 Conn. 576.

Duties of Employee.—An authority to employ does not include the power to allow an employee to engage in other business antagonistic to the interest of the principal. Adams Express Co. v. Trego, 35 Md. 47.

When Authority Not Implied.—An authority to collect the rents of a building gives no authority to employ an engineer to take charge of the engine in such building. Crozier v. Reins, 4 Ill. App. 564.

Unauthorized Payment.—Where an agent is authorized to employ a lawyer and pay him in money, and pays part of his fee in money and the residue in land belonging to the principal, the agreement does not bind the principal to convey the land. Ross v. Daviess, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 383.

A Note in the Name of the Principal given by a duly authorized agent to the person employed by him is evidence of the fact and the amount of the principal's indebtedness. Chorpenning v. Royce, 58 Pa. St. 474.

1. Hatch v. Coddington, 95 U. S. 48; Posner v. Bayless, 59 Md. 56. And see Burnet v. Boyd, 60 Miss. 627.

A general agent for buying and selling cannot, without special authority, resort to extraordinary and expensive means to raise money for his principal. Shaw v. Stone, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 228.

Cannot Raise Money for Himself.—But the delivery of a deed running to a third person, to an agent to raise money for the grantor, does not clothe him with apparent authority to deliver it to such person as security for a loan or advance to himself, the purpose of which is known to the grantee. Hubback v. Ross, 96 Cal. 426.

2. Hurd v. Marple, 2 Ill. App. 402.

When Authority to Loan on Usury Presumed.—In Rogers v. Buckingham, 33 Conn. 81, it was said that authority to make a usurious loan will not be presumed where the agency is special and limited to a single transaction, though it may be presumed where the agency is general and embraces the business of making, managing, and collecting the loans of a moneyed man; but it is a presumption of fact which may be rebutted.

And in Stevens v. Meers, 11 Ill. App. 138, it was held that where a general agent to make loans exacts usury, the principal is presumed to have known and authorized it. See the title USURY.

3. Gokey v. Knapp, 44 Iowa 32; Dryfus v. Burnes, 53 Fed. Rep. 410.

Principal Not Responsible for Usury of Agent.

—If the principal has no knowledge that a higher rate of interest is charged than that allowed by law, and does not receive any of the excess, he is not responsible for the usury. Boylston v. Bain, 90 Ill. 283. And hence he is not responsible where the agent, without his authority or knowledge, charges a bonus for himself in addition to the legal rate of interest. New England Mortg. Security Co. v. Gay, 33 Fed. Rep. 636; Bell v. Day, 32 N. Y. 165; Condit v. Baldwin, 21 N. Y. 219, 78 Am. Dec. 137.

Where the loan is made under an arrangement between the lender and the agent that the latter is to charge the borrower a bonus for his services, the contract will be usurious. Payne v. Newcomb, 100 Ill. 611, 39 Am. Rep. 69. See also Lewis v. Willoughby, 43 Minn. 307.

modifications and exceptions to this rule, when applied to different classes of contracts, will appear under subsequent subsections.

General Rule—Intention.—In Hunter v. Miller, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 612, the rule is stated thus: "The attorney should act in the name of his principal, and not in his own name merely. There is no inflexible rule as to the mode in which this is to be done; and when both names are to be used both in the caption or body and signature of the instrument, it is a question of intention and construction, whether the act is done, or the engagement made, in the name of the principal or of the agent. The terms of the covenant itself are commonly decisive as to intention. The description in the caption and the mode of signature are referred to, either as aids in discovering the intention, or as determining whether the form of the instrument corresponds with this intention, so as that it may be carried out. If, in view of all its parts, the instrument can be regarded as the deed or covenant of the party intended to be bound, it must, on principle, be so regarded. There is, we believe, no difference of opinion with regard to the propriety of these positions, though there doubtless may be in their application."

"Principal by Agent"—"Agent for Principal."—When these circumstances concur it is immaterial in what form the signature is, whether "Principal by Agent"

Illustrations.—In Carter v. Doe, 21 Ala. 72, a deed began: "This indenture, made and entered into between Joshua Kennedy and S. H. Garrow, both of Mobile city," etc., "of the first part, and Daniel Duval of the county and territory aforesaid, of the other part, witnesseth:" Following this was the recital of a power of attorney. The granting clause purported to be by Joshua Kennedy, by his attorney, S. H. Garrow. The deed proceeded in the name of Joshua Kennedy alone, and concluded: "In witness whereof the parties have hereunto set their hands and seals. * * * S. H. Garrow [seal], attorney in fact for J. Kennedy." The court recognized the rule laid down in the text, and construed the deed to be sufficiently executed to bind the principal. See also Crutcher v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 38 Ala. 579.

In Kansas City v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 77 Mo. 180, there was offered in evidence a deed in the following form: "Know all men by these presents that the West Kansas Land Company, by Solomon Houck, president, and Theodore S. Case, secretary, has granted," etc. "In witness whereof we hereunto subscribe our names and affix our seals." Following the attestation clause were four seals, opposite the first of which there appeared no signature. The remaining seals were affixed to the signatures of the president and secretary above named, and the W. K. Land Co. The acknowledgment was in effect that S. Houck, president, and Theodore S. Case, secretary, acknowledged that they executed and delivered the deed as their voluntary act and deed. It was held that it was the deed of the corporation.

In Magill v. Hinsdale, 6 Conn. 464, 16 Am. Dec. 70, there was in evidence a deed of the following form: "A. W. M., agent for the M. M. Co., being empowered by a vote of said company, in pursuance of said power, * * * do give, grant, etc. And I do hereby covenant for and in behalf of said M. M. Co. * * * that * * * said M. M. Co. is well seised * * * and I do also bind said M. M. Co. to warrant," etc. This deed was conditioned to be void on payment of sundry notes then due and payable by the M. M. Co., and concluded: "In witness whereof, I have hereto, for and in behalf of said M. M. Co., set my hand and seal. * * * A. W. M. [L. s.], agent for the M. M. Co." It was held that the instrument was well executed as the deed of the company.

In Butterfield v. Beall, 3 Ind. 203, Beall filed a bill in chancery, from which it appeared that there was executed to him a deed in form as follows: "This indenture, made * * * between J. C. W., * * * attorney in fact for A. B. and R. B., * * * parties of the first part, and J. B., * * * of the second part, witnesseth, that the said J. C. W., party of the first part, * * * hath granted," etc. "In witness whereof the said J. C. W., attorney, hath hereunto set their hands and seals. * * * A. B. [seal], * * * R. B. [seal]. * * * By J. C. W. [seal], their attorney in fact." It was held that the parties were bound by it. The court said that the deed, "though very inartificially drawn, we have determined, not, however, without a good deal of hesitation, should be held operative to the extent of the power that had been legally conveyed to him. * * * It was Wright's intention to act under the power granted him; and justice will be promoted and litigation, perhaps, saved by holding the deed operative."

In Northwestern Distilling Co. v. Brant, 69 Ill. 658, 18 Am. Rep. 631, an action of covenant was brought on a lease in which "Edward F. Lawrence, president of the Northwestern Distilling Company," appeared as party of the second part. Throughout, the parties were mentioned as of the first or second part, and the pronoun "he" was everywhere used in referring to the party of the second part. The instrument concluded: "In testimony whereof the said parties have hereunto set their hands and seals," and was signed "Northwestern Distilling Co. [seal], by Edward Lawrence, president." It was held that the lease was well executed and binding on the company, and not on Lawrence personally. See also Shanks v. Lancaster, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 110, 50 Am. Dec. 108.

Most Approved Form of Execution.—The most usual and approved form of executing a deed by attorney is by his writing the name of the principal and adding, "by A B, his attorney;" or, "by his attorney, A B." But this is not the only form of execution which will make the deed the act of the principal. Wilburn v. Larkin, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 55; Patterson v. Henry, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 127; Mussey v. Scott, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 215, 54 Am. Dec. 719; Farmers', etc., Bank v. Troy City Bank, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 457; Berkey v. Judd, 22 Minn. 287; Spencer v. Field, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 88.

One Seal Sufficient for Several Principals.—Where an attorney executes an instrument under seal for several parties, one seal will be sufficient for a valid execution as to all, if it appears that the intention of each was to adopt the seal as his own. Ball v. Dunster-ville, 4 T. R. 313; M'Dill v. M'Dill, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 63; Bohannons v. Lewis, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 376; Stabler v. Cowman, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 284; Yarborough v. Monday, 2 Dev. (N. Car.) 493.

Rule in Equity.—An agreement under seal made by an attorney for his principal, though inoperative at law for want of formal execu-or "Agent for Principal;"¹ indeed it is not necessary that the agent's name appear at all,² especially where the instrument recites the fact that it is executed by an agent,³ or where it is executed in the presence and by the direction of the principal.⁴

Statutes.—A less vigorous application prevails in some states, owing to statutory modifications.⁵

(2) Imperfect Execution—(a) Agent Bound—Agent Using Apt Words to Charge Himself.—An agent who executes a sealed instrument in his own name, using apt words to charge himself, fails to bind his principal, and is personally liable on the contract,⁶ though he adds to his name descriptive words indicating that he

tion in the name of the principal, is binding in equity if the attorney had authority. Love v. Sierra Nevada Lake Water, etc., Co., 32 Cal. 652, 91 Am. Dec. 602; Johnson v. Johnson, 1 Dana (Ky.) 364; McNaughten v. Part-ridge, 11 Ohio 223, 38 Am. Dec. 731; Giddens v. Byers, 12 Tex. 75; Daughtry v. Knolle, 44 Tex. 450; Traynham v. Jackson, 15 Tex. 170, 65 Am. Dec. 152.

And likewise a deed executed by an agent, though defective and inoperative to convey the property, will be enforced as an agreement to convey in equity. Salmon v. Hoffman, 2 Cal. 138; 56 Am. Dec. 322; Gerdes v. Moody, 41 Cal. 335; Colsten v. Chaudet, 4 Bush (Ky.) 675; Welsh v. Usher, 2 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 167, 29 Am. Dec. 63.

Arkansas.—In Arkansas private seals have been abolished by statute, and there is no longer any distinction between instruments under seal and not under seal, so that a lease executed by an agent in his own name will be treated as the contract of the principal, if the intention to bind the principal is apparent. *Gibbs v. Personal Covenant of Agent Followed by Repugnant Proviso.—In Furnivall v. Coombes, 5 M. & G. 736, 44 E. C. L. 384, four persons covenanted in such a manner as to bind themselves personally. The covenant was followed by the proviso "that nothing in these presents contained shall extend to, or be deemed, adjudged, construed, or taken to extend to, any personal covenant of or obligation upon * * * several * * * parties thereto of the third part, or in any wise personally affect them, any or either of them * * * or their executors, administrators, goods, effects, or estates, in their present capacity; but shall be and is intended to be binding and obligatory upon churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of," etc., "and their successors for the time being as such churchwardens and overseers of the poor, but no further, or otherwise." It was held that the covenant was a personal covenant, and that the proviso, being repugnant thereto, was void.

Exception—Seal Surplusage.—In Stowell v. Eldred, 39 Wis. 614, an agreement under seal, executed by an agent in his own name without disclosing his principal, but which was in fact made on behalf of the principal, was held to be the agreement of the principal. The court said: "So many exceptions to the last rule have been made in modern times by the courts, that the rule seems to operate at the present time within quite narrow limits. One of these exceptions, sanctioned by reason and authority, is, that if the instrument would be valid without a seal, then, although executed under seal, it is to be treated as written evidence of a simple contract, and the seal adds nothing to it;" citing the opinion of Senator Verplanck in Evans v. Wells, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 341. See also Kirschbon v. Bonzel, 67 Wis. 178; Steele v. McElroy, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 341.

But see Schaefer v. Henkel, 75 N. Y. 378, where the court, in considering a similar contract, said: "It is therefore settled law, that in order to take a case out of the general rule, where the contract is one which is valid without a seal, and the seal is therefore of no account, it must appear that the contract was really made on behalf of the principal, from the instrument, and that the party derived benefit from and accepted and confirmed it by acts on his part." To the same effect see Simpson v. New York, etc., R. Co., 51 N. Y. Super. Ct. 419; Briggs v. Partridge, 64 N. Y. 357, 21 Am. Rep. 617.

That Agent and Not Principal is Bound a Mere Presumption—In Abrams v. Musgrove, 12 Pa.

Likewise, a Mere Recital of Authority in the instrument will not relieve the agent of the liability which he has incurred by contracting in his own name.¹

(b) Agent Not Bound.—It does not necessarily follow that a contract made by an authorized agent, which does not bind the principal, becomes the agent's contract and makes him liable if it is not performed. This depends upon the legal effect of the terms of the contract; and if there are no apt words to charge the agent he cannot be held liable, though by reason of defective execution he has failed to give a right of action against his principal on the contract.²

St. 292, a judgment bond in form, "I, Jacob Johnson, guardian of Gabriel Abrams, * * * am held and firmly bound," etc., and signed "Jacob Johnson, guardian" [seal], was held not to render Johnson personally liable, it appearing in the evidence that the instrument was signed in the presence and by the direction of Abrams, who was himself stricken with palsy and unable to rise from his bed. The court said: "Every presumption of law must give way to facts. The general rule, to be sure, is, that a deed signed by an agent and sealed with his own seal, is his deed; but there are exceptions. The law raises a presumption that he intended to bind himself. For if it is not his deed, it is the deed of nobody. But if, from the nature and terms of the instrument, it appears that the party is an agent and that he means to bind his principal, and to act for him and not on his own account, the law will give the paper that intendment to carry out the actual meaning of the parties, however inartificial the language may be. And there is no difference on this point whether the instrument be a deed or an unsealed contract."

In Potts v. Lazarus, 2 Law Repos. (N. Car.) 83, a charter-party entered into by the defendant, describing himself in every part of the instrument, and signing and sealing as agent of another, was held to be the contract of his principal. The court cited two decisions as establishing the rule governing the case—Unwin v. Wolseley, 1 T. R. 674, and Hodgson v. Dexter, 1 Cranch (U. S.) 345. But it is to be noted that in both of these cases the instruments were executed by public agents, and a different rule recognized as applying to agents of individuals; and this fact is commented upon and the authority of this case questioned in Godley v. Taylor, 3 Dev. (N. Car.) 178.

cipal by his agent, but is signed by the agent in his own name, with his seal attached, neither principal nor agent is liable on the contract itself as a sealed instrument.

Restrictive Words.—Where an executor made a conveyance of his testator's land in his capacity as executor, "and not otherwise," it was held that he was not liable personally on the covenants, though they did not bind his testator's estate. Thayer v. Wendell, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 37.

Where an agent contracting for the principals agreed for the relinquishment of a title which he professed not to hold, but recited to be in his principals, and which he stipulated that his principals should release upon the payment of a certain sum, the contract was held not to be binding on the agent personally, though on its face it purported to be between F. M. of the one part and W. H., agent for T., and was signed "W. H. for [seal] T." Hunter v. Miller, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 612.

Principal, a Corporation, Liable in Assumpsit.—

Where the authorized agent of a corporation attaches his own seal to a contract instead of the corporate seal, the corporation may be held liable in assumpsit or other form of action. McCauley v. Jenney, 5 Houst. (Del.) 32; Sherman v. Fitch, 98 Mass. 59; Blanchard v. Blackstone, 102 Mass. 343; Cook v. Gray, 133 Mass. 106; Dubois v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 4 Wend. (N. And in Whitford v. Laidler, 94 N. Y. 145, 46 Am. Rep. 131, the rule was extended to include an indenture in which the defendants were severally described as president, vice-president, etc., "being a board of managers of" a named society. The lease was to the defendants "and their successors in office," and was under their individual signatures and seals. It was held that the defendants were not personally liable, and that the corporation, though not liable in a technical action of covenant, by reason of the absence of a corporate seal, might be held liable in an action of assumpsit for use and occupation.

(c) Conveyances of Estates.—There is no distinction to be made between the execution of conveyances and other sealed instruments, by agents, so far as the formalities, which are required in order that the principal may be bound, are concerned.¹ But, owing to the very nature of the contract, a conveyance of the principal's estate in lands, by the agent, improperly executed, can pass no title, and the deed to that extent is void.² However, if the deed contains personal covenants in the name of the agent, he will be individually liable thereon.³

In Randall v. Van Vechten, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 60, 10 Am. Dec. 193, Platt, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It is important here to remark the difference between a corporation and an individual person, acting by an agent. In the one case there is a corporate seal, which is the only organ by which the body politic can covenant. The seals of these defendants are not, in any sense, the seals of the corporation, but the seal of an agent for an individual person, as his principal, is, in law, the seal of his principal; and therefore it is that the form of action against the principal, in the one case (that of a corporation) is not determined by the form in which the agent contracts, while in the other case (that of an individual) the action against the principal must correspond with the form by which the agent contracts, whether by seal or by simple contract." See also Damon v. Granby, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 345.

Assignment of Corporation Pursuant to Vote of Directors.—In Sargent v. Webster, 13 Met. (Mass.) 497, 46 Am. Dec. 743, an insolvent corporation by a vote of its directors authorized the treasurer to assign all of the property to a creditor of the corporation. The assignment was made and executed in the name of the treasurer and under his seal. The assignment was held to be well executed. Shaw, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "If a deed were necessary, in this case, to pass the property, there would be great weight in this objection [to the execution of the assignment]; but the vote of the directors was in effect an agreement of transfer when accepted by the plaintiff, and the effect of the assignment of the treasurer, who had the care and control of all the property, was little more than to hand the property over, pursuant to the vote."

Unauthorized Seal.—Where an agent without authority under seal enters into a contract for his principal, affixing a seal, the seal may be rejected and the contract, if it is not such as to require a sealed instrument, may be treated as a simple contract. Tapley

c. NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS—(1) Application of General Rule.—A less strict application of the general rule governing the execution of authority by agents is required in regard to bills and notes than in regard to sealed instruments.¹ But in order to exempt the agent from liability, he must not only name his principal, but he must express by some form of words that the writing is the act of the principal, though done by the hand of the agent.² If he expresses this, the principal is bound and the agent is not.³

Illustration.—In North v. Henneberry, 44 Wis. 306, there was offered in evidence a deed which purported to be by "Edward Henneberry, attorney in fact, and by virtue of a power of attorney, etc., of the first part," and which concluded: "In testimony whereof the said party of the first part has hereunto set his hand and seal the day and year first above written. This deed is made by virtue of said power of attorney." The deed was originally signed "Edward Henneberry, [L. s.]." The execution was afterwards altered so as to read as follows: "William Powers [L. s.], B. his attorney in fact, Edward Henneberry [L. s.]." The acknowledgment was to the effect that the above-named Edward Henneberry acknowledged that he executed the foregoing instrument. It was held that the deed was the deed of Henneberry, and that he was bound by the covenant therein contained, and that after-acquired title to the land conveyed enured to the benefit of his grantee. As to the alteration, it was held that its effect was to change the whole character of the deed. By the alteration the deed, which was a deed of Henneberry personally, became the deed of his principal.

A note in form, "We, the trustees of the Descriptive Persons.—But a mere description of the general relation which the person signing the paper holds to another, without indicating that the particular signature is made in the execution of the agency, is not sufficient to charge the principal or to exempt the agent from personal liability.¹

First, etc., Society, promise to pay," and signed, "Trustees of the First, etc., Society," followed by the individual names of the trustees, binds the trustees in their corporate capacity, and not personally. New Market Sav. Bank v. Gillet, 100 Ill. 254, 39 Am. Rep. 39.

In Falk v. Moebs, 127 U. S. 597, a promissory note signed, "Peninsula Cigar Company; G. M., secretary and treasurer," payable to the order of "G. M., secretary and treasurer," and indorsed "G. M., secretary and treasurer," was held to be made, payable to, and indorsed by the corporation.

But the decisions are not in complete accord. Thus in M'Bean v. Morrison, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 545, where a note beginning, "I promise," and signed, "for the M. H. & F. S. Co., W. McB., president," was held to be the individual note of McB.

And in Heffner v. Brownell, 70 Iowa 591, a promissory note in form, "We promise to pay, etc.," was signed "Independence Manuf. Co.," and directly underneath, "A., president." The court held that there was nothing to show that A. was president of the company, and he, as well as the company, was bound.

Consideration Moving to Principal.—Where it appears from the face of a negotiable instrument that the consideration moved to the principal, the principal alone will be bound. Thus a note "to be paid out of the township funds," signed "A., trustee of J. township," is the contract of the township, and not of A. personally. Wallis v. Johnson School Tp., 75 Ind. 368.

In Taylor v. Williams, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 489, a bill drawn by "George W. Williams, G. W. P.," and attested by "L. Hord, G. S.," on "Thomas B. Posey, treasurer grand division of Kentucky," concluded: "In full of copies of * * * New Era ordered to be sent General D. G. W. Patriarchs," etc. It was held that the draft was drawn by the corporation, and that Williams was not personally liable thereon. See also McHenry v. Duffield, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 41; Dow v. Moore, 47 N. H. 419; Horton v. Garrison, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 176; Haskell v. Cornish, 13 Cal. 45; Lindus v. Melrose, 2 H. & N. 293; Carson v. Lucas, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 213; Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Snead, 19 Gratt. (Va.) 354, 100 Am. Dec. 670.

And in Mann v. Chandler, 9 Mass. 335, notes in form, "I, the subscriber, treasurer of the D. T. Corporation, promise, etc.," and signed "G. L. C., treasurer of the D. T. Corporation," were held to bind the corporation, and not the treasurer personally. The case was before the court on an agreed statement of facts, from which it appeared that the corporation was indebted to the plaintiff to the amount of the notes at the time they were given, and that they were given for that debt.

Contra.—But in Anderson v. Pearce, 36

Ark. 293, 38 Am. Rep. 39, a note given "for work done on Hazel Valley School-house," and signed by two persons with the word "committee" following their names, was held to be the individual note of the signers. And see Bingham v. Kimball, 17 Ind. 396.

Signature Followed by Official Designation—

Maker.—A note in form "I promise to pay," and signed "J. S., trustee S. Railroad," is the individual note of the signer. Fiske v. Eldridge, 12 Gray (Mass.) 474. See also McClure v. Livermore, 78 Me. 390; Sturdivant v. Hull, 59 Me. 172, 8 Am. Rep. 409; Sheridan v. Carpenter, 61 Me. 83; Barker v. Mechanic F. Ins. Co., 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 94; Exchange Bank v. Lewis County, 28 W. Va. 273; Rupert v. Madden, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 146; Gaff v. Theis, 33 Ind. 307; Hobbs v. Cowden, 20 Ind. 310.

And so where a note was in form "We promise to pay," and signed "A., Treas. St. S., etc., Fund," it was held that A. was the maker and individually liable. Sumwalt v. Ridgely, 20 Md. 114. But see Ballou v. Talbot, 16 Mass. 461, 8 Am. Dec. 146, where it was held that the agent was not personally liable on a note signed in the form "A., agent for B." See also Rawlings v. Robson, 70 Ga. 595; Wheelock v. Winslow, 15 Iowa 464; Despatch Line of Packets v. Bellamy Mfg. Co., 12 N. H. 205, 37 Am. Dec. 203.

In Early v. Wilkinson, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 68, an action was brought by the payer against the maker of a note in form, "I promise to pay, etc., (signed) Robert Early [for Sam'l Early]." It was held that the signature without the brackets would have rendered it doubtful whom the parties intended to bind, but that the addition of the brackets was sufficient to remove all doubt, and disclose an intention on the face of the instrument to bind Robert Early.

(2) Signature in Agent's Name.—Whatever the authority the signer of a negotiable note may have to bind another, if he signs merely his own name either as maker, drawer, or acceptor he will be personally liable if there are apt words in the instrument to charge him,¹ even though he appears in the body

In Scott v. Baker, 3 W. Va. 285, a note in form, "We promise to pay," and signed, "W. S., pres't B. A. Co.; W. H., treasurer," was held to be the individual note of the signers.

Joint Note.—Where several persons signed a note in the usual form, "We promise to pay," describing themselves as "trustees of the G. Lodge, etc.," they were held to be personally liable as makers. McClellan v. Robe, 93 Ind. 298. See also Coburn v. Omega Lodge, 71 Iowa 581; Hayes v. Matthews, 63 Ind. 412, 30 Am. Rep. 226; Burlingame v. Brewster, 79 Ill. 515, 22 Am. Rep. 177; Tilden v. Barnard, 43 Mich. 376, 38 Am. Rep. 197.

And in Mears v. Graham, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 144, a note in part, "We, the trustees of the M. E. Church, promise to pay," and signed by several persons with the addition of the words, "Trustees M. E. Church," was held to be the individual obligation of the persons signing. See also Powers v. Briggs, 79 Ill. 493, 22 Am. Rep. 175.

But in Farmers', etc., Sav. Bank v. Colby, 64 Cal. 352, a note in form, "We promise to pay," and signed by two persons describing themselves as "Pres't Pac., etc., Co.," and "Sec. pro tem.," was held to be the note of the company.

Joint and Several Note.—In Savage v. Rix, 9 N. H. 263, a note in form, "We jointly and severally promise to pay, in official capacity," and signed by several persons with the addition, "Whitfield Road Committee," was held to bind the signers individually.

In Whitney v. Sudduth, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 296, a note in form: "We, or either of us, directors of the T. Company, promise," and signed by one person describing himself as "president," and four others in their own names without addition, was held to bind the signers personally. See also Bradlee v. Boston Glass Manufactory, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 347; Titus v. Kyle, 10 Ohio St. 444; Trask v. Roberts, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 201; Healey v. Story, 3 Exch. 3; Bottomley v. Fisher, 1 H. & C. 211.

But in Harvey v. Irvine, 11 Iowa 82, a note in form, "We, or either of us, promise to pay in behalf of the School District No. 6, etc.," and signed by three persons, describing themselves as president, secretary, and treasurer, respectively, was held to be the note of the school district.

And in Rice v. Gove, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 158, 33 Am. Dec. 724, a note beginning "We jointly and severally promise to pay," and signed "P. & J. for G.," was construed to be the note of G.

Acceptor.—A bill of exchange drawn on "J. R. L., Pres't Rosendale Man'f'g Co.," and accepted in the same form, is the individual acceptance of "J. R. L." Moss v. Livingston, 4 N. Y. 209. See also Tousey v. Taw, 19 Ind. 212.

In Robinson v. Kanawha Valley Bank, 44 Ohio St. 441, 58 Am. Rep. 829, a bill of exchange drawn by the "K. & O. Coal Co." on

"J. A. R., agent," and accepted in form "J. A. R., agent K. & O. C. Co.," was held to bind "J. A. R." personally as acceptor.

Note, for Premium on Insurance, Reciting Number of Policy.—Where a note, given for premiums on insurance, and reciting the number of the policy, was in form, "We promise to pay," and signed by three persons describing themselves as president, secretary, and director, respectively, it was held that the signers were individually liable as makers, and that the fact that the policy recited in the note was issued to the school district of which they were officers was not sufficient to alter the legal effect of the note. American Ins. Co. v. Stratton, 59 Iowa 696. See also Haverhill Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Newhall, 1 Allen (Mass.) 130.

Rule in Connecticut.—The Connecticut courts have adopted a rule less exacting in its requirements than that stated in the text.

In Johnson v. Smith, 21 Conn. 627, a note in the usual form, signed by three persons, to whose signatures were annexed the words, "Vestrymen of the Episcopal Society," was held to be the note of the society, and not binding on the signers individually.

In Shelton v. Darling, 2 Conn. 435, a bill of exchange drawn on N. D., agent of a commission company, and accepted "N. D., agent of the C. C.," was held to be the acceptance of the company, and not binding on N. D. personally.

In Hovey v. Magill, 2 Conn. 680, a note in form, "I promise to pay," etc., was signed "A., agent for M. M. Co." It was held that A. was not personally liable, parol evidence being admitted to show that he had been in the constant habit of so signing notes for the company with their knowledge.

Direction to "Charge to Account."—Where an agent draws a bill of exchange in his own name without stating that he acts as agent, the direction to charge the amount of the of the instrument as acting as agent, or for and on behalf of another.¹ An apparent exception arises where the principal has adopted the agent's name as his own; the principal will then be bound by such contracts.² But the liability exists only where it is affirmatively and satisfactorily proved that the name or signature thus used is one which has been assumed and sanctioned as indicative of his contracts, and has been with his knowledge and consent adopted as a substitute for his own name and signature.³

account to another is not sufficient to exempt him from personal liability. Mayhew v. Prince, 11 Mass. 54; Bank of British North America v. Hooper, 5 Gray (Mass.) 567, 66 Am. Dec. 390; Newhall v. Dunlap, 14 Me. 180, 31 Am. Dec. 45; Snow v. Goodrich, 14 Me. 235; Goupy v. Harden, 7 Taunt. 159; Leadbitter v. Farrow, 5 M. & S. 345. Compare Maher v. Overton, 9 La. 115.

But where in addition to this the relation of agency is disclosed, as by the addition of the word "agent" to the signature, the principal alone is liable. Tripp v. Swanzy Paper Mfg. Co., 13 Pick. (Mass.) 291; Davis v. Henderson, 25 Miss. 549, 59 Am. Dec. 229; Witte v. Derby Fishing Co., 2 Conn. 260.

New York.—Barker v. Mechanic F. Ins. Co., 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 94.

Illustration.—In Thomas v. Bishop, 2 Stra. 955, a bill of exchange drawn on Mr. H. B., cashier of the York Buildings Company, at their house in W., by the York Buildings Company, and accepted by writing "accepted per H. B.," was held to bind H. B. personally, and not the company. The court said: "A bill of exchange is a contract by the custom of merchants, and the whole of that contract must appear in writing. Now, here is nothing in writing to bind the company, nor can any action be maintained against them upon the bill; for the addition of cashier to the defendant's name is only to denote the person with more certainty, and the York Buildings house is only to inform the order where the drawee is to be found; and the direction whose account to place it is for the use of the drawee only." See also Lallerstedt v. Griffin, 29 Ga. 708.

In an action by the indorsee of a bill of exchange drawn on "the agent and owners of the barque Endeavor" and accepted by the agent in his own name, it was held that the agent alone was liable as acceptor. Taber v. Cannon, 8 Met. (Mass.) 456.

Intention—Principal Only Bound.—In Aggs v. Nicholson, 1 H. & N. 165, a note in part, "We, two of the directors of the Ark, etc., Assurance Society, by and on behalf of the said society, do hereby promise to pay," and signed by two persons by their fixing their own signatures merely, was held to be the note of the society, and not binding on the makers personally.

And in Baker v. Chables, 4 Greene (Iowa) 428, an action was brought on a note in part, "We, the undersigned directors of School District No. 4, Montpelier township, promise," etc., which was signed by three persons without addition to their signatures, and it was held that the signers were not personally liable. The court said: "The rule is well settled that if the name of the principal and the relation of agency be stated in the writing, and the agent is authorized to make the contract or obligation, the principal alone is bound unless the intention is clearly expressed to bind the agent personally. * * * It is true, as claimed by counsel, that in deciding whether a party contracts personally or as agent the presumption is in favor of the former. It is obvious that a party should be personally bound unless his agency is disclosed. But it is equally true, in deciding whether an apparent agent intends to bind himself or his principal, the presumption is that he intended to bind his principal, because the agent should not be personally bound unless that intention is expressed in the contract." See also Lyon v. Adamson, 7 Iowa 509; Sanborn v. Neal, 4 Minn. 126, 77 Am. Dec. 502.

Statutory Modification—Maine.—In Maine, where the body of the instrument purports to be in behalf of the principal, he will be bound though the agent sign in his own name; but a mere description, such as "We, the trustees of W. Co., promise," is not sufficient to render the principal liable. The common-law rule is modified by statute in Maine. Simpson v. Garland, 72 Me. 40, 39 Am. Rep. 297; Fogg v. Virgin, 19 Me. 352, 36 Am. Dec. 757. See also Sheridan v. Carpenter, 61 Me. 83.

(3) Signature in Principal's Name.—As a matter of convenience in preserving testimony, it may be well that the names of all parties who are in any way connected with a written instrument should appear upon the instrument itself.¹ It is not essential, however, to the valid execution of a bill or note by an agent, that the agent's name appear; he may sign the principal's name only.²

(4) Undisclosed Principal.—Where an agent executes a negotiable instrument in his own name throughout, disclosing neither the principal nor the relation of agency otherwise than by the addition of the word "agent" or some similar designation, the agent alone is liable on the contract.³

(Mass.) 337; Williams v. Robbins, 16 Gray (Mass.) 77, 77 Am. Dec. 396.

West Virginia.—Devendorf v. West Virginia Oil, etc., Co., 17 W. Va. 135.

This is but an application of the general rule that a person may become a party to a contract by any mark or designation he chooses to adopt, provided it be used as a substitute for his name and he intends to be bound by it. DeWitt v. Walton, 9 N. Y. 571; Brown v. Butcher, etc., Bank, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 443, 41 Am. Dec. 755; Rogers v. Coit, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 322; Alabama Coal Min. Co. v. Brainard, 35 Ala. 476. See also the title NAMES.

Not Necessary that Principal's Name Appear in Signature.—Where the instrument purports in its body to be the obligation of the principal, it is not essential that his name appear in the signature. A note reading "The President and Directors of the Woodstock Glass Co. promise to pay," etc., and signed "W. Hicks, President," binds the company, and not Hicks individually. Mott v. Hicks, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 513, 13 Am. Dec. 550. See also Lander v. Castro, 43 Cal. 497; Farmers', etc., Bank v. Colby, 64 Cal. 354; Bean v. Pioneer Min. Co., 66 Cal. 455, 56 Am. Rep. 106; *Shaver v. Ocean Min. Unincorporated Association Principal.—Where a note purported in its body to be the promise of an unincorporated association by the associate name adopted in the by-laws, and was signed by a person describing himself as "treasurer," it was held that the members of the association were liable on the note. *Walker v. (5) Principal Impliedly Disclosed—Name Printed on the Instrument.—Where the principal's name appears, printed in the margin or head of a bill or note executed by an agent, the former is sufficiently designated to put a prudent man upon inquiry and to take the case out of the rule in regard to an undisclosed principal.¹

Corporate Seal.—And a corporate seal bearing the name of the corporation has a like effect when attached to a negotiable instrument.²

(6) Agent as Payee and Indorser.—The general principles governing the execution of negotiable instruments by an agent as maker, drawer, or acceptor are alike applicable where the agent is payee or indorser. So if in a note or bill there are added to the name of the payee words denoting agency or official character, such words are deemed merely descriptive, and the note or bill is payable to the payee thus described personally,³ and when so in-

Agent Liable after the Determination of the Agency.—A note in form "I promise to pay," and signed by a person with the word "agent" after his name, binds the agent personally though the agency is determined before the note becomes due. Hall v. Bradbury, 40 Conn. 32.

Express Exclusion of Liability.—A promissory note in part, "We, as trustees, but not individually, promise to pay," and signed by three persons with the word trustees after their names, does not bind them personally. The court declared it unnecessary under the circumstances to determine whether or not the principals were liable on the instrument. Shoe, etc., Nat. Bank v. Dix, 123 Mass. 148, 25 Am. Rep. 49. And see Leach v. Blow, 8 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 221.

1. Name of Principal Printed on Margin, etc.—In Fuller v. Hooper, 3 Gray (Mass.) 334, a draft concluding, "Place to the account of Pompton Iron Works, W. Burke, agent," and having "Pompton Iron Works" printed on the margin, was held to be a draft of the Pompton Iron Works. And see Carpenter v. Farnsworth, 106 Mass. 561, 8 Am. Rep. 360.

But in Casco Nat. Bank v. Clark, 139 N. Y. 307, a note signed by the president and the secretary of a corporation to whose signatures were added their respective titles, was held to bind the signers personally, although the name of the corporation was printed on the margin of the paper. And see Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Clark, 139 N. Y. 314.

In Chipman v. Foster, 119 Mass. 189, a bill of exchange headed "New England Agency of the Pennsylvania Fire Insurance Co.," and having printed on the margin, "Foster and Cole, general agents of the New England States," appeared on its face to be drawn by Foster and Cole without addition to their signatures; it further appeared from the instrument that it was drawn on the Pennsylvania Fire Insurance Co. in payment of a claim against them. It was held that the company were liable on the bill, and not Foster and Cole.

In Slawson v. Loring, 5 Allen (Mass.) 340, 81 Am. Dec. 750, a bill of exchange was headed, "Office of the T. L. Manufacturing Company." The draft concluded, "Charge the same to the account of this company," and was signed "I. R. J., agent." It was held to be a draft of the company. See also

In Lacy v. Dubuque Lumber Co., 43 Iowa 510, a note headed "Office of Dubuque Lumber Company" and in form "I promise to pay" was signed "W. H. Moore, P. D. L. Co." It was held to be the note of the company, and not binding on Moore personally.

A bill of exchange headed "Lake Bigler Road Co.," drawn by "Butler Ives, superintendent," on "J. E. Garrett, secretary," and accepted "J. E. Garrett, secretary L. B. R. Co.," is accepted by the company. Gillig v. Lake Bigler Road Co., 2 Nev. 214. And see Fitch v. Lawton, 6 How. (Miss.) 371; Van Leuvan v. Kingston First Nat. Bank, 6 Lans. (N. 2. In Scanlan v. Keith, 102 Ill. 640, 40 Am. Rep. 624, a note in form "we promise to pay" was signed by a person describing himself as the "Pres't Chicago, etc., Co.," and bore the corporate seal of the company, attested by the secretary. It was held to be the note of the corporation. See also Means v. Swormstedt, 32 Ind. 87, 2 Am. Rep. 330; Miller v. Roach, 150 Mass. 140; Guthrie v. Imbrie, 12 Oregon 182, 53 Am. Contra.—In an action on a note payable to "C. W. S., treasurer of the I. M. B. Co.," and indorsed in the same manner, the court held that the note was payable to the company, and not to Smith personally. Vater v. Lewis, 36 Ind. 288, 10 Am. Rep. 29.

In Nichols v. Frothingham, 45 Me. 220, 71 Am. Dec. 539, a note payable to "L. M., president of the M., etc., Ins. Co.," was indorsed "M., etc., Ins. Co., by L. M., president." It was held that the insurance company was sufficiently designated as payee. The court said: "It cannot be denied that, if the note was intended to be payable to the order of L. Monson as an individual, and not as president of the company, acting officially, the insertion of such descriptive words was wholly nugatory. Under the circumstances of this case, we cannot doubt that it was the intention of the parties to the note to make it payable to the order of L. Monson as president of the insurance company, and so, by its very terms, the said Monson is distinctly recognized as having official authority to indorse it. Such must have been the mutual understanding of the parties." See also Trustees of Ministerial, etc., Fund v. Parks, 10 Me. 441.

Rule in Equity—Notice.—In Holmes v. Carman, 1 Freem. Ch. (Miss.) 408, it was held that a note payable to "Carman, agent of Floyd," had enough on its face to excite inquiry, and that whatever is sufficient to put a party upon inquiry amounts in equity to notice.

1. Bartlett v. Hawley, 120 Mass. 92; Towne v. Rice, 122 Mass. 67.

Decisions Holding a Contrary Doctrine to that laid down in the text are found. Thus in Bowne v. Douglass, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 312, it was held that where a note was payable to C. D., assignee, and was indorsed "C. D., assignee," C. D. was not personally liable as indorser. The court said that where a note is payable to any one in such qualified manner and he indorses it in the same way, the rule as to descriptio personæ does not hold, but the indorsement is to be considered a qualified indorsement for the purpose of passing the title.

In Merchants' Bank v. Central Bank, 1 Ga. 418, 44 Am. Dec. 665, a bill of exchange payable to Scott Cray, agent, and so indorsed, was held to bind the principal. And see Lockwood v. Coley, 22 Fed. Rep. 192.

In Mott v. Hicks, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 513, 13 Am. Dec. 550, the court held (Savage, C. J., dissenting) that the owner of a note may dispose of it on what terms he pleases, and that a note payable to Israel Horsefield, and indorsed "Israel Horsefield, agent," relieved the payee from personal liability, since he had elected to indorse in the character of agent. In Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, § 302, the author refers to this case as "peculiar," and says: "The case has been quoted as holding that such an indorsement is equivalent to an indorsement without recourse, and it has been so construed by the courts; but we think that it only determines that under the peculiar circumstances it had that effect."

In Babcock v. Beman, 11 N. Y. 200, the court cited and followed the above decision in an action on a note payable to "R. Beman, treasurer," and so indorsed. See also University Bank v. Hamilton, 78 Ga. 312.

In Hicks v. Hinde, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 528, the principle in Mott v. Hicks, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 513, 13 Am. Dec. 550, was applied to the drawer of a bill of exchange, "Jehu Hinde, agent," was held to be restrictive, and not binding personally on Hinde.

Note Payable to A, Agent.—In Davidson v. Dallas, 8 Cal. 227, an action was brought on two notes, one payable to McPherson, son, agent, or order, and the other to McPherson, agent of A. G. Dallas, or order. The court held that it was clear upon the face of the notes that the consideration upon which they were given came from McPherson in his capacity of agent and did not move from him in his personal right, and the error of McPherson in making a note payable to him as agent without disclosing the name of his principal he had the right to cure by indorsement.

Statutory Rule—Georgia.—In the University Bank v. Hamilton, 78 Ga. 312, a note payable to H., president, was indorsed "H., President Princeton Factory." It was held that H. incurred no personal liability on the indorsement. The case was governed by Ga. Code, § 2211, by which it is enacted that "where the agency is known, and the credit is not expressly given to the agent, he is not personally responsible upon the contract. The question to whom the credit is given is a question of fact to be decided by the jury under the circumstances of each case." The court said: "This declaration on its face shows that the agency was known. There is no allegation that the credit was expressly given to Hamilton individually, and therefore by this statute he is not responsible upon this contract." The court then proceeded to consider the question regardless of the statute, and came to the conclusion that H. could limit his liability by indorsing on any terms he saw fit, and that by indorsing the note "President Princeton Factory" he limited his liability to his official character.

Indorsement Sufficient to Transfer Title.—In a note payable to C. B. M., agent, and indorsed "G. Agricultural Works, C. B. M., agent," the indorsement is that of "C. B. M., agent." The rest of the indorsement may be rejected as surplusage, leaving the name of the payee, which is sufficient to transfer the property in the note, whether he was acting as agent of the Granite Agricultural Works or any other party beneficially interested in the transaction. Farmington Sav. Bank v. Fall, 71 Me. 49. See also Mann v. Springfield Second Nat. Bank, 34 Kan. 746.

In Russell v. Folsom, 72 Me. 436, an indorsement, "A, Treas.," on a note payable to a corporation by its corporate name, was held sufficient to pass the title to the note. And see Road, etc., Com'rs v. Shorter, 50 Ga. 489; Chase v. Hathorn, 61 Me. 505; Scott v. Johnson, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 213; Merchants' Bank v. McColl, 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 473; Clark v. Titcomb, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 123.

Where one carries on business on his own account, in the name of a company which has been incorporated but not organized, and receives in such business a promissory note payable to the order of the corporation, he may transfer title to the note by indorsing it in his own name. Bryant v. Eastman, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 111.

The indorsement "A & Co." on a note payable to A is sufficient to pass title to the note. Finch v. DeForest, 16 Conn. 445.

Indorsement without Recourse.—In McIn-

Bank Officers.—The same strictness is not required, however, in the execution of commercial paper by bank officers. A note or bill payable to the cashier of a bank in his official capacity sufficiently shows that the bank is the payee though the name of the bank does not appear;¹ and when similarly indorsed the bank will be bound thereby, and not the cashier personally.²

tire v. Preston, 10 Ill. 48, 48 Am. Dec. 321, a note payable to an insurance company was indorsed "Without recourse, Joel Scott, Sec'y," and it was held that the indorsement was sufficient to pass the legal interest in the note. After establishing the necessary authority in the corporation and Scott, the court said: "This point of the case is, then, presented in the same light as if the record contained proof that Joel Scott made the indorsement upon the note as the secretary and under the direction of the Ocean Insurance Company. If he did, there can be little difficulty in determining that the indorsement was sufficient to carry the legal title to the note, and authorize the holder thereof to fill it up so as to show said assignment to have been made for and on behalf of said company. There can be no mistaking the intention of the parties in this case. The words 'without recourse' show that Scott intended to indorse the note, and not to guarantee the payment thereof; and the letters 'Sec'y' annexed to his name are sufficient to indicate that he did not suppose he was acting for himself alone. * * * We are therefore of the opinion that the indorsement in this case was sufficient to pass the legal interest in the note, when properly filled up, which the plaintiff had the right to do upon the trial."

Bank as Drawer or Acceptor.—In Robinson v. Kanawha Valley Bank, 44 Ohio St. 441, 58 Am. Rep. 829, it was said: "To this rule usage has established an apparent exception in the instances where a bill is drawn or accepted by the cashier of a bank. But it is rather apparent than real, since the custom by which a cashier represents his bank in such matters, by simply signing his own name, is so general, that the practice has reduced the custom to the certainty of a law."

In Farmers', etc., Bank v. Troy City Bank, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 457, a bill of exchange drawn on A. B., cashier F. & M. Bank, and accepted by writing across the face of the bill, "Accepted, A. B., cashier," was held to bind the bank as acceptor, and not A. B.

In Safford v. Wyckoff, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 442, reversing 1 Hill (N. Y.) 11, a negotiable bill of exchange in the ordinary form, signed by the cashier only of a banking association, was held binding on the association in favor of a bona fide indorsee.

Construction of Statute Regulating Manner of Signing.—The statutory provision wherein notes and bills issued by a bank and put in circulation as money are required to be signed by the president or vice-president and cashier, does not apply to negotiable notes and bills executed in the ordinary course of business. Rockwell v. Elkhorn Bank, 13 Wis. 635; Safford v. Wyckoff, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 442. Contra, Smith v. Strong, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 244.

Construction of Charter.—A provision in a bank charter requiring that "all bills, bonds, notes, and every other contract or engagement" entered into by the bank, shall be signed by the president or vice-president and countersigned by the cashier, does not apply to a check signed by the cashier alone or to contracts which the law implies. Mechanics' Bank v. Columbia Bank, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 326; Merchants' Bank v. Central Bank, 1 Ga. 418, 44 Am. Dec. 665.

Bank as Maker.—In Rockwell v. Elkhorn Bank, 13 Wis. 653, a note in form "Elkhorn Bank promises to pay," and signed "D. D. S., cashier," was held to bind the bank.

Notice of Protest.—Where a note indorsed by a bank was protested, notice of protest stating that "the holder looks to you for payment," and addressed to "J. S. H., Pres't," was held sufficient to charge the bank. Aiken v. Marine Bank, 16 Wis. 679.

Insurance Company.—The rule has been extended so as to include insurance companies. Thus, a note payable to such a company, and indorsed "W. Earl, Secretary," was held to be sufficient to bind the insurance company as indorser. Nicholas v. Oliver, 36 N. H. 218; Ohio State Bank v. Fox, 3 Blatchf. (U. S.) 431.

Illinois—Wide Scope of Rule.—In Illinois, the rule as generally applied to banks is applied to other corporations, the principle as declared in the leading cases being that "where a party signs his name as cashier or agent for a banking, railroad, or other cord. SIMPLE CONTRACTS OTHER THAN NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS—(1) General Rule—Intention Controlling.—Contracts not under seal, other than negotiable instruments, require but little observance of mere form. The intention of the parties is the prevailing consideration in the construction of this class of contracts;¹ and the rule is well established that, if the nature

poration, in drawing drafts and bills, or in accepting drafts or other evidences of indebtedness, in its ordinary business, if it appears, or is made to appear, it is the obligation of the corporation, and the cashier or agent or other officer had authority to bind the corporation, he is not personally liable, and the facts may be shown by extrinsic evidence." *Scanlan v. Illustration.—In Gilmore v. Pope, 5 Mass. 491, the cause came before the court on a statement of facts agreed, from which it appeared that the plaintiff was the authorized agent of a corporation to whose stock the defendant had subscribed and at the same time given a written promise to the plaintiff, without designating him as agent, to pay all assessments of the corporation. It was held that the plaintiff could not maintain an action in his own name for unpaid assessments, but that the promise would support an action by the corporation.

Corporation Principal.—In Gottfried v. Miller, 104 U. S. 521, the court by Mr. Justice Woods said: "The rule as laid down by the authorities is that the agent should, in the body of the contract, name the corporation as the contracting party, and sign as its agent or officer."

Statute of Frauds.—The signature of a memorandum, which is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the statute of frauds, may be made by an agent, though he write his own name instead of that of his principal, if it is his intention that the latter should be bound by it. Kemey v. Proctor, 3 Ves. & B. 57; White v. Proctor, 4 Taunt. 209; Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. Jr. 234; Williams v. Bacon, 2 Gray (Mass.) 387; Yerby v. Grigsby, 9 Leigh (Va.) 387; Conaway v. Sweeney, 24 W. Va. 643. See the title FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

Foreign Principal.—While the rule stated in the text is in general true, an apparent exception has arisen in cases of an agent contracting for a foreign principal. There is no presumption of law that the agent is liable personally, but where the contract on its face fails to clearly disclose the intent of the parties it will be presumed that credit was given to the agent.

In De Bebian v. Gola, 64 Md. 262, an action was brought on an instrument in the following form: "Royal Consular Agency of Italy. Received from Charles Gola, for the use of this vice-consulate of Italy, etc.—E. De Merolla." There appeared on the instrument a seal marked "Royal Consular Agency of Italy, Baltimore." It was held that the maker of the note was individually liable thereon. The court said: "The theory that these notes or receipts are obligations resting upon the 'vice-consulate of Italy, at Baltimore,' and to be assumed and paid by De Merolla's successors in office, or, to put the matter plainly, that the Italian government—for that is what such a theory would mean—would issue bonds or pay for all money borrowed by a vice-consul, does not deserve any serious consideration." Ritchie, J., dissented on the ground that the maker of the note was a public officer.

and circumstances of the transaction show that the intention was to bind the principal and not the agent, effect will be given to such intention,¹ though the agent signs in his own name merely.²

(2) Execution in Principal's Name.—Where a contract throughout is in the name of the principal, it is not essential to its proper execution that the name of the agent, or the fact that it was executed by an agent, appear at all, though done by the hand of the agent; the latter may sign his principal's name merely.³

c. ADMISSIBILITY OF PAROL EVIDENCE.—(1) Instruments under Seal.—Parol Evidence Not Admissible to Discharge Agent or Charge Principal.—When an agent, contracting under seal, executes his authority in such a manner as to bind himself personally, according to the rules previously laid down for the execution of such contracts, parol evidence is not admissible to discharge the agent from liability,⁴ or charge the principal on the contract.⁵ Nor is such evidence admissible to enable one not a party to a sealed instrument to maintain an action thereon.⁶

Repugnant Addition to Signature.—An agent having a power of attorney from his principal to sell stock executed the following assignment: "I, A, by my attorney C, sell and transfer to B, etc.," signed "C, attorney for B." It was held that it was sufficient for C to sign the contract without any addition of the character in which he acted, the same having been distinctly averred in the instrument, and that the words "attorney for B" must be rejected, being repugnant to the whole instrument, and appearing to be a mere act of inadvertence. *Bend v. Instrument Ambiguous.—But where the instrument on its face is ambiguous, parol evidence has been held admissible to determine the intent of the parties.¹

(2) Negotiable Instruments—(a) Action between the Original Parties—When Parol Evidence Admissible.—Where the names of both principal and agent appear on a negotiable instrument in such a manner as to render it doubtful to whom credit is given, parol evidence is admissible between the original parties to the instrument and others affected with notice, to remove the doubt.²

1. Intention Shown where Instrument Ambiguous.—In Shuetze v. Bailey, 40 Mo. 69, an agreement under seal purporting to be between "Kenneth Mackenzie, agent for V. S. Stevenson, of the first part, and George Bailey, of the second part," concluded: "In witness whereof said parties of the first and second parts have hereto set their hands and seals, etc. K. Mackenzie [L. s.], agent for V. S. Stevenson. Geo. Bailey [L. s.]" It was held that the instrument was ambiguous and parol evidence was admissible to show the intent of the parties. Instrument Indicating Agency—Parol Evidence Admissible.—In Baker v. Gregory, 28 Ala. 544, 65 Am. Dec. 366, there was appended to a bill in equity a note of the following form: "I promise to pay S. H. P., etc. (the same for expenses paid by him for board and education of S. B. previous to her marriage)." The note was signed by the husband of S. B., with the addition to his name of the words "acting trustee." It was held that the note, in the absence of extrinsic evidence, would prima facie impose a personal liability upon the husband; yet the fact that his name was subscribed to it with the description of acting trustee would entitle him or its owner to show by parol evidence the consideration, intention, and purpose of the note and the true character of the transaction, and, these being thus proved, the court of chancery would not allow the sense and equity of the transaction to be controlled by the mere form of the note. And see Kenyon v. Williams, 19 Ind. 44.

In an action between the original parties to a note in the usual form, signed by the trustees of a church society, describing themselves as such, parol evidence was admitted to show that the note was given for a debt of the society, and that the signers were its authorized agents to make the note, and to correct an error in the name of the society. Brockway v. Allen, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 40.

In an action between the original parties to a note in form "I promise to pay," and signed by the defendant with the addition to his name "Treas'r Ohio & Miss. R. R. Co.," parol evidence was held admissible to discharge the defendant. Smith v. Alexander, 31 Mo. 193. See also Lazarus v. Shearer, 2 Ala. 718; Drake v. Flewellen, 33 Ala. 106.

In Wetumpka, etc., R. Co. v. Bingham, 5 Ala. 657, parol evidence was held admissible in an action by the payee against the drawer of a bill headed "Wetumpka & Coosa Rail Road, President's Office," and signed by a person describing himself as "Pres't."

In Mechanics' Bank v. Columbia Bank, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 326, the action was between the original parties on a check having printed on its margin "Mechanics' Bank, Alexandria," and drawn by "William Paton, Jr.," on the "cashier of the Bank of Colum-

Instrument Not Indicating Principal.—But where neither the name of the principal nor any other circumstance appears on the face of the instrument to connect it with him, extrinsic evidence is not admissible to show any other intent than that expressed in the instrument to bind the agent, though the word "agent" is added to the signature.¹

Parol Evidence Not Admissible to Discharge Agent.—Nor is such evidence admissible to discharge an agent who signs his own name merely to a negotiable instrubia," payable to the order of "P. H. Minor." Extrinsic evidence was admitted to show that the drawer of the check was cashier of the Mechanics' Bank, and that the check was drawn by the bank and not Paton personally.

Parol Evidence to Show by Whom Consideration was Received.—In Bean v. Pioneer Min. Co., 66 Cal. 451, 56 Am. Rep. 106, the court laid down the rule as stated in the text, and said further: "Even if it could be said that there were no indications suggestive of agency on the face of the note, * * * evidence was admissible tending to prove that the consideration * * * was received by the Pioneer Company [the principal] and the credit extended to the company alone."

Parol Evidence Inadmissible—Illustrations.—In Rendell v. Harriman, 75 Me. 497, 46 Am. Rep. 421, the action was between the original parties on a note beginning, "We promise to pay," and signed "A. and C., President and Directors of the P. & S. C. Co." It was held that A. and C. were personally liable, and that there was no ambiguity in the note to let in extrinsic evidence. And see McClure v. Livermore, 78 Me. 390.

A note in form, "We promise to pay," and signed by several persons, with the words "Trustees of the First * * * Church" added, binds the signers personally, and extrinsic evidence is not admissible to show a different intent. Hayes v. Brubaker, 65 Ind. 27; Williams v. Lafayette Second Nat. Bank, 83 Ind. 237; Hills v. Bannister, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 31.

In Sturdivant v. Hull, 59 Me. 172, 8 Am. Rep. 409, parol evidence was held inadmissible in an action between the original parties to a note in form, "I promise to pay. Jno. T. Hull, Treas. St. Paul's Parish." It was also held that the statutory modification of the common-law rule as to the execution of contracts by agents does not change the rule as to admissibility of parol evidence.

Parties Affected with Notice—Parol Evidence Admissible.—In Metcalfe v. Williams, 104 U. S. 93, a bill in equity was filed to set aside a judgment at law, rendered on a check signed by two persons, one describing himself as "V. Pres't" and the other as "Sec'y." It appeared that the person claiming the beneficial interest, for whose benefit the action was brought, was a fellow agent, with the signers, of the company on whose account the check was drawn, and it was held that under such circumstances he could not pretend to be ignorant of the character of the instrument. Extrinsic evidence was admitted to show that the check was given by the company though this was not disclosed on its face.

In Roberts v. Austin, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 313, an action was brought by the payee against the drawer of a bill of exchange, signed by the latter in his own name merely. Parol evidence was admitted to show that the drawer was agent of the drawee and had given the bill in the business of the latter, and that the payee knew the facts when he received the bill. And see Miles v. O'Hara, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 32.

Contra.—But see Hicks v. Hinde, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 528, where a draft in favor of the plaintiff was signed, "John Hinde, Agent," and extrinsic evidence was admitted to discharge Hinde from liability.

And in Moore v. McClure, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 557, parol evidence was held admissible to charge the principal on a note similarly signed. The court, by Talcott, J., said: "The fact that the name of the principal does not appear on the face of the note is not, under the modern decisions in this state, at all conclusive. If it was intended to be given in the business of the principal, was in fact so given, and with due authority, it is binding on the principal, and all this is matter of evidence."

ment, though he describes himself in the body of the instrument as agent of another.¹

(b) Action by Bona Fide Holder.—One who takes negotiable paper contracts with the parties appearing on its face, and parol evidence is not admissible to add a principal not so appearing.²

When Parol Evidence Admitted.—But extrinsic evidence has been admitted where there was sufficient on the face of the instrument to reasonably suggest the intention to contract as agent and not as principal,³ or to show that the name in which the contract was made was the name adopted by the party sought to be charged, for the purpose of making such contracts.⁴

(3) Other Simple Contracts.—Parol evidence is admissible to show the intent of the parties to a non-negotiable simple contract, when there is anything

Kyle*, 10 Ohio St. 444.

When Not Admissible to Charge Agent.—Likewise, such evidence is not admissible to charge an agent personally who has contracted in the name of his principal. Lieb-scher v. Kraus, 74 Wis. 387, 17 Am. St. Rep. 171; Delius v. Cawthorn, 2 Dev. (N. Car.) 90; McClerman v. Hall, 33 Md. 293.

But see Milligan v. Lyle, 24 La. Ann. 144, where a bill of exchange concluding, "charge the same to B.'s account," was signed "A.," and extrinsic evidence was admitted to show that it was not A.'s intention to bind himself personally.

Note by Corporation, Signature by Agents Personally.—A note in form, "We, the trustees of C. H. College, promise to pay," and signed by several persons in their own names merely, is prima facie the note of the makers, but parol evidence is admissible to show intention to bind the corporation. Traynham v. Jackson, 15 Tex. 170, 65 Am. Dec. 152. See also Sanborn v. Neal, 4 Minn. 126, 77 Am. Dec. 502.

But see Green v. Skeel, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 486, where parol evidence was admitted in an action by the indorser of a note signed by the defendant with the addition of the word "agent" to his name.

In Condon v. Pearce, 43 Md. 83, an action was brought by an indorsee of a note payable to the Cecil Fire Brick Co., and indorsed, "M. B., Treas'r. H. C." It was held that parol evidence was inadmissible to show that H. C. indorsed as president of the company and thereby relieved him of personal liability as indorser.

Action between Principal and Agent.—In Kimmell v. Bittner, 62 Pa. St. 203, the action was by the indorsee of a bill against his indorser. Parol evidence was admitted to show that the defendant was the plaintiff's attorney and in collecting money for his principal took bills payable to himself and indorsed them to his principal. It was further shown that this manner of conducting the business was expressly ratified by the principal. It was held that the attorney indorsed the bill merely for the purpose of transferring title and was not liable as indorser. And see Sharp v. Emmet, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 288, 34 Am. Dec. 554; Lewis v. Brehme, 33 Md. 412, 3 Am. Rep. 190. Compare Heubach v. Rother, 2 Duer (N. Y.) 227.

3. Intention to Contract as Agent.—In Paige v. Stone, 10 Met. (Mass.) 160, an action was brought by the indorsee of a note in form "I promise to pay," and signed "A, for the assignees." The court held that the meaning of the words "for the assignees" was a question for the jury, extrinsic evidence being admitted to show who were meant.

In Kean v. Davis, 21 N. J. L. 683, a bill of exchange payable to "E. & S. R. R. Co." and signed "J. K., Pres't E. & S. R. R. Co.," was held to be ambiguous, and parol evidence was admitted to show the intent of the parties in an action by a bona fide holder.

In Hood v. Hallenbeck, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 362, parol evidence was held admissible in an action by an indorsee on a note bearing a corporate seal and signed by the trustees of the corporation with the addition of their official designation. on the face of the instrument to render it doubtful to whom credit was given.¹ Such evidence is also admissible to charge an undisclosed principal,² or enable him to bring an action,³ but not to discharge the agent who has contracted in his own name.⁴

Agent Prima Facie Liable—Burden of Proof.—In Pratt v. Beaupre, 13 Minn. 187, a contract beginning, "We, Temple & Beaupre," and signed by T. & B. with the addition to their signatures of the words "Agents Steamer Flora," was held to be prima facie the personal contract of the signers, with the burden of proof on the party seeking to change the prima facie character. But see Gillig v. Lake Bigler Road Co., 2 Nev. 214, where it was held that parol evidence is not admissible either to discharge a party to a written contract, or to add to it another not appearing on the face of the contract.

In Davison v. Davenport Gas-light, etc., Co., 24 Iowa 419, it was held that where one contracts without disclosing either the principal or the fact of agency, parol evidence is not admissible to charge another as principal, in an action on the contract; but if the alleged principal in fact received the benefit of such contract, he may be held liable in a suit in equity founded upon the special facts of the case. *f. PUBLIC OFFICERS*¹.—Presumed to have Contracted on Principal's Credit.—For evident reasons, founded on public policy, the contracts of public agents and officers have been put on a different footing from the contracts of agents of individuals. In the former case the credit is presumed to have been given to the principal; and contracts of such agents, when within the scope of the authority delegated, are not binding on the agent, although executed in a manner which would have made him personally liable had he been acting for an individual.²

2. England.—Macbeath v. Haldimand, 1 T. R. 172; Rice v. Chute, 1 East 579.

United States.—Hodgson v. Dexter, 1 Cranch (U. S.) 345; Parks v. Ross, 11 How. (U. S.) 374; Garland v. Davis, 4 How. (U. S.) 149; Stone v. Mason, 2 Cranch (C. C.) 431.

Connecticut.—Ogden v. Raymond, 22 Conn. 379, 58 Am. Dec. 429; Adams v. Whittlesey, 3 Conn. 560; Perry v. Hyde, 10 Conn. 329.

Indiana.—Sparta School Township v. Mendall, 138 Ind. 188, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 386.

Massachusetts.—Brown v. Austin, 1 Mass. 208, 2 Am. Dec. 11; Freeman v. Otis, 9 Mass. 272, 6 Am. Dec. 66; Whiting v. Dewey, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 428; Dawes v. Jackson, 9 Mass. 490.

Minnesota.—Balcombe v. Northup, 9 Minn. 172; Sanborne v. Neal, 4 Minn. 126, 77 Am. Dec. 502.

Missouri.—Lapsley v. McKinstry, 38 Mo. 245.

New Hampshire.—Underhill v. Gibson, 2 N. H. 352, 9 Am. Dec. 82.

New Jersey.—Stewart v. Johnson, 1 N. J. L. 31.

New York.—Walker v. Swartwout, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 444, 7 Am. Dec. 334; People v. Vilas, 36 N. Y. 459, 93 Am. Dec. 520; Olney v. Wickes, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 126; Belknap v. Reinhart, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 375, 20 Am. Dec. 621; Osborne v. Kerr, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 180; Henderson v. Brown, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 92, 2 Am. Dec. 164; Hall v. Lauderdale, 46 N. Y. 70; Fox v. Drake, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 191.

North Carolina.—Hite v. Goodman, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 364; Stanly v. Hawkins, Mart. Dec. (N. Car.) 55.

Pennsylvania.—Cook v. Irvine, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 492, 9 Am. Dec. 397.

Tennessee.—Amison v. Ewing, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 366.

Virginia.—Tutt v. Lewis, 3 Call (Va.) 233.

Public Agents.—Likewise, the contracts of a public agent, though made in his name, enure to the benefit of his principal and should be sued on in the name of the principal. Hodgson v. Dexter, 1 Cranch (U. S.) 345; Balcombe v. Northup, 9 Minn. 172; U. S. v. Blount, 2 Law Repos. (N. Car.) 84.

But see Swift v. Hopkins, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 313, where in an action on a parol contract it was held that unless the contractor shows distinctly that in making the contract he expressly or ostensibly acted as a public agent, it must be deemed a private contract.

See also Sheffield v. Watson, 3 Cai. (N. Y.) 69, where a government agent, known to be such, contracted for things for the use of the government in his own name, without reference to his official character, and it was held that the agent was liable personally on the contract.

Officers of a Town.—In Brown v. Bradlee, 156 Mass. 28, where the officers of a town offered, in writing, a reward for evidence leading to the arrest and conviction of a criminal, and signed the same, adding to their signatures the words "Selectmen of Milton," it was said that it has been doubted how far there is a difference between agents and officers of a town and agents of individuals. The court held that the persons signing the offer of reward were personally liable, conceding, however, that the conclusion was probably strengthened by the fact that the officers had exceeded their authority.

In Crawshaw v. Roxbury, 7 Gray (Mass.) 374, and Janvrin v. Exeter, 48 N. H. 83, 2 Am. Rep. 185, where the facts were almost identical with the facts in the preceding case, it was held that the officers of the towns were not personally liable.

3. United States.—Jones v. LeTombe, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 384.

Indiana.—Perrin v. Lyman, 32 Ind. 16; Wallis v. Johnson School Tp., 75 Ind. 368.

Iowa.—Harvey v. Irvine, 11 Iowa 82; Armstrong v. Borland, 35 Iowa 537.

Maine.—Newhall v. Dunlap, 14 Me. 180, 31 Am. Dec. 45.

New York.—Randall v. Van Vechten, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 60, 10 Am. Dec. 193.

Public Agent Payee.—A note payable to "A, land agent of Maine," is in legal contemplation payable to the state, and an action on it should be brought in the name of the state. State v. Boies, 11 Me. 474; Irish v. Webster, 5 Me. 171.

Rule Governing Private Agents Applied.—There is some conflict among the cases as to the application of the rule stated in the text. Where the rule above has not been followed it will be found that it was not referred to, the courts citing and following decisions in contracts executed under the seal of the agent.¹

Waiver of Official Immunity.—Such agents may waive their official immunity, however, and in express terms assume a personal liability.²

g. JOINT AGENTS—Private Agency.—When authority to perform an act of a private nature is conferred on two or more agents, the principal is bound only when the execution is by all.³

Contrary Intention.—But when the intention to confer a several authority is manifest, execution by one is sufficient.⁴

Public Agency.—In the execution of authority of a public nature, as a general cases of private agency. The conflict has been confined to promissory notes executed by such public officers as the treasurer of the town, officers of a school board, etc.

School Trustees.—School Trustees v. Rautenberg, 88 Ill. 219.

Road Committee.—Savage v. Rix, 9 N. H. 263.

Town Treasurer.—Ross v. Brown, 74 Me. 352.

County Treasurer.—Exchange Bank v. Lewis County, 28 W. Va. 273. In this case the court, without referring to the rule as to public officers, said that the note in question was not sufficient in form, but it appeared that the county had not authority to execute the instrument.

Conveyance of Town Property.—In New Hampshire a deed purporting to convey property of a town executed in the individual names of a duly authorized committee, was held to be well executed and pass the title to the land. The decision was based on the mischief which would ensue from holding otherwise, it having been the custom in New Hampshire for thirty years to convey in this manner property belonging to towns. Cofran v. Cockran, 5 N. H. 458.

VIII. DUTIES AND LIABILITIES INTER SE.—1. Of Agent to Principal—a. FIDELITY TO INSTRUCTIONS—(1) General Rule—(a) In Case of Remunerated Agent.—It is the duty of the agent to follow faithfully the directions of his principal,³ and for any failure or refusal in this respect he may not only be dismissed from his agency,⁴ but also held liable to his principal for any loss or damage resulting.⁵

3. Agent must Faithfully Follow Directions.—Loeb v. Hellman, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct. 336; Williams v. Littlefield, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 362; Scott v. Rogers, 31 N. Y. 676; Laverty v. Snethen, 68 N. Y. 522, 23 Am. Rep. 184; Le Guen v. Gouverneur, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 437, note, 1 Am. Dec. 121; Hays v. Stone, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 128; Mobile Bank v. Huggins, 3 Ala. 206; Holbrook v. McCarthy, 61 Cal. 216; Thomas v. Joslin, 30 Minn. 388; Raht v. Union Consol. Min. Co., 5 Lea (Tenn.) 1.

It is a well-established rule of law that an agent is bound to execute the orders of his principal whenever for a valuable consideration he has undertaken to perform them, whether reasonable or not, unless prevented by some unavoidable accident without default on his part, or unless the instructions required him to do an illegal or immoral act. Rechtscherd v. Accommodation Bank, 47 Mo. 181; Switzer v. Connett, 11 Mo. 88. The directions constitute a part of the authority, and operate as a limitation upon it. Johnson v. New York Cent. R. Co., 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 196. And he is generally bound to obey such instructions exactly if they are imperative and not discretionary. Wilson v. Wilson, 26 Pa. St. 393.

A violation of positive instructions is gross negligence, rendering the agent liable for such loss or damage as may result from it, and in such case every doubtful circumstance is construed against him. Adams v. Robinson, 65 Ala. 586.

He has no discretion to question the prudence of his instructions, provided they are explicit and intelligible and he is furnished with the necessary means. Coker v. Ropes, 125 Mass. 577.

Where a principal writes his agent referring him to another letter written to a third person for his government, the two letters together are to be taken as his letter of instructions; and if the principal refers the agent to the third person for advice, the agent is bound to apply to him for instructions and await a reasonable time for their receipt. Mactier v. Wirgman, 4 Har. & J. (Md.) 579.

4. Ford v. Danks, 16 La. Ann. 119; Newman v. Reagan, 65 Ga. 512. And see infra, this title, Termination.

5. Liability of Agent for Disobedience of Instructions.—Sawyer v. Mayhew, 51 Me. 398; Amory v. Hamilton, 17 Mass. 103; Thompson v. Stewart, 3 Conn. 172, 8 Am. Dec. 168; Austill v. Crawford, 7 Ala. 335; Short v. Skipwith, 1 Brock. (U. S.) 103; Hasselmann v. Carroll, 102 Ind. 153. And see Heinemann v. Heard, 50 N. Y. 27; Milwaukee County v. Hackett, 21 Wis. 613.

If an agent, through mistake or design, disobeys his instructions, he is undoubtedly responsible for any loss resulting. Rundle v. Moore, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 36.

It is his first duty to adhere faithfully to his instructions in all cases to which they can be properly applied, and if he neglects, exceeds, or violates them, he is responsible for all losses which are the natural consequence of his acts. Whitney v. Merchants' Union Express Co., 104 Mass. 152, 6 Am. Rep. 207; Fuller v. Ellis, 39 Vt. 345, 94 Am. Dec. 327; Ward v. Warfield, 3 La. Ann. 468.

Illustrations.—Thus, if he sells to irresponsible parties when instructed to sell only to those of undoubted solvency,¹ or if, instructed to remit in a certain manner or in a certain medium, he remits in a different manner or medium,² or where instructed to sell for cash or for a certain price he sells on credit³ or for a less price,⁴ or where he fails to effect insurance as instruct-

He disregards specific instructions at his peril, and will be liable for any loss resulting from having adopted his own course, though he may have used reasonable diligence. Butts v. Phelps, 79 Mo. 302.

Agent to Procure Discount of Note.—An agent intrusted with a promissory note to be discounted, with instructions not to permit it to leave his hands without receiving the proceeds, is liable for a conversion of the note where he delivers it to a third party who promises to get and return the money on it, but who appropriates it to his own use. Laverty v. Snethen, 68 N. Y. 522, 23 Am. Rep. 184, 53 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 152.

If, when Directed to Forward a Claim to a certain person for collection, he forwards it to another, the agent is liable for any loss resulting thereby. Butts v. Phelps, 79 Mo. 302.

An Agent Shipping Goods in a manner prohibited by his principal is liable as an insurer. Wilts v. Morrell, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 511.

And a Common Carrier Disobeying the shipper's instructions as to forwarding goods is liable for their loss. Johnson v. New York Cent. R. Co., 33 N. Y. 610, 88 Am. Dec. 416.

An Agent to Invest in certain securities is liable for any loss resulting from his failure to invest. Short v. Skipwith, 1 Brock. (U. S.) 103.

Agent to Buy Goods.—And if an agent purchases goods of a quality inferior to the kind authorized, the principal may repudiate the transaction. Safford v. Kinsley, 40 Vt. 506.

And see Fahy v. Fargo (Supreme Ct.), 17 N. Y. Supp. 344, 61 Hun (N. Y.) 623, where the agent failed to return a draft promptly upon non-payment, as directed; Howatt v. Davis, 5 Munf. (Va.) 34, 7 Am. Dec. 681, where the agent delivered goods to an insolvent buyer, notwithstanding orders to stop them while in transit; Pape v. Westacott, 42 W. R. 131, where an agent, instructed not to turn over to a tenant a license to assign the lease until the latter had paid all arrears of rent, surrendered it on receiving a check in payment of the arrears, which was afterwards dishonored.

Where an Agent Transferred Negotiable Securities contrary to instructions, and converted the money to his own use, he was held liable only to the extent of the consideration received by him. Wolfe v. Brouwer, 5 Robt. (N. Y.) 601.

1. Selling to Irresponsible Party Contrary to Instructions.—Where the agent is instructed to take nothing but "undoubted paper," or "first-class collectible paper," in payment, and he makes no effort to ascertain the solvency of the parties, or takes paper which he knows to be worthless, he may be charged with any loss or held liable as a guarantor. Osborne v. Rider, 62 Wis. 235; Robinson Mach. Works v. Vorse, 52 Iowa 207; Clark v.

Roberts, 26 Mich. 506. But see Plano Mfg. Co. v. Buxton, 36 Minn. 203.

2. Violating Instructions in Reference to Manner of Remitting.—Buell v. Chapin, 99 Mass. 594, 97 Am. Dec. 58; Kerr v. Cotton, 23 Tex. 411.

An agent instructed to remit by express, who remits by check, is liable for the loss if the drawers afterwards become insolvent before payment. Walker v. Walker, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 425. And where one was instructed to remit by mail in notes of fifty and one hundred dollars, and he sent notes of the denominations of five, ten, and twenty dollars, thus increasing the size of the package, which was lost, he was held liable. Wilson v. Wilson, 26 Pa. St. 393. If, being instructed to remit by draft, an agent remits by letter, he is liable for the loss. Foster v. Preston, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 198.

It is a sufficient compliance with general instructions to remit the proceeds of a sale, if the agent remit by a bill of exchange without indorsing or guaranteeing it, provided such is the usage at the agent's place of business and the agent uses proper diligence and discretion in the purchase of the bill; and this being shown by the agent, the burden of proof is on the principal to show that he should have indorsed or guaranteed the bill. Potter v. Morland, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 384.

In the Absence of Instructions the agent is bound to use only due care in remitting to his principal, and there is no rule of law that the post-office established by the government for the purpose of carrying letters is a less safe or appropriate means of forwarding money than a private carrier or banker. Buell v. Chapin, 99 Mass. 594, 97 Am. Dec. 58.

3. Violating Instructions to Sell for Cash.—Clark v. Roberts, 26 Mich. 506; Barksdale v. Brown, 1 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 517, 9 Am. Dec. 720.

A factor receiving wheat with instructions to sell for cash is liable for all losses which may result to his principal from a sale on credit. Hall v. Storrs, 7 Wis. 253. In this case a check was taken payable the next day after the sale. But see Clark v. Van Northwick, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 343, as to the effect of custom upon such an instruction.

If the custom is to sell for cash or sight drafts, and the agent takes a check payable in ten days, he is liable if the check is not paid. Harlan v. Ely, 68 Cal. 522.

4. Violating Instructions to Sell for Certain Price.—Steele v. Ellmaker, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 86; Wolfe v. Luyster, 1 Hall (N. Y.) 146.

A factor making advances upon goods consigned to him for sale with a limit as to the price, cannot sell below such price to recover advances, without timely notice to his principal to return the same. Blot v. Boiceau, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 111. And see Henry v. Buckner, 13 Colo. 18.

ed,¹ he is liable for the loss resulting from his violation of instructions.

Intention.—The fact that the agent intended to promote the principal's interest will not exonerate him.²

Presumption.—But the law presumes that an agent obeyed his instructions, and if the contrary is alleged it must be proved.³

Adoption by Principal.—And the principal, by failing to seasonably object, or by adopting the acts of the agent, may discharge the latter from liability.⁴

(b) In Case of Unremunerated Agent.—Where the agency is gratuitous and the agent has never entered upon the performance of the service, he cannot be held liable for damage resulting from his nonfeasance, there being no consideration to support the promise.⁵ The inception of the performance is essential to the agent's liability; accordingly, if the agent once enters upon the execution of the business and any loss results from his neglect or failure to carry out his instructions, he may be held responsible.⁶

And the fact that agents have made advances on goods which they had been instructed to sell according to their judgment of the market, "unless otherwise advised," will not justify their refusal to sell immediately upon being ordered to do so, unless the sale is directed on terms which will prejudice them. Howland v. Davis, 40 Mich. 546. And see Monks v. Bruce (City Ct.), 3 N. Y. Supp. 419.

1. Failure to Insure as Instructed.—Shoenfeld v. Fleisher, 73 Ill. 404; Thorne v. Deas, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 84; De Tastett v. Crousillat, 2 Wash. (U. S.) 132; Park v. Hamond, 4 Campb. 344.

The agent is bound to follow the instructions of his principal and effect a valid insurance, and if he does not obtain a valid policy which might be enforced at law, he is responsible to the principal for the actual loss sustained. Sawyer v. Mayhew, 51 Me. 398; Perkins v. Washington Ins. Co., 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 645.

Failure of Insurance Agent to Cancel Policy.—An agent of an insurance company failing to cancel a policy as instructed is liable to the company for the amount paid upon the policy in case of loss. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Frissell, 142 Mass. 513. And the agent is not relieved from liability by showing that he instructed the broker who placed the policy with him to have it cancelled. Franklin Ins. Co. v. Sears, 21 Fed. Rep. 290.

2. Rechtscherd v. Accommodation Bank, 47 Mo. 181; Hardeman v. Ford, 12 Ga. 205; Ward v. Warfield, 3 La. Ann. 468; Ledoux v. Goza, 4 La. Ann. 160; Lowe v. Bell, 6 La. Ann. 28; Merritt v. Wright, 19 La. Ann. 91; Holmes v. Misroon, 3 Brev. (S. Car.) 209; Coker v. Ropes, 125 Mass. 577.

If the instructions be free from ambiguity, and are positive and unqualified, they must be rigidly obeyed, if it be practicable; and no motive connected with the interest of the principal, however honestly entertained or wisely adopted, can excuse a breach of them. Courcier v. Ritter, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 549.

3. Bangs v. Hornick, 30 Fed. Rep. 97. And see Kirkpatrick v. Adams, 20 Fed. Rep. 287; Irwin v. Williar, 110 U. S. 499.

5. Morrison v. Orr, 3 Ala. 49.

By the common law a mandatory, or one who undertakes to do an act for another without reward, is not answerable for omitting to do the act, and is responsible only when he attempts to do it and does it amiss. In other words, he is responsible for a misfeasance but not for a nonfeasance, even though special damages are averred. Thorne v. Deas, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 84; Smedes v. Utica Bank, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 372. If the promise is made without consideration, it is mere nudum pactum, and no action can be maintained upon it. Benden v. Manning, 2 N. H. 289. And see Elsee v. Gatward, 5 T. R. 143; Balfe v. West, 13 C. B. 466, 76 E. C. L. 466. See also Ferguson v. Porter, 3 Fla. 27.

Agent to Collect, Taking Note to Himself.—An agent having undertaken gratuitously to collect an indebtedness took a note to himself for the amount due. It was held that this extinguished the original indebtedness, and he was held liable to his principal for the amount of the indebtedness. Opie v. Serrill, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 264.

6. McGee v. Bast, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 453.

Responsibility after Entering upon Performance.—Though no man can compel another to render him acts of friendship or service of any kind whatsoever, gratuitously or with a view to compensation, yet if the person applied to consents to render the service and undertakes the business, he is bound to act in conformity to the terms on which the request is made; and if he does not comply with his instructions, he is liable for the loss occasioned thereby, although the service was gratuitously rendered. Relinquishment of his commission of the agency does not release him from the effects of negligence. Walker v. Smith, 1 Wash. (U. S.) 152.

Thus, one voluntarily undertaking, without consideration, to invest money for another, and disregarding positive instructions as to the specific character of the security to be taken, is liable if the investment should fail. Williams v. Higgins, 30 Md. 404; Passano v. Acosta, 4 La. 26, 23 Am. Dec. 470.

(2) Qualifications and Exceptions—(a) Circumstantial Variance.—A substantial compliance with the terms of the authority, however, is all that can be required, and where this has been done a circumstantial variance from the instructions is immaterial.¹

(b) Illegal or Immoral Acts.—An agent is not justified by the instructions of his principal in doing an illegal or immoral act,² and will not be held liable for a refusal to obey such instructions.³

(c) In Case of Necessity or Emergency—Rule Stated.—Where a deviation from instructions is due to necessity or an unforeseen emergency which is not itself due to the agent's default, the agent using his best judgment to carry out the objects of the agency will not be held responsible although it should subsequently develop that another course would have been preferable.⁴ Acts done in a bona fide effort to save perishing property come within this rule.⁵

By undertaking the commission he becomes an agent, whether he could have been compelled to assume the agency or not, and is then bound to carry out his instructions unless waived or countermanded. Spencer v. Towles, 18 Mich. 9.

1. Parkhill v. Imlay, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 431; Parker v. Kett, 1 Salk. 95; Cornwall v. Wilson, 1 Ves. 510. And see Wood v. Cooper, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 441.

But it must be shown affirmatively that the deviation in no manner contributed to the loss. Wilson v. Wilson, 26 Pa. St. 393. And in such case every doubtful circumstance will be construed against the agent. Adams v. Robinson, 65 Ala. 586.

2. The agent is not chargeable for a breach of orders if his compliance would have been a fraud on others. Goodhue v. McClarty, 3 La. Ann. 58.

The command of the principal to commit trespass or other unlawful act is no justification to the agent. Brown v. Howard, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 119. And the rule respondet superior does not apply where an agent elects to obey an illegal order. Elmore v. Brooks, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 45. And see Davis v. Barger, 57 Ind. 54.

3. Rechtscherd v. Accommodation Bank, 47 Mo. 181; Switzer v. Connett, 11 Mo. 88; Wilson v. Wilson, 26 Pa. St. 394.

Agent's Authority to Do Illegal Act—Liability Therefor.—The principal cannot delegate to his agent authority to do an illegal act; but, having given such authority, he cannot take advantage of his own wrong, and hold the agent liable for the consequences of such illegal act. This principle, however, cannot be invoked by a third person, who was employed by the agent to assist in the illegal act, and was liable to the principal for the act. Morton v. Bradley, 30 Ala. 683.

4. Deviation from Instructions in Case of Emergency.—Judson v. Sturges, 5 Day (Conn.) 556; Drummond v. Wood, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 310; Liotard v. Graves, 3 Cai. (N. Y.) 226; Harter v. Blanchard, 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 617; Wilson v. Wilson, 26 Pa. St. 394; Nixon v. Bogin, 26 S. Car. 611; Gould v. Rich, 7 Met. (Mass.) 538; Williams v. Shackelford, 16 Ala. 318; Wolff v. Horncastle, 1 B. & P. 323.

In cases of necessity or great urgency it is only necessary that the agent should act bona fide and with reasonable discretion. Forrestier v. Bordman, 1 Story (U. S.) 43. And a deviation from orders is excused by an event not contemplated at the time the orders were given. Dusar v. Perit, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 361.

Especially is this the case when not only the principal's interests are endangered, but also the interests of the agent. Brown v. M'Gran, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 480; Parker v. Brancker, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 40; Stall v. Meek, 70 Pa. St. 181; Milbank v. Dennistoun, 21 N. Y. 391; Frothingham v. Everton, 12 N. H. 239.

A Factor has Implied Authority, in case of unforeseen circumstances of necessity or great urgency, to act for his principal irrespective of instructions or the ordinary usages of trade in adjusting contracts and claims, and disposing of property; and if he has acted in good faith, with a sound discretion under the circumstances as they appeared to him at the time, he will not be held liable for the consequences, although his course should subsequently turn out disadvantageous to his principal. Greenleaf v. Moody, 13 Allen (Mass.) 363.

An Agent Instructed to Get a Certain Physician is justified, upon being unable to procure him, in employing another instead. Bartlett v. Sparkman, 95 Mo. 136, 6 Am. St. Rep. 35.

An Agent Instructed to Invest Certain Moneys coming into his hands in Missouri bonds is justified, upon the large advance of such bonds in price, in asking additional instructions of his principal as to whether he shall invest at the advanced price, and, upon receiving no reply, in retaining the money in his hands for further instructions. Bernard v. Maury, 20 Gratt. (Va.) 434.

A Factor having Made Advances may sell after notice, upon failure to repay, though for a less sum than the price limited. Frothingham v. Everton, 12 N. H. 239.

The Master of a Vessel instructed to sell certain goods upon reaching the port of destination, is justified, upon being unable to find a purchaser, in leaving them with an agent. Lawler v. Keaquick, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 174.

5. Jervis v. Hoyt, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 637; Greenleaf v. Moody, 13 Allen (Mass.) 363; Goodwillie v. McCarthy, 45 Ill. 186.

Limit of Rule.—While, as above stated, under extraordinary circumstances, an agent may be justified in assuming extraordinary powers, yet it does not follow as a corollary that, under such circumstances, an agent may assume any or all extraordinary powers, and by his acts bind his principal.¹

(d) Uncertainty and Ambiguity in Instructions.—When the directions to the agent are clear and well defined, it is his duty to follow them faithfully, provided this may be lawfully done.² On the other hand, where the instructions are obscure or ambiguous, an agent using his honest and diligent discretion in the interpretation of them will not be held responsible if he makes a mistake.³

(3) Effect of Established Usage or Custom.—Although an agent is, in the absence of instructions, bound to follow the established usage or mode of dealing, yet no custom or usage will authorize a departure from positive instructions; the instructions of the principal make the law by which the agent is to be governed.⁴

(4) Departure from Instructions—Nature of Liability.—Where the agent is

1. Foster v. Smith, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 474, 88 Am. Dec. 604. In this case the defendants were employed to deliver a cargo of wheat, and when near their destination their boat and most of the wheat sank in three feet of water. It was held that though they were authorized to employ hands and prevent a total loss of the wheat, they had no power to sell it.

2. See supra, this title, Nature and Extent of Authority.

3. Instructions Uncertain and Obscure.—Bes-sent v. Harris, 63 N. Car. 542; Pickett v. Pearsons, 17 Vt. 470; Courcier v. Ritter, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 549. And see Commerce Nat. Bank v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 92.

The courts will hold an agent to a strict account in relation to the instructions he receives, provided they are expressed in plain terms and free from ambiguity. Lorraine v. Cartwright, 3 Wash. (U. S.) 151.

But he is bound by the instructions only as he understood them, unless there is fraud or some fault on his part in not comprehending them. Pickett v. Pearsons, 17 Vt. 470.

Where the instructions are susceptible of two meanings, that meaning which the agent in good faith attaches to them and acts upon is to be adopted, and if loss thereby occurs the principal, and not the agent, must bear it. It is immaterial whether or not the principal had reason to believe that the agent understood the instructions as he intended them. Minnesota Linseed Oil Co. v. Montague, 65 Iowa 67.

Where the instructions are ambiguous, and with a reasonable attention to them would bear the interpretation on which both the agent and a third person have acted, the principal is bound, although upon a more refined and critical examination the court might be of the opinion that a different construction would be more correct. Very v. Levy, 13 How. (U. S.) 345; LeRoy v. Beard, 8 How. (U. S.) 451; DeTastett v. Crousillat, 2 Wash. (U. S.) 132. They are to be construed as a plain man, acquainted with the object in view, and attending reasonably to the language used, has in fact construed them. He is not bound to take the opinion of a lawyer concerning the meaning of a word not technical, and apparently employed in a popular sense. Very v. Levy, 13 How. (U. S.) 345; Withington v. Herring, 5 Bing. 442, 15 E. C. L. 492.

4. Usage.—A custom cannot overcome an express contract nor defeat an express limitation upon the authority of an agent, nor be received in evidence to change the obvious meaning of the words occurring in instruments of writing. Wanless v. McCandless, 38 Iowa 20.

A factor instructed to sell only for cash is not authorized by the custom of the market in which he deals to sell for credit. Barksdale v. Brown, 1 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 517, 9 Am. Dec. 720; Wanless v. McCandless, 38 Iowa 20; Bliss v. Arnold, 8 Vt. 252, 30 Am. Dec. 467.

And evidence to show that a sale for credit is according to the usage of the market will be properly rejected. Leland v. Douglass, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 490; Catlin v. Smith, 24 Vt. 85. But see Clark v. Van Northwick, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 343, where it was held no breach of orders in a factor, instructed to sell for cash, to sell and deliver the goods to a person of good credit and send his bill the next day, such sale being according to the usage of the market.

In Hall v. Storrs, 7 Wis. 253, the court doubted exceedingly the soundness and correctness of a rule permitting a usage or custom in any particular business or trade to qualify or vary the instructions to an agent, and allow him to show that, by the understanding of merchants, a sale on credit was no violation of an order to sell for cash; and held that even if such custom might be shown, the evidence of it should be of the most clear and satisfactory kind.

In Parsons v. Martin, 11 Gray (Mass.) 115, it was held that an agent, acting under a written authority contained in a letter, was bound to regard the instructions given him in every particular, and that no usage or custom could affect the legal rights of the parties, nor, if fully proved, would the law sustain or tolerate it. See Osborne v. Rider, 62 Wis. 235. And see supra, this title, Nature and Extent of Authority.

guilty of a mere breach of duty, as where he is instructed to sell for a certain price and sells for less, the proper remedy of the principal is an action for damages;¹ but where there is an entire departure from his authority on the part of the agent, as where he parts with the property in an unauthorized manner or when not authorized to do so, he may be held liable as for a conversion.²

b. REASONABLE SKILL AND DILIGENCE—(1) Agency for Reward—(a) Rule and Its Extent.—Where an agent receives a remuneration for his services, he is understood to contract for reasonable skill and ordinary diligence; that is, that he is possessed of the skill ordinarily possessed and employed by persons of common capacity engaged in the same trade, business, or employment, and that he will exercise that degree of diligence which persons of common prudence are accustomed to use about their own business affairs; and he is consequently liable for any injury to his principal occasioned by his want of ordinary skill or by his ordinary negligence.³ This rule applies to all classes

Y.) 167; Dufresne v. Hutchinson, 3 Taunt. 117. See also Nichols v. Wadsworth, 40 Minn. 547; McMillan v. Arthur, 98 N. Y. 167, affirming 48 N. Y. Super. Ct. 424, 6 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 432; Guy v. Oakley, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 332; Allen v. Brown, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 86, 44 N. Y. 228.

Measure of Damages.—Where, by the terms of an agreement between an agent and his principal, the former is authorized to sell goods for a certain price, and he sells for a less amount, the principal may recover from the agent the entire amount named in the agreement. Reynolds v. Rogers, 63 Mo. 17. See also Sheffield v. Linn, 62 Mich. 151.

"Where one person furnishes money to another to discharge an incumbrance from the land of the person furnishing the money, and the person undertaking to discharge the incumbrance neglects to do it, and the land is lost to the owner by reason of the incumbrance, the measure of damages may be the money furnished, with interest, or the value of the land lost, according to the circumstances. If the landowner has knowledge of his agent's failure in time to redeem the land himself, his damages will be the money furnished, with interest. But if the landowner justly relies upon his agent, to whom he has furnished money to discharge the incumbrance, and the land is lost without his knowledge, and solely through the fault of the agent, then the agent will be liable for the value of the land at the time it is lost." Adams, J., in Blood v. Wilkins, 43 Iowa 565.

2. Mechem on Agency, § 477; Farrand v. Hurlburt, 7 Minn. 477.

Where the Agent Wholly Departs from His Authority in disposing of the goods, he makes the property his own, and may be treated as a tortfeasor. There must be some act on the part of the agent. A mere omission of duty is not enough, although the property may be lost in consequence of the neglect. Nor will trover lie where the agent, though wanting in good faith, has acted within the general scope of his powers. There must be an entire departure from his authority before an action for the conversion of the goods can be maintained. McMorris v. Simpson, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 610.

Thus, where cotton was delivered to an agent to be held in store for an advance in price and then sold at Memphis, and the agent, without the principal's knowledge or consent, shipped it to Liverpool, he was held liable for the conversion of the cotton. Galbreath v. Epperson (Tenn., 1886), 1 S. W. Rep. 157.

And where the owner of goods on board a vessel directed the captain not to land them on the wharf, which he promised not to do, but afterwards delivered them to the wharfinger for the owner's use, the captain was held liable in an action of trover. Syeds v. Hay, 4 T. R. 260.

Investing Contrary to Instructions.—If an agent, who has received money from his principal to be invested, invests the same after notice from his principal not to invest, the agent makes the investment on his own responsibility, and is liable to the principal. Richardson v. Futrell, 42 Miss. 525.

A factor instructed to sell at a specified price on a certain day or ship to M., is liable as for a conversion if he sells on the next day. Scott v. Rogers, 31 N. Y. 676, 4 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 157.

Depreciation of Funds in Agent's Possession.—Where funds in an agent's possession commence to depreciate, it is not his duty to return or offer to return the same to the principal, where the principal has the same facilities as the agent for knowing of the depreciation of the funds. Richardson v. Futrell, 42 Miss. 525.

An agent is responsible, not only for his unfaithfulness, but also for his fault or neglect. Imboden v. Richardson, 15 La. Ann. 534.

Where the plaintiff by agreement allowed the defendant to control her business in his own name as her trustee and agent, he was held liable, in an action on account, for losses occasioned by his neglect of her interests, although a former agreement between them provided that he should not be accountable for his manner of conducting the business or for errors of judgment. Geisse v. Franklin, 56 Conn. 83.

The Agent is Not Liable for Such Accidental Losses as may occur in the course of his employment, and which could not be prevented by the exercise of reasonable skill and diligence. Lake City Flouring Mill Co. v. McVean, 32 Minn. 301; Page v. Wells, 37 Mich. 415; Fick v. Runnels, 48 Mich. 302; Bannon v. Warfield, 42 Md. 22; James v. Borgeois, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 345; Weakley v. Pearce, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 401; Hale v. Wall, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 424; or for property stolen, Furber v. Barnes, 32 Minn. 105.

Mistake in Doubtful Matter of Law.—Nor is he responsible for damages caused by his mistake in a doubtful matter of law. Mechanics' Bank v. Merchants' Bank, 6 Met. (Mass.) 13; Howe v. Dewing, 2 Gray (Mass.) 476; Hicks v. Minturn, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 550; Watson v. Rickard, 25 Kan. 662; Rice v. Melendy, 41 Iowa 395. It is requiring too much to oblige him to determine at his peril difficult questions of law not adjudicated in his state, and customs not judicially recognized. Barrett v. Zacharie, 5 La. Ann. 253.

Conveyancers.—Conveyancers are held to the same rule of liability for errors of judgment as are lawyers and physicians, and where, relying on the opinion of legal counsel that a ground rent was free of incumbrances, a conveyancer so represented it to his principal, he was held not liable for negligence. Watson v. Muirhead, 57 Pa. St. 161, 98 Am. Dec. 213.

An agent employed to examine the titles of lands offered as security for a loan is liable for damages for negligently representing it as good when it is not. Pennoyer v. Willis, 26 Oregon 1. See the title ABSTRACT OF TITLE, Vol. I., p. 220.

Agent to Look after Goods at Custom-house.

—An agent to attend to entries of goods at the custom-house, and instructed to appeal from certain illegal assessments of duties and employ counsel, is liable for damages if he allows the time to elapse within which suit can be brought to recover the illegal duties without entering suit. Bowerman v. Rogers, 125 U. S. 585.

Agent to Procure Corporation's Acceptance.—

And an agent to procure a corporation's acceptance of a draft is liable for the amount of the draft if he takes the acceptance of the secretary of the corporation, knowing that he is not authorized to bind the corporation. Kirkeys v. Crandall, 90 Tenn. 532.

An Agent under Contract to Keep a Highway in Repair is liable to the town for any damages it is compelled to pay to one sustaining an injury by reason of his neglect. Wilson v. Greensboro, 54 Vt. 533.

An Agent to Rent Lands and Collect the Rents is liable to his principal for neglect only where he has, or with reasonable diligence could have, collected rent, or rented the lands to some one who could or would have paid rent therefor. Burpe v. Van Eman, 11 Minn. 327.

Agent Acting on Principal's Advice.—If an agent, by advice of his principal, takes paper in payment of a sale, instead of cash, he is not liable for a failure to collect it unless he is guilty of negligence, bad faith, or dishonesty. Fick v. Runnels, 48 Mich. 302.

Agent Buying through Third Person—Advance Price.—Authority to an agent to purchase a certain mare for his principal at a limited price will not justify the agent in sending a third person to buy it, and then buying it of him at an advance, though within the prescribed limit. Armstrong v. Elliott, 29 Mich. 485.

Where an Agent Bought for Remittance, without instructions, a bill at forty-five days after date, on drawees at a place distant from their customer's residence, and drawn by a house of inferior and doubtful credit from whom he occasionally obtained accommodation, he was held responsible for the loss. Rourk v. Pegram, 10 La. Ann. 394.

Deposits.—If the agent deposits the money of his principal in a solvent house, subject to the draft of his principal, he is not liable for the subsequent failure of the house. Hammon v. Cottle, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 290.

Death of Agent.—In case of the death of the agent, his estate will be liable to his principal for losses occasioned by his negligence or lack of skill. Robinson Mach. Works v. Vorse, 52 Iowa 207.

of agents, including agents to effect insurance,¹ physicians and surgeons,² attorneys,³ bankers and brokers,⁴ commission merchants, and factors.⁵

Agents to Loan or Invest.—An agent making investments, or loaning the money of his principal, must see to it that the security is sufficient, and use due diligence in collecting the debt when it falls due.⁶

Waiver.—The principal may, by his laches, relieve the agent from liability for his negligence or wrongful act. Reed v. Ritchey, 2 La. Ann. 797; Ingraham v. Barber, 72 Ga. 158.

1. Insurance Agents.—An insurance broker or agent undertaking to effect insurance for his principal is liable for negligence in failing to procure a policy in the proper form, Park v. Hamond, 4 Campb. 344; or to effect a valid insurance, Sawyer v. Mayhew, 51 Me. 398. But he is not liable for the solvency of the company if he insures in one generally considered safe, using due care in the selection of the company. Gettins v. Scudder, 71 Ill. 86. See the title INSURANCE BROKERS; and infra, this section, Duty as to Insurance.

2. Physicians and Surgeons.—The rule applies to physicians and surgeons, who are liable to patients for unskillful treatment. Wilmot v. Howard, 39 Vt. 447, 94 Am. Dec. 338; Fowler v. Sergeant, 1 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 355; Small v. Howard, 128 Mass. 131, 35 Am. Rep. 363; Long v. Morrison, 14 Ind. 595, 77 Am. Dec. 72; Patten v. Wiggins, 51 Me. 594, 81 Am. Dec. 593; Howard v. Grover, 28 Me. 97, 48 Am. Dec. 478; Leighton v. Sargent, 27 N. H. 460, 59 Am. Dec. 388; Grannis v. Branden, 5 Day (Conn.) 260, 5 Am. Dec. 143; Landon v. Humphrey, 9 Conn. 209, 23 Am. Dec. 333; Wood v. Clapp, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 65. And see the title PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

3. Attorneys.—Attorneys are within the rule. Varnum v. Martin, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 440; Crooker v. Hutchinson, 1 Vt. 73; Evans v. Watrous, 2 Port. (Ala.) 205; Marsh v. Whitmore, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 178; Stimpson v. Sprague, 6 Me. 470; Wilson v. Russ, 20 Me. 421; Holmes v. Peck, 1 R. I. 242; Stevens v. Walker, 55 Ill. 151. And see the title ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

And the negligence of the attorney may be shown in an action for his fees. Gleason v. Clark, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 57.

4. Bankers and Brokers.—Gheen v. Johnson, 90 Pa. St. 38; Trinidad First Nat. Bank v. Denver First Nat. Bank, 4 Dill. (U. S.) 290; Milwaukee Nat. Bank v. City Bank, 103 U. S. 668. And see the titles BANKS AND BANKING; BROKERS.

In making a collection a bank is liable for negligence in accepting a depreciated currency. Waterhouse v. Citizens' Bank, 25 La. Ann. 77; Webster v. Whitworth, 49 Ala. 201.

And the failure of a bank to promptly present a draft for payment renders it liable for the loss. Meadville First Nat. Bank v. New York Fourth Nat. Bank, 77 N. Y. 320.

But it is not liable for negligence in sending a collection to a correspondent bank if the same is generally considered sound, and it has no reason to be suspicious. Fay v. Strawn, 32 Ill. 295.

5. Factors and Commission Merchants.—Babcock v. Orbison, 25 Ind. 75; Phillips v. Moir, 69 Ill. 155. And see the title COMMISSION MERCHANTS OR FACTORS.

A factor failing, through negligence, to collect cotton due his principal, is liable for the value of the cotton with interest. Dickson v. Screven, 23 S. Car. 212.

6. Agent to Loan and Invest—Insufficient Securities.—An agent to lend money is liable for negligence in taking insufficient security, as by lending on real estate already heavily mortgaged. Whitney v. Martine, 88 N. Y. 535; Owensboro Bank v. Western Bank, 13 Bush (Ky.) 526, 26 Am. Rep. 211; Murrah v. Brichta (Tex., 1888), 9 S. W. Rep. 185; Bannon v. Warfield, 42 Md. 22; McFarland v. McClees (Pa., 1886), 5 Atl. Rep. 50; Bronnenburg v. Rinker, 2 Ind. App. 391.

Especially where instructed to lend on unencumbered real estate. But his liability does not exceed the amount of the prior mortgage. Welsh v. Brown, 8 Ind. App. 421.

But the agent does not guarantee the security. Kennedy v. McCain, 146 Pa. St. 63.

An agent to invest money on mortgage cannot invest it in a second mortgage without the express consent of his principal. Whitney v. Martine, 6 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 72. But he will not be held personally liable because he has done so, in the absence of proof that loss has ensued, or will probably ensue. Porter v. Woodruff, 36 N. J. Eq. 174.

If, by neglect and want of diligence, he fails to collect money of his principal loaned by him, he is liable for the loss. Rochester v. Levering, 104 Ind. 562. See Dickson v. Screven, 23 S. Car. 212.

Where an agent loaned money to a person who was insolvent, and who had forged his deed to the land on which the loan was made, and the loan turned out to be a total loss to the principal, it was held that the agent, having made diligent inquiries as to the borrower's character, and heard nothing but good reports, and acted in good faith, was not liable for the loss. Texas Loan Agency v. Swayne (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 27 S. W. Rep. 183.

And an agent intrusted with money to be invested, in his discretion, in speculations in stocks and securities, is not liable for the loss if he has acted in good faith. Stewart v. Parnell, 147 Pa. St. 523, 29 W. N. C. (Pa.) 537.

An agent agreeing to take the money of his principal and loan it to good parties must loan it in fact, and cannot use it himself and pay the principal with the note of a third party, based on a different consideration, without advising him of the fact. Scott v. Turley, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 631.

The Principal Has the Burden of Proof that the agent was negligent, in an action against him for negligently taking forged notes as security for a loan. Rand v. Johns (Tex. App., 1891), 15 S. W. Rep. 200.

Agents to Collect.—And one whose duty or business it is to collect money will be liable for any loss occasioned by his want of diligence in pressing the claim.¹

Unauthorized Receipt of Goods by Agent.—The agent is not liable to his principal for the value of goods delivered to him in payment of a loan, and so received, without authority, where the principal repudiates the debtor's claim of payment, and still holds him for the debt. Perkins v. Hershey, 77 Mich. 504.

1. In Making Collections an agent is bound to use ordinary care and diligence in pressing the claim and remitting the proceeds, and if through his carelessness the debt is lost, he will be held liable. Kingston v. Kincaid, 1 Wash. (U. S.) 457; Mechanics Bank v. Merchants Bank, 6 Met. (Mass.) 26; Buell v. Chapin, 99 Mass. 594, 97 Am. Dec. 58; Allen v. Suydam, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 321, 32 Am. Dec. 555; Walker v. State Bank, 9 N. Y. 582; Wiley v. Logan, 95 N. Car. 358; Reed v. Northup, 50 Mich. 442; Diamond Mill Co. v. Groesbeek Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 29 S. W. Rep. 169, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 371.

But he is bound only to use due diligence to collect the debt. Lawrence v. McCalmont, 2 How. (U. S.) 426; Stancill v. Gilmore, 6 La. Ann. 763; Evans v. Hatcher, 10 La. Ann. 98; Buckingham v. Payne, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 81. Compare Pickett v. Pearsons, 17 Vt. 470.

An agent receiving a note for collection must show that he has used the proper degree of care and industry in obtaining payment. Police Jury v. Hebert, 2 La. Ann. 149; Livaudais v. Denis, 4 La. Ann. 300; Stancill v. Gilmore, 6 La. Ann. 763; Bush v. Guion, 6 La. Ann. 797.

Agent Putting Bonds with Attorney for Collection.—Where one receives bonds for collection, and puts them into the hands of a lawyer to collect, he is not responsible any further than he receives moneys from the lawyer. Hawkins v. Minor, 5 Call (Va.) 118. But see also Prentice v. Buxton, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 35; Harrold v. Gillespie, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 57.

Agent Giving Notice to Principal.—It is the duty of an agent receiving a note for collection to present it at the time and place fixed for payment, or if no place is designated, to use due diligence to make demand; if payment is refused, he should give immediate notice to his principal, that the latter may take the measures necessary for his security. Mobile Bank v. Huggins, 3 Ala. 206.

Agent to Collect and Holder of Bill of Exchange Distinguished.—An agent to collect a bill or note does not bear the same relation to his principal that the holder of a bill of exchange does to the drawer and indorser, and the same negligence or omission which will deprive the holder of all recourse against the drawer or indorser will not subject the agent to liability to his principal. Hamilton v. Cunningham, 2 Brock. (U. S.) 350.

The Principal must show that the Money could have been Collected by use of such diligence as was incumbent upon the agent from the nature of his undertaking. Sandefur v. Mattingley, 16 Ark. 237.

Agent Need Not Do Vain Thing.—An omission to do that which if done would have been fruitless and unavailing cannot be properly denominated negligence. Folsom v. Mussey, 10 Me. 297.

Presenting Bill for Acceptance.—But an agent receiving a bill for collection, payable a certain day and date, is held to a strict vigilance in making presentation for acceptance. Allen v. Suydam, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 321, 32 Am. Dec. 555.

A Justice Receipting for a Note for collection, in his official capacity, does not thereby become a collecting agent, and is not bound to cause a suit to be instituted in another precinct. White v. Goffe, 24 Tex. 658.

Sickness of Agent—Acting Bona Fide.—Where through sickness, and the bill being mislaid, an agent was delayed three days in forwarding it to the place of payment for collection, he was held not guilty of such gross negligence as to render him responsible; nor was he rendered liable by the fact that the firm to which the bill was forwarded failed immediately thereafter, the firm being in good credit at the time, and the principal being aware that it was to be forwarded to such firm. Ford v. Stewart, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 326.

Satisfaction of Mortgage for Less than is Due.—An agent raising a mortgage, which he is authorized to collect, for a less sum than is actually due thereon, is liable to his principal for the deficiency. Kempker v. Roblyer, 29 Iowa 274.

An Agent Holding Claims of Different Persons against the same party, to each of whom he is under the same obligations, is bound to apply money received generally without any appropriation by the debtor, upon each claim pro rata. Richards v. New Hampshire Ins. Co., 43 N. H. 263. And see the titles ATTORNEY AND CLIENT; BANKS AND BANKING; MERCANTILE AGENCIES; where the liability of those agents in making collections is fully treated.

Medium of Payment.—The agent, in the absence of instructions to the contrary, is authorized to receive in payment of such debts whatever kind of money is generally received by prudent business men for similar purposes. Baird v. Hall, 67 N. Car. 230; Atkin v. Mooney, Phil. (N. Car.) 31. And where an agent accepted Confederate treasury notes, without showing any necessity therefor or effort to dispose of them to the best advantage, he was compelled to bear the loss. Webster v. Whitworth, 49 Ala. 201; Shuford v. Ramsour, 63 N. Car. 622.

And if he accepts the bills of a bank, the solvency of which he does not know, taking at the same time the guaranty of the debtor, with surety, that they are good, he is not guilty of such negligence as to make himself

Agents to Sell.—An agent intrusted with property for sale is bound to use reasonable diligence in making a sale for a fair price,¹ and if through his negligence a portion of the purchase price is lost, he will be responsible.²

responsible for a resulting loss. Pickett v. Pearsons, 17 Vt. 470.

1. Duties of Agent for Sale of Property.—Chase v. Blaisdell, 4 Minn. 90.

If, owing to his neglect, the sale is not consummated, he is liable. Montgomery v. Pacific Coast Land Bureau, 94 Cal. 284.

An Agent Neglecting to Sell when directed to do so is liable to his principal for the loss sustained by reason of his failure. Pulsifer v. Shepard, 36 Ill. 513.

Notice of Depreciation before Selling.—Where a consignment is made without any restriction, and the consignees are authorized to "deal with it as their own," the consignor is not entitled to notice of its depreciated value before sale. Adams v. Capron, 21 Md. 186, 83 Am. Dec. 566.

A Factor Selling at an Under Price is liable for the fair value of the goods. Bigelow v. Walker, 24 Vt. 149, 58 Am. Dec. 156.

All that can be required of the agent is that he act fairly and use his best judgment; and where an agent received cotton upon which he made an advance and agreed to ship to New Orleans or New York, and have it sold for the best price it would bring, the agent to have the entire control of it, and he shipped to New York, where it sold for less than it would have brought in New Orleans, it was held that he was not responsible for the loss. Betts v. Planters', etc., Bank, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 18.

And where an agent in Memphis, expecting the city to be occupied by Federal troops, sold a lot of sugar and molasses belonging to his principal, taking payment in Confederate money, and being unable to transmit the money to his principal and finding it depreciating in value, invested it in tobacco and sheeting, which he afterwards sold, he was held responsible only for the net proceeds of the final sale. James v. Borgeois, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 345.

Where the Cashier of a Bank was employed to sell certain shares therein at a fixed price, but before completion of the sales the sale was enjoined and the bank proved insolvent, he could not be held responsible for the supposed value of the stock, no neglect being shown on his part in forwarding the sale. Washburn v. Blake, 47 Me. 316.

Where an Agent Selling His Principal's Logs permits the purchaser to scale them instead of the official scaler, he commits a breach of duty, making him liable if the measurement is incorrect. Crawford v. Cockran, 2 Wash. Ter. 117.

Orders from Principal Not to Deliver.—If having sold goods he is ordered by his principal, while they are yet in transit, not to deliver them, as the latter doubts the solvency of the purchaser, he is liable to his principal if he, notwithstanding, delivers them without taking security and the purchaser proves insolvent. Howatt v. Davis, 5 Munf. (Va.) 34, 7 Am. Dec. 681.

In an Action by a Factor to Recover a General Balance, his negligence in selling his principal's goods can be given in evidence in mitigation of damages, and to bar all charges for commissions and all charges for interest, storage, etc., caused by his negligence. Dodge v. Tileston, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 328.

Must Preserve Property.—The agent is bound to use ordinary diligence to preserve the property while in his hands, and if through his neglect a loss or damage results to it, he is responsible. Chenoweth v. Dickinson, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 156. And see Dickey v. Grant, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 310.

Return of Goods.—If he allowed the purchaser to return unsatisfactory goods, he cannot be charged by his principal with a share of their value after the latter has caused the agent to send them back to him and has kept them. Filer v. Jenks, 38 Mich. 585.

2. United States.—Evans v. Lawton, 34 Fed. Rep. 233; Scanlan v. Hodges, 52 Fed. Rep. 354, 3 C. C. A. 113, 10 U. S. App. 352.

California.—Harlan v. Ely, 68 Cal. 522.

Georgia.—Loveless v. Fowler, 79 Ga. 134, 11 Am. St. Rep. 407; Augusta Nat. Bank v. Goodyear, 90 Ga. 711.

Illinois.—Deshler v. Beers, 32 Ill. 368, 83 Am. Dec. 274.

Indiana.—U. S. Mortgage Co. v. Henderson, 111 Ind. 24; Babcock v. Orbison, 25 Ind. 75.

Iowa.—Robinson Mach. Works v. Vorse, 52 Iowa 207.

Kansas.—Frick v. Larned, 50 Kan. 776.

Maine.—School Dist. No. 6 v. Aetna Ins. Co., 62 Me. 330; Greely v. Bartlett, 1 Me. 172; Folsom v. Mussey, 8 Me. 400, 23 Am. Dec. 522.

Massachusetts.—Hemenway v. Hemenway, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 389.

Michigan.—Birdsell Mfg. Co. v. Brown, 96 Mich. 213; Fick v. Runnels, 48 Mich. 302.

Minnesota.—Plano Mfg. Co. v. Buxton, 36 Minn. 203; Nichols v. Wadsworth, 40 Minn. 547.

New York.—Doty v. Case, etc., Thresher Co., 50 Hun (N. Y.) 595.

Pennsylvania.—Browne v. Arrott, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 402; Harvey v. Turner, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 223.

South Carolina.—Tate v. Marco, 27 S. Car. 493.

Vermont.—Thompson v. Babcock, Brayt. (Vt.) 24.

Virginia.—Piedmont Guano, etc., Co. v. Morris, 86 Va. 941.

Wisconsin.—Osborne v. Rider, 62 Wis. 235.

As to the right of the agent to sell on credit, see supra, this title, Nature and Extent of Authority. As to his right to accept payment in depreciated currency, see supra, this title, Nature and Extent of Authority. Also the title MONEY. As to the method of remitting the proceeds of the sale, see the title PAYMENT.

Diligence for the Jury.—Whether or not due care and reasonable diligence have been used is for the jury.¹

Errors of Judgment.—But no greater diligence is required of an agent than his principal, under similar circumstances, would have exercised,² and he is not liable for errors of judgment in matters left to his discretion.³

Illegal Acts.—Nor is he liable for the damage resulting from the negligent performance of illegal acts.⁴

Measure of Damages.—The agent is liable only for the actual loss resulting from his negligence.⁵

(b) Duty as to Insurance.—In the absence of instructions, or a usage of trade or habit of dealing between the parties, the agent is not bound to insure the property of his principal;⁶ but if he has received instructions to insure, or has been in the habit of effecting insurance in the previous dealings between them, or it is the usual custom in the course of such transactions, he will be liable himself as an insurer for any loss arising from his failure to insure.⁷

2. Blight v. Askley, 1 Pet. (C. C.) 15.

3. Milbank v. Dennistoun, 21 N. Y. 391; Page v. Wells, 37 Mich. 415; M'Laughlin v. Simpson, 3 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 85; Long v. Poole, 68 N. Car. 479.

Where an agent had demands aggregating nine thousand dollars placed in his hands "to settle on the best terms in his power," and, the result of a suit pending for them being doubtful, he took the notes of the defendants for five thousand six hundred dollars, for which he took salt at a high rate, from the sale of which but two thousand seven hundred dollars was realized, it was held that, having acted with good faith and sound discretion, he could not be made accountable for more than the net proceeds. Steele v. Taylor, 4 Dana (Ky.) 445.

4. Baynard v. Harrity, 1 Houst. (Del.) 200.

5. Bell v. Cunningham, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 69; Mobile Bank v. Huggins, 3 Ala. 206; Ainsworth v. Partillo, 13 Ala. 460; Walsh v. Frank, 19 Ark. 270; Andrews v. Pardee, 5 Day (Conn.) 29; Ashley v. Root, 4 Allen (Mass.) 504. And see the title DAMAGES.

No more can be recovered as damages than will fully indemnify the principal. Ryder v. Thayer, 3 La. Ann. 149.

6. Shoenfeld v. Fleisher, 73 Ill. 404; Schaeffer v. Kirk, 49 Ill. 251; Brisban v. Boyd, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 17; Lee v. Adsit, 37 N. Y. 78.

A special agent is bound by his special instructions, unless the mercantile law or custom has established additional duties, and in the absence of instructions or of a usage of trade to do so, is not bound to insure. Shirtliff v. Whitfield, 2 Brev. (S. Car.) 71, 3 Am. Dec. 701.

But an agent may become an insurer by representing to his principal that there is no risk. He is bound to keep his principal informed of all material occurrences. Brown v. Arrott, 1 Miles (Pa.) 137.

7. Shirtliff v. Whitfield, 2 Brev. (S. Car.) 71, 3 Am. Dec. 701; Kingston v. Wilson, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 315; De Tastett v. Crousillat, 2 Wash. (U. S.) 132; Shoenfeld v. Fleisher, 73 Ill. 404; Smith v. Lascelles, 2 T. R. 187.

But it is otherwise where the insurance would have been of no avail if effected. Alsop v. Coit, 12 Mass. 40. And see De Forest v. Fulton F. Ins. Co., 1 Hall (N. Y.) 84. Also supra, this section, Fidelity to Instructions—General Rule.

In Strong v. High, 2 Rob. (La.) 103, 38 Am. Dec. 195, the special agent of the owner of a steamboat for the purpose of attending to the business of the boat, collecting the money earned, and doing everything necessary to the interest of the owner, had been in the habit of keeping the boat insured, but had inadvertently allowed the policy to run out. Upon the boat being destroyed he was held liable to his principal for the loss. And see Berthoud v. Gordon, 6 La. 579.

But where the contract with the principal does not require the agent to keep the property insured, but only to insure it for a reasonable period, the agent will not be liable for the loss of such property destroyed by fire after a long period has elapsed and the policies have run out. Milburn Wagon Co. v. Evans, 30 Minn. 89.

A Simple Request to Insure where No Funds are Provided, or there has been no previous dealing between the parties, or no goods on consignment from which the agent might reimburse himself, will not of itself devolve upon him the duty to insure or render him liable for failure to do so. But a promise or undertaking to insure is implied where the course of dealing has been such that the agent has been used to effect insurance, or where he has funds or effects on hand, or even where the bill of lading from which he derives his authority contains an order to insure, or where the general usage is to insure. Vickery v. Lanier, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 133.

If the Agent has been in the Habit of Effecting Insurance, he must give notice to his principal of his intention to discontinue it, and he is responsible for any loss consequent upon his failure to insure before giving notice to the principal. Area v. Milliken, 35 La. Ann. 1150; Berthoud v. Gordon, 6 La. 579; Smith v. Lascelles, 2 T. R. 187; De Tastett v. Crousillat, 2 Wash. (U. S.) 132.

Must Notify Principal of Failure to Obtain Insurance.—And if, having undertaken to effect insurance according to special instructions, he fails to obtain it, he should at once notify or from his imperfect execution of insurance.¹

(c) Duty to Advise Principal of Matters Material to His Interest.—It is the duty of the agent to keep the principal regularly informed of his transactions, and the state of the interest intrusted to him, and he is liable in damages to the principal for any loss sustained through his dereliction in this particular.²

his principal, Callander v. Oelrichs, 5 Bing. N. Cas. 58, 35 E. C. L. 29; and will be liable in damages if he does not, De Tastett v. Crousillat, 2 Wash. (U. S.) 132. But not if he notifies him at once. Williams v. Rost, 13 La. Ann. 327.

Factor Insuring for His Own Security—Waiver.—But if the custom of insuring is shown to have in view merely the security of a factor making advances on consignments, the factor may, if he chooses, waive it. Kingston v. Wilson, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 315.

Insuring with Company in Bad Credit.—If the agent procures insurance from underwriters notoriously in bad credit or insolvent, and loss results, it falls upon him. Strong v. High, 2 Rob. (La.) 103, 38 Am. Dec. 195.

Agent Unable to Effect Insurance.—Where the owner of a vessel in a foreign port directed his correspondent in Boston to procure insurance upon the vessel, and the agent, not able to effect it in that town or in the towns in the vicinity, extended his endeavors to the city of New York, limiting the premium to a rate at which it could not be obtained, it was held that the agent was not liable for not having procured the insurance. Sanches v. Davenport, 6 Mass. 258.

Agent Rendering Account for Higher Rate than Actually Paid.—Where the plaintiff's factors effected insurance on their stock of tobacco and other merchandise in four different companies, the policies running for various periods and at different rates, the rate being equal to about one eighth of one per cent a month, and in their accounts rendered of the sales of the tobacco charged one fourth of one per cent a month for insurance, it was held that they were not to be considered the plaintiff's agents in the insurance they had effected, but as being themselves insurers at the rate of one fourth of one per cent a month, and as having reinsured at the best terms they could obtain in the different companies in their city. Miller v. Tate, 12 La. Ann. 160. 1. De Tastett v. Crousillat, 2 Wash. (U. S.) 132.

The agent is liable for any loss occasioned by a peril he should have insured against. Strong v. High, 2 Rob. (La.) 103, 38 Am. Dec. 195.

Failure to Procure Full Insurance.—If there is no difficulty in procuring full insurance, and such is the general practice in the matter embraced, the agent is liable for not procuring a contract for a full indemnity. Beardsley v. Davis, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 159.

Failure to Incorporate Stipulations in Policy.—Where insurance brokers were ordered to effect a policy "at and from Teneriffe to London," they were held liable for not inserting in the policy the liberty "to touch and stay at any or all of the Canary Islands," that being usually inserted in policies from Teneriffe. Mallough v. Barber, 4 Campb. 150.

Measure of Damages.—In Case of an Entire Failure to Insure, the measure of damages is the full amount of the policy the agent should have procured, less the premium. Storer v. Eaton, 50 Me. 219, 79 Am. Dec. 611.

And in Case of Only Partial Insurance, the value of the property destroyed, less the amount received under the policy. Beardsley v. Davis, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 159.

Insurance Imperfectly Made.—In De Tastett v. Crousillat, 2 Wash. (U. S.) 132, it is said that when the insurance has been imperfectly made and not altogether neglected, it may be questioned whether the agent is liable for more than the damages equal to the chance of indemnity which would have been afforded by the exact execution of the order.

Where the owner of a vessel instructed his agent to procure a policy of insurance, stating that he valued the vessel at four thousand dollars, three fourths of which sum he wished to be insured, and the agent neglected to insure according to the instructions, he was held answerable as in the case of a valued policy, although the letter contained no precise order to have the policy valued. Miner v. Tagert, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 204.

2. It is the duty of the agent to give his principal timely notice of every fact or circumstance which may make it necessary for him to take measures for his security, and if he fails to do so, it is a dereliction of duty for which he is chargeable. Norris v. Tayloe, 49 Ill. 17; Edmonstone v. Hartshorn, 19 N. Y. 9; Devall v. Burbridge, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 305; Brown v. Arrott, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 402; Clark v. Wheeling Bank, 17 Pa. St. 322; Rogers v. Bradford, 1 Pin. (Wis.) 418; Moore v. Thompson, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 164. See also Duff v. Duff, 71 Cal. 513. The general rule is that the measure of damages is to be proportioned to the actual loss sustained by the principal. Arrott v. Brown, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 9.

Attachment Proceedings.—The agent should give notice of an attachment levied on the principal's property. Moore v. Thompson, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 164.

Inability to Insure.—And if he undertakes to effect insurance according to special instructions, he should notify his principal in case of failure. Callander v. Oelrichs, 5 Bing. N. Cas. 58, 35 E. C. L. 29; Williams v. Rost, 13 La. Ann. 327. And see supra, this section, Duty as to Insurance.

Nonpayment of Note Taken for Goods Sold.—An agent selling goods and taking a note in payment should notify the principal in case the note is not paid at maturity. Harvey v. Turner, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 223.

An Agent for the Investment and Transmission of Money has been held liable for every default of a subagent occurring during a period in which he kept his principal in ignorance of the destination of a draft purchased by him on account of the principal. Clark v. Wheeling Bank, 17 Pa. St. 322.

(2) Gratuitous Agency—(a) Ordinary Agencies.—In ordinary agencies not necessarily implying a peculiar knowledge or skill in the agent, one undertaking to perform services for another without reward is held to a degree of responsibility greatly inferior to that of a hired agent, and is only liable for gross neglect¹ or wilful and malicious fraud,² but not for nonfeasance.³ The question of negligence is one of fact, to be passed upon by the jury.⁴

(b) Agencies Implying Peculiar Knowledge or Skill.—One holding himself out as possessing a peculiar knowledge or skill in any profession, business, or vocation is held to the same degree of care and the same liability as an agent for reward, whether he in fact receives a remuneration or not.⁵

Agent must Communicate Facts Affecting Value of Land to be Sold by Him.—It is the duty of an agent authorized to sell land for a certain sum, upon learning of a fact in the condition of the land increasing its value, and of which the principal was ignorant when he named the price, to inform the principal of the fact; and a sale by him on the basis of the sum fixed without so informing the principal is a fraud. Hegenmyer v. Marks, 37 Minn. 6, 5 Am. St. Rep. 808.

1. Ordinary Agencies not Implying Peculiar Knowledge or Skill.—It is well settled that a mandatory or a bailee without hire is liable only for gross neglect. Beardslee v. Richardson, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 25, 25 Am. Dec. 596; Lampley v. Scott, 24 Miss. 528; Moore v. Gholson, 34 Miss. 372; Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168; Haynie v. Waring, 29 Ala. 263; Stanton v. Bell, 2 Hawks (N. Car.) 145, 11 Am. Dec. 744; Nixon v. Bogin, 26 S. Car. 611; Kirtland v. Montgomery, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 452; Anthony v. Smith, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 508; Lyon v. Tams, 11 Ark. 189; Story on Bailments, § 137. And see Pate v. McClure, 4 Rand. (Va.) 164; Turton v. Dufief, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 420; and the title BAILMENTS.

An agent without reward is responsible only for the most ordinary care. Persch v. Quiggle, 57 Pa. St. 247.

In Herrick v. Hodges, 13 Cal. 431, however, it is held that where one undertakes a gratuitous agency he is bound to good faith and ordinary diligence in executing what he pretends to do.

The fact that it is a friendly agency, undertaken without any expectation of commissions for services, is no excuse for the want of reasonable care in conducting it. Dodge v. Perkins, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 393.

Where the issue is raised as to whether or not he was an agent for reward, an instruction which ignores the distinction between the responsibilities of the two classes is fatally erroneous. Stewart v. Butts, 45 Ill. App. 512.

An Agent, without Remuneration, to Invest or Lend the money of another is liable only for gross neglect. Sodowsky v. M'Faland, 3 Dana (Ky.) 204; Grant v. Ludlow, 8 Ohio St. 1.

A Leading Case upon the Subject is Shiells v. Blackburne, 1 H. Bl. 158, where a general merchant voluntarily and without reward undertook to enter a parcel of goods for B at the custom-house for exportation, along with a parcel of his own of the same sort, and made the entry under a wrong denomination, whereby both parcels were seized; and it was held that, having taken the same care of the goods of B as of his own, and having received no reward, and not being of a profession or employment which necessarily implied skill in what he had undertaken, he was not liable to an action for the loss.

Gross Neglect—How Determined.—What constitutes such gross neglect in an agent acting without reward as will render him liable in damages to his principal, is a question of fact to be determined by reference to the subject matter and objects of the agency, the known character, qualifications, and relations of the parties, and all the circumstances of the case. Grant v. Ludlow, 8 Ohio St. 11.

He is guilty of gross neglect if he omits that reasonable care of property committed to his charge which persons in like situations exercise, or which he is accustomed to exercise in like cases. Gross negligence is to be construed with reference to the nature of the goods which are delivered to the agent, and if money is delivered, it is to be kept with more care than common property. Tracy v. Wood, 3 Mason (U. S.) 132.

Where money was deposited with a gratuitous bailee, residing in Utah, to be remitted to a party in St. Louis, and the general method of remitting moneys, there being no bankers, was for several persons to unite together and purchase the drafts of United States officers upon the department at Washington, and the agent put the money with his own, others uniting with him, and took the draft of the United States marshal upon the Treasury Department, it was held that if he acted in good faith and with ordinary care, in the manner usual in transmitting moneys in such cases, he would not be held liable upon payment of the draft being refused. Eddy v. Livingston, 35 Mo. 487, 88 Am. Dec. 122.

2. Stanton v. Bell, 2 Hawks (N. Car.) 146, 11 Am. Dec. 744; Hammond v. Hussey, 51 N. H. 40, 12 Am. Rep. 41.

3. Morrison v. Orr, 3 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 49, 23 Am. Dec. 319; Thorne v. Deas, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 84. And see supra, this section, Fidelity to Instructions—In Case of Unremunerated Agent.

4. Skelley v. Kahn, 17 Ill. 170; Grant v. Ludlow, 8 Ohio St. 11.

5. If a man gratuitously undertakes to do a thing to the best of his skill, where his situation or profession is such as to imply skill, an omission of that skill is imputable to him as gross negligence. Shiells v. Blackburne, 1 H. Bl. 162; Stanton v. Bell, 2 Hawks (N. Car.) 145, 11 Am. Dec. 744.

In Wilson v. Brett, 11 M. & W. 113, Rolfe,

c. GOOD FAITH AND LOYALTY—(1) Necessity and Extent of Rule.—The paramount and vital principle of all agencies is good faith, for without it the relation of principal and agent could not well exist. So sedulously is this principle guarded, that all departures from it are esteemed frauds upon the confidence bestowed.¹ An agent, therefore, will not be allowed to put himself in a position antagonistic to his principal,² or speculate in the subject of the agency;³ and any gift, release, or conveyance obtained by the agent from his principal is subjected to the most rigid scrutiny.⁴

B. said: "A gratuitous bailee is only bound to exercise such skill as he possesses. * * * If a person more skilled knows that to be dangerous which another, not so skilled as he, does not, surely that makes a difference in the liability."

Physicians.—The profession of medicine or surgery is one implying skill, and a physician is liable for the improper treatment of a patient, although he undertakes to treat him without charge. McNeve v. Lowe, 40 Ill. 209; Shiells v. Blackburne, 1 H. Bl. 158.

But if he does not profess to be a physician nor to practice as such, and is merely asked his advice as a friend or neighbor, he does not incur any responsibility. McNeve v. Lowe, 40 Ill. 209. See also Ritchey v. West, 23 Ill. 385.

Although the Managers of a Bank are Unpaid, they are held liable for the want of ordinary care and diligence in the management of the affairs of the institution. Williams v. McKay, 40 N. J. Eq. 189, 53 Am. Rep. 775. And a bank is liable for negligence in making collections, although no charge is made for the same. Durnford v. Patterson, 7 Martin (La.) 460, 12 Am. Dec. 514.

Attorneys.—But an attorney is not liable to an action for negligence for giving, in answer to a casual inquiry, erroneous information as to the contents of a deed, there being no relation of attorney and client between him and the party asking the question. Fish v. Kelly, 17 C. B. N. S. 194, 112 E. C. L. 194.

1. Lamb v. Evans, 2 Rep. 189, 1 Ch. 218; Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. (U. S.) 554; Boswell v. Cunningham, 32 Fla. 277, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 378 et seq. Keighler v. Savage Mfg. Co., 12 Md. 383, 71 Am. Dec. 600; Brooke v. Berry, 2 Gill (Md.) 100; Stone v. Daggett, 73 Ill. 367; Merryman v. David, 31 Ill. 404; Dennis v. McCagg, 32 Ill. 429; Fairman v. Bavin, 29 Ill. 75; Young v. Hughes, 32 N. J. Eq. 372; Persch v. Quiggle, 57 Pa. St. 247; Firestone v. Firestone, 49 Ala. 128; Columbus Co. v. Hurford, 1 Neb. 146; People v. Overysse Tp., 11 Mich. 222; Tisdale v. Tisdale, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 596, 64 Am. Dec. 775; Moore v. Moore, 5 N. Y. 256.

Agent Investing in Corporation in Which He is Interested.—An agent investing his principal's money in a corporation, which is largely in debt, and of which he is a member, without first informing him of the facts, is guilty of fraud, though there be no actual wrongful intent; and the principal may, in the absence of ratification, recover such sum from the agent. Sterling v. Smith, 97 Cal. 343.

Fraud.—An agent fraudulently inducing his principal to exchange land for other land of less value than represented is liable for the damages sustained. Palmer v. Pirson (Buffalo Super. Ct.), 24 N. Y. Supp. 333.

2. Hughes v. Washington, 72 Ill. 84; Cotton v. Holliday, 59 Ill. 176; Flint, etc., R. Co. v. Dewey, 14 Mich. 477. And see infra, this section, Uniting Opposite Characters of Buyer and Seller, and Acquiring Adverse Interests.

An agent cannot be permitted to assume duties and trusts incompatible with his agency, nor to exercise such agency validly after he has acquired an interest adverse to his principal. Knabe v. Ternot, 16 La. Ann. 13. He cannot act for his principal in the same transaction in two inconsistent capacities. Pittsburgh, etc., Iron Co. v. Kirkpatrick, 92 Mich. 252. But in McCarthy v. White, 21 Cal. 495, 82 Am. Dec. 754, it is said that "it must appear, however, that the rule has been violated, and we are not to indulge presumptions upon the subject for the purpose of depriving a party of the fruits of his engagements."

3. Hughes v. Washington, 72 Ill. 84; Krutz v. Fisher, 8 Kan. 90.

An agent to collect a security receiving property in payment, with the intention of applying it to his own use, and concealing the fact from his principal, is guilty of a conversion. Ward v. Forrest, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 465.

If instructed to insure, he will not be allowed to take the risk upon himself, and if he does he cannot recover the premiums. In case of loss, he will be compelled to indemnify his principal on the ground of having failed to insure, and not as insurer. Keane v. Branden, 12 La. Ann. 20.

4. Brooke v. Berry, 2 Gill (Md.) 83; Kerby v. Kerby, 57 Md. 345; Gould v. Gould, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 270.

An agent receiving a gift from his principal will be held to prove that his principal acted with full knowledge of the facts and with due deliberation, and under the advice of others than the grantee. Uhlich v. Muhlke, 61 Ill. 499; Neilson v. Bowman, 29 Gratt. (Va.) 732; Rubidoex v. Parks, 48 Cal. 215.

A conveyance obtained by an agent from his principal will be vacated for fraud or concealment in obtaining it; or for the incompetency of the principal to manage his own business on account of his feebleness of intellect; or for inadequacy of consideration so great as to render the transaction unjust, unequal, and unconscientious. Brooke v. Berry, 2 Gill (Md.) 83. See infra, this title, Uniting Opposite Characters of Buyer and Seller; and the titles ATTORNEY AND CLIENT; GIFTS; UNDUE INFLUENCE.

(2) Making Profit out of Agency.—It follows from the above rule that an agent will not be allowed to make a profit out of the agency or deal in the business thereof for his own benefit, but must give the principal the benefit of any advantage he may obtain.¹ Any profits made out of the purchase or sale of property for his principal belong to the latter;² as where the agent sells for a higher price,³ or purchases for a less price,⁴ than that limited by the principal.

Renewing Insurance Policy.—Where an agent instructed to surrender an insurance policy on the life of his principal and secure a return of the premium notes renewed the policy for his own benefit, it was held to enure to the benefit of the principal, and upon his death the agent was held liable to account for the amount of the policy. Dutton v. Willner, 52 N. Y. 312.

Compromising Debt.—An agent who pays off a debt of his principal for a less sum than is owing is accountable for any residue in his hands given for the purpose. Hitchcock v. Watson, 18 Ill. 289.

Taking up Notes.—Mortgage.—Where an agent, who in the course of his dealings with his principal had frequently made advances to him, took up some outstanding notes of his principal, he was held not entitled to the benefit of a mortgage securing these and other notes, because they must be considered as having been paid at maturity by the maker. Turnbull v. Thomas, 1 Hughes (U. S.) 172.

And see Lister v. Stubbs, 45 Ch. Div. 1, where a purchasing agent accepted commissions from houses with which he placed orders.

An agent employed to purchase hay, who turns it over to other parties after a rise in the market, for the purpose of getting larger commissions, is liable for any loss sustained. Rundell v. Kalbfus, 125 Pa. St. 123.

If an agent to purchase, purchases on his own account, the profits belong to the principal. Ackenburgh v. McCool, 36 Ind. 473. And see infra, this section, Agent to Purchase, Purchasing for Himself.

Where a broker sold stock for his principal and remitted a smaller amount than he had actually received for it, although the principal, under the impression that the smaller amount was the highest market price, had consented to sell for that amount, it was held that he could recover from the broker the price actually received by him. Cutter v. Demmon, 111 Mass. 474.

4. Purchasing for Price Less than That Named by Principal.—United States.—Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Kindred, 3 McCrary (U. S.) 627.

Agent Employing Principal's Property in His Own Business.—So, also, if the agent uses the property of his principal in his business, he is liable for the value of the use.¹

Gratuities.—The principal, however, is not entitled to mere gratuities received by the agent.²

Trustees.—These principles apply equally to trustees.³

(3) Acting for Both Parties—Rule Stated.—When an agent acts for both parties in making a contract requiring the exercise of discretion, the contract is voidable in equity upon the application of either party, or the circumstance is available as a defense in an action at law upon the contract,⁴

Executing Mortgage.—One standing in the position of agent for both parties cannot execute a mortgage as attorney of one for the benefit of the other. Greenwood v. Spring, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 375.

Agent Liable to Principal in Damages.—Where a person voluntarily becomes an unpaid agent of another to negotiate a sale of stock, and thus receives a certain sum from the purchaser as a reward for acting in his behalf and procuring a sale for less than the purchaser was willing to pay, the agent becomes liable to the owner for the loss sustained by this breach of confidence. Hunsaker v. Sturges, 29 Cal. 142.

May Not Shield Himself by Repudiation.—If one accepts the position of agent for the buyer without disclosing the fact that he is agent for the seller, he cannot afterwards repudiate such position, and shield himself from liability to the buyer on the ground that he was agent for the seller. Having assumed the relation of agent for the buyer, he must be held to a strict performance of the duties and to all the liabilities the relation imposes. But the buyer may, in a proper case, repudiate the acts of the agent upon the ground that he was the agent of the seller and did not disclose the fact. Cotton v. Holliday, 59 Ill. 176.

Dealing in Land Warrants.—Certain parties having established a claim to a land bounty, employed an agent to do the best he could with the warrant, and wrote him that a far better price than seventy-five cents an acre was expected, but as it had been left to him he must act for them. The sale was afterwards effected through the agent at seventy-five cents per acre, and a conveyance made to the purchaser. It afterwards transpired that the purchaser had authorized the same agent to purchase warrants, and agreed to allow him one half of any profit that might be made, after refunding the purchase money and interest; that the agent had informed the purchaser that the warrant was offered at seventy-five cents per acre, but that the purchaser did not know whose warrant was the subject of sale until after the purchase and the agent is not entitled to a commission for his services.¹

Limitation—Where Interests Not Conflicting.—But one may act as agent for both parties where their interests do not conflict, and where loyalty to one is not a breach of duty to the other.²

Limitation—Where Principals Consent.—And where the principals have knowledge of the fact that the agent is acting in a dual capacity, and with such knowledge assent to his so acting, the disability will be considered as waived.³

had been completed. Upon a bill being filed against the agent and the purchaser, it was held that the agent should not have been concerned in the purchase, and the court decreed against him for so much of the profit resulting therefrom as he had received. Segar v. Edwards, 11 Leigh (Va.) 220.

Property Sold at Public Auction.—But in Scott v. Mann, 36 Tex. 157, it was held that where the agent sells property at public outcry, and in the manner usual at trust or judicial sales, there is no legal principle prohibiting him from bidding it off for a third party. See the title AUCTIONS AND AUCTIONEERS.

Corporate Directors.—A contract between two corporations made through their respective boards of directors is not voidable from the mere circumstance that a minority of the board of one corporation are also directors of the other company. U. S. Rolling Stock Co. v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 34 Ohio St. 450, 32 Am. Rep. 380.

In Cases of Doubt the courts will always assume that only one principal is responsible for the acts of the agent. So where an express company receives goods directed to the special care of its agent at a specified place, it will be assumed that the shipper intended to make such agent his own agent for receiving the goods; and the express company is discharged from responsibility in delivering the goods to such agent. Fitzsimmons v. Southern Express Co., 40 Ga. 330, 2 Am. Rep. 577.

2. The maxim that "no man shall serve two masters" does not prevent the same person from acting as agent, for certain purposes, of two or more parties to the same transaction when their interests do not conflict, and where loyalty to the one is not a breach of duty to the other. Nolte v. Hulbert, 37 Ohio St. 445.

An Agent Merely for the Care and Custody of Property may act as agent for an insurance company in issuing a policy of insurance on the property. The two capacities are not necessarily inconsistent. Northrup v. Germania F. Ins. Co., 48 Wis. 420, 33 Am. Rep. 815.

Compromising Debt.—In making a contract for the composition of a debt the same man cannot be the agent for both parties; but when the composition is agreed upon with the creditor by the agent of the debtor, he can be the agent of the creditor for another and distinct purpose—as to receive the money. Henckley v. Arey, 27 Me. 362.

3. Consent of Principals.—Alexander v. North-Western Christian University, 57 Ind. 476; Colwell v. Keystone Iron Co., 36 Mich. 51; Adams Min. Co. v. Senter, 26 Mich. 73; Helmer v. Krolick, 36 Mich. 371.

The law will not allow a person to assume a double agency, or hold the inconsistent and repugnant relations which it imposes, without the full consent of both parties freely given. Meyer v. Hanchett, 43 Wis. 246; Lynch v. Fallon, 11 R. I. 311, 23 Am. Rep. 458.

Attorneys.—This rule does not prohibit an attorney at law, into whose hands a debt has been placed for collection, from acting as the attorney in fact of the debtor to confess judgment on the debt, the debtor being advised of the extent of the attorney's agency for the creditor, and executing the power to avoid costs of suit. Wassell v. Reardon, 11 Ark. 705, 54 Am. Dec. 245. See the title ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

A person who voluntarily employs the agent of another, knowing the fact of such existing agency, is estopped from pleading the rule that the same person cannot be the

and he may recover commissions from either party.¹

(4) Letting Contract to Himself.—Agents authorized to let a contract for a public work, or other matter, cannot let it to themselves; and if they do, it will be held void.²

(5) Uniting Opposite Characters of Buyer and Seller—(a) Statement of Rule.—It is well settled that an agent cannot unite in his own person the opposite characters of buyer and seller; that is, an agent to purchase cannot purchase from himself, and an agent to sell cannot be himself the purchaser without the full, free, and intelligent consent of his employer.³ The rule is very general in its application, embracing not only agencies of a private character, but also those public in their nature.⁴

agent of two principals having conflicting interests. Fitzsimmons v. Southern Express Co., 40 Ga. 330, 2 Am. Rep. 577.

Good Faith Required.—When a professional land agent acts as agent for both the seller and the buyer, and that is known to them, the law exacts the most perfect good faith, honesty, and fairness on his part, and will not adjudge the specific performance of a contract thus made unless it has been entered into with perfect fairness and without misapprehension or misrepresentation. Morgan v. Hardy, 16 Neb. 427.

1. Dunlop v. Richards, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 181; Pugsley v. Murray, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 245; Barry v. Schmidt, 57 Wis. 172, 46 Am. Rep. 35; Bell v. McConnell, 37 Ohio St. 396, 41 Am. Rep. 528, followed in Capener v. Hogan, 40 Ohio St. 203; Alexander v. North-Western Christian University, 57 Ind. 466; Robinson v. Jarvis, 25 Mo. App. 421.

If a principal, in authorizing an agent to make a purchase, also authorizes him to contract with the seller for a commission sufficient to pay him for his services, and the seller, knowing his relation to the purchaser, contracts to pay him a commission, he cannot afterwards avoid paying it on the ground that the contract was void, as being in violation of the good faith which an agent owes his principal. Leekins v. Nordyke, etc., Co., 66 Iowa 471.

Where the general business agent of another is also the agent of an insurance company, and in the latter capacity writes insurance upon the property of his principal, but with such knowledge on the part of the company as would make the policies valid, or at most merely voidable, he is entitled to be reimbursed for the premiums paid by him. Rochester v. Levering, 104 Ind. 562. See infra, this section, Of Principal to Agent—Remuneration for Services Rendered.

2. Thus where certain parties were authorized to represent a township in letting a contract for the improvement of a harbor, with power in regard to the plan of the work, the materials to be used, the time and mode of completion, security for performance, etc., and a portion of their number, though less than a majority, united with others in taking the contract, it was held void. People v. Overysel Tp., 11 Mich. 222. The agent cannot take a contract to which he is secretly a party. Green v. Knoch, 92 Mich. 26.

And it is immaterial that the contract is let to third parties and afterwards assigned to those having charge of the letting. Flint, etc., R. Co. v. Dewey, 14 Mich. 477.

Various Statements of the Rule with Reasons Therefor.—Whoever undertakes to act for another in any matter shall not, in the same matter, act for himself; and this without regard to the fact whether he has or has not

Rights of Third Parties.—This principle, however, does not render the transaction absolutely void, but voidable only. It is an abuse of authority which may be taken advantage of by any one whose interest is affected, but strangers to the property cannot call it in question.¹

Not Necessary to Show Actual Fraud.—It is not necessary for a party seeking to avoid a contract on this ground to show that an improper advantage has been gained over him; he may repudiate or affirm the contract irrespective of any proof of actual fraud.²

Party must Offer to Make Return.—But if he repudiates it, he must offer to return whatever he has received thereunder.³

Custom.—Evidence of usage is not admissible to convert an agent employed to buy for his principal into a principal to sell to him, except where the employer knows and assents to the dealing on the footing of such custom.⁴

made a profit by the act. Tynes v. Grimstead, 1 Tenn. Ch. 508. Express contracts thus made are contrary to public policy. Wilbur v. Lynde, 49 Cal. 290.

The rule that a person cannot, either directly or indirectly, be both vendor and purchaser in the same transaction, is as old as the principles of equity. Downes v. Grazebrook, 3 Meriv. 200; Davoue v. Fanning, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 252; Schenck v. Dart, 22 N. Y. 422; Green v. Sargeant, 23 Vt. 466, 56 Am. Dec. 88; Fox v. Mackreth, 2 Bro. C. C. 400, 2 Cox Ch. 320, 1 White & T. Lead. Cas. in Eq. (3d Am. ed.) *92.

The characters of seller and buyer are so entirely incompatible that they can never be united in the same person. Litchfield v. Cudworth, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 23. For when the agent has a duty to discharge, his own interest must not come in conflict with the duty he owes his principal. Mollett v. Robinson, L. R. 5 C. P. 646; Tewksbury v. Spruance, 75 Ill. 188.

He cannot deal for his own advantage with his principals, or become the seller or buyer to or of them, on account of his confidential relation, and his being bound to disclose to them every fact, circumstance, and advantage in relation to the purchase which may come to his knowledge. McDonald v. Fithian, 6 Ill. 269; Meeker v. York, 13 La. Ann. 18; Bruce v. Davenport, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 349.

The law does not presume that such transactions will always be impressed with fraud; but they furnish an inducement to fraud and afford opportunities to persons who should always act with the most conscientious and scrupulous good faith, to abuse their trust. A total disability is therefore enjoined to take away all temptation. Grumley v. Webb, 44 Mo. 444, 100 Am. Dec. 304.

The object of the principle is to elevate the agent to a position where he cannot be tempted to betray his trust. Porter v. Woodruff, 36 N. J. Eq. 174.

It is the legal duty of a commission merchant or broker to sell and buy for, and not to or from, his principal. Butcher's Sons v. Krauth, 14 Bush (Ky.) 713.

Limitation.—But this rule applies only to agents who are relied upon for counsel and direction, and where the employment is rather a trust than a service, or both, and not to those who are employed merely as instruments in the performance of an appointed service; and hence an agent employed about another matter may purchase from an agent of the same principal, employed to sell. Spalding v. Mattingly (Ky., 1886), 1 S. W. Rep. 488.

2. Not Necessary to Show Actual Imposition or Fraud.—New York Cent. Ins. Co. v. National Protection Ins. Co., 14 N. Y. 91; Porter v. Woodruff, 36 N. J. Eq. 174.

The transaction will be set aside by a court of equity without inquiry as to its fairness. Sturdevant v. Pike, 1 Ind. 277.

"If such contracts were to be held valid, until shown to be fraudulent or corrupt, the result, as a general rule, would be that they must be enforced in spite of fraud or corruption. Hence, the only safe rule in such cases is to treat the contract as void, without reference to the question of fraud in fact, unless affirmed by the opposite party." Per Christiancy, J., in People v. Overysse Tp., 11 Mich. 228.

But see the opinion in Burke v. Bours (Cal., 1891), 26 Pac. Rep. 102, which certainly seems contrary to all the authorities, though the sale was sustained on the ground of ratification.

3. Disbrow v. Secor, 58 Conn. 35.

4. Thus a merchant gave orders to a tallow broker in London to buy certain quantities of tallow for him, and the broker did not buy the specified quantities from any person, though he sent bought notes in the usual form, "Bought of A on your account;" but both before and after the order bought from various persons, in his own name, larger quantities of tallow, proposing to allot to his principal the quantities he had desired bought. Upon the principal's refusal to accept the tallow, the broker sold it and brought an action for the difference, and it was held that though the evidence showed such a mode of dealing to be the usage in the London tallow market, the action was not maintainable against the principal, who did not appear to have had knowledge of its

(b) Agent to Purchase, Purchasing from Himself.—An agent to purchase cannot buy his own property for his principal unless the latter with a full knowledge of all the facts assents to the transaction;¹ and it is immaterial that the agent's intention is honest, that he can do better for his principal by selling him his own property than by going into the open market and buying. The rule is inflexible.²

The principal upon ascertaining the facts may repudiate the transaction, and it makes no difference that he was not injured. Friesenhahn v. Bushnell, 47 Minn. 443.

Stock Broker.—An agent under a general authority to purchase stock cannot impose his own stock on the principal without his assent. Conkey v. Bond, 36 N. Y. 427, affirming 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 276; Taussig v. Hart, 58 N. Y. 425.

A stock broker who has purchased stock for his customer is bound to keep on hand, or under his control, ready for delivery to the customer upon his paying the amount due, either the particular shares purchased or an equal amount of other shares of the same kind, whether the relation of pledgor and pledgee exists between the parties, or the broker holds the stock under a special contract; and whenever he sells, failing to keep on hand a sufficient amount of stock to meet his obligation, the customer may ratify and claim the benefit of a sale or may claim the value of the stock on the day of sale. A subsequent acquisition of a sufficient amount of the stock to replace that which he held does not relieve the broker. Taussig v. Hart, 58 N. Y. 425.

And where a stock broker, employed to purchase canal shares, bought them from C., the ostensible owner, who afterwards turned out to be a mere trustee for the broker, after the lapse of several years, the court, without entering into the question of the fairness of the price, held the transaction void on grounds of public policy, and set it aside with costs. Gillett v. Peppercorne, 3 Beav. 78.

Commission Merchant.—A commission merchant, employed to go into the market and buy a given quantity of wheat for cash, is not authorized to turn over to his principal wheat held by him, even if he charges no more than the market price. His interests must not come in conflict with his duty. Tewksbury v. Spruance, 75 Ill. 187.

Partners.—Where one of several partners was employed to purchase goods for his firm, and, unknown to his copartners, purchased goods of his own at the market price, making a considerable profit thereby, he was held accountable to the firm for the profit thus made. Bentley v. Craven, 18 Beav. 75.

The most open, ingenuous, and disinterested dealing is required of a confidential agent while he consents to act as such; and there must be an unambiguous relinquishment of his agency before he can acquire a personal interest in the subject of it. To leave a doubt of his position in this respect is to turn himself into a trustee. It is unnecessary to recur to authority for a principle so familiar or so accordant with common honesty. Bartholemew v. Leech, 7 Watts (Pa.) 472; Colbert v. Shepherd, 89 Va. 401. And see Bowman v. Officer, 53 Iowa 640.

An agent to sell real estate contracted to sell it for seventeen thousand dollars, and so advised his principal. The day after, other parties offered to purchase the property, and he executed a contract with them in his own name as vendor for twenty-six thousand dollars. He procured an assignment of the first contract, and had his principal deed to the second parties, on the representation that the first party had assigned to them, not disclosing to his principal the price to be paid under the second contract, and his principal was held entitled to the benefit of the second sale. Bain v. Brown, 56 N. Y. 285.

Buying from the Purchaser Subsequently.—After the agent has fully discharged the trust and sold the property in good faith, having or there is a deliberate agreement between them to that effect.¹

no interest in the same at the time, he may afterwards acquire title from the purchaser. Walker v. Carrington, 74 Ill. 446.

Presumption.—But when an agent is found, recently after his sale to have acquired a beneficial interest in the property under the purchaser, a strong presumption of indirection and attempted evasion arises, which he is required to remove by good and convincing evidence. McGar v. Adams, 65 Ala. 106; Bucher v. Bucher, 86 Ill. 377; Walker v. Derby, 5 Biss. (U. S.) 134; First Nat. Bank v. Bissell, 2 McCrary (U. S.) 73.

A Mere Formal Surrender of the Agency is not sufficient to give the agent a right to purchase. Fountain Coal Co. v. Phelps, 95 Ind. 271.

Notice of Surrender of Agency—Burden of Proof.—Where the agent attempts to sever his relations with his principal by notice, the burden is upon him to show that the notice was received by the principal. Fountain Coal Co. v. Phelps, 95 Ind. 271.

Option Contract.—Where a written option to real-estate brokers, for a given time, to sell land for a specified price, leaves it doubtful whether the option is to buy as well as to sell, the law will not infer that the agent could himself become the purchaser. Colbert v. Shepherd, 89 Va. 401.

It is a settled principle of equity that a person who is placed in a situation of trust or confidence, in reference to the subject of sale, cannot be the purchaser of the property on his own account. Torrey v. Orleans Bank, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 649. And equity will scrutinize every such transaction. Cook v. Berlin Woolen Mill Co., 43 Wis. 433.

The two interests which an agent has, to sell property and to become the purchaser thereof, are so incompatible, that the law does not allow them to be united in the same person. Parker v. Vose, 45 Me. 60. Nor will an inquiry be permitted into the fairness or unfairness of the transaction. Mills v. Goodsell, 5 Conn. 479, 13 Am. Dec. 90; Banks v. Judah, 8 Conn. 157.

Agent Selling to Near Relative.—But the fact that the purchaser is a brother-in-law of the agent does not imply that confidence which precludes him from becoming a purchaser. Walker v. Carrington, 74 Ill. 446.

Agent for Control of Property Buying at Mortgage Sale.—An agent having control of real estate, renting it out, collecting the rents, paying taxes and insurance, and having power to sell, cannot himself become the purchaser of the property at a sale under a mortgage, and hold it against his principal; especially where, by private agreement with the mortgagee, he induces the latter not to bid against him. Adams v. Sayre, 70 Ala. 318.

Specific Performance of a contract to sell will not be enforced where the agent to sell is interested in the purchase. Green v. Knoch (Mich., 1892), 52 N. W. Rep. 80.

Agent Using Name of Wife in the Transaction.

—An agent for the sale of land wrote that he had found a purchaser for one hundred dollars, and advised his principal to accept it, and transmitted a conveyance, in favor of his wife, to the principal for his execution, which he represented was a means of ultimately transferring the title to the purchaser. The principal executed the deed, and the agent remitted the one hundred dollars. The purchaser refused to take the land, and about fifteen months afterwards, it having greatly increased in value, the agent, without informing his principal of the refusal of the purchaser or of the increase in value, placed the deed to his wife on record and sold the property at a large advance; it was held that he was guilty of a breach of duty in not informing his principal of the facts, and that the latter was entitled to recover the profits made out of the transaction. Smitz v. Leopold, 51 Minn. 455. And see Tyler v. Sanborn, 128 Ill. 136, 15 Am. St. Rep. 97, where a sale to the wife was set aside.

Agent's Clerk.—And this rule has been applied to a clerk of the agent employed or concerned in the affairs of the principal relating to the property.¹

Purchase through Third Party.—An agent will not be allowed to accomplish by the intervention of another what the law prohibits him from doing directly; and a purchase made for him by a third party is equally as objectionable as one made by himself.²

Character of Sale Immaterial.—It is immaterial that the sale is made at public auction and for full value,³ or that the agent is empowered to sell for a stipu-

Exemplary Damages.—In Peckham Iron Co. v. Harper, 41 Ohio St. 100, where the agent by false and fraudulent representations sold goods of his principal to himself, so as to realize from a rise in value, he was held liable for exemplary damages.

Ground for Discharge.—Where the agent of a mercantile firm for the sale of goods sells to another firm in which he himself is interested his employers will be justified in dismissing him before the expiration of the term for which he has been employed. Reimers v. Ridner, 2 Robt. (N. Y.) 11.

1. Employees of Agent within the Rule.—Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 327, 78 Am. Dec. 192; Lingke v. Wilkinson, 57 N. Y. 445; Cheeseman v. Sturges, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 246; Levy v. Brush, 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 418; Newcomb v. Brooks, 16 W. Va. 32.

In Hobday v. Peters, 28 Beav. 349, the rule was held applicable to an attorney's clerk.

In Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 327, 78 Am. Dec. 192, it was said that the clerk, of course, had access to the correspondence of the firm, was well acquainted with the principal's urgency to sell, his motives for so doing, and all the facts and circumstances connected with the property known to the agents, and as clerk to the agent he owed the same duty to the principal as the agent.

Neither is the solicitor to a commissioner of bankruptcy allowed to purchase at the commissioner's sale. Ex p. Bennett, 10 Ves. Jr. 381.

2. Agent Purchasing through Third Person.—Parker v. Vose, 45 Me. 54; McKay v. Williams, 67 Mich. 547, 11 Am. St. Rep. 597; Ingerson v. Starkweather, Walk. (Mich.) 346; Jennison v. Hapgood, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 1, 19 Am. Dec. 258; Jones v. Hoyt, 23 Conn. 165; Fisher v. Budlong, 10 R. I. 525; Eldridge v. Walker, 60 Ill. 230.

He cannot purchase either directly or indirectly. Robbins v. Butler, 24 Ill. 387.

Where an agent to sell enters into a contract with one desiring to buy, that he will introduce him to the vendor and promote the sale if he will subsequently sell him part of the property at an agreed price, such contract is invalid and cannot be enforced. Smith v. Townsend, 109 Mass. 500; Hughes v. Washington, 72 Ill. 84.

And in Moore v. Moore, 21 How. Pr. (N. Y. Ct. App.) 211, it was held that an agent who procured property sold under foreclosure by him, to be bought in for him by a friend, at an inadequate price, was not entitled to interest on the sum as an advance.

Partner of Agent.—Where the owner of certain real estate gives authority to an agent to sell the same, and such agent, without the knowledge or consent of his principal, enters into a contract with a person who is his partner in the purchase and sale of such property, to sell the property to him, the contract will not be specifically enforced as against the owner of the land. Fry v. Platt, 32 Kan. 62; Francis v. Kerker, 85 Ill. 190. See Reimers v. Ridner, 2 Robt. (N. Y.) 11.

Agent Selling to Himself and Another Jointly.—And where the agent sells to himself and another jointly, although the contract purports to be entirely between the owner and the ostensible purchaser, it will not be sustained. Hughes v. Washington, 72 Ill. 84.

Inadequacy of Price—Reconveyance to Agent Unexplained.—An agent for the sale of land sold it for fifty cents an acre, and more than two years afterwards the purchaser conveyed it to the agent. The principal then sued the agent for the land, and proved by a witness that he had heard him say that he was only authorized to sell when he could get three dollars per acre, and it was held, in the absence of any explanation or contradiction of the testimony, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Shannon v. Marmaduke, 14 Tex. 217.

Qualification of Rule—Good Faith.—But where the agent, in good faith and without any design to obtain the property for himself, sells it to a purchaser, reports the sale to his principal, giving the terms and conditions thereof, and, after the ratification of the sale by the principal, purchases the land from the party to whom it has been sold, and receives a conveyance from him, no fraud having been perpetrated against his principal, the sale will be sustained. Bookwalter v. Lansing, 23 Neb. 291. And see, to the same effect, Robertson v. Chapman, 152 U. S. 673.

3. Sales by Public Auction.—A purchase by the selling agent, although made at auction, for full value and by perfectly fair means, will be set aside upon application of the principal if made promptly. Scott v. Freeland, 7 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 409, 45 Am. Dec. 310; Brothers v. Brothers, 7 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 150; Patton v. Thompson, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 285; Mason v. Martin, 4 Md. 124; Martin v. Wyncoop, 12 Ind. 266, 74 Am. Dec. 209; Newcomb v. Brooks, 16 W. Va. 32; Ingerson v. Starkweather, Walk. (Mich.) 346.

Where a shipmaster, finding no representative of the owner of certain goods shipped on board his vessel, at the port of delivery, had them sold at public auction to pay freight and charges, according to a provision in the bill of lading, giving notice by advertisement in the newspapers, and had them bid in for his own benefit by a third party, the sale was held to be void. Jones v. Hoyt, 23 Conn. 165.

lated price; the rule is the same.¹ And there is no distinction between a private and a judicial sale where it is controlled by the agent and the officer acts under his instructions.²

Purchasers from Agent.—Purchasers from the agent with knowledge of the facts stand in no better position than the agent himself, and hold as trustees for the principal.³

Sale Not Void.—As has been seen, however, the sale is not void, but only voidable at the option of the parties in interest.⁴

Principal must Do Equity.—And the principal, seeking to set aside the sale, will be required to do equity.⁵

(d) Adoption of Transaction by Principal—Express.—The principal may, if he so desires, ratify such sale or purchase by the agent;⁶ but the ratification, to be binding upon him, must be made with a full knowledge of all the facts.⁷

Implied.—The ratification may be implied as well as expressed; and if, after the evidence touching the transaction comes to the knowledge of the principal, he fails to avoid it within a reasonable time, he will be held to have ratified it.⁸

1. Stipulation as to Price Immaterial.—Meryman v. David, 31 Ill. 404; Ruckmann v. Bergholz, 37 N. J. L. 437; Porter v. Woodruff, 36 N. J. Eq. 174; Peckham Iron Co. v. Harper, 41 Ohio St. 100.

And where he sells to himself for the minimum price fixed by the principal he will be liable for the difference between market value and value paid by himself. Greenfield Sav. Bank v. Simons, 133 Mass. 415.

2. Judicial Sales.—Moore v. Moore, 5 N. Y. 256, affirming 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 37.

But it has been held that when he sells at public outcry, and in the manner usual at trust or judicial sales, he may bid the property off for a third party. Scott v. Mann, 36 Tex. 157.

3. Situation of Purchasers from Agent.—Louisville Bank v. Gray, 84 Ky. 565.

Where an agent to sell, after purchasing the property, organizes a company in which he becomes a director and large shareholder, and transfers and conveys the land and assigns the contract relating to it to such company, the latter will be charged with notice of the facts and circumstances attending the purchase by the agent, and will stand in no better position than the agent. Cumberland Coal, etc., Co. v. Sherman, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 553.

4. Supra, this section, Uniting Opposite Characters of Buyer and Seller.

Louisville Bank v. Gray, 84 Ky. 565.

The principal may elect to be bound or not by the sale. Mealor v. Kimble, 2 Murph. (N. Car.) 272; Gaines v. Acre, Minor (Ala.) 141.

5. Duty of Principal upon Repudiation.—Adams v. Sayre, 76 Ala. 509; Eastern Bank v. Taylor, 41 Ala. 93; Bassett v. Brown, 105 Mass. 551; Wadsworth v. Gay, 118 Mass. 44; Uhlich v. Muhlke, 61 Ill. 499; Leach v. Fowler, 22 Ark. 143; Greenwood v. Spring, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 375; Marsh v. Whitmore, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 178.

A principal, seeking to set aside his agent's purchase at a mortgage sale of the property, will be required, at least, to refund the purchase money paid, with interest, moneys expended in repairs and permanent improvements, taxes, and other lawful charges, with interest thereon; while the agent will be required to account for rents and profits, or, if in possession, for use and occupation, as of the value of the property when he took possession, not estimating the increased value by reason of his improvements. The agent having become the purchaser at a mortgage sale, and claiming to hold possession in his own right, he is not entitled, as against his principal seeking to set aside the sale and to redeem, to compensation for his management of the property during such possession, nor for attorney's fees and costs incurred in ejecting a defaulting tenant. Adams v. Sayre, 76 Ala. 509.

6. Marsh v. Whitmore, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 178; Eastern Bank v. Taylor, 41 Ala. 100; Copeland v. Mercantile Ins. Co., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 203; Sturdevant v. Pike, 1 Ind. 277.

But the principal cannot acquiesce in the purchase of his property by his agent until he knows that such purchase has been made, and the onus of showing such knowledge is upon the agent. Fountain Coal Co. v. Phelps, 95 Ind. 271.

8. Principal must Disapprove within Reasonable Time.—Eastern Bank v. Taylor, 41 Ala. 100.

And where the principal has adopted and approved the transaction and acquiesced in it, he is concluded from questioning it. Marsh v. Whitmore, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 178.

The receipt of the purchase money is not necessarily a ratification. Copeland v. Mercantile Ins. Co., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 203.

Illustrations.—Where an agent sold corn of his principal to his own firm, and gave the principal a statement thereof, and no objection was made for two years, and the parties had a settlement of accounts in which no allusion was made to the transaction, the principal was held to have thereby ratified the sale. Francis v. Kerker, 85 Ill. 190.

Where an agent to sell made a deed to himself, the grantor intending it only as a means of carrying into effect a supposed sale to a

(e) Dealing Directly with the Principal—Rule Stated.—The agent may deal directly with the principal, however, and buy from or sell to him, where the latter acts with full knowledge and there is no concealment or deception on the part of the agent.¹

Must Make Full Disclosure.—But the agent must make a full and fair disclosure of all the facts and circumstances within his knowledge in any way calculated to enable the principal to judge of the propriety of the sale.²

third person, and also fraudulently misrepresented the value of the consideration, and the principal, within two or three months, learned the facts which entitled him to avoid the sale on the first ground, and, within a year afterwards, those which entitled him to avoid it on the second ground, and neglected for more than two years and a half from the time of the conveyance to take any steps to avoid it, and meanwhile sold or otherwise disposed of many of the stocks given in payment for the land, exchanging a considerable portion of them for other stocks after he had a full knowledge of both grounds of avoidance, he was held to have ratified the transaction. Bassett v. Brown, 105 Mass. 551.

In Burke v. Bours (Cal., 1891), 26 Pac. Rep. 102, the agent purchased the property without the knowledge of the principal, paying a fair price therefor, and sent his check in payment, and the court seemed to think that the acceptance of the check was a notice that the purchaser was the agent, and that by not objecting he ratified the sale.

1. When Agent may Deal Directly with Principal.—Rochester v. Levering, 104 Ind. 562; Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 212; Fisher's Appeal, 34 Pa. St. 29; Uhlich v. Muhlke, 61 Ill. 499; Buell v. Buckingham, 16 Iowa 284, 85 Am. Dec. 516; Ingle v. Hartman, 37 Iowa 274; Burke v. Bours, 98 Cal. 171; Stewart v. Mather, 32 Wis. 344; Dobson v. Racey, 8 N. Y. 216. And see Jenkins v. Einstein, 3 Biss. (U. S.) 128.

It must be with full knowledge and acquiescence on the part of the seller. Stewart v. Mather, 32 Wis. 344; Jansen v. Williams, 36 Neb. 869.

Where one, while occupying the relation of general confidential business agent of another, is requested by the latter to find a purchaser at a fixed price for certain land, but being unable to do so proposes to buy the property himself at that price, at the same time communicating to his principal all the facts within his knowledge about the land and its value, misrepresenting or concealing nothing, and a sale is accordingly made to him, the price paid being at the time a fair one, such sale is valid. Rochester v. Levering, 104 Ind. 562.

Inadequate Price—Presumption.—Where the agent himself buys, with knowledge of the principal, and it appears that the price paid was grossly inadequate, a court of equity will conclusively presume undue influence and imposition, and will set aside the sale. Ferguson v. Dent, 24 Fed. Rep. 412.

2. Duty as to Disclosure.—Dunne v. English, L. R. 18 Eq. 524; Ormond v. Hutchinson, 16 Ves. Jr. 107; Ingle v. Hartman, 37 Iowa 274; Stoner v. Weiser, 24 Iowa 434; Brown v. Post,

He is bound to disclose to his principal the exact nature of his interest, and all material facts connected therewith. Audenreid v. Walker, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 183.

An agent cannot make a valid purchase from his principal without fully and fairly disclosing all the propositions he has received, and all the facts and circumstances within his knowledge in any way calculated to enable the principal to judge of the propriety of the sale. Moore v. Mandlebaum, 8 Mich. 435.

He must acquire it openly and on a full and frank disclosure of every fact likely to influence the principal's conduct. Porter v. Woodruff, 36 N. J. Eq. 174.

If an agent to sell conceals from his principal information he has obtained as to the price at which the property can be sold, and purchases it himself, selling it afterwards for a much larger sum, he will be required to account to the principal for the sum obtained over and above the amount received by the latter. Bell v. Bell, 3 W. Va. 183; Stoner v. Weiser, 24 Iowa 434; Moore v. Mandlebaum, 8 Mich. 433.

Or he may be ordered to reconvey upon the repayment of the purchase money. Moseley v. Buck, 3 Munf. (Va.) 232, 5 Am. Dec. 508; Savage v. Savage, 12 Oregon 459.

Where an Agent to Sell a Note and Mortgage was offered four thousand eight hundred dollars therefor, and afterwards purchased the same of his principal for four thousand five hundred dollars without disclosing the offer, it was held that he failed to acquire complete title, and was bound to account to his principal for whatever sum he realized out of the sale. Mason v. Bauman, 62 Ill. 76.

Where an Agent to Sell a Patent Right for a certain territory purchased the right to the entire territory upon a representation that he could not sell for a better price, concealing the fact that he had already contracted to sell two counties for the same sum given for the entire territory, and afterwards sold other counties for various sums, it was held that the sale would be annulled and the territory unsold reconveyed. Jeffries v. Wiester, 2 Sawy. (U. S.) 135.

If A and B own a mine and authorize C to sell it for them, or bring them a purchaser at a fixed price, with the understanding that C is to have all he can get above that price, C may make the best bargain he can with any one; he may purchase it himself, and is under no obligation to disclose to A and B anything that he may have discovered con-

Presumption of Invalidity.—And where the transaction is seasonably challenged, a presumption of invalidity arises, and the burden is upon the agent of making it affirmatively appear that he dealt fairly, and in the strictest good faith imparted to his principal all the information possessed by him concerning the property.¹

Commissions.—An agent to sell becoming himself the purchaser, loses his right to a commission on the sale.²

(6) Agent to Purchase, Purchasing for Himself.—An agent to purchase will not be allowed, without the intelligent assent of the principal, to purchase for himself and hold the property in his own name,³ unless he has openly and notoriously discharged himself from his agency;⁴ and a purchase in his own name will be regarded as made on behalf of his principal, for whom he will be considered as trustee.⁵

The agent is required not only to state to the principal that he has an interest in the purchase, but must disclose all facts concerning it; and under such circumstances the burden of proof for perfect fairness is upon the agent, and in the absence of such proof courts of equity will treat the case as one of constructive fraud. Brock v. Barnes, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 521; Brown v. Post, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 303; Nesbit v. Lockman, 34 N. Y. 167; Comstock v. Ames, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 411; Condit v. Blackwell, 22 N. J. But where one is buying at a tax sale for himself and also acting in some purchases for another, it will be presumed that purchases made in his own name, and upon which he takes the certificates, are not made for his principal, but for himself. Smith v. Stephenson, 45 Iowa 645.

And where a firm on the verge of failure employed an agent to purchase forty-two of their notes, furnishing him with the money for that purpose, and while so engaged he also purchased eighty-two other notes of the same firm with his own money, and on his own account, at a large discount, it was held that such other purchase was not a violation of his agency, and that he could claim the full amount of the debts represented by the eighty-two notes. Low v. Graydon, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 414.

But if, at the time a purchase is made outside the actual purview of his agency, the agent assumes to act for his principal and purchases for his benefit, the transaction as against the agent will enure to the benefit of the principal. Watson v. Union Iron, etc., Co., 15 Ill. App. 509.

And the Agent is Bound to Convey to the Principal upon his complying with the terms of the contract. Wellford v. Chancellor, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 39.

Agent Misapplying Funds—Buying with Funds Obtained from Other Sources.—It is immaterial that the agent used the money furnished him for his own purposes and purchased the property with money derived from other sources. Edwards v. Dooley, 120 N. Y. 540.

Agent to Locate Lands.—If an agent locate land for himself which he ought to locate for his principal, he is, in equity, a trustee for his principal. Massie v. Watts, 6 Cranch (U. S.) 148.

Estoppel on Part of Principal.—Where a principal, unable to repay his agent for expenditures made in acquiring title to real estate for the purpose of protecting his interests therein, received a payment from the agent and gave him a receipt in full of all demands for the purpose of settling the whole transaction, it was held that his silence for twelve years without offering to return the money precluded him from asserting any claim to the property on the theory that the agent continued to hold in trust for him. Curtis v. Newton, 58 Fed. Rep. 495.

And where an agent authorized to purchase the half interest in a mining claim for fifteen hundred dollars purchased the whole for four thousand dollars, taking title in his own name, and offered to sell a half interest to his principal for two thousand dollars, it was held that he had exceeded his authority, and his action was not binding without ratification, but that upon the unreasonable delay of his principal to accept his proposition he might repudiate the agency and hold the mine as his own. Wenham v. Switzer, 51 Fed. Rep. 351.

Purchase at Tax Sale.—Where one acting as agent of the owner purchases a tax certificate for land sold at a tax sale, and afterwards receives the tax deed in his own name, he will be held a trustee for the owner and compelled to account for net rents and profits received, and the deed will be cancelled on payment of his outlay. Collins v. Rainey, 42 Ark. 531; Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Perry, 65 Iowa 709; Woodman v. Davis, 32 Kan. 344; Krutz v. Fisher, 8 Kan. 90; Fisher v. Krutz, 9 Kan. 501; McMahon v. But he must be actually employed to buy. Ascertaining the amount of taxes due upon a certain piece of land by request of the owner does not make one an agent so as to charge him with fraud in buying the same for himself for less than half value. Collar v. Ford, 45 Iowa 331.

Proceeds Impressed with Similar Trust.—If the land has been sold by the agent, the proceeds in his hands will be impressed with a similar trust. Kraemer v. Deustermann, 37 Minn. 469.

Mr. Bispham says: "A resulting trust of this kind must arise, if at all, from the pay-hold that although the agent purchases the property entirely with his own funds, his taking a conveyance in his own name is such a fraud upon his principal as will create a resulting trust in favor of the latter which may be shown by parol.¹ And certainly where the principal has some present interest in the land, this seems to be undoubtedly the law.² Where the agent agrees to advance the money it will be considered a loan, and the trust may be shown by parol.³

ment of the purchase money at the time of the conveyance. If an express agreement is relied upon, it necessarily excludes the idea of any trust arising purely by implication of law. Such a trust will, therefore, be an express trust, and will fall directly within the statute of frauds." Prin. of Eq. (3d ed.), § 80.

Kilbreth*, 17 Ill. 522, 65 Am. Dec. 691; Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 77.

In Heard v. Pilley, L. R. 4 Ch. 553, Gifford, L. J., in commenting upon Bartlett v. Pickersgill, 4 East 577, note, the principal case cited by Story and Sugden in support of their position, said: "It seems to be inconsistent with all the authorities of this court, which proceed on the view that it will not allow the statute of frauds to be made an instrument of fraud."

And in Jenkins v. Eldredge, 3 Story (U. S.) 290, Story, J., said: "It is deemed a fraud for an agent to avail himself of his confidential relation to drive a bargain or create an interest adverse to that of his principal in the transaction; and that fraud creates a trust even when the agency itself may be, nay must be, proved only by parol. Bartlett v. Pickersgill, 1 Eden 515, 4 East 577, note; Leman v. Whitley, 4 Russ. 423, are, I admit, against this doctrine—not wholly, but to a limited extent, for the latter case excludes a case of fraud. But then Lees v. Nuttall, 1 Russ. & M. 53, expressly decides that if an agent employed to purchase an estate purchase for himself and on his own account, he becomes a trustee for the principal. In that case the whole agency and trust was made out by parol, and the purchase was from a third person. Carter v. Palmer, 11 Bli. N. S. 397, goes the full length of the same proposition."

Instances.—In Cave v. Mackenzie, 46 L. J. Ch. 564, 37 L. T. 218, it was held that a contract for the purchase of land made by an agent in his own name vests the equitable title in the principal, and may be established by him against the agent and persons claiming under him, although the agent is appointed merely by parol.

In Wellford v. Chancellor, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 39, no portion of the purchase was advanced by the principal, but a trust was decreed and the agent ordered to reconvey. And in Chastain v. Smith, 30 Ga. 96, the plaintiff advanced no portion of the purchase money, though he did contribute his professional services.

In Firestone v. Firestone, 49 Ala. 128, the agent used the money of his principal, together with money of his own, in purchasing in his own name, and a trust was decreed for the entire tract.

2. Where Principal Has Present Interest in the Lands.—Cameron v. Lewis, 56 Miss. 76; Wood v. Rabe, 96 N. Y. 414, 48 Am. Rep. 640; Dodd v. Wakeman, 26 N. J. Eq. 484; Rose v. Bates, 12 Mo. 30; Kennedy v. Keating, 34 Mo. 25; Lincoln v. Wright, 4 De G. & J. 16; 2 Warvelle on Vendors 787.

Illustrations.—Thus, where one whose lands are about to be sold under a judicial sale verbally agrees with another for the latter to bid them off for him at the sale, and the agent takes the title in his own name, the trust may be shown by parol. Ryan v. Dox, 34 N. Y. 307, 90 Am. Dec. 696; Peebles v. Reading, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 484; Soggins v. Heard, 31 Miss. 426.

The same is true where one of several lessees agrees to get a renewal of the lease and takes it in his own name. Burrell v. Bull, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 15.

Or where an agent agrees to buy up an incumbrance to perfect his principal's title, and takes a conveyance in his own name. Barziza v. Story, 39 Tex. 354.

In Sandford v. Norris, 4 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 144, the agent agreed with the principal to attend an auction sale of the premises on which the latter lived, made by the assignees for benefit of creditors of the principal's husband, and to purchase in his own name for the principal, and convey to the latter on being repaid his bid, and he was not allowed to invoke the statute of frauds to defeat the claim to enforce the trust arising.

But see Jackman v. Ringland, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 149, where it was held that the fact that the property belonged to the plaintiff at the time of sale made no difference. And to the same effect Fox v. Heffner, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 372; Minot v. Mitchell, 30 Ind. 228, 95 Am. Dec. 685.

3. Agreement by Agent to Advance the

When Ejectment Lies.—In states where ejectment is an equitable action, the land may be recovered in ejectment wherever equity would decree a conveyance.¹

(7) Acquiring Adverse Interests.—Nor will an agent be allowed to make use of his position, and information thereby obtained, to acquire an interest adverse to his principal, and any interest so obtained will be decreed to be held in trust for the principal.² Thus an agent employed to manage property cannot acquire a title thereto by purchase at a sale for taxes³ or sheriff's Agent to Settle with Creditors.—An agent employed to settle with creditors cannot obtain any benefit by purchasing a debt which the principal is liable to discharge. Noyes v. Landon, 59 Vt. 569; Reed v. Warner, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 650.

It is his duty, upon behalf of his employer, to settle the debt upon the best terms he can obtain. Reed v. Norris, 2 Myl. & C. 374.

And an executor or administrator cannot buy in any of the debts of the deceased for his own benefit. Ex p. Lacey, 6 Ves. Jr. 625. And see the title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Attorney of Mortgagor Buying the Property.—An attorney employed by the mortgagor in a foreclosure suit cannot buy in the mortgaged property. Davis v. Smith, 43 Vt. 269; Case v. Carroll, 35 N. Y. 385.

Agent for General Control of Property Buying at Mortgage Sale.—Nor can an agent having charge of the property, renting it out, collecting the rents, paying the taxes and insurance, and having power to sell, become a purchaser at the mortgage sale, especially where by private agreement with the mortgagee he induces the latter not to bid against him. Adams v. Sayre, 70 Ala. 318.

Agent Discovering Defect in Principal's Title.—If an agent discovers a defect in the title of his principal to land, he cannot misuse his information to acquire title for himself; and if he does so, he will be considered as a trustee holding for his principal. Ringo v. Binns, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 269; Cragin v. Powell, 128 U. S. 691; Hardenbergh v. Bacon, 33 Cal. 356; Rogers v. Lockett, 28 Ark. 290. And see Case v. Carroll, 35 N. Y. 385.

An Agent for an Administrator for the settlement of an estate cannot purchase a judgment against the estate for his own benefit, and upon such purchase can only retain the amount actually paid by him James v. McKernon, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 543.

Other Illustrations.—Where a party contracted with an agent to give him two hundred dollars if he would furnish him with numbers and information of certain specified lands which he desired to enter, and the agent, after furnishing the information, went to the office and entered the land in his own name, and afterwards claimed it as his own property, it was held that the land so acquired must be held in trust for the benefit of the principal. Winn v. Dillon, 27 Miss. 494.

But a sale sustained by a verdict will not be annulled simply because the vendee was formerly the vendor's counsel. White v. Slaughter, 5 La. Ann. 136.

An agent or attorney buying property under a judgment of his principal becomes a trustee if he paid with the money of his principal or purchased for less than his claim. But the principal is not obliged to take the land or consider the purchaser as his trustee, but may elect to treat him as a debtor and claim the money instead of the property. Eshleman v. Lewis, 49 Pa. St. 410.

An agent may purchase a lien upon the property of his principal and enforce it for the purpose of securing the repayment of the purchase money. Spring Garden v. Blight, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 553.

A bank officer may buy in, for his own benefit, a pledge held by the bank; and if he pays enough for it to satisfy the debt to the bank he will not be held as a trustee for the residue. Smith v. Lansing, 22 N. Y. 520.

3. Agent Purchasing Principal's Land at Tax Sale.—A party having charge of lands and charged with the payment of the taxes cannot acquire a tax title to his principal's land, either by purchasing the land himself at tax sale or by the assignment to him of a certificate of purchase obtained by another; nor can he, by assigning his certificates, confer upon his assignee any greater rights than he himself has. Ellsworth v. Cordrey, 63 Iowa 675; Bowman v. Officer, 53 Iowa 640; Franks v. Morris, 9 W. Va. 664; Barton v. Moss, 32 Ill. 50; Matthews v. Light, 32 Me. 305; Huzard v. Trego, 35 Pa. Bartelsman*, 143 Ill. 634. where an agent employed to procure the foreclosure of his principal's mortgage, and rent and pay taxes on the mortgaged property, was held incapable of acquiring title at a tax sale.

sale,¹ nor can an attorney buy in an adverse title to land about which he has been consulted;² and a lease obtained by an agent or clerk, of the premises occupied by his employer, will enure to the latter.³

d. KEEPING AND RENDERING ACCOUNTS—(1) General Principles.—The agent is bound to account to his principal for all goods, money, and securities coming into his hands during the course of the agency,⁴ and all the

The rule applies so much the more where the agent has funds in his hands with which to pay the taxes, and, in breach of his trust, neglects to pay them and bids the land in at the sale. Woodman v. Davis, 32 Kan. 344; Barton v. Moss, 32 Ill. 50; Fox v. Zimmermann, 77 Wis. 414.

Failure of Principal to Furnish Funds to Pay Taxes.—The rule is not changed by the fact that the principal has failed to furnish money with which to pay the taxes. There must be an unambiguous relinquishment of the agency before the agent can acquire an interest in the subject of it adverse to the principal. Bowman v. Officer, 53 Iowa 640; Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Perry, 65 Iowa 709; Page v. Webb (Ky., 1888), 7 S. W. Rep. 308; McIlvain v. Porter (Ky., 1888), 7 S. W. Rep. 309; McMahon v. McGraw, 26 Wis. 614.

Neglect of Principal to Reimburse Agent.—Nor will he be allowed to hold under the tax deed on account of the negligence of the principal in reimbursing him unless he has made a full and fair statement of the account between them and the amount necessary to reimburse him. Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Perry, 65 Iowa 709.

He will be held a trustee for the owner, and liable for the rents and profits. Collins v. Rainey, 42 Ark. 531.

1. Sheriff's Sale.—Fountain Coal Co. v. Phelps, 95 Ind. 271; Fisher v. Krutz, 9 Kan. 501; Bowman v. Officer, 53 Iowa 640; Rogers v. Lockett, 28 Ark. 290. But see Craig v. Craig, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 171.

But where an agent purchased the property of his principal at a sheriff's sale, and the circuit chancellor refused to set the purchase aside, but ordered the agent to account for the "true value of the property," it was held that this meant the true value at the time of the sale, and that, the plaintiff having acquiesced in the decree and acted under it, his appeal, after an adverse report from the commissioner on the question of value, would be refused. Rawls v. Wall, 5 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 143.

2. Attorneys.—When an attorney at law buys in a title outstanding or adverse to land as to which he has been consulted or employed, he buys for his client, if the client elects to take it. Smith v. Brotherline, 62 Pa. St. 461. And he cannot avoid the effect of the rule by having the conveyance made to his wife or brother-in-law. Cameron v. Lewis, 56 Miss. 76.

And where a barrister had filled the situation of confidential and advising counsel to a party for several years, and there acquired an intimate knowledge of his estates and liabilities, he was held incapable, even after the relationship had ceased for some time, of purchasing outstanding securities affecting his client's estates, especially as the validity of those very securities had been impeached, and such impeachment was known to the counsel, he having been repeatedly consulted by his client in reference to a compromise respecting them. Carter v. Palmer, 1 D. & W. 722. See the title ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

3. Lease of Premises Occupied by Principal.—Where a confidential agent of the lessee of a theatre, who from his position was well acquainted with the profits of his principal in the use of the building, and who knew some months before the old lease expired that the principal was desirous of renewing, offered privately to lease the theatre of the owner at a larger rental, and denied to his principal that he was competing with him for the lease, but in fact did procure a lease to himself, he was held to hold the same as a trustee for his principal. Davis v. Hamlin, 108 Ill. 39.

And where the clerk to a warehouseman, whose lease was about to expire and who was negotiating for a renewal at a reduced rent, having access to the principal's books and papers, and a knowledge of his business, applied to the lessor and obtained a lease of the premises for himself and another, who had notice of the facts, it was held that, pending an action to compel a transfer of the lease, an injunction should have been granted restraining them from proceeding to recover the premises. Gower v. Andrew, 59 Cal. 119, 43 Am. Rep. 242.

Virginia.—McVeigh v. Old Dominion Bank, 26 Gratt. (Va.) 188.

West Virginia.—Ruffner v. Hewitt, 7 W. Va. 585.

Nature of Action against Agent.—Assumpsit is ordinarily the proper form of action for money had and received by an agent. But the rule is different when the agent is to disburse the money instead of handing it over to his principal; for under these circumstances his duty is not to pay over, but to account, and no debt will arise unless there is a surplus. Gallagher v. Gallagher, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 528. See also Reeside v. Reeside, 49 Pa. St. 322.

Where, however, an agent receives money for a particular purpose and refuses to so apply it or to account for it, or misappropriates it, or applies it after the authority is countermanded, an action for money had and received will lie. Millingar v. Hartupee, 53 Pa. St. 362.

Factor.—The law will raise a contract on the part of a factor to whom goods have been consigned for sale, to account for such as are sold, to pay over the proceeds, and to redeliver the residue unsold. Topham v. Brad-dick, 1 Taunt. 572.

Agent Collecting Money on Specialties.—But an agent collecting money for his principal on specialties is only liable to the latter as a simple contract debtor. Mason v. Man, 3 Desaus. (S. Car.) 116.

A Failure to Pay after Demand is equivalent to a refusal. Hays v. Smith, 4 Ired. (N. Car.) 254.

Effect of Agent Rendering Himself Liable to Third Parties.—The fact that the agent has rendered himself liable to third parties does not release him from liability to his principal. McNair v. Burns, 9 Watts (Pa.) 130.

Burden on Agent to Show Payment by Him to Principal.—Where one receives money as the agent of another, the burden is on him, in an action to account therefor, to show that he repaid it to his principal, or otherwise disposed of it by the latter's direction. Young v. Powell, 87 Mo. 128. There is no presumption, when the collection of money is shown, that the agent has paid it, or accounted to his principal. Carder v. Primm, 52 Mo. App. 102.

Certificate of Membership in Board of Trade Furnished by Principal.—Agent must Account for.—A principal furnished his agent with a certificate of membership of a board of trade to enable him to conduct the principal's business advantageously. The agent on the dissolution of the agency refused to transfer the certificate to his principal, and equity compelled him to assign the certificate in blank and deliver the same to the principal Weaver v. Fisher, 110 Ill. 146. See Western R. Co. v. Bayne, 75 N. Y. 1.

Limitation of Rule.—But where the demand for property remaining unsold is coupled with a demand for other property, and compliance with it might be construed as an admission of the latter claim, which the agent disputes, he is justified in refusing. Esterly Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Veeder, 29 Neb. 664.

Unauthorized Transactions as Defense.—In a suit by the principal an agent cannot set up in defense transactions unauthorized and not within the scope of his employment. Earnhart v. Robertson, 10 Ind. 8.

Set-off.—Nor can an agent to receive and pay over money set off a debt previously due him by the principal. Shearman v. Morrison, 149 Pa. St. 386.

In an Action for Damages for the refusal by an agent to deliver certain bonds, of which there were no sales, and consequently no market value, evidence was held admissible to show what they were considered worth as collateral security, and also to show that they were payable in gold, the legal-tender act not excluding such evidence from the jury. Simpkins v. Low, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 382.

Time of Accounting.—The agent must account at the time fixed by the stipulations of his agency, or upon demand by his principal. Leake v. Sutherland, 25 Ark. 219.

Agents to Collect money are bound to immediate payment. Merchants Bank v. Rawls, 21 Ga. 289; Lyle v. Murray, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 590.

Where money is collected by an agent upon a note for persons who are themselves agents he may discharge himself, either by paying it over to those from whom he received the claim, or to the true owner. Wallace v. Peck, 12 Ala. 768.

Joint Agents are jointly bound for joint acts and money jointly received. Olinde v. Saizan, 10 La. Ann. 153.

Effect of Accepting Account.—It has been held that a principal, by accepting the final account of his factor without objection, discharges him from all further liability to account for sales made on credit, the proceeds of which have not been collected. Rion v. Gilly, 6 Martin (La.) 417, 12 Am. Dec. 483. And where an agent for making payments reports in full to his principal, the latter must object within a reasonable time, to any payments, or his silence will be treated as a ratification. Minnesota Linseed Oil Co. v. Montague, 65 Iowa 67. It is prima facie evidence of an admission that the statement is correct. McCord v. Manson, 17 Ill. App. 118.

But where an agent settled with his principal for a balance due to him, by conveying land of less value than such balance without informing him of its value, of which he was ignorant, the fact that the agent afterwards accounted to him for the rents of the property for several years was held not to preclude the principal from disaffirming the transaction. Boyd v. Jacobs, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 442.

See the titles ACCOUNTS, Vol. I., p. 433; ADMISSIONS, Vol. I., p. 670.

1. See supra, this section, Making Profit out of Agency.

Legality of Transaction Immaterial.—And this though the transaction, as between the principal and the third party, be illegal and incapable of enforcement.¹

Failure to Account—Form of Action.—For a conversion of property in his hands for which he fails to account and pay he may be held liable either for a breach of contract or a conversion;² and if the goods are still in his possession and he refuses to turn them over, the principal may, upon tendering his commissions and charges, maintain an action of replevin.³

Accountable Only to Principal.—But the agent is liable to account only to his principal.⁴

Where a person is employed as an agent in the conduct of the financial part of the business of his principal, the relation is a fiduciary one in its character; and if the agent appropriates the property of his principal to his own use, or makes any profit to himself by virtue of his position, he must account therefor as for a trust. Weaver v. Fisher, 110 Ill. 146.

But it seems that an agent following his instructions and acting within his authority cannot make himself a trustee in invitum or a trustee de son tort. Houston v. Farris, 93 Ala. 587.

Bank.—A bank receiving a note for collection cannot refuse to return it or its proceeds to the depositor on the ground that it was given to defraud creditors of a third party, unless the bank itself is one of the creditors. Leadville First Nat. Bank v. Leppel, 9 Colo. 594.

Partners.—A partner cannot plead illegality of the business to avoid an accounting. Brooks v. Martin, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 70.

Municipal Bonds.—In an action by a corporation against an agent for the sale of bonds it is not necessary for the plaintiffs to show, as a condition precedent to their right to recover, that the issue of the bonds was duly authorized. Auburn v. Draper, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 425.

Illegal Taxes.—And a tax collector receiving taxes illegally levied or collected cannot refuse to turn them over to the state on that ground. Placer County v. Astin, 8 Cal. 303; Clark v. Moody, 17 Mass. 145; Galbraith v. Gaines, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 568; Chandler v. State, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 296; Hammond v. Christie, 5 Robt. (N. Y.) 160.

Usurious Interest.—And it is immaterial that the money coming into the agent's hands is composed of usurious interest and not collectible by the principal himself. Chinn v. Chinn, 22 La. Ann. 599; Sternburg v. Callanan, 14 Iowa 251; Dillman v. Hastings, 144 U. S. 136.

Agents to Make Wagers.—An agent to make bets for his principal cannot refuse to pay over the winnings on the ground that the debts were wagering contracts. Bridger v. Savage, 15 Q. B. Div. 363, overruling Beyer v. Adams, 26 L. J. Ch. 841.

The agent may be sued in assumpsit for money had and received. Seidel v. Peschkaw, 27 N. J. L. 427; Strickland v. Burns, 14 Ala. 511; Peyton v. Howell, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 244; English v. Devarro, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 588. See also Carriger v. Whittington, 26 Mo. 311; Floyd v. Day, 3 Mass. 403.

Any application of moneys collected by an agent, other than as directed, is a conversion. Wells v. Collins, 74 Wis. 341. But where an agent sold goods, taking a draft in payment, which he discounted and failed to account for the proceeds, it was held that the action should have been upon the contract, since the agent's possession of the draft was rightful, and in parting with it and obtaining the money upon it he was pursuing the line of his duty. Walter v. Bennett, 16 N. Y. 251.

If the principal elects to proceed for a breach of contract, he may interpose it as a counterclaim in an action brought against him by the agent upon contract. Coit v. Stewart, 50 N. Y. 17; Challiss v. Wylie, 35 Kan. 506.

The cases of public officers are not necessarily an exception to this rule, although, under particular circumstances, an exception may arise. Trafton v. U. S., 3 Story (U. S.) 646.

Agent of Several Principals.—And where several parties appoint a common agent for a common purpose, no one of them has a right to compel the agent to render a separate account to himself. There should be but one proceeding, to which all persons in interest should be made parties. Louisiana Board of Trustees, etc., v. Dupuy, 31 La. Ann. 305.

Where a Pledgee Receives Property with the

Must Keep Regular Accounts.—It is incumbent upon the agent to keep regular accounts of all his transactions and dealings in the subject matter of the agency, together with the necessary vouchers,¹ and whenever reasonably requested, to make and present to his principal a full and complete statement of his dealings and the state of the accounts between them.²

(2) Commingling Principal's Property with His Own.—It will be readily seen that, in order to secure a prompt and correct accounting, the agent must keep the property and effects of his principal unmixed with his own or with the property of others,³ and if he allows them to become so intermingled as afterwards to be indistinguishable the whole will belong to his principal.⁴

understanding that he shall dispose of it through a factor and credit the debtor with the amount of sales, and accordingly commits it to a factor from whom he takes a receipt, he is the proper party to call the factor to account. Bigelow v. Walker, 24 Vt. 149, 58 Am. Dec. 156.

Death of Principal.—Upon the death of the principal the agent is liable to account to his personal representative. Clegg v. Baumberger, 110 Ind. 536; Simmons v. Simmons, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 451.

Or a bill for an accounting may be filed by his heirs. Ellas v. Lockwood, 1 Clarke Ch. (N. Y.) 311.

It is his duty to keep books in which shall be correctly entered the transactions on account of his principal; and the latter is entitled to a correct copy of the entries, including all memoranda connected therewith. Keighler v. Savage Mfg. Co., 12 Md. 383, 71 Am. Dec. 600.

His Failure in This Respect authorizes unfavorable inferences, and subjects him, when called on for an account, to a heavy burden of suspicion as well as of proof. Peterson v. Poignard, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 309.

When Agent Not Confined to His Books to Prove Transactions.—But unless his books purport to contain all the charges and payments to and for his principal, he will not be restricted from proving them in any other way. Lever v. Lever, 2 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 158.

Interference of Principal in Management of Property.—In Robbins v. Robbins (N. J., 1885), 3 Atl. Rep. 264, Bird, V.C., said: "It is true it is the duty of an agent to account strictly; but if the principal has himself, by his interference, created or so contributed to such confusion as to render an absolutely satisfactory accounting impossible, the agent ought not to be held to the most rigid rule."

Reopening Accounts.—Fraudulent accounts between a principal and a factor will be opened from the beginning, and the relief under such circumstances will not be limited to a right to surcharge and falsify. Clarke v. Tipping, 9 Beav. 284. See the title ACCOUNTS, Vol. I., p. 463.

Depositing Money.—In Commercial, etc., Bank v. Jones, 18 Tex. 811, it was held where an agent receives money for his principal, if he deposits it in a bank, it is his duty to deposit it either in the name of his principal or in his own name as agent of his principal, opening a new account for that purpose, even if he already has one in his own name.

4. Yates v. Arden, 5 Cranch (C. C.) 526; Safford v. Gallup, 53 Vt. 292; Story on Agency, § 205. And see Jewett v. Dringer, 30 N. J. Eq. 291; Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 62. Also the title CONFUSION OF GOODS.

The whole must, both in law and in equity, be taken to be the property of the principal until the agent puts it under such circumstances that it may be distinguished as satisfactorily as it might have been before the mixture. Lupton v. White, 15 Ves. Jr. 432. And see Chedworth v. Edwards, 8 Ves. Jr. 46.

If an agent mingles funds of his principal with those of his own, he must disclose the amount belonging to himself, or his principal will take the whole. Atkinson v. Ward, 47 Ark. 533.

If one having charge of the property of another so confounds it with his own that it cannot be distinguished, he must bear all the inconveniences of the confusion. If he cannot distinguish and separate his own, he must lose it. Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 62.

If one mixes trust funds with his own, the whole will be treated as trust property, except in so far as he may be able to distinguish what is his. Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54.

Any loss resulting to the intermingled mass will fall upon the agent.¹

Bank Deposits.—Whenever it becomes the duty of an agent to deposit in a bank his principal's funds, he can escape liability by the failure of the bank only by opening the account in his principal's name, or by so distinguishing the funds on the books of the bank as to indicate clearly that they are the property of the principal.² If he deposits such funds in his own name, mixing them with his own funds, he will not, in case of loss, be permitted to throw such loss on his principal.³ And this rule has been applied even though the agent had no other funds in the bank at the time.⁴

And where an agent, having blended his own and his principal's demands in one account, received a general remittance, he was held bound to apply it ratably. Barrett v. Lewis, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 123.

1. Pinckney v. Dunn, 2 S. Car. 314; Brackenridge v. Holland, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 377, 20 Am. Dec. 123.

Depreciation in Value.—The agent is liable for any depreciation in value of the intermingled fund. Mason v. Whitthorne, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 242.

A Chicago bank received from a New York bank a note for collection, which it collected in a depreciated currency and used in its own business. When called upon to remit, the currency had further depreciated forty per cent, and the bank in New York was held entitled to the value of the currency as collected. Marine Bank v. Fulton County Bank, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 252.

An agent has no right to mix the funds of his principal with his own and then hold his principal liable for the depreciation of moneys in his hands. Webster v. Pierce, 35 Ill. 158.

Loss by Theft.—Where an agent mixed the money and funds of his principal with moneys and funds belonging to himself and a third person, and a portion of the money so mixed was subsequently stolen, but it was impossible to determine to whom the stolen money actually belonged, it was held that the loss must fall upon the agent as a penalty for not keeping his principal's money separate from his own and that of others. Massachusetts L. Ins. Co. v. Carpenter, 2 Sweeny (N. Y.) 734. And see Fidelity Invest. Co. v. Carico, 1 Colo. App. 292.

The burden is on the agent in such a case to show that the identical money was stolen which belonged to his principal. Bartlett v. Hamilton, 46 Me. 435.

Failure of Factor to Whom Agent Consigned Goods of Several Principals.—Where an agent to sell hay consigned his whole cargo, comprising that of the plaintiff and several lots of other owners, to commission merchants, who from time to time sold portions of it and made remittances on account of sales of the cargo, but who failed before the whole was disposed of, it was held that the agent should have consigned the plaintiff's hay separately and required separate accounts of its sale, and that he was responsible for the loss resulting from the failure. Williams v. White, 70 Me. 138.

In Robinson v. Ward, 2 C. & P. 60, 12 E. C. L. 29, Abbott, C.J., in speaking of the method by which the agent might escape liability, said: "The defendant should have paid this money into a banker's hands by opening a new account in his own name 'for the credit of Robinson's estate,' and so to earmark the money as belonging to that estate; then it would have been kept separate."

By mingling it with his own money and depositing the whole in the bank in his own name and to his own individual and private account, he treats the money as his own, and from that moment it ceases to be at the risk of the principal, and is at the risk of the agent. Mason v. Whitthorne, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 245.

Where a factor kept the funds arising from his business separate from his individual funds, by depositing to a "separate brokerage account" the drafts received for goods sold, the fact that the drafts included his commissions on such sales is not a mingling of his own with the trust funds. Richardson v. St. Louis Nat. Bank, 10 Mo. App. 246.

3. Fletcher v. Walker, 3 Madd. 73; Wren v. Kirton, 11 Ves. Jr. 377; Macdonnell v. Harding, 7 Sim. 178; Cartmell v. Allard, 7 Bush (Ky.) 482; Norris v. Hero, 22 La. Ann. 605; *Jenkins v. Such disposition will be treated as a conversion of the funds, and devolve on him any loss which may be sustained by the banker's insolvency. Cartmell v. Allard, 7 Bush (Ky.) 482.

In School Dist. v. Greenfield First Nat. Bank, 102 Mass. 174, it was held that in the absence of any notice that the deposit was not the private property of the agent the bank might apply it as such.

4. Sargeant v. Downey, 49 Wis. 524. But see, contra, Hale v. Wall, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 424.

In Naltner v. Dolan, 108 Ind. 500, 58 Am. Rep. 61, an attorney deposited money collected for his client, in his own name although not in his private account, without anything to indicate its trust character, and he was held responsible for a loss occurring by reason of the failure of the bank, notwithstanding the transmission of the money to the client was arrested by garnishee process

(3) Disputing Principal's Title.—An agent may not deny the title of his principal to the subject matter of the agency;¹ but he is at all times at liberty to show that the principal has parted with his interest in the property subsequent to the delivery to him,² or that he has been divested of possession by a title superior to that of the principal.³

(4) Demand by Principal for Accounting—General Rule.—The general rule is that the principal must make a demand of the agent before he can recover money or goods received by the latter in the course and by virtue of the agency.⁴

against the attorney before he had an opportunity to transmit it, and the deposit thus became prolonged until the bank suspended.

And in Williams v. Williams, 55 Wis. 300, 42 Am. Rep. 708, the liability was carried still further, and an administrator held responsible for the loss of funds deposited in his individual name, although he had no other funds in the bank and informed its officers at the time of making the deposit that the fund was held by him in trust.

1. May Not Deny Principal's Title.—Von Hurter v. Spengeman, 17 N. J. Eq. 185; Hungerford v. Moore, 65 Ala. 232; Hancock v. Gomez, 58 Barb. (N. Y.) 490, 50 N. Y. 668; Marvin v. Ellwood, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 365; Cowing v. Greene, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 585; Farrow v. Edmundson, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 605.

An agent undertaking the sale of property for his principal is estopped, in an action brought by the principal to recover the avails of the sale, from denying the validity of the title by which his principal held the property at the time of the sale. Collins v. Tillou, 26 Conn. 368, 68 Am. Dec. 398.

It is no defense in an action by the principal for money collected by the agent, for the latter to show that it belonged to third parties. Witman v. Felton, 28 Mo. 601; Murray v. Vanderbilt, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 140; Roberts v. Burton, 14 Vt. 195; Day v. Southwell, 3 Wis. 657.

In Western Transp. Co. v. Barber, 56 N. Y. 544. Grover, J., said: "The right of a bailee to set up title in a third person as against the claim of his bailor has been much considered. It is said that neither a wharfinger nor warehouseman can deny the right of the person from or for whom he receives the property; that they are the agents of the persons from whom they receive the property and cannot dispute their title. This general rule is sustained by numerous cases, a citation of which is unnecessary. It applies in all cases where the bailee seeks to avail himself of the title of a third person for the purpose of keeping the property himself from the bailor, and to all cases where the bailee has not yielded to a paramount title in another. The question in this case is whether it applies in case he has done so. It does not apply where the property has been taken from the bailee by due process of law; nor where the bailor has obtained possession feloniously, or by force or fraud. * * * I think the best-considered cases hold that the right of a third person to which the bailee has yielded, by delivering the property, may be interposed in all cases as a defense to an action brought by the bailor subsequently for the property. When the owner comes and demands his property he is entitled to its immediate delivery, and it is the duty of the possessor to make it. The law will not adjudge the performance of this duty tortious as against a bailor having no title."

Warehouseman.—If a warehouseman receives goods and the bailor has no title to the goods, and they are taken from the custody of the warehouseman by the authority of the law as the property of a third person, the warehouseman may show this in defense of an action brought against him by the bailor for the goods. *Burton v. When Demand is Necessary to Recovery, It must be Proved.—In an action against an agent for not accounting a demand is necessary. It must be proved on the trial. Bushnell v. McCauley, 7 Cal. 421.

Awaiting Directions as to Manner of Remitting.—A factor or assignee apprising his principal of the sale of goods consigned to him may await directions as to the manner of remitting the net proceeds, and is not liable to an action until a default on his part in remitting or paying the proceeds according to the order of his principal. Ferris v. Paris, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 285.

An action will not lie against a factor or agent to whom goods are sent to be sold at auction without a demand of the proceeds, or instructions to remit before suit brought. Cooley v. Betts, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 203; Cummins v. McLain, 2 Ark. 402; Sevier v. Holliday, 2 Ark. 512; Palmer v. Ashley, 3 Ark. 75.

Agreement to Pay over Money when Collected.—Where the agent agrees beforehand to pay over the money when collected, demand is dispensed with. Mardis v. Shackelford, 4 Ala. 493.

Authority to Demand must be Questioned when Demand Made.—Where a demand is made, the party has a right to require reasonable evidence of authority of the individual to make it; but if no exception is taken at the time it will be too late to raise it on the trial, as the authority should always be questioned at the time the demand is made. Baxter v. McKinlay, 16 Cal. 76. See also Connah v. Hale, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 462; Payne v. Smith, 12 N. H. 34.

Sufficiency of Demand.—The proof of a demand and refusal is not restricted to any particular form of words; but any declaration of the agent to the principal, or any act which shows a denial of his right, puts him in the wrong, and gives to the principal a right of action. Moore v. Hyman, 12 Ired. (N. Car.) 38.

Where, by the terms of a written contract, one P. constituted T. his agent to loan money and take securities for the payment of the same, and expressly provided that the authority could be revoked at the request of P. in writing, it was held that a demand for the securities in writing, signed by a party claiming to be an attorney of P., without an order in writing or proof of his authority, was not sufficient to authorize P. to maintain an action for the face value of the securities. Tingley v. Parshall, 11 Neb. 443.

But a demand on a member of a firm acting as agents for the sale of goods, for the goods or a settlement, is sufficient. Baird v. Walker, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 298.

When Principal Learns of the Collection, but Not from Agent.—Yet even where the agent fails to notify the principal of the collection of money, if the latter actually has notice of such collection, he must make the demand within a reasonable time; Jett v. Hempstead, 25 Ark. 462.

If he neglects to make demand in such a case, he puts in motion the statute of limitations; and if he could, with reasonable diligence, have known of the collection, the statute begins to run after the lapse of a reasonable time after demand. Whitehead v. Wells, 29 Ark. 108.

2. Chapman v. Burt, 77 Ill. 337; Terrell v. Butterfield, 92 Ind. 1; Bunger v. Roddy, 70 Ind. 26.

Where an agent exchanges property, intrusted to him to sell on commission, for other property, he is liable to the owner for the value thereof, and the owner may maintain an action therefor without showing a demand for a return of the property or for an account. Haas v. Damon, 9 Iowa 589; Cutter v. Fanning, 2 Iowa 580.

The circumstance that an agent acting in the business of his principal takes notes payable to himself in discharge of the sum due to his principal, is not by itself such evidence of a conversion as will dispense with proof of a demand of the money collected on the note before suit brought. Kidd v. King, 5 Ala. 84.

Where money has been received by the

And it is held that the agent is in duty bound to account to his principal in a reasonable time without any demand, in cases where a demand would be impracticable or highly inconvenient.¹ Thus it has been said: "If a merchant who sends his goods to a foreign country to be sold can have no right to call for his money, the proceeds of his goods, until he has sent abroad to make a demand, the risk of loss from the failure of factors would be considerably increased, and the disposition to trust them proportionably impaired."² Further, where the agency is denied or repudiated by the agent, the principal may institute suit without demand.³

(5) Interest—General Rule.—An agent is under no liability for interest where he has been guilty of no default and has been ready to settle with his principal when called upon for that purpose.⁴

Retention of Property for His Indemnity.—An agent, entitled to retain the property for his indemnity, although he disposes of it without authority, is not charge-agent a demand or a misapplication of the money is necessary before an action can be brought, and the statute of limitations begins to run only from the time of such demand. Waring v. Richardson, 11 Ired. (N. Car.) 77. See also Potter v. Sturges, 1 Dev. (N. Car.) 79; White v. Miller, 3 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 55; Wills v. Sugg, 3 Ired. (N. Car.) 96.

An agent who receives notes to be deposited with an attorney for collection, but collects the money himself, is not entitled to insist on a demand before suit against him. Brazier v. Fortune, 10 Ala. 516.

Nor is demand necessary where the ground of action is the agent's breach of duty, by which less money came to his hands for the principal than otherwise would have come. Dever v. Branch, 18 Tex. 615.

1. Eaton v. Welton, 32 N. H. 352; Clark v. Moody, 17 Mass. 149; Dodge v. Perkins, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 387.

A steward is bound to account periodically, though not called on. Ormond v. Hutchinson, 13 Ves. Jr. 53.

2. Clark v. Moody, 17 Mass. 148, per Parker, C.J.

After a lapse of a reasonable time from the receipt of goods by factors abroad and a neglect to account for them in any way, the fair presumption is that the goods have been sold and the money received for them, and an action for money had and received may be maintained. Eaton v. Welton, 32 N. H. 352.

But in New York it is held that the factor of a foreign principal is not liable in an action for the proceeds of a sale made by him on account of his principal on commission, until demand made by the principal or instructions to remit. Halden v. Crafts, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 495; Cooley v. Betts, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 206; Ferris v. Paris, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 285. And Topham v. Braddick, 1 Taunt. 572, was a case of foreign agency, and demand was held necessary.

3. King v. Foscue, 91 N. Car. 116; Waddell v. Swann, 91 N. Car. 108; Tillotson v. McCrillis, 11 Vt. 477.

A demand is required to enable the agent to pay over the money without incurring the costs of a suit, and therefore is not necessary where the agency is denied, or where claims are set up exceeding the amount collected, or where the agent's liability is disputed in the answer. Wiley v. Logan, 95 N. Car. 358.

Denial of Liability will Excuse Demand.—The general rule requiring a demand does not apply where the agent denies his liability, or otherwise shows that a demand would have been fruitless. Hammett v. Brown, 60 Ala. 498.

An agent improperly withholding the money of his principal is liable for the ordinary interest of the country where it ought to be paid. Anderson v. State, 2 Ga. 373; People v. Gasherie, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 71, 6 Am. Dec. 263; Harrison v. Long, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 110; Story on Agency, § 215.

In Crawford v. Welling, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 349, note, it was held that a factor or agent who does not with due diligence remit the money of his principal, is chargeable with interest.

An agent having collected money for his principal, which is subsequently attached and condemned in his hands by process of garnishment, is not liable for interest while the money remained in his hands, unless a demand is first made. Gunn v. Howell, 35 Ala. 144, 73 Am. Dec. 484, citing Kimbrow v. Waller, 21 Ala. 376; Sally v. Capps, 1 Ala. 121; Barton v. Peck, 1 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 486; M'Broom v. Governor, 6 Port. (Ala.) 32. And see Lever v. Lever, 2 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 158.

An agent receiving money for his principal in the transaction of his business is not liable for interest thereon before a demand is made, unless he receives special instructions to remit as fast as collected or is in default in neglecting to render his accounts. Hauxhurst v. Hovey, 26 Vt. 544.

Account Stated.—Where there has been an account stated between the parties, interest should be calculated from that time, as fixing the true amount of the indebtedness. Trippe v. Wynne, 76 Ga. 200. See the title ACCOUNTS—ACCOUNTS STATED, Vol. I., p. 457.

able with interest on the avails of that property during the continuance of his lien.¹

Neglect to Notify Principal of Collection.—On the other hand, if the agent receives moneys and wilfully suffers his principal for a long time to remain in ignorance that the debtor has paid, it is but equitable that the agent should be charged with interest, as in this case there is a clear default and breach of duty.²

Neglect or Refusal to Pay after Demand.—Where a demand has been made for an accounting, the agent's unreasonable and unjust neglect and refusal to account will render him liable for interest.³

Neglect to Pay when No Demand Necessary.—And interest is to be allowed where the law makes it the duty of the agent to account without a previous demand on the part of his principal.⁴

Misapplication.—The same is true where the agent, having agreed or been instructed to invest the funds, or apply them in some other designated way, retains and employs them for his own purposes.⁵

When Agent Receives Interest.—And of course the agent must account for the interest that he receives for the use of such funds.⁶

Interest-bearing Securities.—An agent will be presumed to have received the interest upon the interest-bearing securities in his possession belonging to his principal, and the burden is upon him to prove that he did not receive it. Blodgett v. Converse, 60 Vt. 410.

In Makepeace v. Rogers, 11 Jur. N. S. 215, Stuart, V.C., said: "I conceive that wherever the relation between the person who seeks an account, and the person against whom he seeks it, partakes of a fiduciary character, a trust is reposed by the plaintiff in the defendant, and that that trust is not the same as is represented to exist in the ordinary employment of an agent, such as a builder or other tradesman. The fiduciary character of the employment imposes upon the person employed the duty of keeping accounts and of preserving vouchers; and according to the old law, which I trust will continue to be the law of this court, a bill for an account in equity may be filed and sustained." In this case it was held that a landowner might maintain a bill for an account against his agent.

In Moxon v. Bright, L. R. 4 Ch. 294, Hatherley, L.C., said there were numerous cases showing that where the relation of principal and agent had imposed a trust upon the agent, the court would entertain a bill for an account; and the only difficulty was in determining what constituted this species of trust. It was not every agent who held a fiduciary position as between himself and his principal. Foley v. Hill, 1 Ph. 399, 2 H. L. Cas. 28, showed that though a banker was the agent of the customer for many purposes, they were not such as would constitute a trust. Nor did the mere circumstance that the mere relation of principal and agent will not entitle the principal to come into equity where the accounting can be fairly had at law.¹ Where the account has become so complicated that a court of law would be incompetent to examine it with all necessary accuracy, there is ground for equitable interference.² This branch of the subject will receive a detailed treatment elsewhere under titles given in the note.³

2. Of Principal to Agent—a. REMUNERATION FOR SERVICES RENDERED—the principal wanted discovery empower the court to give him assistance in the way of relief. The case of Smith v. Leveau, 2 De G. J. & S. 1, showed that though you might be entitled to discovery, which you could get either in equity or at law, that did not entitle you to relief, for all depended upon the character of the agency. As between master and servant such an agency did not exist, and a court of equity ought not to entertain a suit in such a case.

1. Taylor v. Tompkins, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 92; Crothers v. Lee, 29 Ala. 337; Knotts v. Tarver, 8 Ala. 743; Powers v. Cray, 7 Ga. 206. And see Matthews v. Wilson, 27 Mo. 155; Padwick v. Stanley, 9 Hare 627; Shepherd v. Brown, 4 Giff. 456; Garr v. Redman, 6 Cal. 574; Webb v. Fuller, 77 Me. 568.

In an agency involving a single transaction, such as a single consignment, or the delivery of money to be laid out in the purchase of a particular thing or to be paid over to a third person, a suit at law would be maintainable, and if a ground for equitable jurisdiction is not laid by reason of a discovery being wanted, it is perhaps the better opinion that such a case would be cognizable alone at law. Halsted v. Rabb, 8 Port. (Ala.) 65; Porter v. Spencer, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 171; Coquillard v. Suydam, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 24. And see Paulding v. Lee, 20 Ala. 753.

A bill for an account by a principal against his agent is not necessary where the transaction to which it relates is a single transaction and untainted by fraud. Navulshaw v. Brownrigg, 2 De G. M. & G. 441.

2. Halsted v. Rabb, 8 Port. (Ala.) 65; Knotts v. Tarver, 8 Ala. 743; Dunwiddie v. Kerley, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 501.

In Taylor v. Tompkins, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 89, a bill in equity was held to lie for an account of goods sold on commission if complicated, or if there was embarrassment in making proof, although the items were all on one side.

Where there is no complexity or difficulty in the account, a bill for an account against an attorney charging him with negligence and a failure to pay is without equity, nor can it be maintained on the ground of discovery alone unless it alleges that the complainant cannot prove the facts without the defendant's answer. Crothers v. Lee, 29 Ala. 337. See 1 Story Eq. Jur., §§ 462, 463. And see the title ACCOUNTS AND ACCOUNTING, 1 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 93-96, where this subject is treated at length.

Where Remuneration is Made to Depend upon Contingency.—An agent may by special agreement with his principal so contract as to make his compensation dependent on a contingency.¹ Under such contract he will be entitled to compensation on showing that the contingency has happened,² or that performance was prevented through some fault of the other party.³

(b) When Promise to Pay Implied—Prior Request.—Where one performs services for another at the latter's request, the law, in the absence of an express contract, will imply a promise to pay what the services are reasonably worth, unless it can be inferred from the circumstances that they were to be rendered without compensation.⁴

Implied from Circumstances—Service Performed with Knowledge of Party Benefited.—Moreover, an assumpsit to compensate may be implied from the beneficial nature of the consideration and the circumstances of the transaction,⁵ as where a party, Illustrations.—The general agent of the managers of a musical festival wrote a letter to the plaintiff promising, as security for the payment of services to be rendered by the plaintiff, to guarantee a certain sum for his services, provided that the proceeds of the festival resulted in that amount being placed to the agent's credit, and stipulating that neither the executive committee nor any person connected with the festival, except the agent, should be responsible for the fulfillment of the contract, and that, should the festival result in a loss, the plaintiff should have no claim against the agent or anybody else connected therewith. The plaintiff, by letter, accepted this proposition. It was held that the plaintiff could not maintain an action against the managers to recover a reasonable compensation for his services after the festival resulted in a loss. Zerrahn v. Ditson, 117 Mass. 553.

Under a contract by the terms of which the plaintiff was to receive a commission for the sale of such lots as the defendant desired to sell in a certain tract, the prices and items to be agreed upon thereafter, which commission was to be his compensation for services rendered in surveying and laying the lots out ready for the market, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover for his services rendered in connection with the laying out of the lots if the defendant complied with the terms of the contract upon his part in fixing prices upon all the surveyed lots he desired to sell and plaintiff failed to sell any such lots, on the sale of which his compensation depended. *Gilbert v. In Regular Course of One's Business.—In Martin v. Roberts, 36 Fed. Rep. 217, Simon-ton, J., said that "all persons engaged in commerce called upon to do services in the due course of business are ex necessitate entitled to compensation as growing out of and inseparably connected with the contract of their employment."

Private Agent.—In South Carolina it has been held that a private agent is not entitled to commissions unless they are stipulated for in the contract creating the agency. Poag v. Poag, 1 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 285; Lever v. Lever, 2 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 158.

Mandate.—In Louisiana it has been held that a mandate is gratuitous unless there has been a contrary stipulation. Rice's Succession, 14 La. Ann. 317; Moreau v. Dumagene, 20 La. Ann. 230; Wilson v. Wilson, 16 La. Ann. 155; Wells v. Hawley, 24 La. Ann. 271.

But the better doctrine seems to be that it is of the nature, but not of the essence, of a mandate that it be gratuitous, and an agent need not establish an express agreement that he should have a pecuniary remuneration for his services, but the courts may infer such an agreement from the nature of the employment and the relation of the parties. Krekeler's Succession, 44 La. Ann. 726; Waterman v. Gibson, 5 La. Ann. 672; Wood v. McCranie, 21 La. Ann. 557.

knowing that services are being performed for his benefit and on his account by another party, makes no objection, but permits him to continue performing the services.¹

It is for the Jury to determine whether a promise of recompense can be inferred or not.²

When Promise Not Implied—Gratuitous Services—General Rule.—No promise will arise by implication where the service is spontaneous or unrequested, or where the circumstances, such as the nature of the service and the relations of the parties, account for the transaction on some ground more probable than that of a promise of remuneration.³

Yet the Plaintiff must Show Some Specific Act performed in the capacity of mandatary before any implied contract for compensation can be established. Wood v. McCranie, 21 La. Ann. 557.

Illustrations.—It has been held that a consulting surgeon who, at the request of the attending surgeon, rendered services to a patient with his consent, may recover from the patient, upon an implied promise, the value of such services, notwithstanding an agreement between the patient and the attending surgeon that the latter should pay for such services, if the consulting surgeon did not expressly or impliedly assent to such agreement. Garrey v. Stadler, 67 Wis. 512, 58 Am. Rep. 877. See also Shelton v. Johnson, 40 Iowa 84.

Where a codefendant in a suit, being an attorney, specially contracted with his codefendants in the action for a stipulated sum to defend the suit in behalf of himself and his codefendants, he to employ and pay assistant counsel, it was held that assistant counsel who were called into the case by said attorney, and who performed valuable services in the defense of the case, with the knowledge of the other defendants and without any knowledge on their part of the special contract existing between said attorney and his codefendant, were, in an action against all the defendants, entitled to recover compensation for the services rendered by them in defense of the suit. McCrary v. Ruddick, 33 Iowa 521. See also Weston v. Davis, 24 Me. 374.

But it has been held that a contract will not be implied from the mere fact that work is done which is beneficial to the party sought to be charged. If the circumstances show that the work done was primarily and directly for the benefit of the parties doing it, or under an express contract with a party equally interested with the one sought to be charged, and also that the latter has, to the knowledge of the party claiming the implied contract, made an express contract with another to do such work, and that the two have worked together in performing the labor, the jury may be justified in finding the party liable only upon the express contract. Muscott v. Stubbs, 24 Kan. 520.

Where Employer Assists Employee.—In Lange v. Kaiser, 34 Mich. 318, it was held that where one has employed another to manufacture articles at an agreed price out of materials to be furnished by the former, the fact that he himself, without request, assists in the manufacture with the knowledge and assent of the other party will not raise an implied promise on the part of the other party to pay for such services.

Where a Party Benefited Suffers Work to Proceed—Evidence of Request.—It has been held that where beneficial services have been performed by one person for another, who has recognized them and suffered them to proceed, a promise to pay for them may be implied, the law in that case considering the circumstances as evidence from which a request may be presumed. James v. Bixby, 11 Mass. 34; Hatch v. Purcell, 21 N. H. 544; Low v. Connecticut River, etc., R. Co., 46 N. H. 284; Livingston v. Rogers, 1 Cal. (N. Y.) 588; Hicks v. Burhans, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 243; Hewett v. Bronson, 5 Daly (N. Y.) 1.

In Westgate v. Munroe, 100 Mass. 227, Hoar, J., in giving the opinion of the court, said: "In James v. Bixby, 11 Mass. 37, cited for the plaintiffs, it is said by the court that 'when a ship is repaired under the eye of the owner, there is an implied promise on his part to pay for the work, as there is against the owner of a house that he will pay for repairs done upon it, the law in such cases presuming a request if the owner suffers the work to proceed.' There was no occasion for absolute accuracy in the statement of the rule which the court used as an illustration, but it would have been more accurate to say that the law considers it 'as evidence from which a request may be presumed.'"

In Pew v. Gloucester First Nat. Bank, 130 Mass. 395, Morton, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The mere fact that valuable services are rendered for the benefit of a party does not make him liable upon an implied promise to pay for them. It often happens that persons render services for others which all parties understand to be gratuitous. Thus, directors of banks and of many other corporations usually receive no compensation. In such cases, however valuable the services may be, the law does not raise an implied contract to pay by the party who receives the benefit of them. To render such party liable as a debtor under an implied promise, it must be shown, not only that the services were valuable, but also that they were rendered under such circumstances as to raise the fair presumption that the parties intended and understood that they were to be paid for; or, at least, that the circumstances were such that a reasonable man in the same situation with the person who receives and is benefited by them would and ought to understand that compensation was to be paid for them."

In St. Jude's Church v. Van Denberg, 31 Mich. 287, it was held that the allowance of a claim for services as sexton, of one who at the time was a vestryman, and part of the time a senior warden and treasurer of the society, where the evidence clearly showed that the performance of the duty was voluntary, and that it was supposed on both sides that his service was something he was spontaneously giving from a desire to promote a cause he had at heart, and not in any extent to get money, was erroneous.

Necessity of the Service.—There are some obiter expressions to the effect that an implied obligation to pay for services rendered by one party to another without the knowledge of the latter, arises if it was an act of necessity for which he was legally bound to provide, or where it may be assumed that if he had known of the exigency he would have required such a service to be performed, with the understanding that he was to pay for it. Hewett v. Bronson, 5 Daly (N. Y.) 1. See Dunbar v. Williams, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 249.

Where Claim to Compensation is an Afterthought.—Where, at the time an agent took charge of certain property, it was not contemplated by either party that he should receive compensation for his services, and nothing arose by which the relations between the parties were changed, and the owners were not informed of any intent to charge for such services until shortly before the termination of the agency, it was held that the agent was not entitled to recover. Goodwin v. O'Brien (Supreme Ct.), 6 N. Y. Supp. 239. See also Higginson v. Fabre, 3 Desaus. (S. Car.) 89; James v. O'Driscoll, 2 Bay (S. Car.) 101, 1 Am. Dec. 632.

Whether Gratuitous Service will Support Subsequent Promise to Pay.—In Allen v. Bryson, 67 Iowa 591, 56 Am. Rep. 358, it was held that where one person renders services for another gratuitously, and with no expectation of being paid therefor, no obligation is incurred by the recipient which will support a subsequent promise to pay for the same.

But in Chadwick v. Knox, 31 N. H. 226, 64 Am. Dec. 329, it was held that a prisoner who, after his discharge, promised a person who had voluntarily and without solicitation performed services in procuring his discharge that he would work for him in payment of those services, and thereupon began and continued to labor for him to that amount, could not recover for such labor.

1. Services Performed in Expectation of Legacy.—Osborn v. Governors, 2 Stra. 728; Le Sage v. Coussmaker, 1 Esp. 187; Little v. Dawson, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 111; Lee v. Lee, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 316; Davison v. Davison, 13 N. J. Eq. 246; Grandin v. Reading, 10 N. J. Eq. 370; Martin v. Wright, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 460, 28 Am. Dec. 468; Eaton v. Benton, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 576; Walker's Estate, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 243; Hartman's Appeal, 3 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 271.

If, however, there was an understanding between the parties that the one rendering the services was to be remunerated by will, and the will makes no provision, then the action lies. Davison v. Davison, 13 N. J. Eq. 246; Jacobson v. La Grange, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 199; Reynolds v. Robinson, 82 N. Y. 103, 37 Am. Rep.

Service Performed in Hope of Future Employment.—Similarly, no compensation is due an unsuccessful bidder for his time and trouble in making proposals, the inducement to make such bids being the hope that they will be accepted and a profitable contract thereby obtained.¹

Where Agent is Member of Principal's Family.—Where it is shown that the person rendering the service is a member of the family of the person served, and is receiving support therein,² especially where the relation of parent and child exists,³ a presumption of law arises that such service is gratuitous.

Where the Relation of Uncle and Niece Exists.

—A girl upon the death of her mother was turned away from home by her father, at the age of fourteen, and at the suggestion of her aunt and her grandmother she went to live with her uncle and aunt, with whom she remained until she was twenty-five years of age, when, being engaged to be married, she privately left and was afterwards married, and she brought suit against the uncle for work and labor. There being no express contract for compensation, and it appearing that she had been kindly treated and provided for in a better manner than she would have been if she had merely received her wages, it was held that she was not entitled to recover for her services. Hays v. McConnell, 42 Ind. 285; Morris v. Barnes, 35 Mo. 412.

Where the Relation of Brother and Sister Exists.—The plaintiff and her husband lived for twenty-three years with and in the house of the deceased, her brother, a farmer. She assisted in the ordinary work of the house and in milking the cows and in the dairy, she and her husband and children all living together in her brother's house as one family. An action was brought by her after her brother's death to recover from his administrators the value of her services thus rendered during the previous six years. It was held that, as no promise or agreement of the brother to compensate her for her services was shown, she could not recover. Carpenter v. Weller, 15 Hun (N. Y.) 134. See also Ayres v. Hull, 5 Kan. 419; Neeley v. Rich, 7 Ill. App. 116; Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 83; Hall v. Finch, 29 Wis. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 559; Scully v. Scully, 28 Iowa 548; O'Connor v. Beckwith, 41 Mich. 657.

Where the Party Serving and the Party Served are Cousins.—It has been held that the relationship of cousins is not such as of itself to rebut the presumption of an implied contract arising from services rendered and accepted, but it must be shown that the parties lived together as members of the same family. Gallaher v. Vought, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 87; Neal v. Gilmore, 79 Pa. St. 421.

Where the Relationship of Granddaughter Exists.—In Hauser v. Sain, 74 N. Car. 552, it was held that the relationship of granddaughter was not alone sufficient to rebut the presumed obligation to pay for services rendered in the grandfather's family.

3. Where the Relation of Parent and Child Exists.—Where a child, after attaining his majority, continues a member of his father's family, rendering services for him and receiving his support and maintenance from him as before without any understanding between them that he shall be paid, the law will not allow him to recover for such services. Cohen v. Cohen, 2 Mackey (D. C.) 227; Morton v. Rainey, 82 Ill. 215, 25 Am. Rep. 311; Guffin v. Morrison First Nat. Bank, 74 Ill. 259; Miller v. Miller, 16 Ill. 296; *Wilson v. Y.) 521. Compare Richards v. Humphreys, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 133.

Where the Person Served Stands in Loco Parentis.

To Overcome This Presumption there must be clear, direct, and positive proof that the relation between the parties was not merely one of family, but was that of debtor and creditor, or principal and agent.¹

Proof of Agreement to Compensate.—In order that this relation may be established, an express agreement to that effect must be shown,² or such facts and circumstances must be proved as will authorize the jury to find that the services were rendered in the expectation by one of receiving, and by the other of making, compensation therefor.³

ties to the Party Serving.—And the same rule applies to cases where the person from whom the compensation for services is claimed takes a child into his family to live with him until he becomes of age, and the child continues after that time to reside in his family, he standing in loci parentis to the child. Andrus v. Foster, 17 Vt. 556; Thorp v. Batemen, 37 Mich. 68, 26 Am. Rep. 497; Smith v. Johnson, 45 Iowa 308; Windland v. Deeds, 44 Iowa 98; Medsker v. Richardson, 72 Ind. 323; Ryan v. Lynch, 9 Mo. App. 18; Lantz v. Frey, 14 Pa. St. 201.

Thus a stepfather will not be held liable for the services of a minor stepson who lives in the family as a member of it, where the relationship of parent and child exists, unless a promise to pay for the services can be shown. Brush v. Blanchard, 18 Ill. 46. See also Williams v. Hutchinson, 3 N. Y. 312, 53 Am. Dec. 301.

In Curry v. Curry, 114 Pa. St. 371, Trunky, J., in giving the opinion of the court said: "When the parties are parent and child, or members of the same family, the relationship excludes the implication of a promise. In all cases, except that of parent and child, there must be evidence beyond the relationship that the creation of no debt was intended."

Illustrations.—Where the mother of the plaintiff's wife, being aged and infirm, requested the plaintiff to take her to his home and care for her, which he did, boarding and nursing her until her death, she being helpless and unable to perform any service during all the time, and it was shown that she expressed a desire to pay plaintiff for her care, it was held that she did not become a member of his family, and that he was entitled to recover from her estate the value of the services rendered by him and his family. Wence v. Wykoff, 52 Iowa 644.

In Ulrich v. Ulrich, 136 N. Y. 120, it was held that a parent may make a valid contract with a child to pay for services rendered after majority, and there is no presumption of law arising from the relationship against the existence of such a contract.

In Hall v. Hall, 44 N. H. 293, it was held that a father may, by agreement with his minor child, relinquish to the child the right he has to his services and earnings, and after such an agreement the father may contract to employ and pay his child for his services, and he will be bound like a stranger.

Where the Son does Not Live as a Member of the Father's Family.—In Parker v. Parker, 33 Ala. 459, it was held that whatever may be the claims of filial duty and affection as between an aged and infirm father and his grown son, there is no principle of law which requires the son while separate and apart from his father to perform services for the latter without compensation when the father is in comfortable circumstances; consequently, to support the son's claim to compensation for such services, proof of an express contract is not necessary.

In Fisher v. Fisher, 5 Wis. 472, Cole, J., in giving the opinion of the court said: "The plaintiff might have shown to the satisfaction of any jury that by the course of dealing between him and the defendant, as, for instance

(c) Where Unauthorized Acts are Ratified.—If a person acts as an agent without authority and his acts are ratified, he is entitled to compensation just as though he had been duly authorized.¹

(2) When the Right may be Deemed to have Attached—(a) General Rule.—It is a general rule that an agent will be entitled to remuneration when he has completely² and faithfully³ performed the services for which he was employed, and this whether his services have been profitable or otherwise to the principal.⁴

(b) Where Service has Not been Faithfully Performed—Negligence—Gross Negligence.—Where an agent has been guilty of such gross negligence in the transaction of his principal's business as to render his services worthless, he can recover no compensation whatever.⁵

Slight Negligence.—Slight negligence, however, if the principal has derived some benefit from the services rendered, will not work a forfeiture of the agent's entire compensation, but will go merely to reduce the amount of his demand.⁶

Failure to Keep and Render Accounts Properly.—Thus, an agent may be guilty of such gross negligence in keeping and rendering to the principal accounts relating to the business of his agency as to deprive him of all compensation;⁷ but where that they kept books of account, or had had settlements, or acts of this kind, that the relation of debtor and creditor subsisted between them, and that it was not intended or expected that these services should be rendered gratuitously."

In Morton v. Rainey, 82 Ill. 215, 25 Am. Rep. 311, it was held that where a minor of eleven years of age was taken into the family of his uncle and remained there until he was of age, receiving his board, clothing, and medical attendance from the uncle, and after he became of age continued to reside with his uncle, but furnished his own clothes and paid his own medical bills, these facts were sufficient to establish an implied contract on the part of the uncle to pay him what his services were reasonably worth.

Attorney.—In Bracey v. Carter, 12 Ad. & El. 373, 40 E. C. L. 74, it was held that if an attorney conducting a suit commits an act of negligence by which all the previous steps become useless in the result, he cannot recover for any part of the business done. See the title ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

In Ridgeway v. Ludlam, 7 N. J. Eq. 123, it was held that if the agent for the performance of certain services, for which a salary or yearly sum is to be allowed him, neglects to keep an account of moneys received by him in his agency, and several annual accounts are settled between him and his principal, in which considerable amounts of money previously received by him are omitted to be credited to the principal, and the omission is not supplied until the principal, in consequence of information received from others, makes inquiry of the agent in reference thereto, the salary or yearly sum for the years in which such omission occurred shall be disallowed.

Where the Agent's Duty of Rendering an Account is Separable from the Other Duties of His Agency.—Under a written contract to perform for a fixed quarterly salary all duties of general agent of a manufacturing corporation, one of which, specified in the contract, his failure to perform these duties does not amount to gross negligence, it will have the effect simply to reduce the agent's compensation to the extent of whatever loss the principal may have suffered thereby.¹

Fraud. It is well settled that where an agent has committed a fraud on his principal in the transaction of his agency he can receive no compensation,² and if the principal, in ignorance of the fraud, pays the compensation the amount so paid may be recovered.³

Where the Agent's and the Principal's Interests are Adverse.—Thus, where it appears that an agent, without the principal's knowledge, makes use of his agency to acquire or promote interests which are directly inimical to those of his principal, he will not be allowed to recover compensation for his services.⁴

was to render monthly accounts of the funds in his hands, distinct and separable from the other duties of the agency, a failure to render it would not defeat his right to recover his salary while he remained their agent. Sampson v. Somerset Iron Works Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 120. Merrick, J., in giving the opinion of the court in this case, said: "The agreement of the plaintiff to render a monthly account of the funds of the company had no necessary connection with the other duties he was bound to perform in his behalf. It was, no doubt, considered a very useful and important part of the special services he was to render to his employers, the neglect of which might have afforded them just cause of complaint; but it was distinct and separable from many other things to be done by him in his capacity as agent, and, therefore, cannot be regarded as a condition precedent. It was a stipulation only, upon the breach of which he was liable for damages for whatever injury was, in any way, caused to the defendant."

Evidence of Precise Extent of Injury to Principal Unnecessary to Show Forfeiture.—In Prescott v. White, 18 Ill. App. 322, it was held that the right of a principal to insist that his agent has forfeited his right to compensation by reason of fraud cannot be dependent upon the principal's ability to show, by facts and figures, the precise extent of the injury to him on account of such misconduct. Illustrations.—Thus an agent employed to sell property cannot himself become the purchaser at his own sale, and if he does so without the knowledge or consent of his principal a commission cannot be collected by him for his services. McGar v. Adams, 65 Ala. 106; Jansen v. Williams, 36 Neb. 869.

An agent employed to sell land sold it to a company in which he was interested as a shareholder and director; it was held that he was entitled to no commission in respect of the sale. Salomons v. Pender, 3 H. & C. 639.

The defendant, a manufacturer of medicines, made an agreement with the plaintiff by which he authorized him to make contracts with newspapers for the insertion of defendant's advertisements, and agreed to pay therefor by accepting orders for his medicines from the publishers of the newspapers at a price considerably below the market price, but sufficient to yield a profit, and also agreed to pay plaintiff $2.75 for his services in procuring each such advertising contract. The plaintiff sued the defendant for the agreed commission for procuring a large number of such advertising contracts, and defendant set up in the answer that the contract between him and the plaintiff had been procured by the plaintiff's representations that the sole consideration to be given to the publishers of the papers would be the sale of the medicines at the reduced price, whereby defendant would not only make a profit, but would cause his medicines to be put on sale at the places where they were advertised; that such representations were false, and plaintiff in fact never attempted to make advertising contracts on such terms, but inserted the advertisements in papers in which he already controlled space, and that no orders for medicines had in fact been received by the defendant. It was held that the agent, by seeking to advance his own interests at the expense of his principal's, could not recover compensation for his services. Hoffin v. Moss, 67 Fed. Rep. 440.

Where by his own admissions it appeared that an agent to buy certain property for a

Misappropriation of Goods and Funds.—An agent is not entitled to compensation if he fails to deliver the goods which he has been employed to purchase, and appropriates them to his own use;¹ or if, when intrusted with goods to be sold, he appropriates the proceeds of the sale,² or otherwise improperly retains the funds of his principal.³

(c) Where Service has Not been Completely Performed—aa. WHERE AGENCY IS REVOKED BY PRINCIPAL—(aa) Agency Revocable at the Pleasure of Principal.—Where an agency, terminable at the will of the principal, has been revoked by him without any fault on the part of the agent, it is the usual rule, unless otherwise stipulated,⁴ that the agent shall receive a reasonable compensation for his services rendered before the termination of his authority;⁵ but he will not be allowed, in addition to this, what he would have received as compensation had he been permitted to continue in the agency.⁶

(bb) Agent Discharged for Cause.—Remuneration for Services Already Rendered.—The authorities are not agreed as to the right of the agent to receive compensation for his services already rendered where he has been discharged for good cause. In England, and some of the states in this country, it is held, on the principle of entirety of contract, that the agent forfeits all compensation;⁷ but in other party charged and received from him many thousand dollars more than he paid for the property, it was held that the agent had forfeited all right to compensation. Blair v. Shaeffer, 33 Fed. Rep. 218. See Martin v. Bliss, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 157.

In Adams Express Co. v. Trego, 35 Md. 47, it was held that if a person employed by the year as an assistant superintendent of an express company, at a stated salary payable monthly, engages in another business in competition with, and calculated seriously to injure that of, the express company, and being notified by the company that he must discontinue said business, refuses so to do, and is discharged at the expiration of six months, and paid for his services at the stipulated price up to the time of his discharge, he cannot recover the balance of the year's salary.

By the terms of a contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, the plaintiff, in consideration of a certain sum for the year 1873, and of another sum for the year 1874, to be paid in semi-monthly or monthly instalments, agreed to devote his whole time and attention solely to the business of the defendant under the contract. The plaintiff entered the service of the defendant, and continued in it up to June, 1873, when the defendant suspended business. It was held, in a suit by the plaintiff for damages on account of being thrown out of employment, that there was no undertaking on the part of the defendant to continue the plaintiff in his employment for any definite length of time, and that the plaintiff could not recover. *Orr v. Thus in Turner v. Robinsons, 6 C. & P. 15, 25 E. C. L. 257, it was held that if a yearly servant be dismissed by his master before the year expires, for such misconduct as will justify his dismissal, the servant is not entitled to any wages for the time during which he served.

Credit of Wages on Ledger—Waiver of Forfeiture.—In an action by an agent against his principals for wages for services rendered under a contract terminated by them, evidence that on terminating it they credited him on their ledger for the full amount of his stipulated wages up to that time is competent to prove that they waived any claim to a forfeiture thereof, although the entry on the ledger was made without his knowledge. Bell v. Smith, 99 Mass. 617. See also McGrath v. Bell, 33 N. Y. Super. Ct. 195.

states a different rule prevails, and the agent may recover as compensation what the services are reasonably worth to the principal.¹

Remuneration which might have been Earned.—It is well settled, however, that where the agent is discharged for bad conduct, he will not be entitled to compensation for services which, but for the discharge, he might have rendered.²

(cc) Agent Wrongfully Discharged—Remedies Growing out of the Wrongful Act.—An agent wrongfully discharged has but two remedies growing out of the wrongful act.

Action on a Quantum Meruit.—First, he may rescind the contract, in which case he may sue immediately on a quantum meruit for services actually rendered.³

Action for Damages for Breach of Contract.—Secondly, he may treat the contract of employment as continuing, though broken by the principal, and may recover damages for the breach.⁴

When Cause of Action Arises.—The agent's cause of action arises as soon as the injury is done, and he may sue immediately,⁵ or he may wait until the expiration of his term of service.⁶

A contract of employment was as follows: "In consideration of Mr. F. F. Waters having agreed to give his undivided time and services in our business as we may direct, we agree to pay him a salary, etc., for a term of two years, etc." The services of Waters were in traveling over the country and selling his employers' goods. Shortly before January 12th they directed him to go to St. Paul with samples, and to take a room and sell in and from it. He refused to go unless his employers agreed to pay him, besides his salary, up to eight dollars a day for his expenses of traveling. In an action by Waters against his employers it was held that the service demanded was within the contract, and that it having been the custom to pay the salary the 1st and 15th of each month, and the plaintiff having been rightfully discharged on the 12th of the month, for refusing to follow directions, he was not entitled to any pay for his services from the 1st of the month. *Waters v. Where Suit is Brought before the Expiration of the Term of Service.—The plaintiff contracted with the defendants to act in their theatrical company for thirty-six weeks. At the close of the nineteenth week the defendants discharged him without fault on his part. He commenced an action for breach of the contract during the next week. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover as damages for the remainder of the term at the stipulated rate, less what he actually earned, or might have earned, by the exercise of reasonable diligence. Sutherland v. Wyer, 67 Me. 64.

But in Gordon v. Brewster, 7 Wis. 355, it was held that where A entered into a contract to hire B to superintend his lumbering business, etc., for five years at a salary of two thousand dollars per year, and discharged him at the end of the year, and B brought his action for breach of the contract, the rule of damages was the rate of the salary from the time of the breach up to the time of the trial, less the amount B might have earned in the meantime.

Where Suit is Commenced after the Expiration of the Term of Service, it is undisputed that prima facie the plaintiff is damaged to the extent of the amount stipulated to be paid. Sutherland v. Wyer, 67 Me. 64; Everson v. Powers, 89 N. Y. 527, 42 Am. Rep. 319; Gordon v. Brewster, 7 Wis. 355. See also cases cited at the beginning of this note.

Suit before Expiration of Term of Service—Trial after Expiration Thereof.—Where, upon breach of a contract of employment for a wrongful discharge of the employee, the action is brought by him before the expiration of the term of service, but is not brought to trial until after the expiration thereof, it has been held that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the same damages as he would have been entitled to had the action been commenced after the expiration of the term; that is, the difference between the compensation fixed by the contract for the service and what the plaintiff has received, together with what he was able to earn after his discharge. Everson v. Powers, 89 N. Y. 527, 42 Am. Rep. 319.

Amount Already Paid to be Deducted.—In Cumberland, etc., R. Co. v. Slack, 45 Md. 162, it was held that the measure of damages which the agent is entitled to by reason of his discharge is fixed by the contract of employment, and is a stipulated salary for the year less the amount which has been paid him and less the amount of the money of the principal which he might have actually received and not accounted for. See Everson v. Powers, 89 N. Y. 527, 42 Am. Rep. 319.

Amount of Damages—A Question for the Jury.—In Ream v. Watkins, 27 Mo. 518, 72 Am. Dec. 283, Richardson, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The measure of damages, in an action for a wrongful discharge brought before the expiration of the term, is not necessarily the contract price for the whole term, because a plaintiff, after he is dismissed, may sue and recover a judgment, and then obtain employment elsewhere, and receive for the residue of the term as much or more than by the broken contract he would have been entitled to if he had served his time out. The damages must depend on the kind of service to be performed and the wages to be paid, and allowance should be made for the time that would probably be lost before similar employment the amount to which the agent would have been entitled had the contract been fulfilled.¹

Other Employment in Reduction of Damages.—The agent upon his discharge is bound to use reasonable efforts to secure employment elsewhere. If he secures employment, or by reasonable diligence might have done so, the amount of compensation received,² or that might have been received, must be deducted from the amount of damages occasioned by the breach of the contract.³

Employment must be of the Same General Nature.—This principle, however, extends only to the offer or opportunity of employment of the same general nature as that from which he has been dismissed,⁴ and to be carried on in the same locality.⁵

could be obtained. In some pursuits it may be almost certain that the dismissal of a person at a particular season will throw him entirely out of employment for the residue of the year, whilst in other pursuits similar employment could readily be obtained elsewhere on the same or better terms; and, therefore, the amount of damages is a question for the jury under all the circumstances of the case."

A mercantile house in New York, by letter dated 19th of February, 1869, engaged the services of K. from that date to the 30th of June following as their salesman in the city of Baltimore, at a certain rate per month. K.

entered upon the service and discharged his duties without complaint, until he was dismissed therefrom by a letter dated the 8th of May, 1869, on the alleged ground that he had been attending to the business of another house. In a suit brought by K. against his employers to recover damages for his wrongful dismissal from their service, it was held that the measure of damages was fixed by the contract—a stipulated salary for a specified period—and the plaintiff was entitled to recover his whole salary under the contract from the 1st of May, the date to which he had been paid, to the 30th of June, inclusive, and the defendants could not claim a reduction therefrom of the amount which the plaintiff earned subsequently to his discharge and before the 30th of June in another employment; they having failed to say that he could not have earned it without a violation of his duty under the contract if he had not been discharged. Jaffray v. King, 34 Md. 217.

Agent Presumed to Get the Best Wages.—When an agent obtains employment, it has been held that the presumption is that he gets the best wages he can, which presumption must prevail unless there be shown by the adverse party, or it otherwise appears from the proof, that he accepted less than he could have obtained. Hunt v. Crane, 33 Miss. 669, 69 Am. Dec. 381.

Where Action is Brought on Contract for Constructive Service.—It has been held that where the plaintiff waits until the expiration of the term, and then sues for the whole wages on the idea of a constructive performance, the principal may show in diminution of damages that after the plaintiff was dismissed he had engaged in other lucrative business, or had an opportunity to make like service. Gardenhire v. Smith, 39 Ark. 280; Fain v. Goodwin, 35 Ark. 109; Hendrickson v. Anderson, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 246; Brinkley v. Swicegood, 65 N. Car. 626.

Burden of Proof on the Principal.—The onus is on the principal to prove all the facts necessary to make out his defense.¹

Remedy by Action to Enforce Contract—Compensation Actually Earned.—Independent of and additional to the foregoing remedies is the right to sue for compensation actually earned and due by the terms of the contract. This amount the agent recovers because he has completed either in full or as to a specified part the stipulation between the parties.²

Compensation for "Constructive Service."—It was the prevailing doctrine formerly, and is the doctrine in several states at present, that where an agent has been wrongfully discharged before the expiration of the stipulated term he may elect to treat the contract as continuing, keep himself in readiness to perform it on his part, and after the expiration of the term sue his principal on the contract for the whole of the wages due him by its terms;³ but the better authority favors the rule that an action will not lie to recover, as though actually earned, compensation accruing subsequently to the discharge, but the remedy in such case is by an action for damages arising from the breach of the contract.⁴

Recovery a Bar to Subsequent Action.—Where the agent resorts to one of the above-mentioned remedies, a recovery will be a bar to any subsequent action.⁵

In Howard v. Daly, 61 N. Y. 362, 19 Am. Rep. 285, Dwight, Com. of Appeals, in commenting upon the doctrine of "constructive service," said: "This doctrine is, however, so opposed to principle, so clearly hostile to the great mass of authorities, and so wholly irreconcilable to that great and beneficent rule of law that a person discharged from service must not remain idle, but must accept employment elsewhere if offered, that we cannot accept it. If a person discharged from service may recover wages, or treat the contract as still subsisting, then he must remain idle in order to be always ready to perform the service. How absurd it would be that one rule of law should call upon him to accept other employment, while another rule required him to remain idle in order that he may recover full wages. The doctrine of 'constructive service' is not only at war with principle, but with the rules of political economy, as it encourages idleness and gives compensation to men who fold their arms and decline service, equal to those who perform with willing hands their stipulated amount of labor."

What Tender of Service on Part of Agent Necessary.—The agent must have been ready and willing to continue in the principal's service at the time of the latter's refusal to receive him into his employment.¹ It is not necessary, however, that he should go through the barren form of offering to render the service.² His readiness, like any other fact, may be shown by all the circumstances of the case.³

After the Principal has Declined to Give the Agent Employment, however, there is no further duty on the agent's part to be in readiness to perform.⁴

WHERE LAW OPERATES TO REVOKE AGENCY—(a) Death of Principal.—The death of the principal will, by the operation of law, dissolve a contract for the performance of services, and the agent will be entitled to compensation only for services already performed at the time of the principal's death.⁵

(bb) Sickness or Death of Agent.—Similarly, where the agent is prevented by death,⁶ sickness,⁷ or other like inability, occasioned by the visitation of Provi-

Where Payment is to be Made in Instalments.—It has been held, however, that if, by the terms of the contract, the principal is to pay to the agent for his personal services to be rendered to him, in two instalments due at different periods, and the principal prevents the agent from complying with the contract and refuses to pay, and the agent thereupon institutes an action against him for the first instalment before the second becomes due, and recovers judgment for that amount, this recovery is no bar to a second suit for the remaining instalment. *Strauss v. It was held that the agent had no valid claim upon the fund in the hands of the receiver, for damages for breach of the contract, in the absence of evidence of fault on the part of the company. *People v. In Fenton v. Clark, 11 Vt. 557, it was held that if A contracted with B to labor for him four months from a given day at ten dollars per month, and was to receive no pay until he had worked the four months, still if he was prevented from completing the four months' labor by reason of sickness he might recover pro rata for the services performed on a quantum meruit. In delivering the dence,¹ from fully performing a contract for his personal services, though the contract be for entire performance, a recovery may be had for the services actually rendered, subject to the right of the principal to reduce the same by proof of any damages sustained by him in consequence of the agent's not being able to complete the service.

cc. WHERE AGENCY IS RENOUNCED BY AGENT—(aa) Where He Reserves the Right to Renounce at Will.—Where the agent by contract reserves the right to quit his agency at any time, he will be entitled to recover for services which he has rendered, though he leaves capriciously and without good reason.²

Where Contract Requires Notice to be Given before Leaving.—Where a person otherwise an agent at will contracts to give notice before renouncing his agency, he will be liable to his principal for damages sustained, if he fails to do so;³ and a further stipulation that in the event of failure to give notice the agent shall forfeit all or a certain part of his compensation will be enforced,⁴ provided it opinion of the court in this case, Bennett, J., said: "In the case before the court the plaintiff contracted with the defendant to labor personally for him four months at ten dollars per month, and by the terms of the contract was to receive no pay till he had worked the four months. These services being of a personal character, the contract could not be performed by another; and as the plaintiff was disabled to perform it himself, by reason of sickness, which was the act of God, upon the authority of the foregoing cases the contract was discharged. * * * To hold in a case like this, where the plaintiff has been discharged of his contract by the act of God, that there can be no apportionment upon the technical ground that the contract is entire and its performance a condition precedent, is, to my mind, leaving the substance and adhering to the shadow."

In Hillyard v. Crabtree, 11 Tex. 264, 62 Am. Dec. 475, it is held that where an agent has on account of sickness broken an entire contract for the performance of services, the law raises an implied promise on the part of the principal to pay such amount of the stipulated price as remains after deducting what it costs to procure a completion of the whole service, and also any damage which has been sustained by reason of the nonfulfilment of the contract.

Where the Sickness could have been Foreseen and Provided against.—The plaintiff contracted to render to the defendant the domestic services of himself and wife for one year at a specified price. Four months and ten days thereafter the wife left the service in anticipation of her confinement. Both were then discharged from the service and the wife was confined before six weeks thereafter. It was held that the plaintiff was not excused by such sickness, which he should have foreseen, and could not recover on a quantum meruit. Jennings v. Lyons, 39 Wis. 554.

Agent Need Not Wait until the Expiration of the Time Fixed in the Contract.—If the party recovers from his sickness and offers to resume his work during the term and the employer rejects the offer, the laborer may then treat the special contract as rescinded, and may recover for the service already rendered without waiting for the expiration of the time fixed in the agreement for its performance.

The plaintiff, a weaver, was employed by the defendants as a weekly servant, his wages being regulated by the number of pieces which he wove and delivered to his masters. The wages of the defendants' workmen were ascertained and fixed at noon on Thursday in each week, but were not paid until the next Saturday. By rules embodied in the contract of hire, the workmen were required to give before leaving fourteen days' notice at the time of booking up on Thursday, and a failure to give notice would forfeit all wages due. On a Thursday the sum earned by the plaintiff in the preceding week was ascertained and fixed at fifteen shillings. He commenced another week on the afternoon of the same day and worked during the morning of Friday and earned seven shillings. He left during the forenoon of Friday without having given any notice. It was held that the plaintiff forfeited, by leaving before the Saturday, the wages due on Thursday but not payable until Saturday, as well as the wages earned between noon of Thursday and Friday morning. Walsh v. Walley, L. R. 9 Q. B. 367.

What will be Deemed a Stipulation.—Where the agent signs a regulation in the principal's business to the effect that abandonment of the agency without notice will work a forfeiture of compensation, he will, of course, be bound thereby. Pottsville Iron, etc., Co. v. Good, 116 Pa. St. 385, 2 Am. St. Rep. 614. And even though he does not sign it, if he enters into the principal's business with the knowledge of such regulation, he will be considered to have assented to it. Harmon v. Salmon Falls Mfg. Co., 35 Me. 447, 58 Am. Dec. 718.

But evidence that the agent had in his possession a paper containing the printed regu-is not unreasonable or oppressive;¹ but in the absence of such stipulation no forfeiture will occur.²

(bb) Where He Has Good Cause—Misconduct of Principal.—An agent may, on account of the principal's wrongful conduct, be justified in abandoning his contract for the performance of services, and in that event he will be entitled to the value of his services rendered.³

lations of the principal's business is not conclusive evidence that the contents were known to him. Bradley v. Salmon Falls Mfg. Co., 30 N. H. 487. Nor does the fact that he was informed of such regulations after the commencement of his work, and continues to work without objection, show conclusively and as a matter of law that he assented to the rules as part of his contract. Collins v. New England Iron Co., 115 Mass. 23; Preston v. American Linen Co., 119 Mass. 400.

Similarly, Evidence of a Custom in Trade to have printed rules and regulations requiring agents to give notice a certain number of days before leaving, is inadmissible unless the party seeking to avail himself of the custom offers to show that the other party knew of it. Stevens v. Reeves, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 197; Collins v. New England Iron Co., 115 Mass. 23.

Circumstances Which will Prevent Forfeiture.

—It is settled that absence, from sickness or other visitation from God, without notice, will not work a forfeiture of wages under such a contract. Fuller v. Brown, 11 Met. (Mass.) 440. See also Heber v. U. S. Flax Mfg. Co., 13 R. I. 303. Pari ratione any abandonment caused by unforeseen circumstances or events, and which at the time of their occurrence the person employed could not control or prevent from operating to terminate his employment, ought not to be allowed to cause a forfeiture of compensation. Thus, it has been held that an arrest and conviction and imprisonment for crime will exonerate a workman from the duty of giving to his employers two weeks' notice before leaving their services, under a contract by the terms of which he has agreed to give such notice or not claim any wages due. Hughes v. Wamsutta Mills, 11 Allen (Mass.) 201.

Whether an Abandonment is Such as to Cause Forfeiture—A Question for the Jury.—It has been held that where an employee under such a contract as mentioned in the text leaves without notice and without cause, it is for the jury to determine whether he has abandoned the service, from evidence, not of his undisclosed intention, but of his acts, and that the forfeiture will be incurred notwithstanding his intention to return, if he remains away so long as to warrant the master in regarding his absence as permanent and procuring another person to supply his place. Partington v. Wamsutta Mills, 110 Mass. 467; Naylor v. Fall River Iron Works Co., 118 Mass. 317.

Forfeiture Not Justified by Temporary Absence.

—An operative in the mill of a flax-manufacturing company had agreed in writing to give "two weeks' notice of his desire to quit the service of said company at any time, or in default of said two weeks' notice to forfeit two weeks' pay." It was held that the agreement did not apply to a temporary absence; that in case of a temporary absence without leave the operative might properly be discharged, but that there would be no forfeiture, under the agreement, of the wages then earned. Heber v. U. S. Flax Mfg. Co., 13 R. I. 303.

1. Richardson v. Woehler, 26 Mich. 90; Schrimpf v. Tennessee Mfg. Co., 86 Tenn. 219.

In Richardson v. Woehler, 26 Mich. 90, Campbell, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "We have no difficulty in holding that the injury caused by a sudden breaking off of a contract of service, by either party, involves such difficulties concerning the actual loss as to render a reasonable agreement for stipulated damages appropriate. If a fixed sum, or a maximum within which wages unpaid and accruing since the last pay day might be forfeited, should be agreed upon, and should not be an unreasonable or oppressive exaction, there would seem to be no legal objection to the stipulation, if both parties are equally and justly protected. But the facts set forth in this record do not, we think, bring the case within any such rule. We must be governed by the statement returned, and cannot go beyond what it fairly allows us to infer. The forfeiture under the contract covers all wages due at the time of leaving. This is open to the objection that the employer may have been in arrears, and thus enabled to profit by his own wrong. No such forfeiture could be enforced against wages, as such, which the workman was entitled to have paid to him before he committed any breach of his duty. Again, it does not appear how often wages were payable, and what proportion of the year's earnings could thus be withheld for a breach of contract. It would not be reasonable to make the forfeiture cover a very long period. We cannot know these terms judicially."

3. Cody v. Raynaud, 1 Colo. 272; Bishop v. Ranney, 59 Vt. 316.

Where Principal Assaults Agent.—Where a principal, without provocation, commits an assault upon his agent, and thereby causes him to fear injury, this has been held a sufficient justification for an abandonment of the agency, and the agent may recover compensation for the services he has performed. Bishop v. Ranney, 59 Vt. 316.

Use of Rough Language to Agent.—But where an agent was employed for a fortnight and quit at the end of ten days in consequence of rough language from his principal, it was held that he did not have just cause for leaving, and that he was not entitled to compensation for the ten days. Marsh v. Ruleson, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 515.

Epidemic in Vicinity where Services are to be Performed.—Where, from the prevalence of a fatal disease in the vicinity of the place where an agent has agreed to perform services for a specified time, the danger is such as to render it unsafe and unreasonable for men of ordinary care and common prudence to remain there, it is a sufficient cause for not fulfilling the contract, and the agent may recover reasonable compensation for the services performed.¹

Sickness of the Agent.—A discussion of this question will be found elsewhere in this article.²

(cc) Where He Has Not Good Cause—Prevailing Rule.—It is the prevailing rule, both in England and in this country, that where an agent contracts with his principal for the entire performance of services, and before the completion of his contract he voluntarily and without cause abandons his employment, he can recover nothing for his services, either on the contract or on a quantum meruit.³

Improper Conduct on the Part of Person Other than Principal.—In Patterson v. Gage, 23 Vt. 558, 56 Am. Dec. 96, it was held that a hired girl who has contracted to labor for a specified term at a price agreed upon, and who has left the service of her employer previous to the expiration of the term, may nevertheless recover for the labor actually performed by her if it appears that she left in consequence of rudeness and improper conduct towards her by a member of another family residing in the same house, although it appears that her employer had no control over the other family, and that the two families were as distinct from each other as they could be while occupying the same house.

But in Mullen v. Gilkinson, 19 Vt. 503, it was held that it was not sufficient cause for abandoning a contract for the performance of services, that the agent had a difficulty with another person in the service of the principal, and the principal refused upon his solicitation to discharge such other person; and in an action to recover for services rendered he was not entitled to recover.

The Modern Rule in Some States.—The doctrine has been laid down in New Hampshire,¹ and has been followed in some other states,² that where an agent wrongfully abandons a contract for the performance of services, which is entire in point of time, or otherwise, no recovery can be had upon the contract; but where anything has been done under such agreement, which has been appropriated by the principal, and from which he has received substantial benefit over and above the damages he has sustained from the breach of the contract, the agent may recover upon an implied promise the reasonable worth of the excess, the recovery being limited, however, to the rate agreed upon. In such action, unless otherwise provided by statute, damages cannot be deducted for the breach of the contract to exceed the value of the services, but the principal may forbear to insist on the reduction, and in a separate action recover unlimited damages, such as a jury may allow.³

Waiver by Principal of Forfeiture of Compensation—Receiving Agent Back into Employment.—Where an agent abandons his agency, and the principal, with knowledge of the fact, receives him back into the service without objection and retains him until the end of the period fixed for his agency, the principal thereby waives the right to declare the contract forfeited as to the services actually rendered.⁴

Subsequent Offer to Pay Agent.—Similarly, an offer on the part of the principal to pay the agent, after he has left the service, the amount due to him at the rate

In the Leading Case of Stark v. Parker, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 267, 13 Am. Dec. 425, it was held that where the plaintiff agreed to work for the defendant a year for one hundred and twenty dollars, but before the expiration of the year voluntarily left the defendant's service without any fault on the part of the defendant and against his consent, the contract was entire, and that the plaintiff must perform the whole year's service as a condition precedent to his right to recover anything under the contract, and that he could not renounce the contract and recover on a quantum meruit.

Where the Contract is Severable.—Where, however, an agent enters into a contract for services, severable in its nature, the right to a periodical payment falling due will not be lost by a subsequent abandonment of the contract. Taylor v. Laird, 1 H. & N. 266. See also Capron v. Strout, 11 Nev. 304; Thayer v. Wadsworth, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 349.

In Britton v. Turner, 6 N. H. 485, 26 Am. Dec. 713, Parker, J., in criticising the prevailing rule as laid down in the text, said: "That such rule in its operation may be very unequal, not to say unjust, is apparent. A party who contracts to perform certain specified labor, and who breaks his contract in the first instance, without any attempt to perform it, can only be made liable to pay the damages which the other party has sustained by reason of such nonperformance, which in many instances may be trifling; whereas a party who in good faith has entered upon the performance of his contract and nearly completed it, and then abandoned the further performance although the other party has had the full benefit of all that has been done and has perhaps sustained no actual damage—is in fact subjected to a loss of all which has been performed in the nature of damages for the nonfulfilment of the remainder, upon the technical rule that the contract must be fully performed in order to a recovery of any part of the compensation. By the operation of this rule, then, the party who attempts performance may be placed in a much worse situation than he who wholly disregards his contract, and the other party may receive much more by the breach of the contract than the injury which he has sustained by such breach, and more than he could be entitled to were he seeking to recover damages by an action."

Thus, M. agreed to work for P. for one year from October 1st, 1876, for the sum of $195. He worked five months, and sued for his wages March 2, 1877. It was held that he could recover the actual value of his labor, not exceeding the rate agreed upon, less any damage sustained by P. by reason of the failure of M. to work the entire year. *Parcell v. of compensation fixed by the original contract is a waiver of all claim to forfeiture.¹

dd. WHERE AGENCY IS TERMINATED BY MUTUAL CONSENT.—It is the common-law doctrine that where an agency has been terminated by the mutual consent of the agent and principal, no new contract arises by implication of law enabling the agent to recover compensation pro rata for services already performed, without a stipulation to that effect; but such stipulation may be inferred from the facts of the case.²

(d) Where Agent Acts for Both Parties to Transaction.—Where Parties are Ignorant of the Double Agency.—It is well settled that where an agent has acted for both parties to a transaction, he cannot recover compensation from one of them to whom the double agency was unknown.³ The decisions go even farther, and hold that the agent cannot claim remuneration from either party, unless it is clearly shown that both parties knew and assented to the double employment.⁴

Where, however, the Double Agency is known and assented to by both principals, they will both be liable to the agent for his compensation.⁵

What Evidence of Knowledge is Required.—The principal's knowledge of the agent's

In Vermont, however, it has been held to be well settled that when the contract is dissolved by mutual consent before the period at which compensation becomes due, the party may recover his compensation pro rata without any express contract to that effect. Rogers v. Steele, 24 Vt. 513; Patnote v. Sanders, 41 Vt. 66, 98 Am. Dec. 564; Boyle v. Parker, 46 Vt. 343.

Thus where suit was brought by A as assignee of B on a promissory note executed by a railway company, and the answer was that the note was given for services rendered by B, the payee, as agent of the company, to procure subscriptions of stock, that in the exercise of such agency he had fraudulently and without the knowledge of the company received rewards from persons subscribing lands for stock, for procuring their lands to be taken by the company, it was held that the agency in behalf of the subscribers was inconsistent with the agency for the company; that it was an act of bad faith, and worked a forfeiture of all right to compensation from the company. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Pattison, 15 Ind. 70.

Foundation of the Rule.—Most of the cases cited above are those in which a question of fraud arose; but it seems that actual fraud is not necessary to the application of the rule. In Scribner v. Collar, 40 Mich. 378, 29 Am. Rep. 541, Graves, J., said: "The cases are nearly, if not quite, uniform, that where the double employment exists and is not known, no recovery can be had against the party kept in ignorance; and the result is not made to turn upon the presence or absence of designed duplicity and fraud, but is a consequence of established policy." See also DeSteiger v. Hollington, 17 Mo. App. 389; Rice v. Wood, 113 Mass. 133, 18 Am. Rep. 459; Everhart v. Searle, 71 Pa. St. 256.

Thus, where the same agent was retained by different persons on commission to negotiate sales or exchanges of their property, and he brought about an exchange between two of them, neither knowing that he was acting for the other, it was held contrary to public policy to allow him a right of action against both to recover his commissions, even though he had acted in good faith. *Scribner v. Acting as Agent in the Illegal Sale of Liquor.—The defendants kept a billiard saloon and a bar for the sale of liquor. The liquor traffic was illegal. The plaintiff was employed by the defendants to work generally in and about the saloon. There was no special agreement that he should or should not sell liquor, or as to what particular duty he should do, but he was accustomed to work generally in and about the saloon, taking care of the room, building the fire, taking care of the billiard tables, tending at the bar, and waiting upon customers. In the absence of the defendants he had the whole charge of the business. The plaintiff at the time he entered into the service of the defendants knew what business was carried on there. In assumpsit upon a quantum meruit it was held that the plaintiff could not recover for any portion of his services. Bixby v. Moor, 51 N. H. 402.

Procuring Pardon.—A contract founded upon a promise and engagement to procure signatures and obtain a pardon from the governor for one convicted of a criminal offense and sentenced to punishment is unlawful, and cannot be enforced by an action to recover compensation. *Hatzfield v. Thus, when, by the terms of a contract between principal and agent, it was stipulated that

(b) Where there is No Express Agreement—Reasonable Amount.—In the absence of an express agreement fixing the agent's compensation, he will be entitled to what his services are reasonably and fairly worth.¹

Amount to be Determined by the Jury from All the Facts.—In arriving at what will constitute a fair and reasonable remuneration, the jury must take into consideration all the facts and circumstances of the case.² Thus, due regard must be paid to the agent's skill and experience,³ the nature of the service performed,⁴ and the responsibility incurred.⁵

the agent should receive ten per cent. on the entire amount of sales made by him, and that if the principal should resume control so that the agency would cease, then the agent should be paid "in proportion to the services rendered by him previous to the closing of his connection with their business," it was held to be error to instruct the jury in a suit by the agent, whose agency had been so terminated, that he was entitled to recover whatever the evidence might show that his services actually performed were reasonably worth. McCormick v. Bush, 47 Tex. 191.

Where the Contract is that Remuneration is to be Fixed by the Principal.—Under a special contract of employment by which it was left to the defendant to determine and fix plaintiff's compensation after the services were performed, at such price and amount as, under the circumstances, defendant should consider right and proper, the defendant having determined to fix the amount pursuant to the contract, it was held that in the absence of fraud or bad faith the amount so fixed was the measure of the compensation to which the plaintiff was entitled. Butler v. Winona Mill Co., 28 Minn. 205, 41 Am. Rep. 277. See also Taylor v. Brewer, 1 M. & S. 290.

However, in Millar v. Cuddy, 43 Mich. 274, 38 Am. Rep. 181, it was held that an agreement to pay a servant what the employer thinks he is reasonably worth binds the latter to pay what the services are reasonably worth, and does not leave him to fix his wages at such sum as he sees fit after the services are performed, although such an agreement would be valid if understood. See also Bryant v. Flight, 5 M. & W. 114.

Where the Agreement is to Pay the Agent What He may See Fit to Charge.—In Van Arman v. Byington, 38 Ill. 443, it was held that when a party engages the services of another, as of an attorney at law, to defend a suit, agreeing to pay him therefor whatever he may see fit to charge, the party for whom the services may be rendered is not precluded by the terms of such an agreement from disputing the charge, but the measure of recovery will be whatever the services are reasonably worth.

In Stockbridge v. Crooker, 34 Me. 350, 56 Am. Dec. 662, it was held that in awarding compensation for professional services the jury may properly take into consideration the degree of skill exhibited in the performance of them, but they are not imperatively bound to award a sum commensurate with such skill. In this case, Shepley, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said that the law "permits jurors to take into consideration the exhausting studies, the time consumed, and the expenses incurred to acquire great professional knowledge and distinction, or great mechanical or other skill."

Custom as Evidence to Fix the Amount.—For the purpose of aiding in the determination of the value of the agent's services, it is proper to receive evidence or the usual price charged and received for similar services by others engaged in the same line of work in the same vicinity.¹

Expert Testimony as to Value of Services.—It is competent for a witness to testify as to the value of an agent's services where he is acquainted with the value of services similar to those rendered.²

(c) Where Agent Serves beyond Stipulated Time.—If an agent, employed at an agreed price for a certain time, continues in the same employment after the expiration of the term without any new agreement, the presumption of law is that he continues at the original rate of compensation, and there can be no recovery upon a quantum meruit.³

(d) Where Additional Duties are Imposed upon Agent Employed at Fixed Salary.—Where the principal, having his agent in his employment at a fixed rate, imposes upon him additional duties and enlarges his powers, the agent cannot, apart from an agreement to that effect,⁴ or some legal custom,⁵ recover any extra wages for the additional services.

Thus, where an agent is employed to solicit pardon for a fugitive from justice to enable him to return to the state, so that the principal may use him as a witness in a claim for which suit has been brought, the amount of the claim is proper for the consideration of the jury in estimating the compensation for such agency. Kentucky Bank v. Combs, 7 Pa. St. 543. Gibson, C.J., in delivering the opinion of the court in this case, said: "It is not to be doubted that responsibility in a confidential employment is a legitimate subject of compensation, and in proportion to the magnitude of the interests committed to the agent."

In Elting v. Sturtevant, 41 Conn. 180, the testimony of a real-estate broker as to what his charges would have been for certain services was admitted in evidence as tending to show the price ordinarily charged for such services by persons engaged in that business. But it has been stated as a general doctrine, that statements of what the witness himself would have charged for a similar service furnish no criterion for determining the reasonable value of an agent's services, and should not be admitted in evidence. Fairchild v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 8 Ill. App. 591.

Knowledge of Witness as to What Others Charged for Like Services Unnecessary.—It has been held that where the witnesses testified as experts as to the value of the services of a physician, but stated that they had no knowledge as to what other physicians charged for such work, but based their opinion on what they thought the services were worth, such evidence is competent to go to the jury. Marion County v. Chambers, 75 Ind. 409.

A told B that he would take charge of a certain business for eight hundred dollars a year, but if he should continue in the business more than one year he should expect one thousand dollars after the first year. To this B replied that he would give eight hundred dollars for the first year, but would make no pledges for any other year. b. REIMBURSEMENT—(1) For Advances and Expenditures.—An agent is entitled to reimbursements from his principal for all advances and expenditures made and incurred in carrying into effect the purposes of his employment, not in violation of the policy of the law.¹

Needless or Unauthorized Expenditures.—Where, however, an agent makes expenditures in the principal's business which might have been avoided by ordinary diligence,² or which are unauthorized, he is without remedy against his principal.³

(2) For Loss and Damage Sustained—General Rule.—It is a well-settled doctrine that the principal is bound to indemnify the agent against the consequences of all acts done by him in the execution of his agency or in pursuance of the authority conferred upon him, when the actions or transactions are not illegal.⁴

Effect of Statute Limiting the Number of Hours Constituting a Day's Work.—It seems to be the general doctrine in this country, that where there is a statute limiting the number of hours in a day's work, it does not have the effect of giving an agent the right to recover additional compensation for work performed beyond the statutory time. U. S. v. Martin, 94 U. S. 400; Luske v. Hotchkiss, 37 Conn. 219, 9 Am. Rep. 314; Brooks v. Cotton, 48 N. H. 50, 2 Am. Rep. 172; McCarthy v. New York, 96 N. Y. 1, 48 Am. Rep. 601.

Branch*, 57 Ga. 362; Warren v. Hewitt, 45 Ga. 501; Rosenstock v. Tormey, 32 Md. 169, 3 Am. Rep. 125; Powell v. Newburgh, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 284; Howe v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., 37 N. Y. 297; Bacon v. Fourth Nat. Bank (City Ct.), 9 N. Y. Supp. 435; Mohawk, etc., R. Co. v. Costigan, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 306.

Where Contract Provides that Agent is to be Liable for Expenditures.—Where a contract of agency is entered into expressly providing that the agent shall pay freight charges on goods shipped to him by his principal, the agent is not entitled to reimbursement for paying such freight charges, and evidence of a custom to a different effect is not admissible. Champion Mach. Co. v. Ervay (Tex. App., 1890), 16 S. W. Rep. 172.

What will Amount to Sufficient Evidence of Disbursements.—The supervisor of the building of a house is to be reimbursed by his principal for expenditures for labor and material, and in an action therefor proper vouchers are sufficient prima facie evidence of payment; it is not essential that the supervisor furnish common-law evidence of the actual delivery of the material or the actual number of days workmen were employed. Blazo v. Gill, 143 N. Y. 232.

2. Brown v. Clayton, 12 Ga. 574; Jackson v. Morse, 3 La. 555.

3. England.—Howard v. Tucker, 1 B. & Ad. 712, 20 E. C. L. 478; Edmiston v. Wright, 1 Campb. 88; Beaumont v. Boulbee, 11 Ves. Jr. 358; Stokes v. Lewis, 1 T. R. 20.

New York.—Powell v. Newburgh, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 284; Burby v. Roome, 7 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 167; Howe v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., 37 N. Y. 297.

"Where an agent, in pursuing the instructions of his principal, and acting within the scope of his authority, becomes personally liable for the performance of the contract he makes for his principal, and without which personal liability the orders of the principal cannot be executed at all, or not so well executed, and this is known by the principal at the time of giving his instructions and creating the agency, if a loss occur to the agent it is most clear that he can look to the principal for indemnity for the damage sustained by him." Hubbard, J., in Greene v. Goddard, 9 Met. (Mass.) 212.

Loss must be Incurred in Execution of Agency.—The implied promise of the principal to indemnify his agent extends to such losses and damages as are directly caused by the proper execution of his authority as agent.¹ But, as in the case of expenditures, if the loss arises from the negligence or misconduct of the agent,² or is incurred in an unauthorized transaction, the agent is not entitled to indemnity.³

Where the Act Performed is Illegal.—Where it appears that the act of the agent was illegal on its face, or that the agent knew it was unlawful at the time of performing it, he will not be entitled to indemnity.⁴ If, however, in obeying instructions or orders of the principal, he does acts which are not manifestly contrary to law and which he does not know at the time to be illegal, the principal is bound to indemnify him for loss or damage sustained thereby.⁵

Pl.) 167; Saveland v. Green, 36 Wis. 612.

Where A, the agent of B, recovered certain of B's goods in Cape François, by the decree of a competent court there (the same having been attached by C for the debt of D and Co., in whose hands they were, and claimed in court by A), and then sold them and remitted the proceeds to B; and was afterwards, in a suit instituted by C, and connected with the first proceeding, compelled by the threats of the president, Christophe, to confess, contrary to the truth, that at the time of receiving the goods he promised to pay C a sum of money on account of D and Co., and to let judgment go against him, it was held that A might recover from B, his principal, the amount thus paid, it not exceeding the estimated value of B's goods. D'Arcy v. Lyle, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 441.

Loss a Good Consideration for Note Given Therefor.—A loss incurred by an agent, in consequence of his acting as such, and for the benefit of his principal, will constitute a consideration to support an express promise of reimbursement. The promise of the principal to indemnify is not an agreement "to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person," within the meaning of the statute of frauds. Stocking v. Sage, 1 Conn. 519.

When Right of Action Accrues.—No right of action at law accrues to an agent before the thing to be indemnified against has happened. Otter Creek Lumber Co. v. McElwee, 37 Ill. App. 285; Saveland v. Green, 36 Wis. 612; Mears v. Adreon, 31 Md. 229. Compare Flower v. Jones, 7 Martin N. S. (La.) 140.

Payment of Damages by Agent, without Waiting for Suit to be Brought, Sufficient.—If A. in his own name, but at the request of B. and for him, contracts with M. to charter to the latter a vessel (the property of B.) for a certain use, he is liable to M. for damages resulting to the latter from a breach of the contract by reason of B.'s failure to put the vessel at M.'s disposal as agreed; and without waiting to be sued for such damages he may pay them to M. and thereupon maintain an action against B. to recover the same. Saveland v. Green, 36 Wis. 612.

In Equity, however, an agent will be indemnified against liability as well as loss. Bristow v. Whitmore, 9 H. L. Cas. 391; Lacey v. Hill, L. R. 18 Eq. 182; Mohawk, etc., R. Co. v. Costigan, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 306.

2. Nelson v. Cook, 17 Ill. 443; Haskin v. Haskin, 41 Ill. 197; Baily v. Burgess, 48 N. J. Eq. 411.

Illustration — Loss through Misconduct.—Thus, where an agent was subjected to loss and imprisonment in an action against him which arose from his own negligence and misconduct, it was held that he could not recover from his principal, and that an express promise of indemnity would have been void. Leavitt v. Parks, 2 Allen (New Bruns.) 282.

Mistake of Law.—Where an auctioneer incurred a loss owing to a mistake of law on his part, it was held that he could not recover from his principal. Capp v. Topham, 6 East 392.

Where Loss was Occasioned by Innocent Mistake of Fact in the sale of bonds which the agent had to replace, it was held that he was entitled to indemnity from the principal. Maitland v. Martin, 86 Pa. St. 120.

3. Bensley v. Moon, 7 Ill. App. 415.

Thus, an agent cannot recover from his principal the amount paid on a judgment against the former, obtained for a false warranty of a horse, without showing that the warranty was authorized or ratified by his principal and made in good faith. Croom v. Swann, 1 Fla. 246.

c. AGENT'S RIGHT TO LIEN.—The agent, in general, has a particular right of lien¹ for all his expenditures, losses sustained, and services in and about the property or thing intrusted to his agency, whenever they were proper, or necessary, or incident thereto.²

d. AGENT'S RIGHT OF STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.—Instances of the exercise of this right have arisen almost entirely, if not altogether, in the case of factors and brokers, and a full discussion of this question will be found elsewhere in this work.³

IX. RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES AS TO THIRD PARTIES—1. Of Agent to Third Parties—a. ON CONTRACT—(1) When Acting with Authority—(a) Principal Disclosed—aa. IN GENERAL.—In general, when a person acts and contracts avowedly as the agent of another, who is known as the principal, his acts and contracts, within the scope of his authority, are considered the acts and contracts of the principal, and involve no personal liability on the part of the agent.⁴

If an agent, acting under the direction of his principal, cuts timber by mistake partly upon the wrong township, and his principal receives the timber and disposes of it, he can recover of his principal what he has been obliged to pay for damages in a suit for trespass. *Drummond v. Thus where a principal consigns goods to an agent to sell under an agreement that the latter will accept bills drawn upon him by the former to the amount of goods so consigned on hand, it is a necessary inference that the drafts are to be drawn on the credit of the goods, and to the amount of acceptances outstanding the agent has a lien on the goods in his hands as security, and is entitled to retain the same until the acceptances are paid. Nagle v. McFeeters, 97 N. Y. 196.

Priority of Agent's Lien.—In Dewing v. Hutton (W. Va., 1895), 21 S. E. Rep. 780, it was held that an agent with unrestricted management of a mercantile, farming, and general trading business carried on in his name, with the right to buy, sell, and exchange, has a lien on all the property accumulated in such business and in his possession, for all advancements made, expenses and liabilities incurred, proper, necessary, or incident to such business, which is superior in right to any other lien that may be created on such property by the reputed owner thereof.

The Death of the Principal does not deprive the agent of his lien. Newhall v. Dunlap, 14 Me. 180, 31 Am. Dec. 45.

66. WHEN AGENT PLEDGES HIS OWN CREDIT.—The presumption is that an agent always intends to bind his principal, and not himself.¹ He may, however, when acting for his principal, openly pledge his own credit, and therefore obligate himself to the performance of a contract which otherwise would devolve on his principal.² He may incur this liability, although he describes himself in a

In Stanton v. Camp, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 278, the court by Allen, J., said, quoting 1 Am. Leading Cases, 454, note: "When the relation of principal and agent exists in regard to a contract, and is known to the other party to exist, and the principal is disclosed at the time as such, the contract is the contract of the principal, and the agent is not bound unless credit had been given to him expressly and exclusively and it was clearly his intention to assume a personal responsibility." To same effect see Meeker v. Claghorn, 44 N. Y. 349. See also Foster v. Persch, 68 N. Y. 400, reversing 6 Daly (N. Y.) 164.

Agent when Liable—Principal Disclosed.—"To hold an agent personally liable in cases in which he discloses his principal, and that the services to be rendered are for the sole benefit of his principal, and the contract is within the scope of his authority, it must be shown that credit was given exclusively to the agent, and that the agent was informed of that fact." Per Coleman, J., in Humes v. Decatur Land Imp., etc., Co., 98 Ala. 461. To same effect Taintor v. Prendergast, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 72, 38 Am. Dec. 618.

Master of a Vessel.—A ship's master is always bound by his contract, and he can only exempt himself from personal liability, by expressly confining the credit to the owner or stipulating against his own personal responsibility. 3 Kent Com. 161; Sydnor v. Hurd, 8 Tex. 102. See the title MASTERS OF VESSELS.

Y. 72; Genesee Bank v. Patchin Bank, 19 N. Y. 312.

In Hall v. Lauderdale, 46 N. Y. 72, the court by Andrews, J., said: "In construing oral agreements made by an agent courts give effect to the real intention of the parties, unembarrassed by technical rules of construction; and when the act is within the authority, the presumption is that the agent intends to bind the principal and not himself."

Whether Credit Given to Agent—Question of Fact.—Where goods are sold to an agent who, at the time, discloses the name of his principal, and states that the goods may be charged to him or to his principal, and the vendor, not knowing the principal, charges the goods to the agent, it is a question of fact whether or not such exclusive credit is given to the agent as to discharge the principal. Maryland Coal Co. v. Edwards, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 432.

When Consideration Moves to Principal.—An agent who binds himself personally to pay will be liable, although the consideration may move to his principal. Crum v. Boyd, 9 Ind. 289; Shordan v. Kyler, 87 Ind. 44; Ahrens v. Cobb, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 643.

Warranty of Paper by Agent.—An express warranty that a note is genuine, made by the agent of the seller, will bind the agent personally if it appears that such was the intention. Wilder v. Cowles, 100 Mass. 487.

Warranty by Agent.—Where an agent by express contract warrants property sold for a known principal, he will be personally bound to the purchaser, as he adds a personal responsibility to that which he assumes for his principal. Hull v. Brown, 35 Wis. 654. See the title WARRANTY.

Agent Indorsing for Principal, but without qualifying the signature, will be held personally liable. Hastings v. Lovering, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 214, 13 Am. Dec. 420; Leadbitter v. Farrow, 5 M. & S. 345; Thomas v. Bishop, 2 Stra. 955.

And this liability exists, although it is contract as agent, if, instead of attempting to bind his principal, he imposes terms obligatory on himself.¹

cc. WHEN AGENT UNINTENTIONALLY BINDS HIMSELF.—Whether an agent when acting for his principal binds himself or not, is largely a question of intention;² he may, however, when acting for his principal, unintentionally bind himself.³

Parol Evidence Admissible to Show Intention.—Parol evidence, when not contradictory of a written contract, will always be admissible to show the intention of the parties.⁴

Sealed Instruments.—Where an instrument is under seal, and the agent is a direct party thereto, and the principal is not, so that the latter cannot, ex directo, be sued thereon, the agent, although describing himself as such, is liable upon the covenants and agreements therein contained as his own personal contract.⁵

dd. WHEN ACTING FOR FOREIGN PRINCIPAL.—It was formerly the rule that agents acting for principals resident in a foreign country were held personally liable upon all contracts made by them for their principals, and this without any distinction whether they describe themselves in the contract or not.⁶ The more known to the party taking the indorsed paper that he was merely an agent. Hastings v. Lovering, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 214, 13 Am. Dec. 420.

4. If the contract be not under seal and the meaning clear, it matters not how it is phrased nor how it is signed, whether by the agent for the principal, or with the name of the principal by the agent, or otherwise. The intent developed is alone material, and when that is ascertained, it is conclusive. Where the principal is disclosed, and the agent is known to be acting as such, the latter cannot be personally liable unless he agreed to be so. Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392; Green v. Kopke, 18 C. B. 549, 86 E. C. L. 549. See also Hanover v. Eaton, 3 N. H. 38.

"Where the contract is so drawn that it is doubtful on its face whether the parties really intended that the agent or his principal should be personally bound, parol evidence is now let in to show what their intention really was." Per Thompson, J., in Ziegler v. Fallon, 28 Mo. App. 299.

In Ferris v. Thaw, 72 Mo. 450, the court, by Sherwood, C. J., says: "Parol evidence is admissible to establish such intention, as this evidence does not contradict that which is written, but only serves to show that others than those mentioned on the face of the paper are bound also, since the act of the agent is that of his principal; the liability of the latter depending on the act done, and not merely on the form in which such act finds expression."

"But if the agent contracts in such a form as to make himself personally responsible, he cannot afterwards, whether his principal were or were not known at the time of the contract, relieve himself from that responsibility." Per Lord Denman, C. J., in Jones v. Littledale, 6 Ad. & El. 486, 33 E. C. L. 122. To same effect see Chandler v. Coe, 56 N. H. 184, 22 Am. Rep. 437.

Negotiable Paper.—There is a clear exception, however, to the rule, in the case of negotiable paper signed by an agent. Anderton v. Shoup, 17 Ohio St. 125.

See supra, this title, Manner of Execution of Authority—Admissibility of Parol Evidence.

But this is not the present rule in England. See authorities in note immediately following.

Indiana.—Vawter v. Baker, 23 Ind. 63, permitting the presumption that the agent is, modern rule is that it makes no difference whether the principal is a foreigner or not: if by the language of the contract the agent, and not the principal, is bound, such must be its construction; and, on the other hand, if it clearly binds the principal and is in form a contract with him only, the agent must be exonerated.¹

cc. WHEN PRINCIPAL IS IRRESPONSIBLE.—Where an agent contracts for and on behalf of an irresponsible principal, that is, a principal who possesses none of the elements or attributes of a legal entity, and cannot therefore be impleaded in law, he will be personally liable on the contract.²

Nonexisting Principal.—The same rule applies where the contract is signed by one who professes to be signing as agent, but who has no principal existing at the time, and the contract would be wholly inoperative unless binding upon the former.³

(b) Agency Undisclosed.—A person acting as agent for another will be personally responsible if at the time of making the contract in his principal's behalf he fails to disclose the fact of his agency.⁴ By reason of such failure he be liable to be rebutted by proof that the principal only is liable.

Louisiana.—New Castle Mfg. Co. v. Red River R. Co., 1 Rob. (La.) 145, 36 Am. Dec. 636. This case, however, limits the rule, and allows proof that credit was given to the agent only; and Maury v. Ranger, 38 La. Ann. 489, 58 Am. Rep. 197, holding that the rule in the text is now obsolete.

Maine.—McKenzie v. Nevius, 22 Me. 138, 38 Am. Dec. 291; Rogers v. March, 33 Me. 106.

New York.—Hochster v. Baruch, 5 Daly (N. Y.) 440. To the contrary, see Taintor v. Prendergast, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 72, 38 Am. Dec. 618; Kirkpatrick v. Stainer, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 244.

Pennsylvania.—Merrick's Estate, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 9.

Extent of Rule.—The rule does not extend to a contract made in this country for personal services to be performed in a foreign country by one resident here. Rogers v. March, 33 Me. 106. Neither does it apply as between the different states of the Union. Vawter v. Baker, 23 Ind. 63; Taintor v. Prendergast, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 72, 38 Am. Dec. 618; Kirkpatrick v. Stainer, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 244; Rogers v. March, 33 Me. 106.

Contra.—Hochster v. Baruch, 5 Daly (N. Y.) 440.

Stronger Presumption of Agent's Liability in Case of Foreign Principal.—There seems to be a stronger presumption that the agent contracts personally when acting for a foreign than for a resident principal. Maury v. Ranger, 38 La. Ann. 489, 58 Am. Rep. 197.

Illustrations of an Irresponsible Principal.—A married woman, who is incapable of being sued. Hoppe v. Saylor, 53 Mo. App. 4.

A political meeting. Eichbaum v. Irons, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 67, 40 Am. Dec. 540.

Reason for the Rule.—Where there is no responsible principal to whom resort may be had, the law presumes that the agent contracts upon his personal responsibility, and intends to bind himself, and so holds him, for in no other way could the contract have any validity. Booth v. Wonderly, 36 N. J. L. 250; Timken v. Tallmadge, 54 N. J. L. 117.

Inaccessible Principal.—In Bridges v. Bidwell, 20 Neb. 185, there is a dictum to the effect that if an agent so conducts his business as to render his principal inaccessible, he will be liable to the same extent as if he conceals his character as agent.

As to the liability of the agent when third party elects to hold principal when disclosed, see infra, this article, Rights, Duties, and Liabilities as to Third Parties—Of Principal to Third Parties.

When Agent Liable for Breach of Warranty.—

Where an agent deals as principal and does not disclose his agency, he is personally liable for a breach of warranty. Blakeman v. Mackay, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 266; Waring v. Mason, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 425; Argersinger v. Macnaughton, 114 N. Y. 539, 11 Am. St. Rep. 687.

44 La. Ann. 209. See also Brown v. Ames, (Minn., 1894), 61 N. W. Rep. 448.

Transfer of Forged Paper by Agent.—If an agent transferring negotiable paper fails to disclose his principal, and the paper proves to be forged, the agent will be personally liable for the consideration received. Holt v. Ross, 54 N. Y. 472, 13 Am. Rep. 615, affirming 59 Barb. (N. Y.) 554.

Agent Not Relieved because He Generally Acts as Such.—As an agent who contracts in his own name, without disclosing that he is acting for a principal, incurs a personal liability, which is primary in its character, he will not be relieved from the liability because he generally acts as agent for disclosed principals in other transactions. Brent v. Miller, 81 Ala. 317; Wood v. Brewer, 73 Ala. 259.

But see Falk v. Wolfsohn, 7 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 314, where it is held that where a person in his dealings with another as to similar matters has always dealt as an agent of others it is necessary, in order to charge him with liability for the transaction in question, to show acts or statements by him from which an inference could be drawn that he was dealing otherwise than as formerly, or that he interposed his personal liability.

Agent's Duty to Disclose Agency.—"The duty is upon the agent, if he would avoid personal liability, to disclose his agency, not upon others to discover it, and if he fails so to do, and deals with persons unaware of his

Agency Disclosed, but Principal Undisclosed.—The broad rule has been laid down, that one who acts as the agent of an undisclosed principal may be treated as principal by the party with whom he deals; ¹ this, however, has been limited in some instances, and held to apply only in cases where evidence of a trade custom is admissible to show that the agent should be bound, on proof of which the agent is held personally liable. ²

(2) When Acting with No Authority—(a) In General.—The cases in which an agent acting without authority has been held personally liable are generally classified as follows: First, where the agent makes a false representation of his authority, with intent to deceive; second, where with knowledge of his want of authority, but without intending any fraud, he assumes to act as though he were fully authorized; and, third, where he undertakes to act, bona fide, believing he has authority, but in fact having none. It may be said generally, as to cases fairly brought within either of the first two classes, there can be no doubt as to the personal liability of the self-constituted agent; while the liability of the agent in cases belonging to the third class has sometimes been doubted, the weight of authority is that they also are liable. ³ agency, he must answer personally for the debts he contracts." Per Steele, J., in Baldwin v. Leonard, 39 Vt. 260, 94 Am. Dec. 324.

To the same effect see Murphy v. Helmrich, 66 Cal. 69; Hall v. Bradbury, 40 Conn. 32; Tippets v. Walker, 4 Mass. 595; Hamlin v. Abell, 120 Mo. 188; Heath v. Goslin, 80 Mo. 310, 50 Am. Rep. 505; Lapsley v. McKinstry, 38 Mo. 245; Randall v. Van Vechten, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 63, 10 Am. Dec. 193; Stone v. Wood, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 454, 17 Am. Dec. 529; Brockway v. Allen, 17 Wend. (N. Co. v. Gaskell*, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 742.

Corporation as Agent.—A corporation acting as agent for an undisclosed principal is liable as a principal, and is entitled, when this liability is sought to be enforced, to all the rights it would possess as the real principal, and may avail itself of the plea of ultra vires. Jemison v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 122 N. Y. 135, 19 Am. St. Rep. 482. See the title ULTRA VIRES.

In Winsor v. Griggs, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 210, "G." signed as "agent," his principal at the time being undisclosed; the court, applying the rule in the text, held "G." liable.

In Ex p. Hartop, 12 Ves. Jr. 349, Lord Erskine, C.J., says: "No rule of law is better ascertained or stands upon a stronger foundation than this, that where an agent names his principal the principal is responsible, not the agent; but for the application of that rule the agent must name his principal as the person to be responsible." In Kelner v. Baxter, L. R. 2 C. P. 180, Byles, J., adds to this that "the mere fact of a person professing to sign a contract for or on behalf or as agent for another will not per se prevent responsibility as a contracting party attaching upon the former."

See supra, this title, Manner of Execution of Authority.

Applicable to Factors and Brokers.—Mr. Wharton is of the opinion that this rule is specially applicable to auctioneers, factors, and brokers, and its probable application to other classes of agents would be limited to a usage of trade or where the agent acts without authority. Wharton on Agency, § 502. See the authorities in the note immediately following.

Test of Liability.—Whether a party shall be considered as acting in his own right or as the agent of another, depends not upon the fact that he contracted in his own name without disclosing his agency, but upon the facts and circumstances of the case. Collins v. Butts, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 400, affirmed 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 139.

While it is not infrequently laid down as a rule of law, that if an agent does not bind his principal he binds himself, this needs qualification, and cannot be said to be universally true or correct. If the form of the contract is such that the agent personally covenants, and then adds his representative character, which he does not in truth sustain, his covenant remains personal and in force, and binds him as an individual; but if the form of the contract is otherwise, and the language when fairly interpreted does not contain a personal undertaking or promise, he is not personally liable, for it is not his contract, and the law will not force it upon him. He may, however, be liable for tortious conduct if he knowingly or carelessly assumes to bind another without authority. Ogden v. Raymond, 22 Conn. 379, 58 Am. Dec. 429.

(b) When He Has Knowledge of His Want of Authority.—One who with knowledge of his want of authority, without intending any wrong¹ or by making false representations as to his authority,² executes a contract as the agent of another, is personally liable to the person with whom he is dealing.

Rights of Third Party.—The third party on learning the facts has a right to repudiate the contract and hold the assumed agent immediately responsible for damages.³

(c) When He Bona Fide Believes He Has Authority—aa. WHEN IN FACT HE HAS NONE.—When a person makes a contract as agent for another, bona fide believing that he has authority to so act, and thereby causes an injury to a third person who has honestly relied on the correctness of his position as agent, the latter will be personally liable for such injury.⁴

Principal Not Jointly Liable with Agent.—If the agent exceeds his authority, and makes himself liable, his principal is not jointly liable with him. Walker v. Haughey, 25 Ill. App. 135. See also Layng v. Stewart, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 222.

Contract must be Valid to Hold Agent.—An agent who falsely represents his authority to make a contract on behalf of another is not liable in contract or in tort unless the principal would have been bound by the contract made, had the agent had such authority. So where the contract is void under the statute of frauds the agent will not be liable. Dung v. Parker, 52 N. Y. 496, reversing 3 Daly (N. Y.) 89; Baltzen v. Nicolay, 53 N. bb. ACTING IN EXCESS OF AUTHORITY ACTUALLY POSSESSED.—Where a person undertakes to enter into a contract as agent for his principal, exceeding the authority delegated to him, and his principal refuses to be bound, the former will be personally liable to the person with whom he contracts.¹

Ground of Liability.—The position of an agent in these cases differs from that of one who acts with knowledge of his want of authority, only in the degree of moral wrong and not in the degree of injury;² the principle upon which his liability rests is that he has been guilty of a wrong or omission depriving the party dealing with him of the benefit of the liability of the principal for whom he assumed to contract.³

Vermont.—Roberts v. Button, 14 Vt. 195.

In Feeter v. Heath, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 478, a subagent made a contract, and in so doing exceeded his authority. The court by Walworth, Ch., said: "If an agent in making a contract exceeds his authority, the person with whom he contracts may hold him personally responsible for the whole amount due on the contract, although the agent may have the right to claim of his principal remuneration to the extent of the price he was authorized to give. Thus, if I employ an agent to buy for me a horse at a price not exceeding one hundred dollars, and he buys one for which he agrees to give one hundred and ten dollars, he makes himself personally liable to the vendor for the whole purchase money; but as between me and my agent he may insist that I shall take the horse and allow him the amount I had authorized him to give."

Ratification by Principal.—Where the principal, instead of repudiating the agreement made by the agent, ratifies it upon terms agreed to by the other party, such ratification is equivalent to antecedent authority in the agent, and removes all question of his individual liability from the case. Hopkins v. Everly, 150 Pa. St. 117.

Agent Bidding at Public Auction.—Where an agent, employed to bid at a public sale at a limited price, exceeds his authority, he is considered as making the purchase on his own account, and may be sued as a purchaser. Hampton v. Speckenagle, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 212, 11 Am. Dec. 704.

Contracting in Unauthorized Manner.—Where a person undertakes to contract as agent for an individual, and contracts in a manner which is not legally binding upon his principal, he is personally responsible. Mann v. Richardson, 66 Ill. 481. See supra, this title, Manner of Execution of Authority.

In Weare v. Gove, 44 N. H. 196, the court by Bellows, J., said: "Although no fraud or wrongful motive can be imputed to the agent, still his act is an affirmation that he has authority to make the contract, and he may justly be held responsible for the truth of it; and it is no more than reasonable that he should suffer the consequences of his mistake rather than the party who is misled by it, because, before holding himself out as such agent, it is his duty to ascertain whether his claim so to act is well founded or not; and he surely cannot be heard to complain that others have confided in his assertion of authority, and upon the strength of it have entered into reciprocal engagements with him. Even if wholly innocent of any wrongful purpose, his case falls within the familiar principle that when one of two innocent persons must suffer a loss it ought to be borne by him who has been the means of causing it, by inducing the other to confide in the truth of his representations." To the same effect see Farmers' Co-operative Trust Co. v. Floyd, 47 Ohio St. 525, 33 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 218.

(d) Third Party must be Ignorant of Want of Authority.—To give a party a right of action against a professed agent, he must have been ignorant of the want of authority on the part of the latter and have acted upon the faith of the representations, express or implied, that the professed agent had the authority assumed. Hence, if the party complaining is fully cognizant of all the facts touching the agent's authority, the latter will not be liable.¹

Parties Mutually Mistaken.—Where all the facts are known to both parties and the mistake is one of law as to the liability of the principal, the fact that the principal cannot be bound is no ground for charging the agent.²

(e) Nature of Liability—Form of Action.—As a person entering into a contract as agent for another warrants his authority, unless special circumstances or express agreement relieve him from that responsibility,³ it may be stated generally that the remedy against one who assumes to act as the agent of another, and in that capacity undertakes to make a contract binding upon his principal, is in the nature of an action for deceit, or upon the breach of the implied warranty of his authority, according to the facts of the case.⁴

Liability on the Contract.—There is a class of cases, based upon the principle that it is the contract of some one, and if not of the principal it must of necessity be that of the agent,⁵ in which it has been held that the agent may

In Hall v. Lauderdale, 46 N. Y. 72, the court by Andrews, J., said: "If he [the agent] acts within his instructions, and in good faith, especially when the facts are equally known to both parties, he is not personally responsible, although it may happen that the authority itself is void." Citing Smout v. Ilbery, 10 M. & W. 1; Jefts v. York, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 392; Walker v. State Bank, 9 N. Y. 582.

Death of Principal Unknown.—When the death of the principal is unknown to both the agent and the contracting party at the time the contract is made, so that there is no binding contract on the principal or his representatives, the agent is not personally responsible. Smout v. Ilbery, 10 M. & W. 1; Carriker v. Whittington, 26 Mo. 312, 72 Am. Dec. 212; Jenkins v. Atkins, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 294, 34 Am. Dec. 648. The principle on which this doctrine is founded seems to be that although the authority of the agent has expired, yet the agent is not in fault, nor in the commission of any fraud; but the revocation occurs by the act of God; and although the estate of the principal may not be liable, the agent, acting in good faith, is not liable. *Ginochio v. 5. St. Peter's Episcopal Church v. Varian, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 650. But, as held in this case, in order to fix and enforce this personal liability, it must appear that the party sought to be charged signed as agent—that is, probe liable upon the contract itself, and compelled personally to answer or perform it as if it were his own.¹ But by the weight of authority the agent is not liable upon the contract unless it contains apt words to bind him personally,² for the reason that it is not the contract of the principal, as the assumed fessed to act for another—and that such act was without authority.

New York.—Dusenbury v. Ellis, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 70, 2 Am. Dec. 144; Rossiter v. Rossiter, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 494, 24 Am. Dec. 62; Palmer v. Stephens, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 480; *Randall v. With the exception of the last two cases, the contract was in writing and signed by the party sought to be charged as agent for another.

In Hegeman v. Johnson, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 200, these cases are considered as somewhat anomalous, and difficult to reconcile with the theory of contracts. And in Walker v. State Bank, 9 N. Y. 582, affirming 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 636, it was held that the rule was necessarily limited to written contracts where the agent has subscribed his own name as well as his principal's, and the liability of the agent was established by striking out the signature, which was made without authority. In White v. Madison, 26 N. Y. 117, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 481, the court, by Selden, J., says: "If it were necessary * * * to decide the question whether, as a general principle, one entering into a contract in the name of another, without authority, is to be himself holden as a party to the contract, I should hesitate to affirm such a principle;" and adds that "if the act of the agent were fraudulent an action for the deceit would lie, but it would be a concurrent remedy with an action on the warranty." To the same effect see Aspinwall v. Torrance, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 381, affirmed 57 N. Y. 331; Dung v. Parker, 52 N. Y. 494, reversing 3 Daly (N. Y.) 89, and Noe v. Gregory, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 283. In the latter case it is held that if there is fraud the action should be for deceit; if not, on the breach of warranty of authority.

In the case of Hegeman v. Johnson, 35

Barb. (N. Y.) 200, the authorities are reviewed, and a distinction adopted between cases that were founded on an executed contract and those that were merely executory, in which latter cases the agent could not be made liable on the contract personally.

In Hall v. Crandall, 29 Cal. 568, 89 Am. Dec. 64, the court, by Sanderson, J., said: "Those cases which hold that the agent may be sued upon the contract itself treat all matter which the contract contains in relation to the principal as surplusage, which is in effect to make a new contract for the parties concerned instead of construing the one which they themselves have made." It is further held that the weight of authority is as indicated in the text.

2. As stated in Randell v. Trimen, 18 C. B. 793, 86 E. C. L. 793, agents "cannot be sued upon the contracts which they have entered into without authority on behalf of their assumed principals unless they can be shown to be themselves principals."

b. FOR MONEY PAID TO AGENT—(1) In General.—Where money has been paid to an agent for his principal, under such circumstances that it may Illustrations.—In Ballou v. Talbot, 16 Mass. 461, 8 Am. Dec. 146, A subscribed a promissory note, and added to his signature "agent for B." He acted without authority from B, and it was held that A was liable only in a special action on the case.

But in Coffman v. Harrison, 24 Mo. 524, where a bill was signed "A, agent for B," A, acting without authority, was held to be bound by the contract. Likewise in Sage v. Sherman, Hill & D. Supp. (N. Y.) 147, an agent signing "attorney for A B" was held liable on the note.

In DeWitt v. Walton, 9 N. Y. 571, a note in the language "I promise to pay" was signed by the agent with the words "agent for the Churchman," and the agent was held as maker of the note, but, as intimated in Chase v. Pattberg, 12 Daly (N. Y.) 171, the words "I promise to pay" controlled the decision. See supra, this title, Manner of Execution of Authority.

Rejecting Part of Contract Not Binding Agent.

—If a contract is entered into by one who assumes to act as the agent of another, but who has not the requisite authority, the contract may be stripped of what the agent had no right to put there, and if it still contains "apt words" to charge him, he is bound to the performance of the contract. Byars v. Doores, 20 Mo. 284; Woodes v. Dennett, 9 N. H. 55; Pettingill v. McGregor, 12 N. H. 191; Weare v. Gove, 44 N. H. 196; Moor v. Wilson, 26 N. H. 332; Savage v. Rix, 9 N. H. 263.

Liability of Attorney in Fact.—Where one as agent and attorney in fact for another executes a note binding his principal, the agent is not liable on the note, even if he had no authority from the principal to make the note; his liability, if any, is in tort for the wrong done, or, waiving the tort, for money loaned. Lander v. Castro, 43 Cal. 497.

When Question for Court—When Question for Jury.—When the contract is written, the question is for the court; when it is not written, the question is for the jury. Collen v. Wright, 7 El. & Bl. 313, 90 E. C. L. 313.

When Agent Receives Consideration.—When an assumed agent receives the consideration on a contract, an implied promise to pay arises on which an action may be maintained. Russell v. Koonce, 104 N. Car. 237.

Burden of Proof.—Where an agent is sued upon a contract which he has made without authority, he can exonerate himself from personal liability only by showing his authority to bind those for whom he has undertaken to act. It is not the plaintiff's duty to show that the assumed agent had no authority, but the duty of the latter to affirmatively show that he had authority. Gillaspie v. Wesson, 7 Port. (Ala.) 454, 31 Am. Dec. 715; Frankland v. Johnson, 147 Ill. 520; Mott v. Hicks, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 513, 13 Am. Dec. 550.

In Clark v. Foster, 8 Vt. 98, it is held that the plaintiff need show no more than an assumption to act without authority, "and that the onus probandi lies on the defendant to rebut the presumption of fraud."

But see Noe v. Gregory, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 283, where it is held that after it appears that the defendant assumed to act as agent for a third person the burden of proof is not thereby cast on the defendant to show that he had actual authority to so act, but is upon the plaintiff to show that he did not have such authority.

Measure of Damages.—The damages must be measured, not by the contract, but by the injury resulting from the agent's want of power. Taylor v. Nostrand, 134 N. Y. 108, affirming (Supreme Ct.) 35 N. Y. St. Rep. 332; White v. Madison, 26 N. Y. 117, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 481. See also Farmers' Co-operative Trust Co. v. Floyd, 47 Ohio St. 525, 33 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 218, where it is held that the measure of damages is the loss sustained by the other contracting party by reason of his not having the valid contract which the agent assumed to make. To the same effect see Simons v. Patchett, 7 El. & Bl. 568, 90 E. C. L. 568; Wallace v. Bentley, 77 Cal. 19, 11 Am. St. Rep. 231.

In the case of money paid to one acting as the agent of another without authority, which has not been paid over to the principal, the amount paid would be the measure of damages which in this case could be recovered in an action for money had and received. Jefts v. York, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 392; Senter v. Monroe, 77 Cal. 347; Wallace v. Bentley, 77 Cal. 19, 11 Am. St. Rep. 231.

It seems that if special damages should be incurred in consequence of the agent's failure to bind his principal, such as the costs of an unsuccessful action against the principal to enforce the contract, they may be recovered. White v. Madison, 26 N. Y. 117, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 481. But in Pow v. Davis, 1 B. & S. 220, 101 E. C. L. 220, the right to recover costs was denied where a person entering into possession of lands under a lease from an agent acting without authority, but bona fide, was ejected by the owner.

Assuming Authority to Sell Lands—Damages.

—Where an agent assumes authority to make a contract for the sale of lands for the owner, the injured party may recover damages for the loss of improvements made bona fide under the contract. Skaaras v. Finnegan, 32 Minn. 107, 31 Minn. 48.

Assumed Authority to Sell Goods—Damages.

—In such a case the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and what they are worth at the time delivery is to be made. Parker v. Knox, 60 Hun (N. Y.) 550.

When Action Solely on Warranty.—The measure of damages is the same as in any other action for a breach of warranty. In re National Coffee Palace Co., 24 Ch. Div. 371.

be recovered back from the latter, the agent is liable as a principal so long as he stands in his original position and until there has been a change of circumstances by his having paid over the money to his principal, or done something equivalent to it.¹

(2) When Paid under Mistake.—When money is paid voluntarily and by mistake to an agent as such, and he has turned it over to his principal, the agent incurs no responsibility; but if, before paying it over, he learns of the mistake and is notified not to pay it over, he is personally liable.²

When Agency Undisclosed.—If a person receiving money, though an agent in fact, does not disclose his agency to the party making the payment, there is no presumed consent or direction that he pay over, and payment to his principal will be no defense.³

When Consideration Fails.—Where a party makes a purchase from an innocent agent, who afterwards parts with the money of his principal, and it subsequently turns out that such purchase avails the purchaser nothing, no action will lie against the agent. Engels v. Heatly, 5 Cal. 135.

Sufficiency of Notice.—"The notice of the mistake, and requirement not to pay to the principal, need not be formal. The rule that, if he pays over without notice, he is not liable, is for the agent's protection; and, to deprive him of the protection, the notice to him should be sufficient to apprise him what the mistake is, and that by reason of it the party paying it to him intends to reclaim it." Gillfillan, C.J., in Shepard v. Sherin, 43 Minn. 383.

Who may Give Notice.—The notice must be given by one having some interest or authority. Shepard v. Sherin, 43 Minn. 383.

Settlement between Principal and Agent.—When the account between the principal and agent has been settled and closed, the agent is discharged. Mowatt v. McLelan, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 174.

But when the account remains open, and no other change of circumstances has taken place, the agent will not be relieved. Buller v. Harrison, Cowp. 566; Cox v. Prentice, 3 M. & S. 345; Mowatt v. McLelan, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 174.

No Presumption as to Payment Over.—In an action against an agent by one who has paid money to him for his principal, when it is shown that the money was paid to the agent, it will not be presumed, there being no proof on the subject, that the agent has paid the money over to his principal. Shipherd v. Underwood, 55 Ill. 475.

3. Newall v. Tomlinson, L. R. 6 C. P. 405; U. S. v. Pinover, 3 Fed. Rep. 309; Smith v. Kelly, 43 Mich. 390; Canal Bank v. Bank of Albany, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 287; Evans on Agency (2d ed.) 369; Mechem on Agency, § 563.

Payment under Mistake of Law.—In case of a voluntary payment under mere mistake of law no action will lie to recover back the money, as the construction of the law is open to both parties, and each is presumed to know it. Elliott v. Swartwout, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 137. See the titles MISTAKE; PAYMENT.

(3) When Money is Illegally Received.—When money is illegally demanded and received by an agent, from a third person, by compulsion or otherwise, the agent cannot exonerate himself from personal responsibility by paying it over to his principal.¹

c. IN TORT—(1) For Nonfeasance and Misfeasance—Distinctions Made.—In determining the liability of an agent to third persons for damage resulting from his conduct as agent, a distinction is usually drawn between those cases in which the injury complained of is the result of mere nonfeasance or omission of duty on the part of the agent in the course of his employment, where such default does not amount to misfeasance, and those in which the injury arises from some act of misfeasance or positive wrong on his part.²

Agent Not Liable for Nonfeasance.—With reference to the former class of cases, the established doctrine is that the agent's liability is solely to his principal, there being no privity between him and third persons, but only between him and his principal. Hence, as to all such negligences and omissions of duty, the agent is not liable to third persons, but the general maxim respondet superior applies.³

Money Properly Paid to Agent—Not Liable.—Where money is properly paid to an agent, the party ultimately entitled can recover only from the principal; so where the party claims the money in affirmance of the right of the agent to receive it for his principal, he can sue only the principal, and not the agent. Costigan v. Newland, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 456. See also Shipherd v. Underwood, 55 Ill. 475; Colvin v. Holbrook, 2 N. Y. 126; Hobensack v. Hallman, 17 Pa. St. 154.

Y.) 454.

In U. S. v. Pinover, 3 Fed. Rep. 309, Choate, D.J., says: "If the agent acts in bad faith, or with knowledge of his principal's want of right to receive the money, or is himself a party to an illegal exaction of the money, or is not authorized by his assumed principal to act for him, as where his power of attorney is a forgery, payment of the money over will be no defense."

Notice Not to Pay Over Unnecessary.—In case of a compulsory payment to an agent, when not made expressly for the use of the principal to charge the agent, notice to him not to pay over is unnecessary. Snowdon v. Davis, 1 Taunt. 359; Ripley v. Gelston, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 201, 6 Am. Dec. 271.

2. Nonfeasance and Misfeasance Distinguished.—Nonfeasance is the omission of an act which a person ought to do; misfeasance is the improper doing of an act which a person might lawfully do; and malfeasance is the doing of an act which a person ought not to do at all. Bell v. Josselyn, 3 Gray (Mass.) 309, 63 Am. Dec. 741; Greenberg v. Whitcomb Lumber Co., 90 Wis. 225. Under some circumstances the omission of an act which one ought to do may amount to a positive misfeasance. Ellis v. McNaughton, 76 Mich. 237, 15 Am. St. Rep. 308; Horner v. Lawrence, 37 N. J. L.

For liability of principal for both nonfeasance and misfeasance of his agent see infra, this title, Rights, Duties, and Liabilities as to Third Parties—Of Principal to Third Parties. For the liability of agents in full control see the titles CONTRACTORS and MASTER AND SERVANT.

Lane v. Cotton, 12 Mod. 472, is the leading case on this point and is repeatedly cited as sustaining the proposition stated in the text; but it seems that the question of the agent's liability did not directly arise, the question before the court being whether an action lay against the postmaster-general for the loss of a letter delivered to the postal clerk and lost from the office, and it was held that the postmaster-general was not liable.

Agent's Nonliability for Acts of Omission Explained.—In an action to hold agents liable to third parties for injury sustained in consequence of an alleged dereliction of duty, or nonfeasance on their part in failing to keep premises in their charge in good repair, it was held that the agents were not liable. Delaney v. Rochereau, 34 La. Ann. 1123, 44 Am. Rep. 456. In delivering the opinion of the court Bermudez, C.J., said: "Every one, whether he is principal or agent, is responsible directly to persons injured by his own negligence in fulfilling obligations resting upon him in his individual character and which the law imposes upon him, independent of contract. No man increases or diminishes his obligations to strangers by becoming an agent. If, in the course of his agency, he comes in contact with the person or property of a stranger, he is liable for any injury he may do to either by his negligence, in respect to duties imposed by law upon him in common with all other men. An agent is not responsible to third persons for any negligence in the performance of duties devolving upon him purely from his agency, since he cannot, as agent, be subject to any obligations toward third persons other than those of his principal. Those duties are not imposed upon him by law. He has agreed with no one, except his principal, to perform them. In failing to do so he wrongs no one but his principal, who alone can hold him responsible. The whole doctrine on that subject culminates in the proposition that wherever the agent's negligence, consisting in his own wrongdoing, therefore in an act, directly injures a stranger, then such stranger can recover from the agent damages for the injury."

Agent Liable for Misfeasance.—Where the injury results, not from mere nonfeasance or omission of duty by the agent, but from his positive misfeasance,¹

Illustrations — Agent's Nonfeasance. — The agent of a cotton factor is not liable to a third person for loss resulting from his failure to communicate to his principal the directions of such third person as to the sale of cotton shipped by him to the factor. Reid v. Humber, 49 Ga. 207.

An agent operating a mill for the benefit of the owner is not liable for damage caused by back water from a permanent dam, the height or structure of which was not changed by him and the damage not resulting from any act of his. Brown Paper Co. v. Dean, 123 Mass. 267.

Malice Immaterial—Mississippi.—An agent is liable to no one except his principal for damage resulting from an omission or neglect of duty in respect to the business of his agency, even though such omission be with a malicious intent to injure a third person, and have that effect. Thus in an action brought by the owner of a plantation for damage resulting from the failure of the agent in charge of an adjoining plantation to keep open a drain which it was his duty to keep open, it was held that the agent was not liable, and the fact that he acted maliciously in neglecting and refusing to keep open the drain was immaterial. Feltus v. Swan, 62 Miss. 415. But see infra, this section, In Tort—For Fraud and Malice.

Disobedience of Instructions No Defense.—An agent cannot relieve himself from responsibility for his wrongful act by showing that he acted contrary to the instructions of his principals. Starkweather v. Benjamin, 32 Mich. 305.

acter of a misfeasance,¹ the agent is personally liable to third persons, the Agent Not Liable for Continuance of Nuisance; Former Recovery.—Where an action was brought against an incorporated company for erecting buildings on the plaintiff's land, and judgment was recovered, and subsequently an action of trespass was brought against the agents of the company who had constructed the buildings, for damages for their construction and for the continuance of the nuisance, it was held that the former recovery was a bar to any claim for damages, and that the agents were not liable for the continuance of the nuisance. Lyman v. Dorr, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 217. See also Chapel v. Smith, 80 Mich. 100.

But a person maintaining a public nuisance cannot relieve himself from liability by showing that he was an agent for another. Reg. v. Brewster, 8 U. C. C. P. 208. See also Reg. v. Osler, 32 U. C. Q. B. 324.

Third Person Ignorant of Agency.—In an action for damages brought by a workman for an injury resulting from the negligence of the defendant in furnishing him with a defective chain, it was held that the fact that the defendant was the agent of a third person was immaterial if that fact was unknown to the plaintiff until after his right of action had accrued. Malone v. Morton, 84 Mo. 436.

The agent is not responsible for misfeasance unless an action would lie against his principal. Strong v. Colter, 13 Minn. 82.

Negligence of Employees.—It has been held that an agent is not responsible for the negligence of persons employed by him in the service of his principal. Stone v. Cartwright, 6 T. R. 411. But see Gordon v. Buchanan, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 71. And see titles CONTRACTORS; MASTER AND SERVANT, for a full discussion of this branch of the subject.

Agent's Liability for Negligence.—In an action for personal injuries caused by the falling of a brick from a wall in course of construction, where the evidence showed that the defendant, who was superintending the work as agent of the contractors, was guilty of negligence in failing to provide scaffolding to prevent bricks from falling to the ground, it was held that the defendant was liable. Mayer v. Thompson-Hutchison Bldg. Co. (Ala., 1894), 16 So. Rep. 620. In delivering the opinion of the court Coleman, J., said: "The defendant Thompson invokes the doctrine that an agent or servant is not liable for a mere omission or nonfeasance. The rule is stated as contended for in Story, Ag., § 308, and in Story, Cont., § 171, and there are numerous decisions which fully sustain the text. There are courts of high authority which hold differently. Our attention has not been called to any decision of the question in this state, and, in declaring the law which shall govern, we have carefully considered both lines of decisions. The principle upon which the rule is founded, as declared by Story, is that there is no privity between the servant or agent and third persons, but the privity exists only between him and the master or principal. This relation of privity is that from which arises the maxim respondet superior. The liability of the principal or master to third persons does not depend upon any privity between him and such third persons. It is the privity between the master and servant that creates the liability of the master for injuries sustained by third persons on account of misfeasance and nonfeasance of the servant or agent. It is difficult to apply the same principles which govern in matters of contract between an agent and third persons to the torts of an agent which inflict injury on third persons, whether they be of misfeasance or nonfeasance, or to give a sound reason why a person who, acting as principal, would be individually liable to third persons for an omission of duty, becomes exempt from liability for the same omission of duty because he was acting as servant or agent. The tort is none the less a tort to the third person, whether suffered from one acting as principal or agent, and his rights ought to be the same against the one whose neglect of duty has caused the injury. We think the better rule declared in Baird v. Shipman, 132 Ill. 16, 22 Am. St. Rep. 504 [quoting from this case and from Ellis v. McNaughton, 76 Mich. 237, 15 Am. St. Rep. 308, and Campbell v. Portland Sugar Co., 62 Me. 552, 16 Am. Rep. 503]. * * * The rule is broadly stated in 14 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW [1st ed.] 814. We might cite other decisions if deemed necessary. We hold that the mere relation of agency does not exempt a person from liability for any injury to third persons, resulting from his neglect of duty, for which he would otherwise be liable." See also Osborne v. Morgan, 130 Mass. 102, 39 Am. Rep. 437.

Failure to Repair.—It has been held by some courts that an agent having charge of real estate, and whose duty it is to make all necessary repairs, is not guilty of misfeasance in neglecting to keep the premises in repair, and is not liable for injuries sustained by third persons by reason of his neglect. Dean v. Brock, 11 Ind. App. 507; Delaney v. Rochereau, 34 La. Ann. 1123, 44 Am. Rep. 456. Compare Baird v. Shipman, 132 Ill. 16, 22 Am. St. Rep. 504; Campbell v. Portland Sugar Co., 62 Me. 552, 16 Am. Rep. 503. See also title HIGHWAYS.

Where the agents of a manufacturing corporation had the charge and management of a wharf belonging to the company, and rented the same to tenants, agreeing to keep it in repair, but allowed the covering to become old, worn, and insecure, so that a stranger fell through a hole therein and was injured, it was held that the agents were responsible to the injured person equally with their principals. Campbell v. Portland Sugar Co., 62 Me. 562, 16 Am. Rep. 503.

Where an agent undertook to build a trap-door, but did the work so negligently that a stranger fell through and was injured, it was actual perpetrator of the positive wrong not being permitted to relieve himself from liability by showing that the wrong was done while he was acting in the course of his employment as agent for another. In all such cases he is personally liable, whether he did the wrong intentionally or ignorantly by the authority of his principal; for a principal cannot confer on his agent any authority to commit a tort upon the rights or property of another.¹

(2) For Fraud and Malice.—An agent will be held personally liable to third persons for all damages sustained by them in consequence of any fraudulent held that he was liable to the injured party. Harriman v. Stowe, 57 Mo. 93.

The engineer who conducts a train of cars upon a railroad, and a fireman who is hired by him and has charge of the brake under his direction, are both agents of the railroad company, and they and the company are all responsible, either jointly or severally, for an injury resulting from negligence in conducting the train. Suydam v. Moore, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 358. See also Martin v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 95 Ky. 612.

Conversion.—An agent who wrongfully disposes of the goods of another is liable in trover for the conversion, although acting innocently and in behalf of and under the direction of his principal. Stephens v. Elwall, 4 M. & S. 259, cited in 14 M. & W. 270; Hollins v. Fowler, L. R. 7 H. L. 757, affirming L. R. 7 Q. B. 616; Lee v. Mathews, 10 Ala. 682, 44 Am. Dec. 498; *Permyer v. Where a clerk, acting innocently under unavoidable ignorance and for his principal's benefit, received the goods of another from an agent of his principal and delivered them to the principal, it was held that he was guilty of a conversion, and liable in trover to the party injured. Stephens v. Elwall, 4 M. & S. 259, cited in 14 M. & W. 270. In delivering the opinion of the court Lord Ellenborough, C. J., said: "A person is guilty of a conversion who intermeddles with my property and disposes of it, and it is no answer that he acted under authority from another, who had himself no authority to dispose of it. And the court is governed by the principle of law, and not by the hardship of any particular case."

Compare Leuthold v. Fairchild, 35 Minn. 99, in which it is held that an agent who, acting solely for his principal, and by his direction, and without knowing of any wrong, or being guilty of gross negligence in not knowing of it, disposes of, or assists the principal in disposing of, property which the latter has no right to dispose of, is not thereby rendered liable for a conversion of the property. To the same effect see the early Virginia case Travis v. Claiborne, 5 Munf. (Va.) 435, decided on the authority of Mires v. Solebay, 2 Mod. 242; and see also Berry v. Vantries, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 89. See the titles CONVERSION; TROVER.

An Auctioneer who, as agent for one person, innocently sells the property of another, is liable to the true owner for the conversion. Robinson v. Bird, 158 Mass. 357, 35 Am. St. Rep. 495. See the title AUCTIONEERS.

Sale of Mortgaged Property.—An absolute sale of property mortgaged by a valid deed, which has been duly acknowledged and filed for record, made by any one acting as agent of the mortgagor in exclusion or defiance of the rights of the mortgagee, is a conversion for which such agent is liable to the mortgagee, though the sale is made in good faith, and without actual notice of the mortgage. *Marks v. Where a principal sent barley to his agent to sell for him, advising him that it was new barley, and the agent sold it for seed barley, for which purpose, not being new, it was useless, and the purchaser having sued the prin-or malicious¹ acts committed by him on behalf of his principal, and in an action against the agent for fraud the fact that he derived no personal profit or benefit therefrom is immaterial.²

False Representations of Agency.—One who falsely represents himself to be the agent of another is liable in an action on the case to those who are injured by his misrepresentations.³

2. Of Principal to Third Parties—a. LIABILITY CIVILLY—(1) Agent's Acts Generally.—It may be stated as a general rule, that where the relation of principal and agent legally exists the principal will be liable to third persons for all acts of an agent in his behalf,⁴ where they were committed in the course and within the scope of the agency,⁵ or where, if not duly authorized, they were principal and failed to recover, brought an action against the agent for fraud, it was held that the agent was liable as having acted ultra vires and having made himself principal in the fraud. Gutchess v. Whiting, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 139.

Fraud on Agent's Creditors.—Where an agent purchases in the name of his principal goods which he is not authorized to purchase, intending thereby to defraud his creditors and prevent them from levying on his goods, unless the transaction be ratified by the principal, the goods so purchased are liable to levy and sale for the debts of the agent. White v. Cooper, 3 Pa. St. 130.

An agreement by which goods are placed in the hands of an insolvent agent to be sold, with the understanding that he is to pay to his principal the invoice price thereof and retain the overplus for himself, is not fraudulent, and the agent does not thereby acquire such an interest in the goods as to render them the subject of levy and sale. M'Cullough v. Porter, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 177, 39 Am. Dec. 68.

Harmless Deceit.—The purchaser of land from a real-estate agent has no cause of action against him for misrepresentations or concealments, where such purchaser is not injured thereby; and the fact that the agent receives a greater compensation than is ordinarily paid is immaterial. Baker v. Brown, 82 Cal. 64.

Unintentional Concealment.—An agent employed to collect money on a draft is not guilty of a fraudulent concealment for merely failing to disclose a material fact in relation to the transaction, he being ignorant of the fact that the payee is not already acquainted with the same. Johnson v. Bank of North America, 5 Robt. (N. Y.) 554.

Property Conveyed to Principal—Agent Not Chargeable as Trustee.—Where an insolvent merchant, through the co-operation of the president of a bank in falsely representing him to be solvent, was enabled to make unusually large credit purchases of goods, and soon thereafter conveyed all his assets to the bank in consideration of a small sum in cash and a large debt to it, and the president, who acted for the bank, knew that the purpose of the debtor throughout was to defraud his other creditors, it is error, upon a bill filed by the other creditors to set aside the conveyance to the bank, to render a decree against the president of the bank personally, inasmuch as he, in the transaction, represented the bank, and it, not he, is chargeable as trustee. Delta Bank v. Oliver-Finnie Grocery Co., 70 Miss. 868.

1. Malice.—An agent who, through malice, illegally sues out a writ in the name of his principal is liable in an action on the case for damages resulting therefrom. Warfield v. Campbell, 35 Ala. 349. See also Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 343, 32 Am. Dec. 507; Wallace v. Finberg, 46 Tex. 35; and title ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

IN GENERAL.*—An exception to the above rule exists where the other contracting party, with a full knowledge of the circumstances of the case and with freedom of choice, has clearly elected to give an exclusive credit to the agent.¹

bb. REQUISITES OF AN ELECTION A QUESTION FOR THE JURY.—In general, the question of election will depend upon the particular circumstances of the case, and can be only properly dealt with as a question of fact for the jury, subject to the direction of the court.²

Vendor Electing to Sell on Agent's Credit.—Where goods were purchased of the plaintiffs by C., as agent for the defendants, he informing the plaintiffs of his agency at the time, and offering them the liability of the defendants, but the plaintiffs preferred to take C.'s own note, and agreed that he should be the purchaser, and C. gave his note accordingly, and the goods were charged to him on the books of the plaintiffs, it was held that the defendants were not liable for the value of the goods. Ranken v. Deforest, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 143. See also Pope v. Meadow Spring Distilling Co., 20 Fed. Rep. 37; Wilkins v. Reed, 6 Me. 220, 19 Am. Dec. 211; Chapman v. Durant, 10 Mass. 47; Tudor v. Y.) 150.

Extended Credit Given to Agent.—In Rathbone v. Tucker, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 498, it was held that the taking of a note of an agent at an extended credit, for goods furnished for the benefit of the principal, does not discharge the principal, unless it is affirmatively shown, on his part, that on the supposition that the debt was paid, or that the personal responsibility of the agent was accepted for it, the principal dealt otherwise with the agent than he would have done had the note not been taken and the extended credit given.

Undisclosed Principal.—The rule stated in the text applies not only to cases where the principal was disclosed at the time of the transaction with the agent, but it applies equally where an undisclosed principal is afterwards discovered. Paterson v. Gandasequi, 15 East 62; Curtis v. Williamson, L. R. 10 Q. B. 57; Woodford v. Hamilton, 139 Ind. 481, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 415, 416; Kingsley v. Davis, 104 Mass. 178; Taintor v. Prendergast, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 72, 38 Am. Dec. 618; Rowan v. Buttman, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 412. See Calder v. Dobell, L. R. 6 C. P. 486; Hyde v. Wolf, 4 La. 234, 23 Am. Dec. 484; Sessions v. Block, 40 Mo. App. 569.

In Paterson v. Gandasequi, 15 East 62, Lord Ellenborough, C.J., said: "The law has been settled by a variety of cases, that an unknown principal when discovered is liable on the contracts which his agent makes for him; but that must be taken with some qualification, and a party may preclude himself from recovering over against the principal by knowingly making the agent his debtor."

2. Calder v. Dobell, L. R. 6 C. P. 486; Curtis v. Williamson, L. R. 10 Q. B. 57; Raymond v. Crown, etc., Mills, 2 Met. (Mass.) 319; Cobb v. Knapp, 71 N. Y. 348, 27 Am. Rep. 51; Maryland Coal Co. v. Edwards, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 432. See Ferry v. Moore, 18 Ill. App. 141.

A Question for the Jury.—In Maryland Coal Co. v. Edwards, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 432, it was held that where property is sold to an agent who, at the time, discloses the name of his principal, and states that the goods may be charged to him or to his principal, and the vendor, not knowing the principal, charges the goods to the agent, it is a question for the jury whether or not such exclusive credit is given as to discharge the principal.

Credit is Presumed to be Given to Principal.—In Meeker v. Claghorn, 44 N. Y. 349, it was held that if the principal for whom goods have been purchased by an agent claims that the credit was given by the vendor exclusively to the agent, he assumes the burden of establishing such fact by clear proof; the natural presumption being in all cases that credit is given to the principal rather than to the agent. See Foster v. Persch, 68 N. Y. 400.

Commencement of Action against Agent.—It has been held that the commencement of a Fact of Agency and Name of Principal must be Known.—It is well settled, however, that to make an election valid the party electing must know the name of the principal in addition to the fact of agency.¹

cc. WITHIN WHAT TIME THE PARTY MUST ELECT.—The principal will be released from all liability if the right of election is not exercised by the other party within a reasonable time after such principal is discovered.²

(o) Liability of Undisclosed Principal—au. ON SIMPLE CONTRACTS.—It may be stated as a general rule, that where a simple contract is made by a duly authorized agent, without disclosing his principal, and the other contracting party afterwards discovers that the person with whom he dealt was not the principal, he may abandon his right to look to the agent personally, and resort to the principal.³

suit against the agent after the discovery of the principal is not conclusive proof of an election to charge the agent only. Ferry v. Moore, 18 Ill. App. 135; Raymond v. Crown, etc., Mills, 2 Met. (Mass.) 326.

In the case of Beymer v. Bonsall, 79 Pa. St. 298, it was held that the principal in such a case could not be discharged short of satisfaction. See Maple v. Railroad Co., 40 Ohio St. 313, 48 Am. Rep. 685. Compare Priestley v. Fernie, 3 H. & C. 977.

But in Kingsley v. Davis, 104 Mass. 178, it was held that an action prosecuted to judgment was a bar. Sessions v. Block, 40 Mo. App. 569.

Subsequent Demands upon Agent.—In Calder v. Dobell, L. R. 6 C. P. 486, it was held that demands made upon the agent by a contracting party after the principal had been disclosed did not necessarily amount to an election on the part of the plaintiff to give credit to the agent, and to him only.

Charging Goods to Agent.—In Guest v. Burlington Opera House Co., 14 Iowa 457, it was held that a person having contracted with an agent, knowing him to be such, for the rent of a piano to be used in the principal's business, cannot, by charging the account to the agent, elect to hold him for the rent instead of the principal, and he is not precluded by so charging from asserting the claim against the principal.

Filing Affidavit against Agent.—It has been held that the mere fact of filing an affidavit of proof against the estate of an insolvent agent of an undisclosed principal, after the undisclosed principal is known to the creditor, is not a conclusive election by the creditor to treat the agent as his debtor. Beymer v. Bonsall, 79 Pa. St. 298.

Foreign Principal.—It has been said that from the custom of trade the usual decisive indication of an exclusive credit is where the creditor knows there is a foreign principal, but makes his charge in account against the principal. Thomson v. Davenport, 9 B. & C. 78, 17 E. C. L. 335; Paterson v. Gandasequi, 15 East 62; Taintor v. Prendergast, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 72, 38 Am. Dec. 618. See supra, this title, Of Agent to Third Parties—When Acting for Foreign Principal, p. 1121.

A foreign attachment, attaching the debtor's property, but naming an agent as defendant, is not an election by the plaintiff which prevents his following the principal, even though the plaintiff knew of the agency at the time of issuing the writ. Glenn v. Davis, 2 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 153.

Electing Party must Know Who the Principal is.—In Thomson v. Davenport, 9 B. & C. 78, 17 E. C. L. 335, Lord Tenterden, C.J., in delivering the opinion of the court said: "At the time of the dealing for the goods the plaintiffs were informed that M'Kune, who came to them to buy the goods, was dealing for another, that is, that he was an agent; but they were not informed who the principal was. They had not therefore at that time the means of making their election. It is true that they might perhaps have obtained those means if they had made further inquiry; but they made no further inquiry. Not knowing who the principal really was, they had not the power at that instant of making their election. That being so, it seems to me that this  case falls, in substance and effect, within the first proposition which I have mentioned—the case of a person not known to be an agent—and not within the second, where the buyer is not merely known to be agent, but the name of his principal is also known."

Principal Purchasing as Agent.—The real purchaser for his own benefit is undoubtedly liable, notwithstanding he purchased on the credit of another with that person's consent, without disclosing that he himself was the real party. Coverly v. Braynard, 28 Vt. 738.

Partners.—The rule that an undisclosed principal is liable for goods purchased by his agent applies to a case where one of several partners purchases goods in his own name for the use of all. And the liability of the remaining partners is not affected by the giving of his individual note by the partner purchasing the goods. Duvall v. Wood, 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 489. See *Tomlinson v. bb. ON CONTRACTS UNDER SEAL—Common-law Rule.—It has been laid down as a common-law doctrine, that when a contract is made by an instrument under seal, no one but a party to the instrument is liable to be sued upon it, and therefore if made by an agent or attorney, it must be in the name of the principal, in order that he may be a party, because otherwise he is not bound by it.¹

Modifications of Common-law Rule.—Some of the later decisions, however, qualify this doctrine by holding that when a sealed contract has been executed in such form that it is in law the contract of the agent and not of the principal, but the principal's interest in the contract appears upon its face, and he has received the benefit of the performance by the other party and has ratified and confirmed it by acts in pais, and the contract is one which would have been valid without a seal, the instrument will be binding on the principal.²

cc. ON NEGOTIABLE CONTRACTS.—Where a person is not a party to a negotiable note or bill of exchange he cannot be charged upon proof that the ostensible party signed or indorsed as his agent, since persons dealing with negotiable contracts are presumed to take them on the credit of the parties whose names appear upon them.³

In Byington v. Simpson, 134 Mass. 169, 45 Am. Rep. 314, Holmes, J., said: "Whatever the original merits of the rule, that a party not mentioned in a simple contract in writing may be charged as a principal upon oral evidence, even where the writing gives no indication of an intent to bind any other person than the signer, we cannot reopen it, for it is as well settled as any part of the law of agency."

Illustrations.—The rule that an unnamed principal is bound by the contract of his agent does not apply to a lease under seal. The fact that a lessee takes a lease for an undisclosed principal, but in his own name, will not render such principal liable for the rent. Borcherling v. Katz, 37 N. J. Eq. 150. And this has been held to be true though the fact of agency is recited, and it extrinsically appears that the lessee acted as agent, and though the principal occupies the premises without assignment of the lease and furnishes money to pay the rent. dd. WHERE PRINCIPAL HAS SETTLED WITH AGENT.—It is the prevailing rule in the United States that an undisclosed principal will not be liable, when subsequently discovered, if he has bona fide paid the agent in the mean time, or has made such change in the state of the accounts between the agent and himself that he would be prejudiced by being made personally liable.¹ But in England, and in a few decisions in this country, this rule is limited to those cases in which the principal has been induced to pay the agent, or to alter his account by the conduct or the representations of the other contracting party.²

In Beckham v. Drake, 9 M. & W. 96, Parke, B., in commenting upon the liability of an undisclosed principal on a contract in writing, said: "The case of bills of exchange is an exception, which stands upon the law merchant; and promissory notes another, for they are placed on the same footing by the statute of Anne. In neither of these can any but the parties named in the instrument, by their name or firm, be made liable to an action upon it."

A Contrary Doctrine is supported by the following cases: Mechanics' Bank v. Columbia Bank, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 326; Baker v. Gregory, 28 Ala. 544, 65 Am. Dec. 366; *Hancock Bank v. In Thomson v. Davenport, 9 B. & C. 78, 17 E. C. L. 335, Bayley, J., said: "If the principal has paid the agent, or if the state of the accounts between the agent here and the principal would make it unjust that the seller, should call on the principal, the fact of payment or such a state of accounts would be an answer to the action brought by the seller, where he had looked to the responsibility of the agent."

In Kymer v. Suwercroft, 1 Campb. 109, it was held that, if goods are bought by a broker, the principal is liable to the vendor, if called upon when payment is due, although he has previously paid the price of the goods to the broker; but it is otherwise if the day of payment is allowed to pass by without any demand being made upon the principal.

In Macfarlane v. Giannacopulo, 3 H. & N. 860, the plaintiff, the owner of a ship, applied to a broker to effect an insurance on it; the broker signed a policy on behalf of the defendant, an underwriter. The ship was lost, and the plaintiff, having applied to the broker for payment, received from him a credit note. It was usual to pay credit notes at a month from their date. Both at the time of signing the policy and of the adjustment the broker had money of the defendant sufficient to pay the loss. Nearly three months after the credit note was given the broker stopped payment, when the plaintiff applied to the defendant for the amount of the loss. It was held that there was no injury to the defendant by the conduct of the plaintiff, which rendered it unjust to call on him for payment, and therefore the case did not fall within the rule of law mentioned in the text.

But the application of this rule has been limited by the later case of Heald v. Kenworthy, 10 Exch. 739, in which Parke, B., said: "If the conduct of the seller would make it unjust for him to call upon the buyer for the money, as, for example, where the principal is induced by the conduct of the seller to pay his agent the money on the faith that the agent and seller have come to a settlement on the matter, or if any representation to that effect is made by the seller, either by word or conduct, the seller cannot afterwards throw off the mask and sue the principal."

Admissions, etc.—In Fairlie v. Hastings, 10 Ves. Jr. 127, Sir William Grant said: "What the agent has said may be what constitutes the agreement of the principal; or the representations or statements made may be the foundation of or the inducement to the agreement; therefore, if writing is not necessary by law, evidence must be admitted to prove the agent did make that statement or representation."

Dec. 598; Browning v. Hinkle, 48 Minn. 544.

In Campbell v. International L. Assur. Soc., 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 298, it was held that the representations of an authorized agent of an insurance company with reference to the time of payment of premium are binding upon the company.

3. Representations Contemporaneous with Business.—Linblom v. Ramsey, 75 Ill. 246; Haven v. Brown, 7 Me. 421, 22 Am. Dec. 208; Franklin Bank v. Pennsylvania, etc., Steam Nav. Co., 11 Gill & J. But this rule does not extend to representations made after the transaction, though in relation to it. Franklin Bank v. Pennsylvania, etc., Steam Nav. Co., 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 33; Haven v. Brown, 7 Me. 421, 22 Am. Dec. 208.

In Haven v. Brown, 7 Me. 421, 22 Am. Dec. 208, Parris, J., said: "Representations made by an agent at the time he is contracting for his principal constitute a part of the contract; as much so as if they had been made by the principal; and a fact stated by an agent in relation to a transaction in which he is then engaged, and while it is in progress, forms a part of that transaction. But what he says at another and a subsequent period cannot be evidence against the principal."

In Strong v. Dodds, 47 Vt. 348, it was held that where the plaintiff's agent sold a bill of goods to the defendant and packed and marked and delivered them to a railroad company, and notified defendant of the fact, the company was agent of the defendant and the delivery to it was a good delivery to the defendant. See also the title SALES.

In Rupp v. Stith, 33 Ind. 244, it was held that where the principal had sent his agent to receive certain property, with power to exercise his judgment as to the quality of the property, and the agent did exercise his judgment, the principal was bound by the acts of the agent in receiving the property, although some of it proved to be of indifferent quality.

Agent's Receipt for Goods Never Delivered.—It has been held that an agent has no power to bind his principal by receipt for goods as delivered which in fact were never delivered. Grant v. Norway, 10 C. B. 665, 70 E. C. L. 665; Hubbersty v. Ward, 8 Exch. 330; Coleman v. Riches, 16 C. B. 104, 81 E. C. L. 104. See Dyer v. Girard, 2 Root (Conn.) 55. Compare *Armour v. Reason of the Rule.—In *Kennedy v. When it is Not the Agent's Duty to Communicate Such Knowledge, or when it would be unlawful for him to do so, as, for example, when it has been acquired confidentially as attorney for a former client in a prior transaction, the reason of the rule ceases, and in such a case an agent would not be expected to do that which would involve the betrayal of professional confidence, and his principal ought not to be bound by his agent's secret and confidential information.¹

When Agent Acts in His Own Interest.—Another exception to the application of the general rule arises in case of such conduct by the agent as raises a clear presumption that he would not communicate the fact in controversy, as where the agent acts for himself in his own interest and adversely to that of the principal.²

and urgent reasons for a stringent enforcement of the general rule, that knowledge acquired or notice received by an officer or agent within the scope of the agency is deemed notice to the principal, as 'the corporation cannot see or know anything except by the intelligence of its officers.'" Notice to Agent Not Notice to Principal for Purpose of Imputing Malice.—In Reisan v. Mott, 42 Minn. 49, 18 Am. St. Rep. 489, it was held that the rule that a principal is affected with notice given to or knowledge possessed by his agent does not warrant a legal imputation of malice in the conduct of a principal merely because of a fact known only to the agent. In this case the court said: "Actual malice implies a wrongful purpose or intent in the mind of the person whose conduct is in question. It is not to be conclusively presumed or legally imputed to him merely because of the mental condition or the knowledge of another person, however related to him."

Also, it has been held that knowledge acquired by an attorney while acting for one client will not affect another client for whom he is acting at the same time in a different case. Ford v. French, 72 Mo. 250.

Where, however, such knowledge was not obtained by the attorney from a former client under professional secrecy, it has been held that a subsequent client will be liable. Thus, if an attorney received notice that the person holding the record title of land is not the real owner but merely a trustee, one who subsequently employs the same attorney to attach and levy upon the land as the property of the trustee, will be affected by the attorney's knowledge of the real state of the title, though not communicated to him. Hart v. Farmers, etc., Bank, 33 Vt. 252. See also Abell v. Howe, 43 Vt. 403.

With the money thus obtained B paid A the debt he owed him. Both A and B acted in fraud of the Gen. Stat. c. 118, §§ 89, 91; but C had no knowledge of the fraud. It was held that the knowledge of A was not in law imputable to C, although A had acted for C in the negotiation. See also Innerarity v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 139 Mass. 332, 52 Am. Rep. 710.

Where the Agent Colludes with a Third Party.—Likewise, where the agent colludes with a third party the rule has no application, it being for the protection of innocent third persons, and not for those who use the agent to further their own frauds upon the principal.¹

Subagent.—It is well settled that notice given to a subagent in the transaction of the business for which the agent was employed has the same effect on the principal as if given to the agent, if the agent has the power to employ a subagent, but not otherwise.²

(b) Must Relate to Business within Scope of Agency.—Notice, however, to bind the principal, must have reference to business in which the agent is engaged by authority of his principal.³ Moreover, it is necessary that the transaction in

Where an officer of a corporation in his private capacity sells land to the corporation, he must be held not to represent them in the transaction so as to charge the corporation with the knowledge he may possess of facts derogatory to the title of the land and which he has not communicated to them. As such he is a stranger to the corporation. Barnes v. Trenton Gas Light Co., 27 N. J. Eq. 33.

Reason of the Rule as to Agents Acting in Their Own Interest.—In Frenkel v. Hudson, 82 Ala. 162, 60 Am. Rep. 736, Somerville, J., in commenting upon the doctrine in the text, says: "It is based upon the principle that it is the duty of the agent to act for his principal upon such notice, or to communicate the information obtained by him to his principal, so as to enable the latter to act on it. It has no application, however, to a case where the agent acts for himself, in his own interest, and adversely to that of the principal. His adversary character and antagonistic interests take him out of the operation of the general rule, for two reasons: first, that he will very likely, in such case, act for himself rather than for his principal; and secondly, he will not be likely to communicate to the principal a fact which he is interested in concealing. It would be both unjust and unreasonable to impute notice by mere construction under such circumstances, and such is the established rule of law on this subject." For further discussion of this question see supra, this title, Duties and Liabilities Inter Se—Of Agent to Principal.

In Allen v. South Boston R. Co., 150 Mass. 206, 15 Am. St. Rep. 185, the rule of the law as stated above was held to be the correct one, but the reason of the rule was doubted. In that case the court said: "It is sometimes said that it cannot be presumed that an agent will communicate to his principal acts of fraud which he has committed on his own account in transacting the business of his principal, and that the doctrine of imputed knowledge rests upon a presumption that an agent will communicate to his principal whatever he knows concerning the business he is engaged in transacting as agent. It may be doubted whether the rule and the exception rest on any such reasons. It has been suggested that the true reason for the exception is that an independent fraud committed by an agent on his own account is beyond the scope of his employment, and therefore knowledge of it, as matter of law, cannot be imputed to the principal, and the principal cannot be held responsible for it. On this view, such a fraud bears some analogy to a tort wilfully committed by a servant for his own purposes, and not as a means of performing the business intrusted to him by his master. Whatever the reason may be, the exception is well established." For further discussion of this question see supra, this title, Duties and Liabilities Inter Se—Of Agent to Principal.

Notice must be in Regard to Matter within Scope of Agent's Business—Illustrations.—Where the road or machinery belonging to a railroad company was defective and that fact was known to the engineer, the company was held to have knowledge of the fact. Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Elliott, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 618, 78 Am. Dec. 506.

In Congar v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 24 Wis. 157, 1 Am. Rep. 164, it was held that a railroad company was not liable for a mistake made by its agent in Chicago, Illinois, in forwarding goods directed to a point near the line of its road in Iowa (such agents having used due care and diligence) although its agents in Iowa knew the proper route for sending the goods. Dixon, C. J., in giving the opinion in the above case, said: "This seems very clear when we consider the reason and ground upon which this doctrine of constructive notice rests. The principal is chargeable with the knowledge of his agent, because the agent is substituted in his place, and represents him in the particular transaction; and it would seem to be an obvious perversion of the doctrine, and to lead to most injurious results, if, in the same transaction, the principal were likewise to be charged with the knowledge of other agents not engaged in it, and to whom he had delegated no authority with respect to it, but who were employed by him in other and wholly different departments of his business."

Where the purchase of a tract of land was negotiated by an agent, and the fact that the land was, at the time, adversely held by a party in possession was treated as a circumstance which diminished the value of the vendor's interest, the knowledge of the agent of the adverse possession will be the knowledge of the purchaser, and he, not inquiring of the party in possession as to the title, will not be regarded as a bona fide purchaser without notice. Russell v. Swezey, 22 Mich. 236. See Taylor v. Young, 56 Mich. 285; Ross v. Houston, 25 Miss. 591, 59 Am. Dec. 231; Hickman v. Green, 123 Mo. 165; Stephens v. Humphries (Supreme Ct.), 25 N. Y. Supp. 946.

The principal who has funds in the hands of an agent for investment is chargeable with notice to the agent that a note purchased by the latter for his principal is based on an illegal consideration. Macomb v. Wilkinson, 83 Mich. 486.

Where a purchaser employs an attorney simply to examine the title of real estate, notice to the attorney of the pendency of a suit which may affect the title to the property cannot be imputed to his principal. Trentor v. Pothan, 46 Minn. 298. In this case the court said: "We are of the opinion that, in view of the special and limited purpose for which the intervenor employed this attorney, his knowledge of the pendency of this action cannot be imputed to his principal."

In Sandberg v. Palm, 53 Minn. 252, it was held that knowledge by an agent with authority only to sell land, that a house is building on it, is not knowledge by the owner, for the purpose of creating a mechanic's lien under Laws 1889, ch. 200, § 5.

In Walker v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 121 Mo. 575, it was held that notice to a conductor that the baggageman on his train, over whom he has no authority, is in the habit of carrying drills on his car for a line company and putting them off near its quarry, is not notice to the railway company.

(c) Must be of Important Facts.—The notice must be of a matter so material to the transaction as to make it the agent's duty to communicate it to his principal.¹

(d) When Notice must be Had—During Continuance of Agency.—It is well established that notice to an agent during the continuance of his agency is binding on his principal.²

After Agency is Terminated.—It is equally well settled that notice to an agent after his agency has ceased will not affect the principal.³

Notice Acquired Prior to Agency.—The question, however, as to whether notice acquired prior to agency may be binding on the principal, has given rise to much diversity of opinion. It is held by some of the authorities that to visit 531; Irvine v. Grady, 85 Tex. 120. See General Interest Ins. Co. v. Ruggles, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 408.

Notice Given to Predecessor, of Agent Transacting Business.—In Irvine v. Grady, 85 Tex. 120, it was held that where an assertion in regard to certain cattle of the plaintiff was made by him to an agent employed by the defendants to purchase the cattle, and the agents subsequently abandoned the negotiation, the defendant, in litigation arising from his subsequent purchase of the cattle through other parties, is not affected with knowledge of such assertion made to his agent.

In Blackburn v. Vigors, L. R. 12 App. Cas. 531, it was decided that where a broker received material information while acting as agent to effect an insurance for the plaintiffs, which information he failed to communicate to them, and upon his failure to effect the insurance, another agent was appointed who succeeded in effecting it, the principal was not liable for the knowledge possessed by the former agent.

Exception—Agent Employed to Furnish Information.—The English decisions, however, have made a distinction between the case where the agent is employed to effect a certain transaction, and where one is employed for the express purpose of furnishing information which may pertain to such transaction. Thus, to illustrate the latter case, it has been held that where a shipowner effects an insurance on a ship he will be affected by the knowledge of the master or ship agent as to the condition of the ship, though such master or agent had no hand in procuring the policy, it being the special function of a master and ship agent to keep their employer informed of all casualties encountered by his ship which would materially influence the judgment of the insured. Fitzherbert v. Mather, 1 T. R. 12; Gladstone v. King, 1 M. & S. 35; Proudfoot v. Montefiore, L. R. 2 Q. B. 511. Compare General Interest Ins. Co. v. Ruggles, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 408.

In Blackburn v. Vigors, L. R. 12 App. Cas. 531, Lord Watson, in commenting upon the difference between a broker employed to effect an insurance, and a ship agent, as to the effect of knowledge possessed by them concerning the ship insured, says: "There is a material difference in the relations of these two classes of agents to their employer. The one class is specially employed for the purpose of communicating to him the very facts which the law requires him to divulge to his insurer; the other is employed, not to procure or furnish information concerning the ship, but to effect an insurance. There is also, as the Master of the Rolls pointed out, an important difference in the positions of those two classes with respect to the insurer. He is entitled to contract, and does contract, on the basis that all material facts connected with the vessel insured, known to the agent employed for that purpose, have been by him communicated, in due course, to his principal. So, also, when an agent to insure is brought into contact with an insurer, the latter transacts on the footing that the agent has disclosed every material circumstance within his personal knowledge, whether it be known to his principal or not; but it cannot reasonably be suggested that the insurer relies, to any extent, upon the private information possessed by persons of whose existence he presumably knows nothing."

the principal with notice of a fact known to the agent, such notice should have been gained by the agent during the course of the business in which he is employed.¹ The better doctrine, however, appears to be that the principal will be affected not only by notice acquired by the agent during the continuance of the agency, but also by knowledge previously communicated, provided it is present to the agent's mind during the transaction of his duties.²

Reason of the Rule.—In Hood v. Fahnestock, 8 Watts (Pa.) 492, 34 Am. Dec. 489, the reason for the rule as laid down in the text was stated to be "that no man can be supposed always to carry in his mind the recollection of former occurrences." See also Pritchett v. Sessions, 10 Rich. (S. Car.) 298.

But in Houseman v. Girard Mut. Bldg., etc., Assoc., 81 Pa. St. 256, Sharswood, J., said: "It is a mistake to suppose that it [the above-mentioned rule] depends upon the reason that no man can be supposed to always carry in his mind a recollection of former occurrences, and that if it be proved that he actually had it in his mind at the time, the rule is different. It may support the reasonableness of the rule to consider that the memory of men is fallible in the very best, and varies in different men. But the true reason of the limitation is a technical one—that it is only during the agency that the agent represents and stands in the shoes of his principal. Notice to him is then notice to his principal. Notice to him twenty-four hours before the relation commenced is no more notice than twenty-four hours after it had ceased would be." Also in Mountford v. Scott, 3 Madd. 26, Sir John Leach said: "The agent stands in place of the principal, and notice therefore to the agent is notice to the principal; but he cannot stand in the place of the principal until the relation of principal and agent is constituted, and as to all the information which he has previously acquired, the principal is a mere stranger."

Attorneys.—It has been held that notice to an attorney employed by another person in another transaction at another time will not be constructive notice to his client employing him afterwards. Warrick v. Fahnestock, 8 Watts (Pa.) 492, 34 Am. Dec. 489.

In Worsley v. Scarborough, 3 Atk. 392, the court said: "It is settled that notice to an agent or counsel who was employed in the thing by another person, or in another business, and at another time, is no notice to his client who employs him afterwards; and it would be very mischievous if it was so. for the man of most practice and greatest eminence would then be the most dangerous to employ."

Reason of the Doctrine.—The authorities sustaining the doctrine as laid down in the text hold that the general rule that the principal is bound by the knowledge of his agent is based on the principle of law that it is the agent's duty to communicate to his principal the knowledge which he has respecting the subject matter of negotiation, and the presumption that he will perform that duty. Harrington v. U. S. (The Distilled Spirits), 11 Wall. (U. S.) 367; Bierce v. Red Bluff Hotel Co., 31 Cal. 165; Whitten v. Jenkins, 34 Ga. 304; Page v. Brant, 18 Ill. 37; *Fairfield Sav. Bank v. In Dresser v. Norwood, 17 C. B. N. S. 466, 112 E. C. L. 466, Pollock, C.B., said: "We think that in a commercial transaction of this description, where the agent of the buyer purchases on behalf of his principal goods of the factor of the seller, the agent having present to his mind at the time of the purchase a knowledge that the goods he is buying are not the goods of the factor, though sold in the factor's name, the knowledge of the agent, however acquired, is the knowledge of the principal."

Green, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in Union Bank v. Campbell, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 396, said: "We do not intend to controvert the general doctrine that 'notice must come to the agent while he is concerned for the principal, and in the course of the same transaction;' for notice to a party while he is not acting as agent is certainly no notice to a principal for whom he may afterwards act. But the existence of knowledge in an agent when acting for his principal is notice to the principal, however that knowledge may have been acquired. Thus if an agent in his own transaction has had notice of a fact, that notice does not reach his principal, because he is not then acting for his principal; and before he comes to act as such agent, in relation to the subject about which he had notice, he may have forgotten the whole matter, so that it was never present in his mind while discharging the duties of his agency. But if he had received the notice while he was concerned for the principal, the principal would be bound by it, though the agent might forget the facts, and have no memory of them, during the transaction to which they relate. But certainly, if while an agent is concerned and acting for his principal, he have knowledge of the facts in relation to which notice is necessary, there can be no necessity for giving formal notice of the same facts to the individual who already knows them."

Where, five years before a bank took an assignment of a mortgage, the president of the bank, who was not then acting for the bank, but for a private person, had been informed in a casual conversation that a third person had an equitable interest in the bank, it was held that the president could not be said under the circumstances to have kept such information in his memory, and that therefore the bank was not affected with notice of the equity. Burton v. Perry, 146 Ill. 71.

Knowledge Acquired Shortly before Agency Began.—In Chouteau v. Allen, 70 Mo. 290, it was held that knowledge acquired not only during the continuance of the agency, but also that possessed by the agent so shortly before as necessarily to give rise to the inference that it remained fixed in his memory when the employment began, binds the principal. See also Bierce v. Red Bluff Hotel Co., 31 Cal. 165; Haywood v. National Ins. Co., 52 Mo. 192, 14 Am. Rep. 400; Pritchett v. Sessions, 10 Rich. (S. Car.) 293; Congar v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 24 Wis. 158, 1 Am. Rep. 164.

Where Agency is Concerned with a Long Series of Transactions.—Where the agency is continuous and concerned with a business made up of a long series of transactions of a like nature and of the same general character, it has been held that knowledge acquired as agent in that business in any one or more of the transactions making up from time to time the whole business of the principal, is notice to the agent and to the principal which will affect the latter in any other of those transactions in which that agent is engaged. Holden v. New York, etc., Bank, 72 N. Y. 292. See Cox v. Pearce, 112 N. Y. 637.

Basis for Rule.—This rule of liability is not based upon any presumed authority in the agent to do the acts, but upon the ground of public policy, and that it is more reasonable, where one of two innocent persons must suffer from the wrongful act of a third person, that the principal who has placed the agent in the position of trust and confidence should suffer than a stranger. Hern v. Nichols, 1 Salk. 289; Lee v. Sandy Hill, 40 N. Y. 448; Locke v. Stearns, 1 Met. (Mass.) 560, 35 Am. Dec. 382.

Andrews, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in Higgins v. Watervliet Turnpike Co., 46 N. Y. 24, 7 Am. Rep. 293, said: "It is sufficient to make the master responsible civiliter, if the wrongful act of the servant was committed in the business of the master and within the scope of his employment, and this although the servant, in doing it, departed from the instructions of his master. This rule is founded upon public policy and convenience. Every person is bound to use due care in the conduct of his business. If the business is committed to an agent or servant, the obligation is not changed. The omission of such care by the latter is the omission of the principal, and for injury resulting therefrom to others the principal is justly held liable. If he employs incompetent or untrustworthy agents it is his fault; and whether the injury to third persons is caused by the negligence or positive misfeasance of the agent, the maxim respondet superior applies, provided only that the agent was acting at the time for the principal, and within the scope of the business intrusted to him."

Illustration.—The charter of the defendant village provided that its trustees should be commissioners of highways therein, with the duties and powers of commissioners of highways in towns. Under a written order of the trustees the overseers of highways wrongfully entered the plaintiff's land and moved back a fence which the trustees erroneously supposed was an encroachment on the street. It was held that the plaintiff could maintain trespass. Lee v. Sandy Hill, 40 N. Y. 442.

Liability for Penal Act in the Nature of Tort.—Where the train of a railroad company is run through a city at a rate of speed forbidden by charter, it is no defense to an action against the company for violation of such ordinance, that the violation was committed by the company's servants without its consent and contrary to its instructions. Buffalo v. New York, etc., R. Co. (Buffalo Super. Ct.), 23 N. Y. Supp. 303, 309.

Usury.—If a person employs another as his agent to lend money, and the agent by the authority or with the knowledge and consent of the principal, charges unlawful interest, the principal will be responsible for the usury. Rogers v. Buckingham, 33 Conn. 81; Payne v. Newcomb, 100 Ill. 611, 39 Am. Rep. 69; Scottish Mortg., etc., Invest. Co. v. McBroom (N. Mex., 1892), 30 Pac. Rep. 859; *Philo v. In Scottish Mortg., etc., Invest. Co. v. McBroom (N. Mex., 1892), 30 Pac. Rep. 859, it was held that where an agent of a foreign loaning corporation is acting under a contract therewith, which provides "that all commissions on loans by the company, and all bonuses * * * payable by borrowers from them in respect to such loans, shall belong to the company," he is to be presumed to be acting for the company in collecting commissions on loans in excess of lawful interest, when the company has knowledge of each step taken by him in their negotiation, although the agent receives the exclusive benefit of the commission.

Torts Outside the Agent's Employment.—But the principal will not be liable for

Where, however, an agent with authority to lend money at a lawful rate, without the knowledge or consent of the principal lends it at usurious rates for his own benefit, the principal cannot be held liable.

Selling Intoxicating Liquors in Violation of Statute.—It was held in George v. Gobey, 123 Mass. 289, 35 Am. Rep. 376, that a master is liable to the penalty imposed by the statute of 1875, c. 99, § 16, if his servant in the course of his master's business sells intoxicating liquor, after notice requesting the master not to do so, to a person who has the habit of drinking intoxicating liquor to excess, although the master has instructed the servant not to make a sale to such person, and the sale is without the knowledge and consent of the master. Selling Adulterated Substances.—For the liability of a principal for illegal sales by his agent of adulterated milk and other substances, see the title ADULTERATION, Vol. I., p. 745.

Assault and Battery.—A principal may be held liable for an assault and battery committed by his agent in the course of his employment. Turner v. North Beach, etc., R. Co., 34 Cal. 594; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Dalby, 19 Ill. 353; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Peacock, 48 Ill. 253; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Bryan, 90 Ill. 126; Goddard v. Grand Trunk R. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 87 N. Y. 25, 41 Am. Rep. 337; Passenger R. Co. v. Young, 21 Ohio St. 524; Palmer v. Charlotte, etc., R. Co., 3 S. Car. 580; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Fleming, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 130.

Thus, in an action brought against a railroad corporation, by a passenger forcibly put out of the cars by their conductor for not paying his fare, which he had in fact paid, it was held to be no ground for exception by them that the jury were instructed that if the conductor removed the plaintiff in the wrongful exercise of a discretionary power conferred upon him by the corporation the latter was liable. Moore v. Fitchburg R. Corp., 4 Gray (Mass.) 465, 64 Am. Dec. 83. See Higgins v. Watervliet Turnpike Co., 46 N. Y. 23, 7 Am. Rep. 293.

But the principal will not be liable for an assault and battery committed by the agent beyond the scope of his employment. Thus, where the plaintiff, after purchasing a ticket as a passenger, applied to the servant of the defendant charged with the duty of checking baggage to have his baggage checked to his place of destination, and by his importunate conduct and abusive language towards the servant provoked a quarrel, in which the servant, to gratify his personal resentment, struck the plaintiff, it was held that the wrongful act of the servant in striking the plaintiff cannot be regarded as authorized by the master, nor as an act done in the execution of the service for which he was engaged by the master. Little Miami R. Co. v. Wetmore, 19 Ohio St. 110, 2 Am. Rep. 373. In delivering the opinion in this case the court said: "It seems to us the assault was in no way calculated to facilitate or promote the business for which the servant was employed by the master; nor could it have been supposed to be, or intended as, an act done with that view or object. It is not a case of excess of force and violence in executing the authority of the master, but rather an act beyond such authority, and foreign to the objects of the employment." See also Meehan v. Morewood (Supreme Ct.), 5 N. Y. Supp. 710.

For a discussion of the liability of the printorts committed by the agent outside the scope of the authority delegated to him.¹

Excessive Force.—Where a principal authorizes his agent to do an act which implies the use of force, if the agent in the execution of that service goes beyond the proper limits as to the use of force, and commits a trespass by unjustifiable violence, the principal will be liable in an action therefor.²

Corporations are liable to the same extent as individuals would be for injuries done by their agents in the course of their employment.³

principal when the assault committed by the agent is wilful or malicious, see infra, this section, Wanton or Malicious Acts.

Killing by Agent Not Done in Course of Employment.—Defendants were owners of a brewery, and employed an armed watchman to guard the property and prevent breaches of the peace. Plaintiff's intestate, being intoxicated and disorderly, was pursued by the watchman, and while retreating was shot and killed. It was held that the shooting was not done in the line of the watchman's duty, and that defendants were not liable therefor. Golden v. Newbrand, 52 Iowa 59, 35 Am. Rep. 257.

1. Torts beyond Scope of Agent's Authority.—In Stickney v. Munroe, 44 Me. 195, it was held that where an agency is limited to the business of keeping mills in repair, leasing the same, and receiving rents therefor, the principal is not liable for the acts of a lessee of the mill in excavating the bed of the river so as to cause damage to a neighboring mill-owner.

Liability of Principal for Tort of Agent Done under Direction of a Third Party.—In Enos v. Hamilton, 24 Wis. 658, it was held that where defendants' servant while running logs for them wrongfully obstructed therewith a navigable stream by direction of an officer of a boom company, defendants were liable for damages resulting to the plaintiff.

Illustrations.—Where a boy of eight years of age jumped upon the steps of a car in a passenger train upon the defendant's road and sat down upon the platform of the car, whereupon he was kicked from the car by the conductor or a brakeman while the train was running at a speed of about ten miles an hour, and was injured, it was held that the company was liable in an action for damages. Hoffman v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 87 N. Y. 25, 41 Am. Rep. 337. See Northwestern R. Co. v. Hack, 66 Ill. 238.

Andrews, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in Rounds v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 64 N. Y. 134, 21 Am. Rep. 597, said: "It is in general sufficient to make the master responsible, that he gave to the servant an authority, or made it his duty, to act in respect to the business in which he was engaged when the wrong was committed, and that the act complained of was done in the course of his employment. The master in that case will be deemed to have consented to and authorized the act of the servant, and he will not be excused from liability although the servant abused his authority or was reckless in the performance of his duty, or inflicted an unnecessary injury in executing his master's orders. The master who puts the servant in a place of trust or responsibility, or commits to him the management of his business or the care of his property, is justly held responsible when the servant, through lack of judgment or discretion, or from infirmity of temper, or under the influence of passion aroused by the circumstances and the occasion, goes beyond the strict line of his duty or authority and inflicts an unjustifiable injury upon another."

Subagents.—Where an agent's authority to employ subagents to transact the business of an agency is shown to exist, either expressly or by implication, the torts of such subagents will be binding upon the principal under circumstances in which the torts of the agent would be binding.¹

Negligence.—Thus the principal is liable for the negligent acts of his agent, done in the course and within the scope of his employment,² and this although the agent deviates from his instructions in the manner of doing the principal's business.³ But if the agent makes a wilful departure from the business he is

Where the Agent's Act is Not Authorized by the Charter of the Corporation.—In Nims v. Mount Hermon Boys' School, 160 Mass. 177, it was held that it was no defense to an action against an educational corporation for personal injuries occasioned to a passenger for hire upon a boat used at a public ferry operated by the corporation, through the negligence of the ferryman in managing the boat, that the maintenance of the ferry was ultra vires. It has been held that the corporation will not be liable for the malicious prosecution by its agent, unless it is made to appear that the agent had been previously expressly authorized by the corporation to act as he did, or that the act has been subsequently ratified and adopted by the corporation. Dally v. Young, 3 Ill. App. 39; Carter v. Howe Mach. Co., 51 Md. 290, 34 Am. Rep. 311; Levey v. Fargo, 1 Nev. 415.

It has been held in Missouri, that where an express agent charged with the duty of protecting property and collecting charges thereon attempts to collect such charges on property unlawfully taken without payment of the charges, and in such attempt as agent mistakenly institutes a criminal prosecution without probable cause, the principal will be liable in an action for malicious prosecution; though where the agent acts as a citizen and for the purpose of vindicating justice, the rule is otherwise. Cameron v. Pacific Express Co., 48 Mo. App. 99. See Gillett v. Missouri Valley R. Co., 55 Mo. 315, 17 Am. Rep. 653.

Where the Principal Employs the Agent to Do an Illegal Act, as where a justice orders the illegal detention and imprisonment of a prisoner by a constable, it has been held that the principal will be responsible, whether the agent acts innocently or maliciously. Hynes v. Jungren, 8 Kan. 391. Brewer, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The question is not presented as to whether the principal is responsible where his agent employed to do a lawful act transcends such principal and wantonly or maliciously commits an act to accomplish an independent purpose of his own.¹

Fraud.—As in other cases of tort, the principal is liable for the fraudulent acts of his agent in the course and within the scope of his employment, though in fact the principal did not authorize the practice of such acts.²

employment and does a wilful and malicious wrong. For here the act which the principal procures the agent to do is illegal, and whether the agent acted innocently or maliciously, the principal is responsible for the injury."

The relation of master and servant as to that transaction does not exist between them. It is a wilful and wanton wrong and trespass, for which the master cannot be held responsible. And when it is said that the master is not responsible for the wilful wrong of the servant, the language is to be understood as referring to an act of positive and designed injury, not done with a view to the master's service, or for the purpose of executing his orders."

Grounds of Liability for Agent's Fraud.—McGowan, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in Reynolds v. Witte, 13 S. Car. 5, 36 Am. Rep. 678, said: "It is difficult to understand upon what ground the principal should be held liable for the negligence of his agent and not for his fraud, where the act is done or omitted to be done to the very property as to which the agency exists, and in the course of the agency. Fraud by which the property is lost is generally considered one of the forms of gross negligence. What is the proper understanding of the phrase 'within the scope of the agency'? Does 'the scope' include negligence and exclude fraud? It cannot properly be restricted to what the parties intended in the creation of the agency, for that would also exclude negligence, as no agent is appointed for the purpose of being negligent, any more than for the purpose of acting fraudulently. The question cannot be determined by the authority intended to be conferred by the principal. We must distinguish between the authority to commit a fraudulent act, and the authority to transact the business in the course of which the fraudulent act was committed. Tested by reference to the intention of the principal, neither negligence nor fraud is within 'the scope of the agency;' but

Misrepresentations.—Accordingly, the fraudulent representations of an agent acting in the course of his employment¹ and in reference to business within tested by the connection of the act with the property and business of the agency, fraud in taking the very property is as much 'within the scope of the agency' as negligence in allowing others to take it. The proper inquiry is, whether the act was done in the course of the agency and by virtue of the authority as agent. If it was, then the principal is responsible, whether the act was merely negligent or fraudulent."

Fraud within Apparent Scope of Authority—Illustrations.—Plaintiff delivered an old certificate of deposit to the agent of Wells, Fargo & Company, for the purpose of having it sent to San Francisco to be renewed; the agent fraudulently procured it to be cashed, and appropriated the money to his own use. It was held that Wells, Fargo & Company were liable, not upon the rule that the agent acted for his principal in that particular transaction, but because he was employed by the company in that character of business, and held out by it as a person authorized and fully to be trusted. Dougherty v. Wells, 7 Nev. 368.

In an action for fraud in the sale of cheese, it appeared that defendants represented an unincorporated association, which owned a cheese factory and was engaged in the business of manufacturing cheese. C became the lessee of the factory from the association, agreeing to pay rent and taxes, etc., and to manufacture the cheese for the defendants at a specified sum per hundred pounds. He employed and paid the necessary help for doing the work, defendants having no supervision or control. They furnished the materials, took the products, and sold them in the market as manufactured by themselves. It was held that as to the public they assumed the character of principals, and were liable for the frauds of C or his subordinates in the manufacture of the cheese. Durst v. Burton, 47 N. Y. 167, 7 Am. Rep. 428.

Fraud beyond Scope of Authority.—But when the agent commits a fraudulent act which is foreign to the transaction in which he was employed, the principal will not be responsible. Stimpson v. Achorn, 158 Mass. 342; Kennedy v. Parke, 17 N. J. Eq. 415.

Liability of Bank for Special Deposit.—Thus it has been held that a bank is not liable for the loss of a special deposit, to keep which it receives no compensation, by the theft of its cashier or other servant, provided it has not been guilty of gross negligence in any respect. Merchants Nat. Bank v. Guilmarin, 88 Ga. 797; Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168; Scott v. Chester Valley Nat. Bank, 72 Pa. St. 471; Allentown First Nat. Bank v. Rex, 89 Pa. St. 308; Giblin v. McMullen, L. R. 2 P. C. 317.

Deceit.—The proposition has been laid down, however, by a few cases, that while the false and fraudulent acts of an agent made in the course of his employment may render the principal liable in an appropriate action, an action of tort for the deceit of the agent will not lie against an innocent principal.

Udell v. Atherton, 7 H. & N. 171; Western Bank v. Addie, L. R. 1 Sc. & D. Cas. 146; Wachsmuth v. Martini, 45 Ill. App. 244; Kennedy v. McKay, 43 N. J. L. 288, 39 Am. Rep. 581; State v. Fredericks, 47 N. J. L. 469.

But Shipman, J., in commenting upon some of the above-mentioned cases in the opinion given by him in the case of City Nat. Bank v. Dun, 51 Fed. Rep. 160, said: "But it is said by the defendant that later English cases, and a well-considered modern case in New Jersey, have denied that an action of deceit would lie against an innocent principal; and the cases of Udell v. Atherton, 7 H. & N. 171; Western Bank v. Addie, L. R. 1 Sc. & D. Cas. 146; and Kennedy v. McKay, 43 N. J. L. 288, 39 Am. Rep. 581, are cited. An examination of each of those cases shows that the old doctrine was not denied that the principal is liable whenever his agent, who is at the time acting within the scope of his authority and for the principal, makes a fraudulent misrepresentation which influences and is acted upon by the plaintiff to his injury; but that the cases turned upon the question whether the alleged agent was, under the circumstances in each case, acting within the scope of his authority. * * * It will thus be seen that the cases upon which reliance is placed show nothing more than a disposition on the part of English judges to demand that, when an innocent principal is made liable, it shall clearly appear that the fraudulent agent was not acting outside the known scope and power of his agency. But the question was re-examined, in the light of the Addie case, in Mackay v. Commercial Bank, L. R. 5 P. C. 394,—a case in which no doubts of the extent of the agency existed,—and it was held without hesitation, that 'in an action of deceit, whether against a person or a company, the fraud of the agent may be treated, for the purposes of pleading, as the fraud of the principal;' and the language of Lord Willes in Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank, L. P. 2 Exch. 259, is approved: 'The master is answerable for every such [fraudulent] wrong of his servant or agent as is committed in the course of his service and for the master's benefit, though no express command or privity of the master be proved.'"

The powers of an agent conducting a sale of mortgaged property, under an appointment from the mortgagee, must be found in the mortgage authorizing the sale; and any representations made by such an agent, beyond the powers contained in the mortgage authorizing the sale, do not bind the mortgagee. Where the Act of Executing an Authority is Itself a Representation of the Existence of Certain Facts.—In New York, in the case of Batavia Bank v. New York, etc., R. Co., 106 N. Y. 195, 60 Am. Rep. 440, it was said by Finch, J., in delivering the opinion of the court: "It is a settled doctrine of the law of agency in this state, that where the principal has clothed his agent with power to do an act upon the existence of some extrinsic fact necessarily and peculiarly within the knowledge of the agent, and of the existence of which the act of executing the power is itself a representation, a third person dealing with such agent in entire good faith, pursuant to the apparent power, may rely upon the representation, and the principal is estopped from denying its truth to his prejudice." Thus a carrier corporation has been held to be liable upon a bill of lading issued in its name by an agent having authority to issue bills on receipt of property for transportation to one who, upon transfer by the shipper upon the faith of the bill, has in good faith discounted a draft drawn upon the consignee, although no property was in fact delivered.

Arrest in Action on Contract.—In Hathaway v. Johnson, 55 N. Y. 93, 14 Am. Rep. 186, it was held that a principal cannot be arrested for frauds committed without his knowledge or authority by his agent in purchasing goods for him, under a statute which authorizes an arrest "where the defendant has been guilty of a fraud in contracting the debt or incurring the obligation upon which the action is brought."

Criminal Liability of Principal in Cases Arising under Police Regulations.—There are, however, certain exceptions to the rule as stated in the text, prominent among which are a class of cases arising under revenue laws and police regulations. Thus, in Atty.-Gen. v. Siddon, 1 Crompt. & J. 220 (a case of concealing smuggled goods), it was held that a trader is liable to a penalty for the illegal act of a servant done in the conduct of his business, with a view to protect the smuggled goods, though the master be absent at the time the act is done.

Under this exception have been held to come the cases of sales of intoxicating liquors by clerks or agents. See the titles INTOXICATING LIQUORS; REVENUE LAWS; SEARCHES AND SEIZURES.

Here belongs also the sale, by agents and servants, of adulterated foods and drinks in violation of statute. See the title ADULTERATION, Vol. I, p. 745.

Moreover, there are Cases at Common Law not depending upon such statutory enactments, where the principal was held criminally liable for the acts of his agent, though such acts were done without his knowledge and consent.

Thus, bookdealers and publishers have been held criminally liable for publications issued from their establishments in the ordinary course of their business, although they had no knowledge of the particular act of sale or publication. Rex v. Walter, 3 Esp. 21; Rex v. Gutch, M. & M. 433, 22 E. C. L. 352. Compare Reg. v. Holbrook, 3 Q. B. Div. 60.

Company Liable for Nuisance.—In an indictment against a gas company for a nuisance in conveying the refuse of gas into a great public river, it was held that the directors are answerable for an act done by their superintendent and engineer, made under a general authority to manage the works, though they are personally ignorant of the particular plan adopted, and though such plan be a departure from the original and understood method, which the directors had no reason to suppose was discontinued. *Rex v. 1. Agent's Right of Action under the Codes.—The code states uniformly give a right of action to "the trustee of an express trust," and define such a trustee so as to include a "person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another," and thus expressly give to an agent a right of action in his own name. See the codes of procedure of the various states. This provision forms section 449 of the New York Code of Civil Procedure.

The Georgia Code, under § 2209, gives an agent a right of action under the following circumstances: subd. 1, to "A factor contracting on his own credit;" subd. 2, "Where promissory notes are made payable to an agent of a corporation or joint-stock company;" subd. 3, "In all cases where the contract is made with the agent in his individual name, though his agency be known;" subd. 5, "In cases of agency coupled with an interest in the agent known to the party contracting with him." These provisions of the codes will be found construed in the following cases:

Code Rule Applied by United States Courts.—Under the United States Rev. Stat., § 914, the rule thus established is applicable to rights of action at law in the courts of the United States held within the state where such statute is in force, any rule of the United States court to the contrary notwithstanding. U. S. Rev. Stat., § 914; Sawin v. Kinny, 93 U. S. 289; Weed Sewing Mach. Co. v. Wicks, 3 Dill. (U. S.) 261; U. S. v. Tracy, 8 Ben. (U. S.) 1.

Illustrations.—It has been held that under the New York Code Civ. Pro., § 449, one who makes a contract with an agent where the agent contracts in his own name, but describes himself as agent, is liable to such agent, notwithstanding the fact that the principal can himself sue thereon. Albany, etc., Iron, etc., Co. v. Lundberg, 121 U. S. 451. In this case a written contract was made, by which "I, Gustaf Lundberg, agent for N. M. Hogland's Sons & Co., of Stockholm, agree to sell, and we, Albany & Rensselaer Iron and Steel Co., Troy, N. Y., agree to buy," certain Swedish iron. The contract contained no other mention of the Swedish firm, and was signed by the purchaser and by Lundberg with his own name merely. The court held that Lundberg had a right of action upon the contract.

This provision of the codes has been held to give a right of action to agents under the following circumstances: The agent of a corporation to whom notes are made payable as an agent. Considerant v. Brisbane, 22 N. Y. 389.

One who has authority of several owners to collect a claim in his own name. Noe v. Christie, 51 N. Y. 270.

One who makes a sale for another, and takes the contract in his own name. Arosemena v. Hinckley, 43 N. Y. Super. Ct. 43.

One who, as the agent of the equitable owner of a debt, takes a chattel mortgage and note in his own name to secure the debt. Close v. Hodges, 44 Minn. 204.

Canada.—Saxton v. Ridley, 13 U. C. Q. B. 522. But the contrary is held in Alsopp v. Hart, 2 Rev. de Lég. 29, K. B. 1817; Nesbitt v. Turgeon, 2 Rev. de Lég. 43, Q. B. 1845.

Story's Agency (9th ed.), § 160a, states the doctrine in these words: "If the agent possesses due authority to make a written contract not under seal, and he makes it in his own name, whether he describes himself to be an agent or not, or whether the principal be known or unknown, he, the agent, will be liable to be sued and be entitled to sue thereon." This statement of the rule was approved in Darrow v. H. R. Horne Produce Co., 57 Fed. Rep. 463, and Dupont v. Mount Pleasant Ferry Co., 9 Rich. (S. Car.) 529.

Where a Third Party Purchases Goods of an Agent, and he has no knowledge of the existence of an agency to make the sale, he is liable to the agent. DuBois v. Perkins, 21 Oregon 189; Keown v. Vogel, 25 Mo. App. 35; Rosser v. Darden, 82 Ga. 219, 14 Am. St. Rep. 152.

Agent a Trustee.—If the agent sustains the character of a trustee solely, he alone is the proper party to bring an action on the contract, Treat v. Stanton, 14 Conn. 445; and this for the reason that the legal title is in the agent. Upson v. Swezey, 40 Conn. 472; Sanford v. Nichols, 14 Conn. 324; Potter v. Yale College, 8 Conn. 60.

Wager Contract.—Under the New York statute, 1 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 662, § 9, permitting money lost on wager to be recovered back, it is held that where the money so lost was contributed by several, but was deposited in his own name by one of them acting as an agent for the others, he could only recover the part of the fund owned by him, and that each of the other parties must bring a separate action to recover his share so lost. Ruckman v. Pitcher, 20 N. Y. 9, 1 N. Y. 392.

See also, for the construction of a somewhat similar statute in Kentucky, Donahoe v. McDonald, 92 Ky. 123.

See infra, this title, Rights, Duties, and Liabilities as to Third Parties—Of Third Parties to Principal—Money Lost on Wager Contracts.

When Action should be Brought.—The agent must maintain the action while the agency exists. Miller v. State Bank, 57 Minn. 319.

Defense of Want of Interest.—The defendant may always show that another, and not the plaintiff, is the real party in interest. Hays v. Hawthorn, 74 N. Y. 486; Willard v. Lugenbuhl, 24 La. Ann. 18.

2. Paper Payable to Agents.—An illustration of this class of cases is found in those instances in which commercial paper or other contracts are made payable to the agent.

Illinois.—McHenry v. Ridgely, 3 Ill. 309, 35 Am. Dec. 110; Chadsey v. McCreery, 27 Ill. 252.

In McConnel v. Thomas, 3 Ill. 313, a note was payable to W., agent, etc., and it was held that he was the proper party plaintiff, and in its opinion the court, citing 3 Kent Com. 89, said: "If a bill be made payable to A for the use of B, the legal interest is in A, and he must indorse it; and for the same reason A must in such case bring the action."

New Hampshire.—Doe v. Thompson, 22 N.

66. WHEN AGENT IS OSTENSIBLE PRINCIPAL.—If an agent, in making a contract with a third party, acts in his own name, and does not disclose the name of his principal, or the existence of an agency, the third party contracts personally with the agent. In such a case the agent becomes, as to the third party, the real contracting party. Therefore the agent has a right of action on the contract,¹

H. 217. In this case a contract was made payable to D. as agent of, etc., and it was held that, the contract being in terms payable to an agent, he might maintain an action upon it.

New York.—Considerant v. Brisbane, 22 N. Y. 389; Fish v. Jacobsohn, 2 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 132; Davis v. Reynolds, 48 How. Pr. (Chenango County Ct.) 210; Guernsey v. Burns, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 411; Gunn v. Cantine, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 387; Taintor v. Prendergast, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 72, 38 Am. Dec. 618.

North Carolina.—Grist v. Backhouse, 4 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 362. In this case the court held that where a bill was made payable to A, or order, to the use of B, B has but an equitable right, not a legal interest, and A is the proper party to bring an action thereon.

Pennsylvania.—Hodge v. Comly, 2 Miles (Pa.) 286.

South Carolina.—Jackson v. Heath, 1 Bailey (S. Car.) 355.

Tennessee.—Barbee v. Williams, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 522; Cocke v. Dickens, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 29, 26 Am. Dec. 214. In this case, where a note was made payable to C. as agent, it was held that the legal title and interest in the note were in C., and that the action must be brought in the name of the party in whom the legal title was vested, and that the word agent was simply descriptio personæ.

Texas.—Groce v. Herndon, 2 Tex. 410.

Vermont.—Johnson v. Catlin, 27 Vt. 89, 62 Am. Dec. 622; Binney v. Plumley, 5 Vt. 500, 26 Am. Dec. 313; Wheelock v. Wheelock, 5 Vt. 433.

Note Payable to Agent of Association or Corporation.—When a note is made to the agent or treasurer of a private association by name with the addition of his agency or office, he has a right of action thereon in his own name, the addition being merely descriptio personæ. Clap v. Day, 2 Me. 305, 11 Am. Dec. 99; Whitcomb v. Smart, 38 Me. 264; Cocke v. Dickens, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 29, 26 Am. Dec. 214; Goodman v. Walker, 30 Ala. 482, 68 Am. Dec. 134.

The same is true if he is the agent of a corporation. Martin v. Lamb, 77 Ga. 252; Chadsey v. McCreery, 27 Ill. 253.

Form of Contract.—The right of the agent to maintain an action in his own name against the third party when the instrument is made payable to him, is the same whether the instrument be a promissory note, check, bill of exchange, bill of lading, or insurance contract. Murdock v. Franklin Ins. Co., 33 W. Va. 407.

Bill of Exchange—Check.—Dugan v. U. S., 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 172.

Bill of Lading.—Blanchard v. Page, 8 Gray (Mass.) 281; Griffith v. Ingledew, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 429, 9 Am. Dec. 444; Sargent v. Morris, 3 B. & Ald. 277, 5 E. C. L. 283.

Insurance Contract.—Browning v. Provincial Ins. Co., L. R. 5 P. C. 263; Provincial Ins. Co. v. Leduc, L. R. 6 P. C. 224; Sargent v. Morris, 3 B. & Ald. 277, 5 E. C. L. 283; Finney v. Commercial Ins. Co., 8 Met. (Mass.) 348, 41 Am. Dec. 515; Rhoades v. Blackiston, 106 Mass. 334, 8 Am. Rep. 332; Spencer v. Field, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 88; Deitz v. Providence, etc., Ins. Co., 31 W. Va. 851, 13 Am. St. Rep. 909; Murdock v. Franklin Ins. Co., 33 W. Va. 407.

In Sargent v. Morris, 3 B. & Ald. 277, 5 E. C. L. 283, Bayley, J., says: "In policies of insurance it is a common practice to bring your action either in the name of the agent or the principal."

However, if the policy is under seal and in the agent's name, the right of action against the insurer is exclusively in the agent. Schack v. Anthony, 1 M. & S. 573.

See also infra, this section, On Instruments under Seal, and also the title INSURANCE.

If the Agent Binds Himself Personally for the Fulfilment of a Contract, he has a right of action thereon, and the fact that his principal is a minor is no defense to the action. Nelson v. Nixon, 13 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 104.

Negotiable Instrument Indorsed in Blank to Agent for Collection.—Where a negotiable instrument is indorsed in blank and delivered to an agent for collection, the agent has a right of action on such instrument against the party liable thereon.

United States.—Dugan v. U. S., 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 180; Murray v. Lardner, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 110. Contra, Thatcher v. Winslow, 5 Mason (U. S.) 58.

Pennsylvania.—Phelan v. Moss, 67 Pa. St. 59; Pearce v. Austin, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 489, 34 Am. Dec. 523; Hodge v. Comly, 2 Miles (Pa.) 286.

In Hodge v. Comly, 2 Miles (Pa.) 286, the court made this distinction: If the plaintiff holds the note as a trustee, he has the right of action; but if he holds it as a mere depository and agent, the right of action is in the principal.

1. Simms v. Bond, 5 B. & Ad. 389, 27 E. C. L. 97; Fisher v. Marsh, 6 B. & S. 411, 118 E. C. L. 411; Evans v. Evans, 3 Ad. & El. 132, 30 E. C. L. 52; Rayner v. Grote, 15 M. & W.

although the principal may also sue thereon in his own name.¹

cc. ON INSTRUMENTS UNDER SEAL.—Where it distinctly appears from an instrument under seal that the seal affixed is that of the agent and not of the principal, the agent only has a right of action thereon, against the third party.²

(b) When Agent Has Beneficial Interest.—When an agent has a beneficial interest in the subject matter of a contract he has a right of action thereon, and he may prosecute the same in his own name.³

359; Leeds v. Marine Ins. Co., 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 565; Rowe v. Rand, 111 Ind. 206; Lapham v. Green, 9 Vt. 407.

This "class of cases would seem scarcely to require any illustration; for, as the agent acts in his own name, without disclosing any other principal, it follows as an irresistible inference, that the other contracting party binds himself personally to the agent." Story on Agency (9th ed.), § 396.

Ostensible Agent Showing Himself to be Principal.—One who, in the character of an agent, contracts for an unknown and unnamed principal, has a right of action as principal, unless the third party relied on his character as an agent only, and would not have contracted with him as a principal if he had known him to be such. Schmalz v. Avery, 20 L. J. Q. B. 228, 15 Jur. 291.

In Rayner v. Grote, 15 M. & W. 359, the plaintiff, assuming to act as agent for A, made a written contract for the sale of goods, and the buyer accepted and paid the price of a portion of the goods and then discovered that the plaintiff himself was the real principal in the transaction and not the agent of A. The court granted a recovery to the plaintiff for the nonacceptance by the defendant of the remainder of the goods. In delivering judgment Alderson, B., said: "In many * * * cases, such as for instance the case of contracts in which the skill or solvency of the person who is named as the principal may reasonably be considered as a material ingredient in the contract, it is clear that the agent cannot then show himself to be the real principal, and sue in his own name; and perhaps it may be fairly urged that this, in all executory contracts, if wholly unperformed, or if partly performed without the knowledge of who is the real principal, may be the general rule." See also Boulton v. Jones, 2 H. & N. 564, 27 L. J. Exch. 1117.

In the case of the Boston Ice Co. v. Potter, 123 Mass. 28, 25 Am. Rep. 9, A, who had bought ice of B, ceased to take it on account of dissatisfaction with B, and contracted for ice with C. Subsequently B bought C's business and delivered ice to A without notifying him of his purchase until after delivery and consumption of the ice. Held, that B could not maintain an action for the price of the ice against A. The court said: "A party has a right to select and determine with whom he will contract, and cannot have another person thrust upon him without his consent. It may be of importance to him who performs the contract; * * * he may contract with whom he pleases; the sufficiency of his reasons for so doing cannot be inquired into."

A person has a right to the benefit he anticipates from the credit and character of the person with whom he contracts. Arkansas Valley Smelting Co. v. Belden Min. Co., 127 U. S. 387; Humble v. Hunter, 12 Q. B. 310, 64 E. C. L. 310; Winchester v. Howard, 97 Mass. 303, 93 Am. Dec. 93; Lansden v. McCarthy, 45 Mo. 106.

Robert*, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 413, 27 Am. Dec. 132; Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Tyng, 63 N. Y. 653, affirming without opinion 2 Hun (N. Y.) 311.

And see infra, this title, Rights, Duties, and Liabilities as to Third Parties—Of Third Parties to Principal.

Action for Specific Performance by Execution of Sealed Instrument.—When an agent makes an express unsealed contract in writing in his own name to buy land and to give a deed of trust (i.e., mortgage) thereon to secure unpaid purchase money, he alone has a right of action to compel specific performance of the contract, though the vendor knew the agent was acting for an unnamed principal. Kelly v. Thuey, 102 Mo. 522.

Principal Sufficiently Disclosed to Maintain Action.—In J. H. Hayes Woolen Co. v. McKinnon, 114 N. Car. 661, where a bill of sale stated that the consideration was paid by "W., agent," etc., for the plaintiffs named, it was held that the principals could bring an action on the contract, although the contract was under seal and signed simply in the name of the agent.

In Briggs v. Partridge, 64 N. Y. 357, 21 Am. Rep. 617, affirming 39 N. Y. Super. Ct. 339, the court said: "We find no authority for the proposition that a contract under seal may be turned into the simple contract of a person not in any way appearing on its face to be a party to or interested in it, on proof dehors the instrument that the nominal party was acting as the agent of another." See also Beardsley v. Duntley, 69 N. Y. 577.

(c) Payments Made under Mistake of Fact, or on Illegal Contracts.—An agent has a right of action against a third person for money paid by the agent to such third person under a mistake of fact,¹ or for money paid by the agent upon an illegal contract, the illegality of the contract being unknown to the agent at the time of such payment.²

(2) In Tort—(a) For Injury to Principal's Property in Agent's Possession.—An agent who is in the possession of or entitled to the possession of property belonging to his principal by virtue of the agency, and having a special or general property therein, has a right of action against a third person who unlawfully injures or converts such property.³

(3) For His Own Personal Injury.—Where the agent sustains a personal loss or injury by reason of the fraud, deceit, misrepresentation, or tortious act of a third person, he may maintain an action against the third person for such loss or injury.⁴

In the latter case an agent who had authority only to sell goods belonging to his principal and to pay over the proceeds therefrom to his principal exchanged some of the money in his possession, received from the sale of goods, for a counterfeit bill. The court allowed a recovery to the agent for the money so exchanged, and stated that "it plainly appears that" the agent's "right to recover in this action is the only mode in which he can indemnify himself against the rightful claim of his employer for the loss caused by his abuse of the authority intrusted to him."

4. Story on Agency, §§ 401 a, 414, 415;

c. PRINCIPAL'S RIGHT TO CONTROL ACTION BROUGHT BY AGENT.—The right of the agent to bring an action in his own name, except in the case of a personal injury to himself, is always subject to the direction and control of the principal.¹ The right of the principal to sue takes precedence over that of the agent, but the principal will not be permitted to intervene in such a manner as to defeat any right or interest which the agent may have in the contract.²

d. DEFENSES TO ACTION BROUGHT BY AGENT.—Where an agent sues upon a contract in his own name, the defendant may interpose the same defenses that would be available if the action were brought by the principal,³ in addition to such defenses as would be good against the agent only.⁴

e. LIMIT OF AGENT'S RECOVERY.—(1) On Contract.—When an agent brings an action against a third party for a breach of contract he is entitled to recover damages for its breach, to the same extent as though the action had been brought by the principal.⁵

(2) In Tort.—When an agent has a right of action for an injury to the property of his principal in his possession, he may recover, as against a third person, the full measure of damages for such injury.⁶

New York.—Taintor v. Prendergast, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 72, 38 Am. Dec. 618; Hogan v. Shorb, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 458.

In Hayden v. Alton Nat. Bank, 29 Ill. App. 458, the plaintiff deposited money in the defendant's bank in his name "as agent." Under the findings of fact in the case it appeared that this money belonged to his principal, and in an action by the plaintiff against the bank for the sum so deposited, it was held that the defendant could offset against the plaintiff any indebtedness which they held against his principal.

A defendant may always show that he did not contract with the agent as such, but as principal. Humble v. Hunter, 12 Q. B. 311, 64 E. C. L. 311; Winchester v. Howard, 97 Mass. 303, 93 Am. Dec. 93.

In Groover v. Warfield, 50 Ga. 644, cotton agents brought an action to recover damages resulting from a breach of contract by the buyers of cotton from them, consisting in the failure to complete the purchase. The court granted a recovery for full damages, to wit, the difference between the contract price for the cotton and the value thereof on the day of the breach; although the plaintiffs were bound to pay the same when recovered to their consignors.

The recovery in such cases is based on the theory that the agent sues and recovers as trustee for his principal. U. S. Telegraph Co. v. Gildersleve, 29 Md. 232, 96 Am. Dec. 519.

4. Of Third Parties to Principal—a. ON THE AGENT'S CONTRACTS—

(1) Principal may Maintain Action—(a) When Disclosed.—Where an agent contracts for and in the name of his principal, the agent is the mere medium by which the contract is effected, and the principal may enforce the contract to the same effect and in the same manner as though he had made it personally.¹

Equities against Agent.—And the third party will not be entitled to offset any equities thereto which he may have against the agent.²

(b) When Undisclosed—aa. IN GENERAL.—Where an agent enters into a contract as though made for himself, and the existence of a principal is not disclosed, the principal may, as a general rule, enforce the contract.³

Measure of Damages in Tort.—The special property man in his right of action against a third party or stranger can recover the full damages to the property according to the general rule, and holds the balance beyond his own interest in trust for the owner. White v. Webb, 15 Conn. 305, and cases supra.

But as against his principal he can only recover to the extent of his interest. Lyle v. Barker, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 457; Schley v. Lyon, 6 Ga. 530; Pomeroy v. Smith, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 85; Ingersoll v. Van Bokkelen, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 670.

General Rule.—In Destrehan v. Louisiana Cypress Lumber Co., 45 La. Ann. 920, the court said: "Whatever an agent does within the scope of his authority is, in legal effect, the act of his principal, who is entitled to its advantages and is also subject to its liabilities."

Principal must Prove Scope of Special Agency.—Where a contract is signed as by a special agent, it is incumbent on the principal to show the extent of the agent's authority or a ratification of the contract. Johnson v. Alabama Gas, etc., Mfg. Co., 90 Ala. 505.

In Bayley v. Onondaga County Mut. Ins. Co., 6 Hill (N. Y.) 476, 41 Am. Dec. 759, it was held that suit should be brought in the name of the principal on a contract which on its face purports to be made by or with an agent having no direct or beneficial interest in the transaction, as the contract is in legal effect made with the principal, and not with the agent.

In Semenza v. Brinsley, 18 C. B. N. S. 467, 114 E. C. L. 467, it was held that a party who bought goods of a person whom he knew to be selling them as agent could not set off in an action by the principal for the price, a debt due to him from the agent, even though he did not at the time of the purchase know, and had not the means of knowing, who was the real owner.

In Sims v. Bond, 5 B. & Ad. 389, 27 E. C. L. 97, 2 N. & M. 608, Lord Denman says: "It is a well-established rule of law that where a contract, not under seal, is made with an agent in his own name, * * * either the agent or the principal may sue upon it; the defendant in the latter case being entitled to be placed in the same situation at the time of the disclosure of the real principal, as if the agent had been the contracting party."

L. 530; McCarthy v. Cooper, 8 Ont. Rep. 316, affirmed in 12 Ont. App. Rep. 284. In this case an undisclosed principal was allowed to maintain an action for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of lands owned by the principal, signed by the agent in his own name. See also V. Hudon Cotton Co. v. Canada Shipping Co., 13 Can. Supreme Ct. 401, reversing 3 L. N. 170.

When Principal must Give Notice.—A party entering into a contract under the assumed character of an agent, either upon concealing or falsely representing the name of the principal when in fact he is the real principal, cannot maintain an action on such contract as principal, without first giving the third party notice of his real character. Foster v. Smith, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 474, 88 Am. Dec. 604; Bickerton v. Burrell, 5 M. & S. 383.

Principal must Show Agency.—The principal must show the agency and the power of the agent to bind him at the time of making the contract. Ruiz v. Norton, 4 Cal. 355, 60 Am. Dec. 618.

Insurance Contracts.—Where an agent makes an insurance contract for his principal who is undisclosed, and the policy is in the name of the agent who has no insurable interest in the property insured, the principal may recover in case of a loss, from the underwriters, by an action brought in his own name. McCollum v. Aetna Ins. Co., 20 U. C. C. P. 289; Stearns v. Reidy, 18 Ill. App. 582; Bell v. Gilson, 1 B. & P. 345, and note of De Vignier v. Swanson, 1 B. & P. 345; Browning v. Provincial Ins. Co., L. R. 5 P. C. 263.

See title INSURANCE.

Foreign Principal.—A foreign principal may maintain an action in his own name for goods sold by his agent, although no principal is disclosed at the time of the sale. Barry v. Page, 10 Gray (Mass.) 398; Taintor v. Prendergast, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 72, 38 Am. Dec. 618; Ilisley v. Merriam, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 242, 54 Am. Dec. 721.

But in Merrick's Estate, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 9, the contrary was held. The court said that where exclusive credit is given to and by a factor acting for a foreign principal, a suit cannot be sustained by the principal except through the factor.

Principal Residing in Another State of the Union.—In Barham v. Bell, 112 N. Car. 131, the court said: "We do not regard it as entirely settled that a foreign principal cannot maintain an action upon such a contract [where the principal is undisclosed]; but however this may be, it seems clear that while the states of the American Union are in some senses foreign to each other, yet, so far as concerns the reason of the rule,  they do not bear the same reciprocal relations as does one of these states to a transatlantic country."

Agent's Contract with Common Carrier.—In tract, unless the agent is devoid of the indicia of property or authority,¹ he must do so subject to all the equities thereto existing between the third party and the agent.²

St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Thacher, 13 Kan. 564, an agent acted for himself and also for an undisclosed principal, and entered into a contract in his own name with the defendant company for the transportation of certain cattle, a part of the cattle belonging to the agent and part to the principal. The cattle were injured in transportation, through the negligence of the defendant company. The principal was allowed to maintain an action in his own name for the loss which he had sustained.

In Elkins v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 19 N. H. 337, 51 Am. Dec. 184, it was held that where an agent without disclosing the name of the principal makes a contract with a common carrier to transport property of the principal, the latter may maintain an action in his own name against the carrier to recover damages for the loss of the property.

Broker and Factor.—Where goods are sold by a broker without disclosing his principal, the purchaser, when sued by the principal for the price, cannot set off a debt due to him from the broker. But where a sale is made by a factor, the purchaser, as a general rule, where the principal is undisclosed may set off a debt owing him from the factor. Bliss v. Bliss, 7 Bosw. (N. Y.) 339.

The reason for this rule with regard to brokers is thus stated by the court in Baring v. Corrie, 2 B. & Ald. 137: The broker "has not the possession of the goods, and so the vendee cannot be deceived by that circumstance; and besides, the employing of a person to sell goods as a broker does not authorize him to sell in his own name. If, therefore, he sells in his own name, he acts beyond the scope of his authority, and his principal is not bound. But it is said that by these means the broker would be enabled by his principal to deceive innocent persons. The answer, however, is obvious, that that cannot be so, unless the principal delivers over to him the possession and indicia of property."

When Set-off must Accrue.—In McCobb v. Lindsay, 2 Cranch (C. C.) 215, it was held that the set-off must be due and payable at the time when the right to offset equities is claimed.

In Kennedy v. Turnbull, 15 New Bruns. 378, it was held that the right of set-off must accrue before the third party had knowledge of a principal.

Third Party must Show Lack of Knowledge.—And the third party, in order to avail himself, at the principal's suit, of any equities as against the agent, must be able to show that he did not know and had no means of knowing that the party with whom he was contracting was a mere agent in the transaction.¹

cc. EXCEPTIONS.—There are, however, exceptions to the rule that the undisclosed principal may sue upon a contract made with the agent as principal. Thus, where the contract is under seal, and the existence of an agency is undisclosed;² or where the contract is a negotiable bill or note, and the party seeking to avail himself of it as principal is not named in the instrument;³ or where a personal trust or confidence is reposed by the other party in the agent who contracted in his own name;⁴ or, according to some authorities, where

Prerequisites to Right of Set-off.—In Ex p. Dixon, 4 Ch. Div. 133, the court held that in the case of a contract of sale the following conditions must be complied with to establish a set-off: "1, that the sale should be made by a person intrusted with the possession of the goods; 2, that the agent should sell the goods as his own, and in his own name as principal, by the authority of the principal; and 3, that the purchaser dealt with the agent as, and believed him to be, the principal in the transaction up to the time when the set-off occurred."

Constructive Notice of Fact of Agency.—In Miller v. Lea, 35 Md. 407, 6 Am. Rep. 417, the court, after referring to the general rule that the third party at the suit of the principal is entitled to the benefit of all equities as against the agent when the fact of the agency is undisclosed, says: The third party "must be cautious and not act regardless of the rights of the principal, * * * if he has any reasonable grounds to believe that the party with whom he deals is but an agent. Hence, if the character of the seller is equivocal, if he is known to be in the habit of selling sometimes as principal and sometimes as agent, * * * and the buyer chooses to make no inquiry, and it should turn out that he has bought of an undisclosed principal, he will be denied the benefit of his set-off. If by due diligence the buyer could have known in what character the seller acted, there would be no justice in allowing the former to set off a bad debt at the expense of the principal."

It is held that a mere general knowledge on the part of the third party that the person with whom he is contracting is a factor, if he also carry on business on his own account, will not be sufficient to charge the third party with notice, and that he must know or have good reason to believe that such person is acting as the agent for some other person in that particular transaction. Hogan v. Shorb, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 458; Bliss v. Bliss, 7 Bosw. (N. Y.) 347; Moore v. Clementson, 2 Campb. 22.

And the defendant is a competent witness on the question of knowledge. Frame v. William Penn Coal Co., 97 Pa. St. 309.

Knowledge of Agency Only.—Where a purchaser at a sale made by an agent under a power in a mortgage has knowledge of the fact of agency, though not of the principal's name, he is put on inquiry as to the name of the principal; and if, instead of paying the purchase money according to the terms of the sale, he makes an agreement with the agent prejudicial to the rights of the principal, he can claim no advantage from his ignorance of the principal's name. Whelan v. McCreary, 64 Ala. 319.

4. Boston Ice Co. v. Potter, 123 Mass. 28, 25 Am. Rep. 9; King v. Batterson, 13 R. I. 117, 43 Am. Rep. 13.

In Boston Ice Co. v. Potter, 123 Mass. 28, 25 Am. Rep. 9, the court, by Endicott, J., said: "A party has a right to select and determine with whom he will contract, and cannot have another person thrust upon him without his consent. It may be of importance to him who performs the contract: as when he contracts with another to paint a picture, or write a book, or furnish articles of a particular kind; or when he relies upon the character or qualities of an individual; or has, as in this case, reasons why he does not wish to deal with a particular party. In all these cases, as he may contract with whom he pleases, the sufficiency of his reasons for so doing cannot be inquired into."

Undisclosed Principal, One with Whom the Other Party would Not have Dealt.—If the person who seeks to avail himself of a contract made by another is one with whom, for personal reasons, the other party to the agreement would the agent contracts expressly in writing as principal.¹

b. FOR PROPERTY WRONGFULLY TRANSFERRED TO THIRD PARTY—(1) When Principal may Recover—(a) In General.—The principal may, in general, recover his own property or its value from third persons, where it has been transferred or disposed of by an agent contrary to his instructions or duty,² unless the principal has invested the agent with the indicia of title to the property or authority to make such disposition, and the third party be a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice;³ when redress will be denied, for the

not have contracted had he known that such person was the real principal, it has been held, for the reasons just stated, that such an undisclosed principal could not avail himself of the contract. Winchester v. Howard, 97 Mass. 303, 93 Am. Dec. 93. See also Boston Ice Co. v. Potter, 123 Mass. 28, 25 Am. Rep. 9.

Indemnity Contracts.—In Peoria Second Nat. Bank v. Diefendorf, 90 Ill. 396, it is held that the rule that a promise to an agent is one to the principal, upon which he may maintain an action, is not to be applied to the prejudice of a promisor who is ignorant of that relation. It cannot be applied in behalf of an unknown principal so as to convert a promise of indemnity upon a draft, understood as made to the payee, into one as made to the drawer, and change the relation of the promisor towards the drawer from one of guarantor as supposed, into that of principal debtor.

Some cases have gone even further, and held that where one signed a note or bill as "principal" he could not prove that he was in fact a surety for another signing the same instrument.

Common-law Rule.—The common-law rule as to the power of an agent to bind his principal by disposition of his goods is stated in Warner v. Martin, 11 How. (U. S.) 224, as follows: "That to acquire a good title to the employer's property by purchasing it from his agent, such purchase must have been either in market overt and without knowledge of the seller's representative capacity, or from an agent acting according to his instructions, or from one acting in the usual course of his employment and whom the buyer did not know to be transgressing his instructions, or that he had not such notice as the law deems equivalent to raise that presumption."

Agent's Liability No Defense.—The fact of the liability of the agent to the principal for his wrongful act is no defense to the principal's action against a third party, Bertholf v. Quinlan, 68 Ill. 297; or that the third party has promised to pay the agent for an indebtedness owing the principal. Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank v. King, 57 Pa. St. 202, 98 Am. Dec. 215.

Pennsylvania.—McMahon v. Sloan, 12 Pa. St. 229, 51 Am. Dec. 601; Barker v. Dinsmore, 72 Pa. St. 429, 13 Am. Rep. 697; Quinn v. Davis, 78 Pa. St. 15.

Prerequisites to Create Estoppel in Principal.—In Barnard v. Campbell, 55 N. Y. 456, 14 Am. Rep. 289, the court said: "Two things must concur to create an estoppel by which an owner may be deprived of his property, by the act of a third person, without his assent. * * * First, the owner must clothe the person assuming to dispose of the property, with the apparent title to or authority to dispose of it; and second, the person alleging the estoppel must have acted and parted with value upon the faith of such apparent ownership or authority, so that he will be the loser if the appearances to which he trusted are not real." The court also said: "It is not every parting with the possession of chattels or the documentary evidence of title that will enable the possessor to make a good title to one who may purchase from him. So far as such a reason that where one of two innocent parties must suffer, it must be the one who made the commission of the wrong possible.¹

parting with the possession is necessary in the business of life, or authorized by the custom of trade, the owner of the goods will not be affected by a sale by the one having the custody and manual possession." Citing Dyer v. Pearson, 3 B. & C. 38, 10 E. C. L. 13; Newsom v. Thorton, 6 East 17; Taylor v. Kymer, 3 B. & A. 320, 23 E. C. L. 81; Ballard v. Burgett, 40 N. Y. 314. "But the owner must go farther and do some act of a nature to mislead third persons as to the true possession of the title." See also Barnard v. Campbell, 58 N. Y. 73, 17 Am. Rep. 208.

Mere Possession as Indication of Title or Authority.—The mere possession of a chattel by whatever means acquired, if there be no other indicia of property or authority to sell from the true owner, will not enable the possessor to give a good title. Gilman Linseed Oil Co. v. Norton, 89 Iowa 434; Covill v. Hill, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 323; Edwards v. Dooley, 120 N. Y. 540, affirming 13 N. Y. St. Rep. 596; Brewster v. Sime, 42 Cal. 147.

In McNeil v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 325, 7 Am. Rep. 341, the owner of certain bank shares delivered them to his broker indorsed with a blank assignment and irrevocable power of transfer, and this was held to be such investment of title as would estop the principal from a recovery where the broker pledged the securities as collateral for a loan.

In Levi v. Booth, 58 Md. 305, 42 Am. Rep. 332, the owner of a valuable ring placed it in the possession of an agent, a dealer and trader in jewelry, who had no established place of business, to obtain a match for it or, failing in that, to secure an offer for it. The agent sold the ring. The principal was allowed to recover from the third party for the value of the ring, and the court held that the principal had not clothed the agent with such indicia of property that he could convey a good title.

Possession of Auctioneer or Factor.—But where the agent, from the nature of his employment as an auctioneer or factor, is invested with the possession of his principal's property, the indicia of authority to sell will be presumed, Nixon v. Brown, 57 N. H. 34; see also Smith v. Clews, 105 N. Y. 283, 59 Am. Rep. 502; but not to pledge or dispose of the property by other means than by a sale. Boisblanc's Succession, 32 La. Ann. 109; Newsom v. Thorton, 6 East 17.

Agent's Construction of Ambiguous Authority.—When an agent is invested with authority which is so uncertain as to be susceptible of two different constructions and the agent adopts the one least favorable to his principal, the principal cannot repudiate the agent's selection as unauthorized. Chetwood v. Berrian, 39 N. J. Eq. 203; Ireland v. Livingston, L. R. 5 H. L. 416.

When Agent Can Give Better Title than He Has.

—The general rule that no one can transfer a better title than he himself possesses must be taken with some exceptions: first, in the case of negotiable instruments transferred by indorsement in the usual form and to a bona fide holder, Barnard v. Campbell, 55 N. Y. 456, 14 Am. Rep. 289; Lancaster Nat. Bank v. Taylor, 100 Mass. 18, 97 Am. Dec. 70, 1 Am. Rep. 71; second, in the case of a transfer by indorsement and delivery of a bill of lading to a bona fide purchaser for value by the agent to whom the consignor and principal has indorsed and delivered, Barnard v. Campbell, 55 N. Y. 456, 14 Am. Rep. 289; third, at common law, in the case of goods sold in market overt, Barnard v. Campbell, 55 N. Y. 456, 14 Am. Rep. 289; Parsons v. Webb, 8 Me. 38, 22 Am. Dec. 220; Baring v. Currie, 2 B. & Ald. 148; McMahon v. Sloan, 12 Pa. St. 229, 51 Am. Dec. 601; fourth, where an agent having his principal's money in his possession pays the same to a third party in a bona fide transaction. Burnham v. Holt, 14 N. H. 367; Lang v. Smyth, 7 Bing. 284, 20 E. C. L. 130; Mason v. Waite, 17 Mass. 560. See also Saltus v. Everett, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 267, 32 Am. Dec. 541.

Circumstances of Sale Putting Buyer on Inquiry.—In Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195, the plaintiff left his carriage with B., a carriage maker, to be repaired, and directed him to sell the same if he had an opportunity. At the same time B.'s property was under attachment and subsequently was sold, and after the sale B. directed the auctioneer to sell the carriage, which was done and the defendant bid it off. The court held that the circumstances were such as to put the defendant on inquiry, and that he could not hold the property as against the plaintiff, and that under the circumstances it was the defendant's duty to inquire into the nature and extent of the authority conferred by the principal and deal with the agent accordingly.

Equity will Protect Third Party.—Where a third person has purchased from an agent in a bona fide transaction and paid the consideration under the supposition that the agent was duly authorized to make the sale, a court of equity will protect the purchaser, if it can do so consistently with principles of law. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Masten, 3 Fed. Rep. 881.

Factor's or Agent's Acts.—In England, and in many of the states of the Union, statutes have been enacted for the protection of third persons who, in good faith, deal with agents or factors who are entrusted by their principals with the possession of, or documents of title to, property. For a construction of some of the various statutes, see the following authorities: Navulshaw v. Brownrigg, 1 Sim. N. S. 573, 2 De G. M. & G. 441; Jewan v. Whitworth, L. R. 2 Eq. 692; Cole v. North Western Bank, L. R. 10 C. P. 354, 44 L. J. C. P. 233; Kaltenbach v. Lewis, L. R. 10 App. Cas. 617, and Vickers v. Hertz, L. R. 2 H. L.

(b) Property, Bartered, Pledged, or Mortgaged.—Where an agent having only the indicia of authority to sell, barter,¹ pledges,² or mortgages³ his principal's property to a third party, the principal may recover from the third party the property or its value, as an authority to sell means a sale for cash.⁴

(c) Property Used to Pay Agent's Debt—aa. BY AGENT.—Where an agent, as such, having a general authority to sell, transfers his principal's goods to a third party in payment of his (the agent's) debt, the principal may, as a general rule, recover from the third party the goods so transferred, or the value thereof.⁵

Agent with Lien.—Where an agent has a lien upon his principal's goods he may secure his debt with the goods to the extent of his lien. And where the third party takes them only to the extent of such lien, the principal must tender the amount of the lien due the agent before he will be entitled to recover the goods so pledged. *Warner v. bb. BY SEIZURE UNDER EXECUTION OR ATTACHMENT.—Where property is placed in the possession of a party as agent, and he has no tangible interest in the property, and the property is seized under an attachment or execution against the agent for his debt, the principal may recover the property from the person making such seizure.¹

(d) Securities.—Where an agent makes an unauthorized release or transfer of securities belonging to his principal, the latter may recover for the securities so released or transferred unless he has conferred upon the agent the usual indicia of ownership or right of disposal, and the release or transfer be to one who acquires on the faith of such indicia without notice and for a valuable consideration.²

(2) Principal may Follow Property.—And where the principal is entitled to recover the property or the proceeds therefrom, he may follow the same and recover, so long as it is distinguishable and separable from other property or assets, from any person, unless he is a bona fide holder for value and without notice.³

And in case of a sale under execution no interest or title will pass to a purchaser. Sires v. Newton, 1 Wash. Ter. 356.

Principal Estopped by Knowledge and Acquiescence.—But where a principal has full knowledge of supplemental proceedings against his agent, where the property of the principal in the hands of the agent is sought to be applied as the property of the agent to the payment of a judgment against him, and such principal fails to intervene or otherwise protect his interests, he will be estopped from complaining if a loss ensues. Murne v. Schwabacher, 2 Wash. Ter. 191.

In Reed v. McIlroy, 44 Ark. 346, the court said: "In a proper case a creditor may subject what is only apparently the property of an agent to the payment of his debt;" and it was held that such a proper case would arise where the creditor had been misled by appearances or by the conduct of the parties into giving the agent credit upon a false basis. See also, to same effect, Benner v. Michel, 23 La. Ann. 489.

West Virginia.—The West Virginia Code, p. 704, § 13, provides that if any person transacts business as a trader, with the addition of the words "factor," "agent," or "and company," and fails to disclose the name of his principal by a proper sign or publication as therein provided, or if any person transact such business in his own name, all the property, etc., used in such business shall, as to the creditors of such person, be liable for his debts. This does not apply to a licensed auctioneer or to a commission merchant. It has been held that a person selling agricultural implements as agent for the manufacturers, receiving a commission for his services in disposing of the same, although on his sign appear the words "Mfrs.' Agent," is not within the operation of this statute, and property belonging to his principal seized under an execution against the agent may be recovered by the principal. Brown Mfg. Co. v. Deering, 35 W. Va. 255.

Mississippi.—Under a similar statute, Mississippi Code, § 1300, it is held that on a failure to give the required notice the property in the agent's possession would be subject to execution against him, regardless of whether the creditors were misled or their claims antedated the business. Quin v. Myles, 59 Miss. 375; Gumbel v. Koon, 59 Miss. 264.

Transfer by Agent of Negotiable Notes Payable to Principal.—In Robinson v. Anderson, 106 Ind. 152, it is held that where an agent with mere authority to sell goods and take notes payable to his principal in settlement, and to collect such notes as may be sent to him for collection, surrenders to the maker before they are due, without the consent of his principal, notes belonging and payable to the latter, and receives therefor notes of like amount, maturing at the same dates, payable to himself, the principal is not bound by the transaction, and may recover on the original notes.

In Read v. Cumberland Tel., etc., Co., 93 Tenn. 482, it was held that a corporation making a transfer of its stock with knowledge of a lack of authority on the part of the agent who directs and signs the transfer, may be compelled to restore the principal to his rights as stockholder. Virginia.—Overseers of Poor v. Virginia Bank, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 545, 44 Am. Dec. 399.

Extent of Right to Follow Proceeds.—In Overseers of Poor v. Virginia Bank, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 545, 44 Am. Dec. 399, the court said: "The well-settled principles of law entitle a principal in all cases where he can trace his property, whether it be in the hands of the agent or of his representatives or assignees, to reclaim it unless it has been transferred bona fide to a purchaser of it, or assignee for value without notice. In such cases it is wholly immaterial whether the property be in its original state or has been converted into money, securities, negotiable instruments, or other property, if it be distinguishable and separable from the other property or assets and has an ear-mark or other appropriate identity."

In Scott v. Surman, Willes 400, a case where goods were consigned to an agent for sale, and he sold them and received money, and a short time afterwards became bankrupt, the court held that if the agent did not purchase with the proceeds any specific thing capable of being distinguished from the rest of his property, the principal could not recover the whole proceeds of the sale from the assignees, but must come in with the other creditors pro rata. But if the thing purchased remains in specie in the agent's hands at the time of his bankruptcy, the principal could recover the goods in trover from the assignees; or if the agent who sold the goods for his principal became bankrupt before payment and his assignees afterwards received the money for them, the principal could recover it from them in an action for money had and received; or if the agent on such a sale had taken notes in payment from the vendee, payable to him at a future time, and his assignees afterwards received the money due on the notes, the principal could recover it from the assignees in a like action. See also Thompson v. Perkins, 3 Mason (U. S.) 232.

Test of Bona Fides.—To charge a third person as a party to the misappropriation of a trust fund, it must be shown that he knowingly partakes in the breach of trust; "that he must know or have proof of facts which in law characterize the transaction as a breach of trust." Chicago Fifth Nat. Bank v. Hyde Park, 101 Ill. 595, 40 Am. Rep. 218.

Extent of Principal's Right of Recovery.—The principal must be able to point out his fund or the proceeds derived from it and to trace it through its transformations so as to show that it is not a fund or product to which all other creditors of the delinquent might have an equal right to resort. Trust, etc., Bank v. Buffalo First Nat. Bank, 15 Fed. Rep. 858. And the right of the principal ceases only when the means of ascertainment fail. Overseers of Poor v. Virginia Bank, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 544, 44 Am. Right of Principal against Bank Receiving

(b) Proceeds of Restrictively Indorsed Paper.—Commercial paper in the possession of an agent, as such, bearing a restrictive indorsement, will be notice to all persons subsequently dealing with it that it was intended for a special purpose, and, unless it appears to the contrary, that the principal does not intend to transfer the title or ownership of the proceeds thereof. A third person, therefore, who appropriates the proceeds of such paper to another than its designated object, will be liable to the principal for such misappropriation.¹

(c) Money Lost on Wager Contracts.—Where an agent as a party to a gambling transaction loses his principal's money therein, the principal, in those jurisdictions permitting money lost on a wager to be recovered by the loser from the winner, may recover from the latter the amount so lost.²

(2) Principal may Follow Fund.—Equity will regard the beneficial owner and follow the fund for his benefit through any number of transmutations so long as it can be identified.³

Deposit from Agent.—In Frazier v. Erie Bank, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 18, it was held that if an agent procure the note of his principal to be discounted, and deposit the proceeds in a bank in his own name, the principal may maintain an action therefor against the bank, though the bank had no notice, when the deposit was made, that the money deposited did not belong to the agent. See also Merrill v. Norfolk Bank, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 32. But if the debt had been paid in answer to the agent's checks, the liability of the bank, in the absence of interference by the principal, would have been extinguished. Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank v. King, 57 Pa. St. 202, 98 Am. Dec. 215.

Loan by Agent of Principal's Money—Effect of Subsequent Notice to Borrower.—If an agent receives the money of his principal and lends it, taking a promissory note payable to himself, the note belongs to the principal, and the borrower may not pay the agent after he has been informed of the principal's superior right. Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank v. King, 57 Pa. St. 202, 98 Am. Dec. 215. See also Childers v. Bowen, 68 Ala. 221.

Principal's Money Paid by Agent for the Benefit of Third Party.—In Young v. Dibrell, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 270, it was held that where an agent paid out the money of his principal in discharge of a debt due by another, that the principal had no cause of action against him for whose benefit his money had been paid, as no one can be a debtor without his own consent.

Indorsement—"Pay, etc., for My Use."—In

Sigourney v. Lloyd, 8 B. & C. 622, 15 E. C. L. 319, 5 Bing. 525, 15 E. C. L. 527, a payee indorsed generally to the plaintiff, who indorsed as follows: "Pay B. or order for my use." The defendants discounted the instrument and applied the proceeds to the credit of B. It was held that the indorsement was sufficient notice to prevent its transfer for the benefit of any person other than the plaintiff, that all subsequent indorsees were to be considered as trustees for him, and that whoever advanced any money on it did so at his peril.

Indorsement for Collection.—In Sweeny v. Easter, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 166, the court said that the meaning of an indorsement "for collection" was to limit the effect which would have been given to the indorsement without the use of those words, and the expression used warned the party that, contrary to the purpose of a general or blank indorsement, this was not intended to transfer the property in the note or its proceeds. See also Crown Point First Nat. Bank v. Richmond First Nat. Bank, 76 Ind. 561, 40 Am. Rep. 261; Cecil Bank v. Farmers Bank, 22 Md. 148.

Indorsement Not Indicating Restriction.—Where the principal has invested the agent with what appears to the world as an absolute title by an indorsement in blank, with nothing to excite inquiry or suspicion, an innocent third party dealing with such agent as owner will be protected. *Morris v. d. FOR MONEY PAID UNDER MISTAKE OF FACT—Principal may Recover.—Where an agent under a mistake of fact makes a payment of his principal's money to a third person, which ought not to have been made, the third person will be liable to the principal for the money so received.¹

e. FOR BREACH OF WARRANTY AND MISREPRESENTATION—Principal may Recover Damages.—Whether the principal is disclosed or not, if his agent enters into a contract for his benefit and there is a breach of warranty or fraudulent representation, on the part of the third party, to the damage of the principal, he may recover from such third party for any loss or damage caused thereby.²

f. FOR SURREPTITIOUS DEALINGS OF THIRD PARTY WITH AGENT—Principal's Rights.—As a general rule, based on grounds of public policy, an agent cannot act so as to bind his principal, where he has or represents interests adverse to those of his principal.³ Where, therefore, an agent, by reason

1. Stevenson v. Mortimer, Cowp. 805; Ancher v. Bank of England, 2 Doug. 638. See also Georgia Code, § 2205, and the title MISTAKE.

Illustrations of Money Paid under Mistake.—In Stevenson v. Mortimer, Cowp. 805, Lord Mansfield said: "Where a man pays money by his agent, which ought not to have been paid, either the agent or principal may bring an action to recover it back. The agent may, from the authority of the principal; and the principal may, as proving it to have been paid by his agent."

In Ancher v. Bank of England, 2 Doug. 638, a bill of exchange was drawn by the plaintiff, and was restrictively indorsed; by a subsequent forged indorsement it came into the possession of the defendant. On the maturity of the bill, the plaintiff's agent, believing that the defendants were entitled to payment, paid the bill. The court held that the plaintiff could recover from the defendant the money so paid.

Illegal Fees Exacted of Agent.—It seems that where illegal fees are exacted from the agent, the principal may recover them from the person demanding and receiving the same, as well as a penalty for such exaction where the penalty is imposed by statute. Holman v. Frost, 26 S. Car. 290.

Right of Action for Misrepresentations of Third Party to Agent.—In Cushing v. Rice, 46 Me. 303, 71 Am. Dec. 579, the court said: "In case of a purchase * * * of goods by an agent, even if the principal be not disclosed, or the bill of sale be made to the agent himself, the property, immediately upon the execution of the contract, vests in the principal; and the right of action upon an implied warranty, or on fraudulent representations made to the agent, is in the principal; for the damages, which ground the action, follow the property."

The principal's right of action is not affected by the fact that exclusive credit was given to the agent, it being known that he was contracting for a principal. White v. Owen, 12 Vt. 361.

Secret Bonus by Other Party to Agent.—In Smith v. Sorby, 3 Q. B. Div. 552, 28 Moak's Rep. 455, it is held that where a secret bonus is given to an agent, with intent to interest his mind in favor of a third party, and the agent subsequently enters into a contract with such giver on behalf of his principal, and is actually influenced by such bonus in assenting to stipulations prejudicial to the interests of his principal, even though the bonus was not given with direct reference to that contract, the contract is fraudulent as against the principal, and voidable at his option. See also Harrington v. Victoria Graving Dock Co., 3 Q. B. Div. 549, 28 Moak's Rep. 549.

Such Contracts Voidable in Equity at Suit of Principal.—In Fish v. Leser, 69 Ill. 394, it is held that where an agent, employed by his principal to sell property, makes a sale to a purchaser for whom he is acting as agent in effecting the purchase, a court of equity will not at the suit of the purchaser enforce a specific performance of the contract, but the principal in equity may avoid the contract.

1. In Panama, etc., Tel. Co. v. India Rubber, etc., Co., L. R. 10 Ch. 515, the telegraph works company agreed with the telegraph cable company to lay a cable to be paid for by a sum payable when the cable was begun, and by twelve instalments payable on certificates by the cable company's engineer, who was named in the contract. Shortly afterwards the engineer, who was engaged to lay other cables for the works company, agreed with them to lay this cable also for the sum named to be paid to him by instalments, payable by the works company when they received the instalments from the cable company, and the court held that, under the circumstances, the agreement between the engineer and the works company was a fraud, which entitled the cable company to have their contract rescinded, and to receive back the money which they had paid under their contract. In delivering judgment in this case, James, L. J., said: "According to my view of the law of this court, I take it to be clear that any surreptitious dealing between one principal and the agent of the other principal is a fraud on such other principal, cognizable in this court. That I take to be a clear proposition, and I take it, according to my view, to be equally clear that the defrauded principal, if he comes in time, is entitled, at his option, to have the contract rescinded, or, if he elects not to have it rescinded, to have such other adequate relief as the court may think right to give him."

Recovery against Agent.—In Keator v. St. John, 42 Fed. Rep. 585, it is held that the principal may recover from the agent the bonus he has received, and also damages for false representations made by the agent to him.

personal injury to the agent incapacitates him from performing his duties as agent,¹ or wrongfully prevents the agent from the performance of such duties,² the principal, if his interests are injured by such wrongful act, may recover from the third party to the extent of his loss caused by such injury.

h. PRINCIPAL'S RIGHT OF ACTION SUPERIOR TO AGENT'S—(1) In General.—The principal's right to enforce a contract made for his benefit is paramount to that of the agent, and in a case where either of them may bring an action on the contract the principal may intervene and terminate the agent's right.³ But such intervention will not be permitted to operate in such a manner as to deprive the agent of any claim or lien he may have on the subject matter of the contract.⁴

(2) Third Party cannot Dispute Agency.—When a principal assumes a contract, whether made by an agent or a subagent; whether authorized or not, the third party, at the principal's suit to enforce the same, cannot question the authority of the agent.⁵

i. DEFENSES TO PRINCIPAL'S ACTION—(1) Payment to Agent.—Where the principal is undisclosed and there is no notice that there is a principal, or where the principal has invested the agent with the indicia of authority to receive payment, a payment to the agent is a good payment and will release the third party from liability to the principal.⁶

(2) Fraudulent Acts of Agent.—As the principal is liable to third persons in a civil suit for fraud, misfeasance, or neglect of duty on the part of his agent while within the scope of his authority, so at the suit of the principal to enforce a contract made by an agent, whether the principal be disclosed or not at the time of the making of the contract, the third party may set up any defense thereto by reason of fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the agent, whereby he was induced to enter into the contract.⁷

In Warder v. White, 14 Ill. App. 50, the court said: "The rule of law is that the right of the principal to sue is paramount to that of the agent, and in cases where either may bring the action, the former, by giving notice to the other contracting party, puts an end to the agent's right of action, except in cases where the agent has a lien upon the subject matter of the action equal to the claim of the principal."

May Show Real Party in Interest.—But a defendant may show that the agent with whom he dealt, and not the plaintiff, is the real party in interest, and to that end may ask the plaintiffs, in the case of a sale, whether they charged the property sold to the defendant, and where the money would go if paid, and what interest the plaintiffs had in the sale made by the agent. (3) Judgments when Conclusive.—Agents and principals are not, as such, in privity with each other in respect to property rights, and the principal is not concluded in that regard by a suit brought against his agent.¹

X. RATIFICATION.—1. Nature.—Ratification as it relates to the law of agency is the express or implied adoption of the acts of another by one for whom the other assumes to be acting, but without authority; and this results as effectively to establish the duties, rights, and liabilities of an agency as if the acts ratified had been fully authorized in the beginning.²

Ratification of Contract—No New Consideration.—So that in the case of contracts no new or additional consideration is required to support the ratification, for in adopting the contract the ratifier accepts it as duly authorized from the beginning with the original consideration.³

Judgment against Agent Held Binding against Principal.—Where the plaintiff's commission merchant, who had purchased and delivered highwines in performance of the plaintiff's contract, and had exercised due care and prudence in the matter, upon learning that the purchaser had shipped part of the same and was in the act of shipping the balance without payment replevied the same, giving the plaintiff notice to prosecute the suits, which he failed to do, and the commission merchant was defeated in the suits, the bills of lading having been transferred to innocent purchasers, after which he paid over the proceeds of the wines he had replevied to the parties entitled to the same in the replevin suit, it was held, in an action by the plaintiff against the commission merchant to recover the proceeds of the sale of the wines, that the plaintiff could not recover, as the adjudication in the replevin suits was binding on him and showed that they belonged to other persons. Phillips v. Moir, 69 Ill. 155.

But in White v. Dolliver, 113 Mass. 400, 18 Am. Rep. 502, it was held that one whose property has been replevied by a writ against his agent or his bailee can retake it by replevin from the plaintiff in the first action, even during the pendency of that action. In delivering the opinion of the court in this case, Devens, J., said: "Unless the judgment against the agent or bailee who happens to be in possession of property will settle conclusively the title of the principal, there is no reason why such principal may not maintain this action. But it has been decided, which certainly is a much stronger case, that even a judgment against the principal will not necessarily settle the title of his bailee, such bailee not having been a party to the action. Globe Works v. Wright, 106 Mass. 207."

It seems that a judgment against one as an agent, although recovered for the debt of the principal, who is a nonresident, does not bind the latter, and trespass will lie by him against a person buying his goods at an execution sale on such a judgment. Coe v. English, 6 Houst. (Del.) 562.

Recovery against Agent when Not Bar to Suit against Third Person.—In an action against the vendor of certain lands, for fraud in the sale thereof to the plaintiff, which fraud was effected by the connivance of the plaintiff's agent with the vendor of the land, it was held that the fact that the plaintiff had recovered a judgment against the agent for the amount the latter had received from the vendor as being a secret profit to which the plaintiff was entitled, did not operate, although the judgment was satisfied, as a bar to an action for deceit against the vendor. Glaspie v. Keator, 12 U. S. App. 281, 5 C. C. A. 474, 56 Fed. Rep. 203.

Ratification of Contract.—"Ratification is in Rescission of Ratification.—The ratification, when once made with full knowledge, if even for a moment, is effective, and the principal is bound thereby.¹

Ratification after Disavowal.—A disavowal will not prevent a subsequent ratification,² unless after the disavowal by the principal the third party has abandoned the transaction.³

2. Who may Ratify.—Ratification of a particular act or contract may be made by any one in whose behalf the act or contract has been made, provided such person is capable himself of doing the act or entering into the contract.⁴

A Corporation may ratify a contract made in its behalf, provided it be within its powers, not ultra vires, or otherwise illegal.⁵

Ultra Vires Acts of Corporation.—It cannot, however, subsequently ratify an act which it could not have done when it occurred. A subsequent ratification cannot make valid an unlawful act without the scope of corporate authority.⁶

general the adoption of a previously formed contract, notwithstanding a vice that rendered it relatively void; and by the very nature of the act of ratification, confirmation, or affirmation (all the terms are in use to express the same thing) the party confirming becomes a party to the contract, he that was not bound becomes bound by it and entitled to all the proper benefits of it, he accepts the consideration of the contract as a sufficient consideration for adopting it, and usually this is quite enough to support the ratification. A mere ratification cannot of course correct any defect in the terms of the contract. If it is in its very terms invalid for want of consideration or for any other defect, a mere ratification can add nothing to its binding force." Lowrie, J., in Pearsoll v. Chapin, 44 Pa. St. 17.

A suit to enforce the obligation of a party ratifying an unauthorized act is in effect a suit upon the original contract, and not upon the act of ratification. Grant v. Beard, 50 N. H. 129.

See also infra, this section, Prerequisites of Valid Ratification—Knowledge of Material Facts.

Disaffirmance of Ratification.—In Whitfield v. Riddle, 78 Ala. 99, it was held that the affirmation of an assumed agency in the disposition of property, when made with full knowledge of the facts, is a single act; and that when a party has once ratified such transaction he cannot afterwards be heard to disaffirm it when it turns out contrary to his expectations.

2. Woodward v. Harlow, 28 Vt. 338.

3. No Ratification after Abandonment by Third Party.—Wilkinson v. Harwell, 13 Ala. 660. In this case, where an agent sold land of his principal without authority, and the principal refused to ratify the sale, and the vendee abandoned it, it was held that the principal could not afterwards affirm the act of his agent and enforce the agreement.

Churchill*, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 427, 17 Am. Dec. 159. See also the titles CORPORATION; ULTRA VIRES.

So in Kelsey v. Crawford County Nat. Bank, 69 Pa. St. 429, it was said that the maxim which makes ratification equivalent to a precedent authority, is as much predicable of ratification by a corporation as it is of ratification by any other principal, and it is usually to be presumed from the absence of dissent.

The Vote of a Town Meeting properly called for that purpose, accepting the report of a person assuming to act as agent for the town in conducting certain suits, and authorizing him to compromise suits then pending, was a ratification of his acts. Kinsley v. Norris, 60 N. H. 131.

Ratification by Retention of Benefits.—In Moss v. Rossie Lead Min. Co., 5 Hill (N. Y.) 137, it was held that where property was purchased for a corporation by two of its officers, who gave several notes in the corporate name for the purchase money, and afterwards the property was claimed by the corporation and converted to its own use, this amounted to a ratification of what the officers had done, and that even if the notes were originally given without authority, the corporation was liable upon them.

The Government is liable for the illegal acts of its agents when expressly ratified. Wiggins' Case, 3 Ct. of Cl. 412.

Stranger Cannot Deny the Ratification.—If the principal recognizes and affirms the existence and acts of an agent, a mere stranger will not be permitted to controvert either. Scott v. Detroit Young Men's Soc., 1 Doug. (Mich.) 119.

So where the supervisors of a county possessed no authority to make a subscription or issue bonds in the first instance without the prior sanction of the qualified voters thereof, they could not ratify a subscription already made without such authority.¹

Contracts Made without Statutory Formalities.—And generally, where a contract is invalid for failure to comply with formalities prescribed by statute, a corporation cannot validate it by subsequent ratification.²

Ratification by Agents.—An agent may ratify such acts as he himself has the power to do,³ but he cannot ratify his own unauthorized act.⁴

59 Cal. 517; Lucas v. White Line Transfer Co., 70 Iowa 550, 59 Am. Rep. 449; Taymouth Tp. v. Koehler, 35 Mich. 22; Highway Com'rs v. Van Dusan, 40 Mich. 431; Horton v. Thompson, 71 N. Y. 513; Smith v. Newburgh, 77 N. Y. 130; Hazard v. Durant, 11 R. I. 196. See also the title ULTRA VIRES.

A Contract Ultra Vires is void, and cannot be made valid by a subsequent act of the corporation, because there is no residuary power to confirm it. What they could not make they cannot affirm. A void act can never become valid merely because it remains unquestioned. Per Biddle, J., in Tippecanoe County v. Lafayette, etc., R. Co., 50 Ind. 86.

In Ashbury R. Carriage, etc., Co. v. Riche, L. R. 7 H. L. 653, it was held that the contract in question being in its inception void as contrary to law, could not be ratified even by the whole body of incorporators. Lord Cairns forcefully said: "If the shareholders of this company could not ab ante have authorized a contract of this kind to be made, how could they subsequently sanction the contract after it had, in point of fact, been made? * * * It appears to me that it would be perfectly fatal to the whole scheme of legislation to which I have referred, if you were to hold that, in the first place, directors might do that which even the whole company could not do, and that then the shareholders, finding out what had been done, could sanction subsequently what they could not antecedently have authorized."

1. Marsh v. Fulton County, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 676. In this case Field, J., said: "A ratification is, in its effect upon the act of an agent, equivalent to the possession by him of a previous authority. It operates upon the act ratified in the same manner as though the authority of the agent to do the act existed originally. It follows that a ratification can only be made when the party ratifying possesses the power to perform the act ratified. The supervisors possessed no authority to make the subscription or issue the bonds in the first instance without the previous sanction of the qualified voters of the county. * * * They could not, therefore, ratify a subscription without a vote of the county, because they could not make a subscription in the first instance without such authorization."

An Agent of a Municipal Corporation cannot ratify the unauthorized act of another officer of the corporation in a matter over which he has not authority. Sceery v. Springfield, 112 Mass. 512.

Ratification by Agent of Private Corporation.—Where the agent of a private corporation makes an unauthorized sale or disposition of its property, the full knowledge thereof and acquiescence therein by another agent, the scope of whose authority covers such transaction, may constitute a ratification thereof by the corporation. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Belgart, 84 Ala. 519.

Ratification by Railroad Company.—The adoption or confirmation by a railroad company of the unauthorized act of an employee must be by some chief officer or person having sufficient authority and discretion to act and speak for the company in order to amount to a ratification. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Reed, 80 Tex. 362.

Ratification by General Agent.—A general agent has no authority to ratify the acts of a stranger done in the name of his principal, unless the power of appointing agents has been delegated to him by the principal. Ironwood Store Co. v. Harrison, 75 Mich. 197.

Taking of Note by Attorney.—Where it appeared that the defendant, an attorney, having for collection a claim of the plaintiff, without his knowledge collected the same in Confederate money and loaned it to a third party, who afterwards became bankrupt, taking a note therefor payable to the plaintiff, who afterwards received from the defendant the receipt of other attorneys to whom the note had been delivered for collection, and after having kept it a few days and made inquiry about the drawer, returned it and demanded the money of the defendant; the evidence also tending to show that an agent who had been sent by the plaintiff to look after his claim, upon being informed of the transaction, had expressed himself as satisfied with it—it was held that the jury might well infer a ratification, if not by the plaintiff, at least from the agent in assenting to the transaction. Whitehead v. Wells, 29 Ark. 99.

4. Trudo v. Anderson, 10 Mich. 357, 81 Am. Dec. 795; Hotchin v. Kent, 8 Mich. 526.

Ratification by Partners.—So a partner as a duly authorized agent may ratify in behalf of the firm.¹

Infants and Incompetent Persons.—An infant cannot empower an agent or attorney to act for him, and therefore he cannot affirm what one has assumed to do in his name as such. Persons incompetent to act, and generally persons incompetent from whatever reason to do an act, cannot affirm the act when done by one in their behalf.²

3. What Acts may be Ratified—a. IN GENERAL.—As a corollary to the general rule as to who may ratify acts of a supposed agent, it may be stated, as a general rule, that acts which may be ratified are such as the ratifier might have himself done in the first instance, except that an agent cannot ratify acts of a subagent who assumed an authority which could not be delegated.³ The power to ratify necessarily supposes power to make the contract in the first instance.⁴

Void and Voidable Acts.—Acts therefore which are absolutely null and void cannot be ratified, but those which are merely voidable may be.⁵ So a contract void as against public policy, or against a statute, cannot be ratified, for the confirmation is, of course, affected with the original taint and is necessarily illegal.⁶

Contracts Tainted with Fraud.—So where there is fraud of such a character as to involve a crime, the ratification of the act from which it springs is opposed to public policy, and hence cannot be permitted;⁷ but where the transaction is contrary only to good faith and fair dealing, when it affects individual interests only, ratification is allowable; for if the party with a full knowledge of all the facts voluntarily confirms it, he bars himself from the relief which he otherwise might have had.⁸

1. Forbes v. Hagman, 75 Va. 179. See also the title PARTNERSHIP.

So in Harper v. Devene, 10 La. Ann. 724, where a note issued in the partnership name by a clerk was shown to one of the partners, who corrected the date, saying it was all right, it was held a ratification.

Where one of the new members of a firm received property from an agent of the old firm, such act was held to constitute a ratification. Callanan v. Van Vleck, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 324.

Acceptance of Payment of Account for Attorney.

—In O'Connor v. Arnold, 53 Ind. 203, where an account was placed in the hands of an attorney for collection and the debtor paid a part of the claim to a person who occupied the same office with the attorney, but who had no connection with him, and who gave a receipt for the money so paid, signed by him as for said attorney, it was held that the attorney could not ratify his act on the ground that the agency involved in its duties especial learning and professional skill, and could not be delegated except by the consent of principal.

Act of Public Officer.—The act of a public officer exceeding the authority conferred on him by law may be adopted and ratified by the party for whose benefit it is done. Farmers L. & T. Co. v. Walworth, 1 N. Y. 435.

So in Armstrong v. Garrow, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 465, it was held that the act of the sheriff in releasing a defendant arrested on a ca. sa. on receiving the promissory note of a third person, might have been ratified by the plaintiff by receiving the note. Money Obtained under False Pretense.—In Scott v. New Brunswick Bank, 23 Can. Supreme Ct. 277, it was held that payment to one falsely representing himself as agent of the creditor might be ratified and the agency

b. TORTS.—The doctrine of ratification applies as well to torts when done to the use or for the benefit of him who subsequently adopts them, as to matters of contract.¹

What Amounts to Adoption of Tort.—But to hold one responsible for the tortious act of another not committed by him or by his order, the adoption must be explicit, and with a full knowledge of the facts.²

c. CRIMINAL ACTS—FORGERY.—The adoption or ratification of the criminal act of another tending to shield the criminal or to compound the crime is of no effect.

View that Forgery cannot be Ratified.—Applying this doctrine, it has been held in England and in some of the states of the Union, that where an act of signing is a forgery, the act cannot, from considerations of public policy, be ratified;³ adopted though the person receiving the money had committed an indictable offense by making such representations.

Misappropriation of Funds.—It is a well-settled principle, that if an agent or trustee convert the property confided to him, the principal, or cestui que trust, may, at his election, ratify the transaction, and claim whatever profit is made by it. Motley v. Motley, 7 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 211. See also the title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

Usurious Contracts.—If an agent to loan money takes from the borrower a bonus or commission in addition to the interest allowed by law, without the knowledge or authority of the lender, his principal, and the latter afterwards ratifies the act of the agent with knowledge of the facts, the loan is usurious. Payne v. Newcomb, 100 Ill. 611, 39 Am. Rep. 69. See Rogers v. Buckingham, 33 Conn. 81; Condit v. Baldwin, 21 N. Y. 219, 78 Am. Dec. 137; Bliven v. Lydecker, 130 N. Y. 102, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 429. See also the title USURY.

The rule as laid down by some authorities goes further, and the transaction is regarded as tainted with usury by such act of the agent without his principal's knowledge. Philo v. Butterfield, 3 Neb. 256; Joslin v. Miller, 14 Neb. 91.

1. Hull v. Pickersgill, 1 Brod. & B. 282, 5 E. C. L. 83; Morehouse v. Northrop, 33 Conn. 380; Lee v. West, 47 Ga. 311; Tucker v. Jerris, 75 Me. 184; Exum v. Brister, 35 Miss. 391; Forbes v. Hagman, 75 Va. 178.

Tort must be to the Use of Ratifiers.—"He that agreeth to a trespass after it is done is no trespasser, unless the trespass was done to his use or for his benefit, and then his agreement subsequent amounteth to a commandment; for in that case, Omnis ratihabitio retrahitur et mandato aquiparatur." 4 Inst. 317.

Chief Justice Tindal, in Wilson v. Tumman, 6 M. & G. 236, 46 E. C. L. 236, thus states the law: "That an act done for another by a person not assuming to act for himself, but for such other person, though without any precedent authority whatever, becomes the act of the principal if subsequently ratified by him, is the known and well-established rule of law. In that case the principal is bound by the act, whether it be for his detriment or his advantage, and whether it be founded on a tort or a contract, to the same extent as by and with all the consequences which follow from the same act done by his previous authority."

One cannot be held liable by reason of his ratification of a tort not committed in his interest. Wilson v. Barker, 4 B. & Ad. 614, 24 E. C. L. 124.

So where suit was brought against the general agent of a sewing-machine company for a forcible trespass committed by employees while removing a machine by his direction and in compliance with the orders of the company from the premises of one who held it under a sewing-machine lease which had been forfeited, it was held that the defendant was not liable on the ground of ratification, inasmuch as the act complained of was not done in his interest or for his benefit, and the only interest involved was that of his principals. Smith v. Lozo, 42 Mich. 6.

A Material Alteration of written instrument may be ratified. See the title ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Doctrine of Ratification not Applicable to Forgery.—It may be added in sound reason that cases of ratification are those where the act was pretended to have been done for or under the authority of the party sought to be charged, which cannot be in case of a forgery. Brook v. Hook, 24 L. T. 34.

"One who commits the crime of forgery by signing the name of another to a promissory note does not assume to act as the agent of the person whose name is forged. * * * Where the act done constitutes a crime and is committed without any pretense of authority, it is difficult to understand how one who is in a sense the victim of the criminal act may adopt or ratify it. * * * As has been well said, it is impossible in such a case to attribute any motive to the ratifying act but that of concealing the crime and suppressing the prosecution." Per Mitchell, C. J., in Henry v. Heeb, 114 Ind. 275.

and a promise to pay a forged note in consideration that the holder will forbear prosecution is not a ratification, and, as a new agreement, is void as founded on an illegal consideration.¹

Estoppel to Set up Forgery.—If, however, the owner of the note takes it, or changes his status with respect to it, on the faith of the promise or attempted ratification of the party whose name is forged, the latter is estopped from denying his adoption and making defense.²

Mortgage under Forged Power of Attorney.—In Garrett v. Gonter, 42 Pa. St. 143, it was held that a mortgage executed under the authority of a forged power of attorney was the subject of ratification, and it was intimated, on the other hand, that the forged letter was not. This is not contrary to the rule stated above as to forged instruments, for the mortgage was executed in the name of the principal by a professed agent acting under a real or pretended authority.

1. Brook v. Hook, L. R. 6 Exch. 89; Williams v. Bayley, L. R. 1 H. L. 200; M'Kenzie v. British Linen Co., L. R. 6 App. Cas. 82.

Promise to Pay Forged Paper Invalid.—In Williams v. Bayley, L. R. 1 H. L. 200, where a father made a mortgage to secure the amount of bills forged by his son, which were then given up to him, it was held that the transaction, being made with a view to stopping the prosecution, was invalid.

In Shisler v. Vandike, 92 Pa. St. 447, 37 Am. Rep. 702, it was held that a promise, by one whose indorsement on a note is forged, to pay the same, is void as against public policy.

In Brook v. Hook, L. R. 6 Exch. 89, the facts were as follows: The plaintiff had received the note from the forger, J., on the day of its date, and before it was due he had an interview with defendant and showed him the note. The defendant denied that the signature was his, and declared it to be a forgery of J., upon which the plaintiff said he would commence criminal proceedings against him. The defendant in order to prevent this said he would hold himself responsible on the note in the following memorandum: "I hold myself responsible for a bill dated," etc. The Court of Exchequer held that the memorandum could not be construed as a ratification, since the act it was assumed to ratify was illegal and void, and the memorandum was against public policy, being founded upon an illegal consideration.

2. M'Kenzie v. British Linen Co., L. R. 6 App. Cas. 82; Ashpitel v. Bryan, 3 B. & S. 492, 113 E. C. L. 492; Freeman v. Cooke, 2 Exch. 654; Workman v. Wright, 33 Ohio St. 405, 31 Am. Rep. 546.

Acceptance of Forged Bill—Estoppel.—So the acceptance of a forged bill of exchange has been held to be binding on the acceptor—not, however, from the force of the doctrine of ratification, but upon the theory of estoppel. Mather v. Maidstone, 18 C. B. 273, 86 E. C. L. 273; Leach v. Buchanan, 4 Esp. 226; Hall v. Fuller, 5 B. & C. 750, 12 E. C. L. 368; U. S. Bank v. State Bank, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 333; State v. Benoist, 39 Mo. 500; Van Duzer v. Howe, 21 N. Y. 531; Dodge v. Columbus Nat. Exch. Bank, 20 Ohio St. 234. See also the title BILLS AND NOTES.

Sanction after Maturity and Negotiation.—In Woodruff v. Munroe, 33 Md. 147, it is held that if, in an action against an indorser of a promissory note by the bona fide holders thereof, it be shown that the indorsement was not genuine, and the defendant did not ratify or sanction it prior to the maturity of the note and its transfer to plaintiff, he is not liable. But if he adopted the note prior to its maturity, and by such adoption assisted in its negotiation, he would be estopped from setting up the forgery in a suit by a bona fide holder.

Refraining from Obtaining Security.—In Casco Bank v. Keene, 53 Me. 103, where, on account of the defendant's admission of the genuineness of the signature, the bank refrained from proceedings against the person from whom they had received it, an instruction that "if the plaintiffs, relying on the defendant's admission, were induced to refrain from obtaining security, * * * and they thereby sustained an injury, then the defendant would be estopped from denying his signature," was held correct.

Silence—Failure to Repudiate.—This estoppel may arise from a failure to repudiate or from silence on the part of him whose signature is forged. Reg. v. Smith, 3 F. & F. 504; Reg. v. Beardsley, 1 F. & F. 329; Corser v. Paul, 41 N. H. 24, 77 Am. Dec. 753; Weed v. Carpenter, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 219.

Facts Not Amounting to Estoppel.—In Smith v. Tramel, 68 Iowa 488, it was held that when a party whose name had been forged to a note merely assured the holder that the note would be paid, he did not thereby ratify the signature.

Where A presented to the officers of a bank, for payment, bills of the bank from a genuine plate, but with one forged signature, and they hesitated for some time whether to receive them, but, before A left, returned them to him, still being in doubt whether they were counterfeit or not, it was held that there was no ratification of the forged signature so as to make the bank liable. Salem Bank v. Gloucester Bank, 17 Mass. 1, 9 Am. Dec. 111.

Forgery—Acceptance of Indemnity.—In Jones v. Hamlet, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 256, it was held that where a party accepts a conveyance of property to a trustee as indemnity against promissory notes upon which his name has been forged, he thereby adopts and ratifies the debt.

Neither re-execution nor redelivery is necessary. Fitzpatrick v. School Com'rs, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 224, 46 Am. Dec. 76.

Effect on Subsequent Acts.—In De Feriet v. America Bank, 23 La. Ann. 310, 8 Am. Rep. 597, where a confidential clerk had forged a check which the employer had ratified, and

View that Forgery may be Ratified.—In some of the states of the Union, on the other hand, the doctrine obtains that if the party whose signature has been forged, with a full knowledge of all the circumstances as to the signature, and intending to be bound thereby, acknowledges it as his own, he is bound to the same extent as if it had been originally signed by his authority, although his action does not amount to an estoppel, provided the ratification is not made conditional upon the immunity of the criminal.¹

4. Prerequisites to Valid Ratification—a. DESIGNATION OF PRINCIPAL.—The existence of a principal is one of the essential elements of a ratification; although it is not necessary that he should be named by the person assuming to act as his agent, yet there should be a sufficient description to indicate the person intended.²

had continued the clerk in his employ, it was held that the employer was liable for another subsequent forgery.

Doctrine of Ratification Held Applicable to Forgery.—In Greenfield Bank v. Crafts, 4 Allen (Mass.) 447, it was held that by ratifying and adopting a forged signature upon commercial paper, the person whose signature has been forged becomes liable thereon, although no words of agency appear upon the paper and no facts were shown sufficient to constitute an estoppel in pais. Dewey, J., said: "The only question upon this part of the case is, whether a signature made by an unauthorized person under such circumstances as show that the party placing the name on the note was thereby committing the crime of forgery, can be adopted and ratified by any acts and admissions of the party whose name appears on the note, however full, and intentionally made and designed to signify an adoption of the signature. The defendants insist that it cannot, by such evidence as would in other cases warrant the jury in finding an adoption; and that nothing short of an estoppel, having the element of actual damage from delay or postponement, occasioned by the acts of the person whose name is borne upon the note, misleading the holder of it, will have this effect. As to the person himself whose name is so signed, it is difficult to perceive any sound reason for the proposed distinction as to the effects of ratifying an unauthorized act in the two supposed cases. In the first case the actor has no authority any more than in the last. The contract receives its whole validity from the ratification. It may be ratified where there was no pretense of agency. In the other case the individual who presents the note thus signed passes the same as a note signed by the promisor either by his own proper hand or written by some one by his authority.

* * * It is, as it seems to us, equally competent for the party, he knowing all the circumstances as to the signature and intending to adopt the note, to ratify the same and thus confirm what was originally an unauthorized and illegal act. * * * It is, however, urged that public policy forbids sanctioning a ratification of a forged note, as it may have a tendency to stifle a prosecution for the criminal offense. It would seem, however, that this must stand upon the general principles applicable to other contracts, and is only to be defeated where the agreement was upon the understanding that if the signature was adopted the guilty party was not to be prosecuted for the criminal offense."

In Weed v. Carpenter, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 219, where a person for a series of years forged the name of his friend as indorser of his notes and bills, with the knowledge of his friend, who, although judgments were obtained and executed against him in suits on such forged indorsements, never disavowed such acts until the person committing the forgeries had absconded, in the meantime suffering the actions against him to go by default and attempting no defense, it was held that proof of these facts was admissible in evidence, and that from it the jury might imply an authority from the indorser to the maker thus to use his name.

2. Wilson v. Tummam, 6 M. & G. 236, 46 E. C. L. 236; Stainsby v. Frazers Metallic Life Boat Co., 3 Daly (N. Y.) 98.

Principal Named or Designated.—In Watson v. Swann, 11 C. B. N. S. 756, 103 E. C. L. 756, where an insurance broker, being instructed to effect an open policy for the plaintiff against jettison only, "subject to declaration thereafter," and being unable to do so, declared certain deck cargo shipped for Ostend on board one of the plaintiff's vessels on the back of a general policy which he had previously effected for himself "upon any kind of goods and merchandise, as interest might appear," and got it initialed by the underwriters, it was held, a loss having occurred, that it was not competent for the plaintiff to maintain an action against the underwriters upon the policy, the contract not having been made by him or on his behalf at the time. Willes, J., said: "The law obviously requires that the person for whom the agent professes to act must be a person capable of being

b. ACTS DONE IN CAPACITY OF AGENT.—A ratification by a principal of the acts of an agent can only be effectual between the parties when the act was done by the agent on account of the principal, not on his own account or on account of some third person.¹ Where one buys in his own name for ascertained at the time. It is not necessary that he should be named; but there must be such a description of him as shall amount to a reasonable designation of the person intended to be bound by the contract. In the present case the policy was effected on goods 'to be valued and declared as interest might appear.' No person was pointed out at the time the policy was effected as the person who was to be the owner of the goods insured. * * * A stranger who had given him no orders to effect a policy for him clearly cannot by any supposed ratification assume the benefit of the contract."

No Principal in Existence.—In Kelner v. Baxter, L. R. 2 C. P. 174, it was held that when a contract is signed by one who professes to be signing "as agent," but who has no principal existing at the time, and the contract would be wholly inoperative unless binding upon the person who signed it, he is personally liable on it; and a stranger cannot by a subsequent ratification relieve him from that liability. The plaintiff in this case had sold goods to the directors of a projected corporation. Erle, C.J., after showing that if the company had been in existence at the time the contract was entered into there would be no doubt that the defendants would have signed as agents, said: "It was once, indeed, thought that an inchoate liability might be incurred on behalf of a proposed company, which would become binding upon it when subsequently formed; but that notion was manifestly contrary to the principles upon which the law of contract is founded. There must be two parties to a contract, and the rights and obligations which it creates cannot be transferred by one of them to a third person who was not in a condition to be bound by it at the time it was made."

Adoption by Corporation of Acts in Its Behalf Done Prior to Incorporation.—In Marchand v. Loan, etc., Assoc., 26 La. Ann. 389, it was held that a claim for money expended and time employed for the organization and benefit of the association before its incorporation, could not be regarded and enforced as a debt of the institution. There is not complete accord among the authorities upon this subject, however, and some courts hold that the corporation is bound to pay the expenses incurred by its promoters in organizing the corporation. Low v. Connecticut, etc., R. Co., 45 N. H. 370. See also the titles CORPORATIONS; PROMOTERS OF CORPORATIONS.

Ratification by Administrator.—In Foster v. Bates, 12 M. & W. 226, where the act ratified was done in behalf of the intestate's estate prior to the appointment of an administrator, it was held that, as the act of the agent was ratified by the plaintiff after he became administrator, it was no objection that the intended principal was unknown at the time to the person who intended to be the agent.

This seems to present an exception to the general rule, but reasonably enough, for the title of an administrator, though it does not exist until the grant of administration, relates back to the time of the death of the intestate. See also Hull v. Pickersgill, 1 Brod. & B. 282, 5 E. C. L. 83.

Texas.—Commercial, etc., Bank v. Jones, 18 Tex. 811. See also Workman v. Wright, 33 Ohio St. 405, 31 Am. Rep. 546.

Antiquity of the Rule.—This rule of law was stated in the Year Book 7 Hen. IV., fol. 35, where it was declared that if a bailiff take a heriot claiming property in it himself, the subsequent assent of the lord would not amount to a ratification; but if he take it as bailiff of the lord, the subsequent assent amounts to a ratification of the bailiff's act.

Agency must be Assumed.—The relation of principal and agent is necessarily implied by the term "ratification." Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Gazzam, 32 Pa. St. 347.

In Webb v. Cole, 20 N. H. 490, it was held that if a servant, having his master's money for a specific purpose, makes use of it in performing a service which he, without his master's privity, has undertaken for another, the master cannot, by afterwards adopting the servant's act as his own, charge that other party upon the contract made by him with the servant.

Earl, J., in Hamlin v. Sears, 82 N. Y. 327, states the rule as follows: "The general doctrine that one may, by affirmative acts, and even by silence, ratify the acts of another who has assumed to act as his agent, is not disputed. It is illustrated by many cases to be found in the books and set forth by all the text writers upon the law of agency. But the himself, another cannot adopt the transaction as principal.¹

c. KNOWLEDGE OF MATERIAL FACTS.—Knowledge of all material facts and circumstances is an essential element to an effective ratification; without such knowledge the adoption of the acts of an unauthorized agent, or one who has exceeded his authority, will not bind the principal; but on the contrary, if he has given his assent while in ignorance of the facts of the case, he may, on being informed, disavow the unauthorized transaction.²

doctrine properly applies only to cases where one has assumed to act as agent for another; and then a subsequent ratification is equivalent to an original authority."

Knowledge by Third Party of Ratifier's Interest in Subject Matter.—But it has been held that, although an agent may have contracted in his own name and without express authority of his principal, the latter may ratify and enforce a contract made with a person having notice of the principal's rights in the subject matter. *Robinsons v. "No doctrine is better settled, both upon principle and authority, than this: that the ratification of an act of an agent previously

Careless Ignorance.—And a ratification without such knowledge, even though ignorance be due to carelessness on the part of the principal, is not binding.¹

Deliberate Ignorance.—But ignorance which is intentional or deliberate will not defeat the principal's ratification.²

Ratification Voidable in Part.—A ratification of an act under a misapprehension of the full scope of the act is voidable to the extent of the mistake.³

Ignorant Acceptance of Profits or Goods.—Even the acceptance of profits and the unauthorized must, in order to bind the principal, be with a full knowledge of all the material facts. If the material facts be either suppressed or unknown, the ratification is treated as invalid, because founded in mistake or fraud." Per Story, J., in Owings v. Hull, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 607.

Illustrations of Ratifications in Ignorance of Facts.—In Thacher v. Pray, 113 Mass. 291, where one without authority sold the plaintiff's goods, receiving in payment a bank check, which he indorsed to the plaintiff in payment of a debt due to the latter, and he appropriated the same in ignorance of the sale—in an action to recover the value of the goods it was held that the plaintiff's acts did not amount to a ratification of the sale.

In Scott v. Turley, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 631, a principal, in ignorance of the facts, received from his agent the note of a third person, on which he recovered judgment, and had filed his bill to reach equitable assets of the debtor, when he learned of the full facts in the matter, and at once amended his bill, making the agent a party, repudiating his act in taking the note, and seeking to make him liable for the debt. The agent having answered to the merits, it was held that the principal was entitled to the relief prayed for under his amended bill.

Principal Not Liable for Fraud of Which He is Ignorant.—A person cannot be guilty of a fraud committed by his agent unless he in some way participated in it, and his ratification of a trade fraudulently made by his agent does not become an adoption of the fraud by him if he were ignorant of it. Colvin v. Peck, 62 Conn. 155. See also Stanley v. Chamberlin, 39 N. J. L. 565.

So in Nichols v. Bruns, 5 Dakota 28, it was held that one was not liable for the fraudulent representations of an unauthorized agent by accepting the benefits without knowledge of the representations.

Innocent Misrepresentations of Agent.—Where an agent is deceived about the real facts, and makes representations to his principal based upon his mistaken apprehension of the facts, the acts of the principal will not be held to ratify a contract. Owensboro Bank v. Western Bank, 13 Bush (Ky.) 526, 26 Am. Rep. 211; Mummy v. Haggerty, 15 La. Ann. 268.

Legislative Ratification.—In People v. Schuyler, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 106, it was held that the legislature, not having full knowledge of the facts, could not be held to have intended to ratify a contract shown to be illegal.

Where bailiffs sent by the landlord to dis-train for rent upon a certain farm exceeded their authority in taking beyond the limits of the farm cattle belonging to another person than the tenant, and the cattle were sold and the landlord received the proceeds, the landlord was held not liable in trover unless the jury should find that he ratified the acts of the bailiffs with knowledge of the facts, or that he chose without inquiry to take the risk upon himself and adopt the whole of their acts. Lewis v. Read, 13 M. & W. 834. See also Stokes v. Mackay, 140 N. Y. 649.

3. Miller v. Board of Education, 44 Cal. 166. But see infra, this section, Ratification of Whole Act.

General Ratification of Agent's Acts.—In Billings v. Morrow, 7 Cal. 171, 68 Am. Dec. 235, it was held that a general ratification of all acts done by an agent authorized by a power of attorney does not extend to unauthorized conveyances executed in his name, although such conveyances are on record.

Unauthorized Sale—Receipt of Money.—In Lester v. Kinne, 37 Conn. 9, where an agent for the sale of real estate exceeded his instructions in selling a part of the property in regard to which he was authorized only to negotiate for a sale, and his principal afterwards impliedly ratified all his acts by receiving the money for the sale of all the land, but it appeared that he did not know that the portion in question had been sold, it was held that the agreement of the agent was neither authorized nor ratified.

Unauthorized Condition in Contract.—In Pacific Rolling Mill Co. v. Dayton, etc., R. Co., 7 Sawy. (U. S.) 61, a vote of the directors of a corporation authorizing the secretary to execute a mortgage to secure the payment of a specific debt was held not to authorize him to insert a provision for the payment of attorney's fees, and that a subsequent ratification of the mortgage, with no other knowledge of the contents than the original vote, did not amount to a ratification of the provision.

Usurious Contract of Agent.—Where an agent, in making a loan, secures a bonus for himself without his principal's knowledge, the principal does not, by receiving the security and seeking to enforce it, ratify such unauthorized act of the agent. Condit v. Baldwin, 21 N. Y. 219, 78 Am. Dec. 137. Compare Austin v. Harrington, 28 Vt. 130. See also the title Usury.

use of goods will not amount to a ratification of the agent's acts, if done in ignorance of the circumstances connected with such acts,¹ except perhaps after years of acquiescence.²

Recovery of Goods Sold by Agent without Authority.—A principal may recover goods sold by one without authority, even though he has accepted the proceeds in ignorance of their source.³

Ratification of Agent's Warranty.—A principal who by accepting the purchase money ratifies a sale made under a general authority, is bound by a warranty of the agent;⁴ but where there is a mere special authority to sell property of North Western Iron Co.*, 21 Wis. 458.

In Manning v. Gasharie, 27 Ind. 399, where an agent authorized to buy goods for cash, without the knowledge of his principal made an unauthorized purchase on credit, it was held that the acceptance and use of the goods by the principal did not operate as a ratification.

Knowledge Acquired after Receiving Benefits—Restoration.—Where the knowledge that a person assuming to act as agent has exceeded his authority does not reach the principal until it is out of his power to restore what he received through the transaction which he seeks to repudiate, the principal is not bound to make such a restoration as a condition of the repudiation. Humphrey v. Havens, 12 Minn. 208.

Retention after Knowledge.—But if the principal retains the proceeds after he has knowledge he will be held to ratify the act. McDowell v. McKenzie, 65 Ga. 630; Wallace v. Lawyer, 90 Ind. 499; Davis v. Krum, 12 Mo. App. 279; Smith v. Tracy, 36 N. Y. 79.

Taking of Security.—Where a principal accepts security for a debt he will be presumed to have taken it with full knowledge, and to have ratified the arrangements made by his agent. Meehan v. Forrester, 52 N. Y. 277.

But in Smith v. Kidd, 68 N. Y. 130, 23 Am. Rep. 157, where a principal took security from an agent for the payment of moneys which he had previously and without authority collected from debtors of the principal and wrongfully appropriated to his own use, it was held that this would not amount to a ratification of payments made to the agent where the principal had not full knowledge of all the material facts when the security was taken.

Malicious Attachment.—In Oberne v. O'Donnell, 35 Ill. App. 180, it was held that a principal does not render himself liable for the tort of his agent in maliciously suing out an attachment; by receiving and appropriating the fruits thereof, unless he is shown to have full knowledge of all the material facts and circumstances of the tort.

Ratification by Corporation.—In Hyde v. Larkin, 35 Mo. App. 366, it was held that if the ratification by a corporation of the unauthorized contract of its agent consists in its having received the consideration of the contract, it must be proved that the corporation, through its proper officer or officers, knew of the terms of the contract, and on what account the money was by them received.

In Etna Ins. Co. v. North Western Iron Co., 21 Wis. 458, it was held that where agents of an insurance company received money for insuring iron, which they transmitted to the company, by whom it is accepted, this was not a ratification of an unauthorized contract made by the agents of the company, unless the company knew on what account the money was received, and the terms of the contract. See also Bell v. Cunningham, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 69; Getty v. C. R. Barnes Milling Co., 40 Kan. 281; Twelfth Street Market Co. v. Jackson, 102 Pa. St. 269; Wellsburg First Nat. Bank v. Kimberlands, 16 W. Va. 555.

Remedy of Party Injured by Agent's Conduct.—If the agent fraudulently misrepresented his authority, and the principal has received the avails of the fraud without knowledge of the agent's fraudulent conduct, the remedy of the party injured, against the principal, is not upon the contract in damages, but by rescission of the contract and suit for the consideration paid. Titus v. Cairo, etc., R. Co., 46 N. J. L. 393.

2. Hyatt v. Clark, 118 N. Y. 563. In this case, in delivering the opinion of the court, Vann, J., citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 429, said: "Having received the benefits of the contract, she [the plaintiff] could not, after years of acquiescence, suddenly invoke the aid of the courts to relieve her of any further obligation because she had but recently discovered a fact that she should have ascertained, and which the law presumes that she did ascertain, long before."

3. Thacher v. Pray, 113 Mass. 291.

In Thompson v. Craig, 16 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 29, it was held that ratification of representations made upon a sale of personal property by one not shown to have been authorized, nor to have assumed to act as agent of the seller, was not established by proof that the buyer, after discovering the defect, informed the seller of such representations, and offered to return the thing sold, and that the seller refused to accept it. To establish such ratification, knowledge of all the facts before receiving the fruits of the sale must be shown.

4. Cochran v. Chitwood, 59 Ill. 53.

a kind not usually sold with warranty, the receipt of the proceeds of the sale in ignorance of any such undertaking is not a ratification thereof.¹

Knowledge of Another Agent Imputed to Principal.—Knowledge of the facts by another agent where the matter is within the scope of his agency is sufficient.²

Knowledge of Legal Effect.—It is not necessary that the principal, in order to bind himself by a ratification, should have a knowledge of the legal effect of the facts within his knowledge; a knowledge of the facts alone is sufficient.³

d. RATIFICATION OF WHOLE ACT.—A ratification in part will not be allowed, but to be effective there must be a ratification of the whole act, for the law will not allow a principal to claim that which benefits him and repudiate the rest.⁴

In Cooley v. Perrine, 41 N. J. L. 322, 32 Am. Rep. 210, it was held that an action to recover the price of a horse sold by a special agent, brought after it has ceased to be practicable to avoid the sale and restore the vendor and vendee to their original positions, the horse having died in possession of the vendee, does not constitute a ratification of an unauthorized warranty made by the agent.

Ratification must Cover Whole Act—Illustrations.—So a principal cannot claim the benefit of a purchase obtained by his agent by the use of misrepresentations, and at the same time repudiate misrepresentations as unauthorized. Lane v. Black, 21 W. Va. 617. Nor can a debtor have the benefit of a compromise and release effected by his agent with creditors without adopting all the representations made by the agent to the creditors in negotiating the same. Crans v. Hunter, 28 N. Y. 389.

Where an attorney compromises a debt of his principal, who, after a full knowledge of all the facts attending it, retains the money paid on such compromise, the principal will be held bound by it, and will not be permitted to ratify it so far only as it is for his interest and to repudiate the residue. Henderson v. Cummings, 44 Ill. 325.

One cannot, while affirming an unauthorized contract of sale, repudiate the consideration which formed an integral part thereof, and recover another and different consideration. Barhydt v. Clark, 12 Ill. App. 646.

Sale and Remittance.—In Deering v. Grundy County Nat. Bank, 81 Iowa 222, it was held that a principal whose agent had special power to sell property and remit the proceeds could not ratify the agent's act in sending the money without also ratifying the sale of the property, since the two acts together constitute only one transaction, which must be ratified or disapproved as a whole.

Ratification of Part with Full Knowledge.—So, conversely, a ratification of a part of an unauthorized transaction with full knowledge of the facts amounts to a ratification of the whole.¹

A Contract Wholly Unauthorized cannot be ratified in part by a principal, but he must adopt the whole or none.²

No Conditional Ratification.—So there can be no ratification by the principal on condition that he shall suffer no loss.³

Usurious Contracts.—It is well established in some jurisdictions that contracts for the loan of money, made by an agent of the lender, who exacts for himself a bonus above the legal interest, constitute an exception to the rule requiring ratification to include the whole act. In such cases if it appears that the illegal proceedings of the agent were without the knowledge of the lender, and that the latter was free from the intention to violate or evade the usury laws, he may enforce that part of the contract which he intended should be made and repudiate the rest.⁴

c. MUTUALITY—HOW FAR NECESSARY.—The fact that the parties do not stand on an equal footing will not prevent the ratification by the party for whose benefit the act is done.⁵

1. Gaines v. Miller, 111 U.S. 395; Ferguson v. Carrington, 9 B. & C. 59, 17 E. C. L. 330; Krider v. Western College, 31 Iowa 547; Hayes v. Kedzie, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 581; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Walworth, 1 N. Y. 433; Heermans v. Clarkson, 64 N. Y. 173; Corning v. Southland, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 552; Commercial Bank v. Warren, 15 N. Y. 580; Meyer v. Smith, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 37; Strasser v. Conklin, 54 Wis. 102.

Partial Ratification with Knowledge.—In Tallman v. Kimball, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 279, it was held that an owner of a building who adopts some of the acts of a mechanic making repairs thereon, and pays for the labor performed and some of the material furnished upon the building, ratifies all the acts of such mechanic in the purchase of all materials, and becomes liable for all the material used in the building.

In Krider v. Western College, 31 Iowa 547, where an agent had contracted a debt, and executed a mortgage on the property of the principal to secure the same, it was held that a ratification of the debt by the principal, having knowledge of the whole transaction, operated as a ratification of the mortgage also.

2. Alabama.—Crawford v. Barkley, 18 Ala. 270.

Arkansas.—Daniels v. Brodie, 54 Ark. 216.

Oregon.—Kyle v. Rippey, 20 Oregon 446; Coleman v. Stark, 1 Oregon 115; Crabtree v. St. Paul Opera-House Co., 39 Fed. Rep. 746.

No Partial Ratification of Unauthorized Contract.—A principal cannot ratify an unauthorized contract as to the price named therein and repudiate it as to the mode of payment. Shoninger v. Peabody, 57 Conn. 42, 14 Am. St. Rep. 88.

In Wells v. Hickox (Kan., 1895), 40 Pac. Rep. 821, where an agent procured the indorsement of a note given by the debtor for the price of goods, it was held that the principal could not accept the transaction without the condition.

3. Fort v. Coker, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 579.

4. Muir v. Newark Sav. Inst., 16 N. J. Eq. 537; Anonymous, 40 N. J. Eq. 509; Condit v. Baldwin, 21 N. Y. 219, 78 Am. Dec. 137, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 181; Bell v. Day, 32 N. Y. 165.

But a different rule prevails in some jurisdictions. Joslin v. Miller, 14 Neb. 91. See also the title USURY.

In conformity with the doctrine of the text, it has been held that an action by the principal to collect the debt does not constitute a ratification so as to charge him with usury, even though he has knowledge thereof before bringing suit. Estevez v. Purdy, 66 N. Y. 446; Jordan v. Humphrey, 31 Minn. 495. See the title USURY.

5. Routh v. Thompson, 13 East 274; Hall v. Norwalk F. Ins. Co., 57 Conn. 106.

So long as the condition of the parties remains unchanged the principal's right of ratification cannot be prevented by the fact that the other party to the contract objects. Andrews v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., 92 N. Y. 596.

Mr. Justice Story, in his work on Agency, § 248, says in regard to the rule stated in the text: "As, from what has been said, the principal thus acquires a right to elect whether he will adopt the unauthorized act or not, it must be admitted that the parties do not generally stand upon equal terms; since the principal may always elect to ratify the act if it is for his benefit, and to disavow it if it is to his injury."

Want of Mutuality.—Where a contract sought to be ratified is partly executory, and the party seeking to ratify does so to avail himself of the unauthorized act in order to enforce a claim against a third person, such ratification is held, on the ground of want of mutuality, to be of no effect unless agreed to by such third party.¹ As stated by an eminent judge, the rule that a subsequent ratification is equivalent to a prior command, seems applicable only to cases where the conduct of the parties on whom it is to operate, not being referable to any agreement, cannot in the meantime depend on the fact whether there is a ratification or not.²

Notice to Quit under Lease.—So it is held that notice to quit under a lease given by an unauthorized person, although subsequently ratified by the landlord, will not establish by relation a notice by the latter.³

1. Atlee v. Bartholomew, 69 Wis. 43, 5 Am. St. Rep. 103; Lowber v. Connit, 36 Wis. 183; Townsend v. Corning, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 435.

In Dodge v. Hopkins, 14 Wis. 638, Dickson, C.J., denying the universality of the rule that a subsequent ratification is equally effectual as an original authority, says: "The inaccuracy consists in not properly distinguishing between those cases where the subsequent act of ratification is put forth as the foundation of a right in favor of the party who has ratified, and those where it is made the basis of a demand against him. There is a broad and manifest difference between a case in which a party seeks to avail himself, by subsequent assent, of the unauthorized act of his own agent, in order to enforce a claim against a third person, and the case of a party acquiring an inchoate right against a principal, by an unauthorized act of his agent, to which validity is afterwards given by the assent or recognition of the principal. The principal in such case may, by his subsequent assent, bind himself, but if the contract be executory, he cannot bind the other party. The latter may, if he choose, avail himself of such assent against the principal, which, if he does, the contract, by virtue of such mutual ratification, becomes mutually obligatory. There are many cases where the acts of parties, though unavailable for their own benefit, may be used against them."

Ratification of Insurance Subsequent to Loss.—In Hogedorn v. Oliverson, 2 M. & S. 485, it was held to be no objection to the recovery of the amount of insurance, that the ratification of the act in procuring the policy was subsequent to the loss.

Mr. Wharton, in his work on Agency, § 81, speaks of this case as follows: "At the first glance this would appear to have been a case in which the owner was able to play fast and loose. * * * But this view is only superficial. Though personally the owner might have had this choice, the contract itself was absolute. The insurer who insures a ship, in consideration of a premium paid in, agrees to do something for a valuable and adequate consideration. He insures for whomsoever it may concern. His duties are fixed on the closing of the contract. The premium paid him cannot be recovered back from him; the insurance, if the vessel be lost, is due from him as a fair consideration for the contract. Whether the owner can sue upon the contract is a mere matter of form, for the agent can sue in case the principal cannot. The insurer has lost nothing by the fact of the agent being unauthorized; he has been lulled into no false security, no intervening rights have been sacrificed by him. He insured the vessel on his own terms, and by those terms he is bound."

2. Lawrence, J., in Right v. Cuthell, 5 East 499. This rule is adopted by Mr. Justice Story in his work on Agency, § 246, and by Mr. Evans (Ewell's Evans on Agency *49).

In Solomons v. Dawes, 1 Esp. 83, it was held that where in an action of trover the demand of the goods is not made by the party himself, a refusal on the ground that the party applying is unknown or not properly authorized is not sufficient to support the action. So also where the issue is on a subsequent demand and a refusal to a plea of tender, the demand must be by a person with authority to receive it, and a ratification of an unauthorized demand is not sufficient. Coore v. Callaway, 1 Esp. 115; Coles v. Bell, 1 Campb. 478, note.

It has been held that a stoppage in transitu by an unauthorized agent will not divest the right of the purchaser. Bird v. Brown, 4 Exch. 786.

3. Right v. Cuthell, 5 East 491; Doe v. Walters, 10 B. & C. 626, 21 E. C. L. 159; Doe v. Goldwin, 2 Q. B. 143, 42 E. C. L. 610; Brahn v. Jersey City Forge Co., 38 N. J. L. 74.

The reason is that the tenant must act upon the notice at the time it is given, and it must therefore, at that time, be such a notice as he can act upon with security; and if authority by relation were sufficient, the tenant would be subjected to the injustice of being left in doubt as to his action until the ratification or disavowal of the principal. Per Van Syckel, J., in Brahn v. Jersey City Forge Co., 38 N. J. L. 74.

Lord Ellenborough in Right v. Cuthell, 5 East 491, held that the subsequent adoption of a notice, signed by two of the joint tenants, purporting to be on behalf of themselves and the other, did not validate it, "because," said he, "the tenant was entitled to such a notice as he could act upon with certainty at the time it was given; and he was not bound to submit himself to the hazard whether the third coexecutor chose to ratify the act of his companions or not, before the six months elapsed." This opinion is cited and approved in the case cited above.

There are cases, however, holding the con-

5. Implied Ratification—a. IN GENERAL.—The ratification of an unauthorized act is effective more frequently by implication from the acts and conduct of the person in whose behalf the act is done, inconsistent with any intention other than the adoption of such act, than by express words, the ratification being inferred from circumstances which the law considers equivalent to an express ratification.¹

Ratification Favored—Question for Jury.—Although it is said that the conduct of the principal will be liberally construed in favor of a ratification or adoption of the acts of the agent,² yet a ratification is not to be presumed from a doubtful state of facts, but the question should be left to the jury.³

trary, as in Roe v. Pierce, 2 Campb. 96, where it was held that notice by the steward of a corporation was sufficient when subsequently ratified by the corporation in bringing suit. And in Goodtitle v. Woodward, 3 B. & Ald. 689, 5 E. C. L. 424, a notice to quit given by the agent for several trustees, acting under authority signed by some only at the time of giving notice, but by the rest subsequently, was held sufficient. This decision may be supported, however, on other grounds than ratification, as the original notice was legal. See Doe v. Summersett, 1 B. & Ad. 135, 20 E. C. L. 361.

The weight of authority, however, seems to be as stated in the text, and is adopted by modern text-books. See Story on Agency, § 246.

1. Searing v. Butler, 69 Ill. 575; see also Cairncross v. Lorimer, 7 Jur. N. S. 149; Truesdail v. Ward, 24 Mich. 117; Heyn v. O'Hagen, 60 Mich. 150.

2. Byrne v. Doughty, 13 Ga. 46; Szymaushi v. Plassan, 20 La. Ann. 90, 96 Am. Dec. 382; Terril v. Flower, 6 Martin (La.) 584; Codwise v. Hacker, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 526.

Slight Circumstances and Small Matters will sometimes suffice to raise the presumption of ratification. Byrne v. Doughty, 13 Ga. 53.

Acts of Ratification must Change Other Party's Position.—To be sufficient, the acts of ratification must be something by which the party, by relying upon them, may be prejudiced. Doughaday v. Crowell, 11 N. J. Eq. 201.

Evidence of Ratification must be Inconsistent with Any Other Interpretation.—To justify a presumption of ratification the facts and circumstances depended upon must be inconsistent with a different intention. Heyn v. O'Hagen, 60 Mich. 150; Taylor v. Agricultural, etc., Assoc., 68 Ala. 229.

Intention to Ratify.—If the facts show a ratification, the intention of the parties is immaterial; so that to constitute the conversations and acts of the principals, with knowledge of the facts, a ratification, it is not material whether a ratification was contemplated or not. Hazard v. Spears, 2 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 353.

Illustrations—Circumstances Sufficient to Show Ratification.—Where a principal when informed of a purchase by his agent did not deny the agent's authority, but merely complained of the manner in which it was executed, it was held that he was bound. Johnson v. Jones, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 369.

So where the defendant when informed of a purchase made by one assuming to act as his agent, said that it was all right and directed payment for the goods purchased. Hess v. Baar, 14 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 286, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 429, affirming 11 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. City Ct.) 619.

Where an unincorporated company made assessments for carrying into effect a contract, made by an officer of the company on behalf of the company, and afterwards appointed an agent to negotiate an alteration of the contract with the other party, it was held that they thereby ratified the contract, and could not deny the officer's authority to bind the company by contract. Skinner v. Dayton, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 513, 10 Am. Dec. 286.

In a writ of entry against a savings bank, the mortgagee in possession of the demanded premises, the plaintiff claimed that it did not appear that the bank authorized any one to act for it in loaning money and accepting the mortgage, but it was held that the setting up of the mortgage as a defense was ample evidence of ratification. Gibson v. Norway Sav. Bank, 69 Me. 579.

When an agent of A guaranteed the payment of goods that B might order, A agreed to the guarantee provided he had sufficient funds belonging to B to meet the bill, which he had. A delivered a statement of the goods purchased by B to his agent, who paid the account. It was held that A ratified his agent's act. Burgess v. Harris, 47 Vt. 322.

Circumstances Insufficient to Show Ratification.—In Johnson v. Craig, 21 Ark. 533, it was held that where an agent makes a contract for the sale of lands, which is not binding upon his principal, a letter from the principal to the purchaser requesting him to give up or decline the purchase is not an affirmation of the contract.

It has been held that a voluntary payment of a certain sum to indemnify for expenses incurred in a service voluntarily rendered is not a ratification which makes the payee the agent of the principal as regards such services. Camp v. U. S., 113 U. S. 648.

Taking Security for Loss against Unauthorized Act Not Ratification.—In Lazard v. Merchants', etc., Transp. Co., 78 Md. 1, it was held that an acceptance by a principal of a transfer of his agent's property, voluntarily offered to cover any loss that the former might sustain by the agent's unauthorized act, does not constitute a ratification or acquiescence in such act, where the latter is at once repudiated and liability therefor denied.

3. Lewis v. Read, 13 M. & W. 834; Abbott

Implied from Previous Acts.—Various acts and circumstances may give rise to the implication of ratification. So ratification may be implied from the previous acts of the principal under similar circumstances.¹

Express Ratification of Subsequent Similar Acts.—The express ratification of subsequent acts of the same nature, with full knowledge of previous unauthorized acts, is evidence from which a ratification may be inferred.²

Express Authority for the Future.—But express authority to do an act at some future time will not amount to a ratification of that act already accomplished without the knowledge of the principal.³

b. BY ACCEPTING BENEFITS.—Implied ratification most frequently arises from the acceptance of benefits which are the result of the unauthorized acts, for

v. May, 50 Ala. 97; Burr v. Howard, 58 Ga. 564; Byrne v. Doughty, 13 Ga. 46; Robinson v. Chapline, 9 Iowa 91; Bryant v. Moore, 26 Me. 84, 45 Am. Dec. 96; Stokes v. Mackay, 140 N. Y. 649; Garrett v. Gonter, 42 Pa. St. 143; Hortons v. Townes, 6 Leigh (Va.) 47; Cooper v. Schwartz, 40 Wis. 54.

When Ratification Question for Jury.—Where there is any evidence tending to show the assent of the principal to the acts of the agent, these acts, in connection with such evidence of the principal's assent thereto, should be allowed to go to the jury; and if the acts of the alleged agent are of such a nature or so continuous in their character as to furnish in themselves any reasonable ground of inference that the plaintiff knew of them, and would not have permitted the assumed agent thus to act in the absence of authority for so doing, the acts themselves are, at least, competent evidence to be submitted to the jury to prove the agency. Gimon v. Terrell, 38 Ala. 208.

In Heath v. Paul, 81 Wis. 532, it was held that evidence that the principal, after denying his liability to pay certain money borrowed on checks by an agent who had the management of his store, said that he expected to pay it "if it went into the store to pay for goods," was not sufficient to carry the question of ratification to the jury.

1. Austin v. Burroughs, 62 Mich. 181; Despatch Line of Packets v. Bellamy Mfg. Co., 12 N. H. 206, 37 Am. Dec. 203. See also Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. James, 24 Wis. 388; Gibson v. Snow Hardware Co., 94 Ala. 346, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 437, 438.

Illustrations of Ratification Implied from Previous Acts.—So though an agent exceeds his authority in making a certain contract, yet if he had previously made contracts of a similar character, which had been approved by the principal, the latter will be bound by the contract in question if he permits it to be performed by the other party without notice that the agent exceeded his authority in making it. Gallinger v. Lake Shore Traffic Co., 67 Wis. 529.

In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. James, 24 Wis. 388, it was held that the facts that the vice-president of a railway company had been for years in the habit of appointing local agents to look after its timber lands; that these had sold stumpage and timber thereon; that the company had brought suit on one of these contracts of sale and obtained judgment, the amount of which was paid to the local agent; and that the latter was accustomed each year to make a full report in writing to said vice-president and pay the moneys in his hands into the treasury—justified a jury in finding that the company knew and acquiesced in the authority thus exercised, and was bound by such contract of sale made by its local agent.

2. Hall v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 48 Wis. 317.

Not Necessarily a Ratification.—In Oglesby v. Smith, 38 Mo. App. 67, it was held that the fact that the principal accepted a second vehicle brought by his agent from a stable to which he was not sent, did not ratify his previous act in bringing the first one therefrom.

3. Illustrations — Subsequent Express Authority.—Moore v. Lockett, 2 Bibb. (Ky.) 67, 4 Am. Dec. 683. In this case it was held that a letter subsequent to an unauthorized sale, giving an agent power to sell, does not legalize the previous sale not ratified under the power.

In Rice v. McLarren, 42 Me. 157, it was held, however, that a subsequent authorization of the act was a ratification. In this case the authority was very broad, directing the agent to do whatever would accomplish the act, and there was no subsequent attempt to revoke it.

In Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Marshall, 29 Vt. 23, where a person representing himself as the agent for the plaintiffs, an insurance company, obtained from the defendant, and forwarded to the plaintiffs, an application for insurance on the 17th of March, and the plaintiffs, knowing what he had done, afterwards appointed him their agent to obtain applications, taking bonds for the faithful discharge of his duties, dated the 25th of December previous, it was held that the plaintiff had ratified his agency in the transaction with the defendant.

But it has been held that merely retaining an agent who has exceeded his authority on several occasions is not necessarily a ratification of his unauthorized acts. Deacon v. Greenfield, 141 Pa. St. 467.

By Dating Back a Power of Attorney to legalize a prior act the principal is estopped from showing that it was executed subsequently. Milliken v. Coombs, 1 Me. 343, 10 Am. Dec. 70.

In Taylor v. Agricultural, etc., Assoc., 68 Ala. 229, Brickell, C. J., said: "Ratification is more often implied from the acts and conduct of parties having an election to avoid or to confirm than found expressed in words. And it is implied whenever the acts and conduct of the principal, having full knowledge of the facts, are inconsistent with any other supposition than that of a previous authority or an intention to abide by the act though it was unauthorized. Here the association accepted all the benefits of the transaction, received and appropriated to its own uses the money obtained on the promissory notes. Having received and retained the benefits of this transaction, with full knowledge of all the facts, the association has ratified and confirmed it, unless intentional fraud is imputed, for which there is neither room nor reason."

Illustrations of Ratification by Acceptance of Benefits.—If a principal appropriates the proceeds of a trespass, ratification is properly implied. Exum v. Brister, 35 Miss. 391; Byne v. Hatcher, 75 Ga. 289.

Acceptance Accompanied with Words of Dissent.—Although the principal may expressly declare that he will not sanction the unauthorized act, a ratification may be shown from his acts of acceptance.¹

Receiving Goods Purchased by Agent.—So if an agent purchases goods without authority, or contrary to his instructions, but the principal receives the goods, sells them, or otherwise disposes of them on his own account, he will be held to have ratified the purchase.²

The principal is bound by a receipt for money given by an agent who had no authority, if he receives the money and applies it for his own benefit in the manner expressed in the receipt. Lyman v. Norwich University, 28 Vt. 560.

Acceptance of a deed by one for another without authority is ratified by the other in subsequently accepting it himself. Ward v. Small, 90 Ky. 198, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 58.

In Clydesdale Horse Co. v. Bennett, 52 Mo. App. 333, it was held that the subsequent disposal by the principal, of property returned by the purchaser to an agent who sold the property, was a ratification of the agent's acts.

Liability for Nuisance.—One who employs a contractor to do a work not in its nature a nuisance, but which becomes so by reason of the manner in which the contractor has performed it, if he accepts the work in that condition becomes at once responsible for the nuisance. Vogel v. New York, 92 N. Y. 10, 44 Am. Rep. 349.

Declaration of Ownership.—It has been held that a mere declaration by the alleged principal, of the ownership of stock bought in his name by the alleged agent, is not a sufficient ratification. So in Rutland, etc., R. Co. v. Lincoln, 29 Vt. 206, where a person subscribed for stock in the testator's name during the life of the latter, but without his authority, it was held that the testator's declaration that he had stock of the kind and amount subscribed for did not amount to a ratification of the subscription.

Receipt of Part of Consideration.—In Harris v. Miner, 28 Ill. 135, it was held that the mere receipt of a portion of money realized from property improperly sold by the sheriff will not be construed as a ratification of the sale.

Duty to Return.—It has been held, however, that it is not the duty of the principal, upon refusing to ratify an agreement whereby his assumed agent has received money, to return the same. Turner v. Brooks, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 451.

1. So in Hatch v. Taylor, 10 N. H. 538, where a person assuming to act as agent for another exchanged a horse belonging to the latter for another horse, and the owner refused to sanction the exchange, but before reclaiming his horse participated in the purchase of the horse received in exchange from the party who had thus obtained possession of him, it was held that there was a ratification.

Pennsylvania.—Haworth v. Truby, 138 Pa. St. 222.

Illustrations—Goods Purchased by Agent.—So in McDowell v. McKenzie, 65 Ga. 630, it was held that a merchant whose agent purchased goods on credit could not refuse to pay when he had received and sold the goods and kept the proceeds, especially where he had paid other bills made by the same agent. And in Sartwell v. Frost, 122 Mass. 184, where A managed a business for B, but without authority to purchase on credit, except upon the written order of B, A purchased of C goods without such an order, and C was ignorant of the conditions of the agency. B took possession of the stock and sold it, including the goods sold by C. It was held that B by so doing ratified the purchase by A.

Where a railroad corporation receives railroad material bought upon its credit and for its use by one of its officers without authority, and uses it for the corporate purposes for which it was designed, this is an adoption and ratification of the act of the officer. The directors using the material so purchased are bound to inquire, and are presumed to know, whether it was paid for or not; it is not, therefore, essential to an adoption of the act of the officer that the directors should know the terms of the contract. Scott v. Middletown, etc., R. Co., 86 N. Y. 200, 4 Am. and Eng. R. R. Cas. 114.

In Woods v. Rocchi, 32 La. Ann. 210, it was held that where a party buys certain merchandise through the agency of a broker who falsely represents the price to be less than the vendor agrees to sell for, and, before the delivery of the whole of the merchandise, a notice of the real price is brought home to the buyer, he will be held to have ratified the contract made by the broker if he receives the balance of the merchandise without repudiating the contract.

In Bearce v. Bowker, 115 Mass. 129, where T., who was indebted to B., agreed to supply him with lumber, which he ordered of S., representing himself to be B.'s agent, and S. sent the lumber to B., with bills made out as

Accepting Results to Prevent Further Loss.—Ratification, however, does not arise when the principal accepts the results of the unauthorized act, not as a matter of choice, but merely for his own protection, to prevent further loss or liability therefrom.¹

Acceptance of Proceeds of Loan.—The acceptance of the proceeds of a loan or of the benefits thereof, though made without authority, has been held a sufficient ratification.²

against B., which bills B. received and retained without giving notice to S. that he was buying of T., it was held that B. had ratified T.'s action, and was liable to S. But see Carson v. Cummings, 69 Mo. 325.

Principal Adopting Purchase cannot Object to Time of Purchase.—By accepting the results of the agent's act the principal adopts his acts entirely, and cannot object to a misuse or an excessive use of his authority. In Whilden v. Merchants, etc., Nat. Bank, 64 Ala. 1, it was held that where the principal received cotton purchased by his broker on order and made no objection as to the time within which the order was executed, he thereby ratified the purchase, and could not afterwards raise any objection as to the time.

Note for Removal of Lien from Goods.—In Cassidy v. Aldhous (C. Pl.), 58 N. Y. St. Rep. 49, it was held that ratification of an unauthorized purchase of goods could not be inferred from an agreement to give a note for removal of a lien upon such goods where there was no promise to pay for the goods.

Part Payment.—In Culver v. Warren, 36 Kan. 391, it was held that part payment of an amount claimed to be due on a grain deal, the purchase and sale having been ordered by telegraph, is an acknowledgment of some liability, and a ratification of the agency of the telegraph company in the transmission of its messages.

Action for Money Had and Received—Evidence.—Where goods are purchased by another without authority, and are brought into a merchant's store without his knowledge or consent and placed upon his shelves, there must be some evidence that he sold the goods and received the money therefor in order to make him liable in an action for money had and received to plaintiff's use. Leshner v. Loudon, 85 Mich. 52.

1. Triggs v. Jones, 46 Minn. 277.

Accepting Results to which Entitled without Ratification.—Where the principal receives the proceeds of an unauthorized sale of his goods there will not necessarily be a ratification if he would have the right to receive it without ratifying. White v. Sanders, 32 Me. 188.

So in Walker v. Walker, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 425, where an agent, instructed by his principal to remit a sum of money by express, purchased a check drawn by a party in good credit on New York, and forwarded it to the principal, who sent it on for payment, but the drawer becoming insolvent, the check was dishonored; it was held that the principal's transmittal was no ratification, the agent having violated his instructions as to the mode of transmitting the money, and that the agent was liable to him for the loss.

Accepting Unauthorized Work Incorporated in Building.—And in Mills v. Berla (Tex. Civ. App., 1893), 23 S. W. Rep. 970, it was held that the owner of a building upon which work had been done, without authority from him, of such a character that it could not be removed, did not, by subsequently using the building, subject himself to liability for the value of the unused work.

Retaining Security.—The retention of security to prevent loss is not necessarily a ratification. In Nye v. Swan, 49 Minn. 439, where an agent, intrusted with money to buy land, loaned the money without the authority or knowledge of the principal, at a usurious rate of interest, and took a deed for the land in form of an absolute deed as security, it was held that the principal did not ratify the act of the agent in the usurious loan by accepting the deed in order to avail himself of it as security for the money actually loaned, with legal interest. To the same effect is Jordan v. Humphrey, 31 Minn. 495.

So in Crooker v. Appleton, 25 Me. 131, where an agent was sent by A, with a note in her favor against B, with authority only to receive a sum of money thereon and return the note; he received the money, and made an arrangement with B, in pursuance of which he gave up the note and received certain other papers, and carried the money and papers to A, who "took the money and was displeased with the papers, saying she was cheated out of her money;" it was held that this was not a ratification of the acts of the agent.

2. Union Gold Min. Co. v. Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank, 96 U. S. 640; Taylor v. Agricultural, etc., Assoc., 68 Ala. 229; Las Vegas First Nat. Bank v. Oberne, 121 Ill. 25; Ward v. Pattee, 57 Iowa 515; McLean v. Ficke (Iowa, 1895), 62 N. W. Rep. 753; Perkins v. Boothby, 71 Me. 91; Episcopal Charitable Soc. v. Episcopal Church, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 372; Watson v. Bigelow, 47 Mo. 413; Hazard v. Spears, 4 Keyes (N. Y.) 469; Vianna v. Barclay, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 281; Shiras v. Morris, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 60; Wright v. Burbank, 64 Pa. St. 247; Thurston v. James, 6 R. I. 103; Ballston Spa Bank v. Marine Bank, 16 Wis. 120.

Illustrations—Acceptance of Benefits of Loan.—When an agent without the authority or knowledge of his principal borrows money and applies it to the payment and discharge of the legal liabilities of his principal, and the principal knowingly retains the benefit of such payment, the lender may recover therefor in an action against the principal for money had and received. Perkins v. Boothby, 71 Me. 91.

But in Spooner v. Thompson, 48 Vt. 259,

The Acceptance of Rents under an unauthorized lease, with full knowledge of the facts, is strong evidence of a ratification.¹

A Settlement with an Agent with Full Knowledge of his unauthorized acts, and payment or receipt of balance due him, has been held to amount to a ratification;² and if the principal receive the agent's notes in full settlement, he thereby ratifies the acts of his agents in making the collections so remitted.³

it was held that if money borrowed by the agent on the credit of the principal, without authority, went into the principal's business without the latter's knowledge, although he had the benefit thereof, he was not liable therefor to the person of whom it was borrowed, in the absence of a promise to pay.

In Trenton First Nat. Bank v. Badger Lumber Co., 54 Mo. App. 327, it was held that a corporation which after knowledge of the facts retained money remitted to it in payment of the indebtedness to it of one of its agents, ratified the unauthorized act of the agent in raising the money upon a note made in the corporation name.

But since there can be no ratification without a full knowledge of the facts, it has been held that where a person who was legally bound to pay off and discharge a mortgage upon the defendant's property, borrowed a sum of money without the defendant's knowledge or privity, but assuming to be his agent, and paid off the mortgage, the defendant was not responsible to the party making the loan, even though he enjoyed the benefit of the discharge of the mortgage. Henry v. Wilkes, 37 N. Y. 562.

Accepting Benefit of Credit Obtained.—In Fouch v. Wilson, 59 Ind. 93, it was held that a principal authorizing her agent to purchase certain land, and pay towards the same a sum of money in his hands, and to sign all necessary papers, was precluded from repudiating a mortgage executed by him in her name, to secure his own note given for the unpaid balance, the principal having taken possession knowing of the mortgage.

Loan by Agent of Corporation.—So a corporation which retains and uses money borrowed for it by an officer without authority ratifies the loan. Willis v. St. Paul Sanitation Co., 53 Minn. 370; Lyman v. Norwich University, 28 Vt. 560; Taylor v. Agricultural, etc., Assoc., 68 Ala. 229. But in Holderness v. Baker, 44 N. H. 414, it was held that the fact that a town through its officers holds possession and control of notes given by one of them for an unauthorized loan of the town money to himself did not operate as a ratification of the loan.

1. Lindroth v. Litchfield, 27 Fed. Rep. 894; Reynolds v. Davison, 34 Md. 662; Clark v. Hyatt, 55 N. Y. Super. Ct. 98; Fleming v. Ryan, 10 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 420.

So in Burkhard v. Mitchell, 16 Colo. 376, it was held that a landlord ratified a lease for two years, made by an agent having authority to lease for but one year, by accepting without objection rent accruing after the expiration of the first year.

And in No. 121 Madison Ave. v. Osgood (C. Pl.), 44 N. Y. St. Rep. 489, it was held that the acceptance of and action upon a release by a tenant of a right to a renewal of the lease constitutes a ratification by a landlord of the arrangement by which such release was procured by his agent.

In Torrence v. Shedd, 112 Ill. 466, it was held that the collection of a small portion of rents due from a tenant under a lease, after knowledge of the making of an unauthorized contract by the lessor's agent, is not a ratification of such contract for the sale of the lands; nor is the retention of the possession of the leased property obtained under such agent's contract, where the lessor had the right to declare a forfeiture and take forcible possession of the demised premises.

2. Turner v. Wilcox, 54 Ga. 593; Warneken v. Marchand, 18 La. Ann. 147; Reed v. Ritchey, 2 La. Ann. 797; Sentell v. Kennedy, 29 La. Ann. 679; Beall v. January, 62 Mo. 434.

Settlement as Ratification.—In Beall v. January, 62 Mo. 434, it was held that where a party orders his agent at specified dates to make sales for him, and receives an account of sales from him, and subsequently gives the agent notes for the balance due on such sales, with full knowledge that his instructions have been disobeyed, he cannot, in a suit on such notes by the agent, urge as a defense thereto that his instructions were disobeyed and he was damaged thereby, and that the notes were without consideration.

In Francis v. Kerker, 85 Ill. 190, where an agent sold corn of his principal to his own firm, and gave the principal a statement thereof, and no objection was made for two years, and the parties had a settlement of accounts, in which no allusion was made to the transaction, it was held that the principal thereby ratified the sale so made by the agent.

So in Richmond Mfg. Co. v. Starks, 4 Mason (U. S.) 296, where it appeared that a factor was authorized to sell goods at a limited price, and he afterwards sold them below that price, and sent an account to his principal of the sales and prices, and authorized him to draw for the balance of account; and the principal received the account and drew for the balance, and made no objection, in his letters or otherwise, to the conduct of the factor in the sales, it was held that there was sufficient evidence of a ratification.

3. Luckie v. Johnston, 89 Ga. 321; Lafette v. Godchaux, 35 La. Ann. 1161.

Agent's Notes Taken in Place of Notes Converted by Him.—If an agent receives a note for collection and improperly converts the same, but the principal with a knowledge of the same takes the agent's own notes, he will be bound thereby, and cannot recover from a third person. Cushman v. Loker, 2 Mass. 106.

Acceptance of Fruits of Compromise.—The acceptance of the fruits of a compromise by the principal is a ratification of the settlement made in his behalf, and he is bound thereby.¹

Dealing with Agent's Notes.—Ratification will be implied where the principal pays the notes of his agent or otherwise deals with them as his own.²

Filling Order Procured by Agent.—If the principal receives from the agent an order for goods and ships the goods, it has been held that he ratifies the contract.³

1. Delaney v. Levi, 19 La. Ann. 251; Culverhouse v. Marx, 39 La. Ann. 809; Kelley v. Newburyport, etc., Horse R. Co., 141 Mass. 496; Jackson v. Badger, 35 Minn. 52; Keeler v. Salisbury, 33 N. Y. 648; Ives v. Ives, 80 Hun (N. Y.) 136; Adams v. Smith, 19 Nev. 259; Tate v. Marco, 27 S. Car. 493; Strasser v. Conklin, 54 Wis. 102.

Illustrations—Acceptance of Compromise.—In Lowenstein v. McIntosh, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 251, where one entered into an agreement to submit a certain claim to arbitration, assuming to act as agent, it was held that the subsequent acceptance by the principal of an assignment from the assumed agent of the award made upon such submission, and his subsequent assignment of it to another party, were emphatic acts of ratification.

In Hauss v. Niblack, 80 Ind. 407, where some of a number of bondsmen employed an attorney at a certain fee to settle suits pending against all, and the others, with knowledge of the contract, enjoyed the fruits of the compromise, it was held that the latter thereby ratified the contract, and were liable with the others for the fee.

In Haar v. Industrial Ben. Assoc., 71 Hun (N. Y.) 554, it was held that a woman who received a draft for a smaller sum than her claim, payable to her order, and indorsed it and received the money thereon, ratified the act of her husband in making an adjustment of her claim, knowing at the time that her husband had entered into negotiations for the settlement of her claim.

In Tooker v. Sloan, 30 N. J. Eq. 394, a release by an attorney in fact of the holder of a mortgage, the latter having accepted the consideration from the former with knowledge of the release, was held binding on the principal, though the attorney exceeded his authority.

In Higginbotham v. May, 90 Va. 233, 17 Va. L. J. 439, where the holder of a note sent it to an attorney with instructions to renew if possible, but otherwise to sue, and after judgment received from the attorney a new note and a sum of money with an intimation that it had been agreed that if a small balance was soon paid it would be received in settlement of the judgment, and the holder accepted the note and the money, announcing the balance still due, and did nothing further for five years, he was held to have ratified the act of the attorney.

In Burke v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 83 Wis. 410, it was held that the fact that a railroad company received and retained an amount furnished by a friend of its defaulting agent constituted a ratification of the act of its auditor in representing that such payment would cover the shortage in the agent's account and prevent his discharge.

Acceptance of Conveyance.—Where an agent without authority accepts a deed of land to his principal as a payment on a debt due the principal, a retention by the latter of the title is a ratification. Miles v. Ogden, 54 Wis. 573.

Where the deed is received as security for the debt merely, in the absence of evidence to the contrary it will be presumed that the principal was advised of the arrangement, and if he received it without knowledge, that he adopted whatever arrangement his agent may have made. Meehan v. Forrester, 52 N. Y. 277.

In Carter v. Roland, 53 Tex. 540, it was held that the fact that the principal received specific property under an unauthorized compromise of a judgment for the property and money, without knowledge of the facts, did not amount to a ratification.

Abandonment of Suit.—In Hoit v. Cooper, 41 N. H. 111, it was held that the abandonment of a suit by the principal operates as a ratification of a compromise of the suit by an agent.

Compromise with Agent.—It has been held that if an agent makes an unauthorized sale, and steals the proceeds, and the principal subsequently compromises with the agent, the principal by such compromise ratifies the sale. Ogden v. Marchand, 29 La. Ann. 61. See Bridenbecker v. Lowell, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 9.

2. Harrod v. McDaniels, 126 Mass. 413; Dow v. Spenny, 29 Mo. 386; Commercial Bank v. Warren, 15 N. Y. 577.

Illustrations—Dealings with Notes.—So in Baer v. Lichten, 24 Ill. App. 311, it was held that a principal who accepts and retains the proceeds of a note, knowing that it was transferred by his agent upon an unauthorized indorsement, ratifies such indorsement.

In Allin v. Williams, 97 Cal. 403, it was held that an indorsement, by a principal whose name had been indorsed upon a note without authority, of a waiver thereon of payment, presentment, protest, and notice, was sufficient ratification of the prior indorsement by the attorney.

A mere subsequent unconditional promise to pay, however, by one in whose name a note has been executed without authority, is not, as a matter of law, a ratification, but evidence from which a ratification may be inferred. Commercial Bank v. Bernero, 17 Mo. App. 313. See also Owsley v. Phillips, 78 Ky. 517, 39 Am. Rep. 258.

3. Billings v. Mason, 80 Me. 496; Hitchcock v. Griffin, etc., Co., 99 Mich. 447; Boyd v. Baldwin, 12 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. City Ct.) 549.

Entry on Land Purchased or Leased.—An entry on land purchased or leased by an unauthorized agent, and the making of improvements thereon, is held to be a ratification.¹

Accepting Proceeds of Sale by Agent.—If one accepts the proceeds of a sale made in his behalf by an unauthorized agent, or an agent who has exceeded his authority, this will amount to a ratification.²

Implied Ratification of Representations by which Contract was Procured.—When a contract has been ratified with a full knowledge of the facts, by accepting the benefits thereunder, the principals cannot deny the unauthorized representations of the agent by means of which the contract was brought about, even though such representations are fraudulent.³

1. Ehrmanntraut v. Robinson, 52 Minn. 333; Vanderbilt v. Persse, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 428; Hall v. White, 123 Pa. St. 95.

Sale of Land Received in Exchange by Agent.—In Chambers v. Haney, 45 La. Ann. 447, it was held that an agent's unauthorized act in exchanging lands which he was only authorized to sell was ratified by a subsequent sale of the land received in exchange, made by the principal.

2. Illinois.—Nicholson v. Doney, 37 Ill. App. 531.

Wisconsin.—Pierce v. O'Keefe, 11 Wis. 180; Parish v. Reeve, 63 Wis. 315.

Proceeds of Sale Accepted.—In Norman v. Bennett, 32 W. Va. 614, it was held that the act of an agent in giving a title bond was ratified by receiving from the purchaser notes to be credited on the bond.

Where an agent acting in good faith sold notes belonging to the principal, to one who, although having constructive notice of want of authority in the agent to make the sale, purchased the notes in good faith, and remitted the purchase money to the principal, the latter, by electing to retain the fruits of the sale after receiving knowledge of the facts, thereby ratified the unauthorized acts of the agent, and could not, while claiming the right to retain the money, replevy the notes from the purchaser, especially where the principal had suffered no prejudice. Deering v. Grundy County Nat. Bank, 81 Iowa 222.

Claiming Title to Property Exchanged by Agent.—In Jones v. Atkinson, 68 Ala. 167, it was held that an agent having made without authority an exchange of a mule for a horse, a claim and assertion by the principal of right and title to the horse, with knowledge of the facts, was a ratification. See also Merrill v. Rokes, 54 Fed. Rep. 450.

Deed Executed in Blank.—In Reed v. Morton, 24 Neb. 760, 8 Am. St. Rep. 247, where a wife executed a deed in blank as to the name of the grantee and in other respects, and delivered such deed to her husband, to sell and convey her real estate therein described, and the husband thereafter sold said real estate, and filled the blanks in the deed and delivered it, and the wife with full knowledge received the proceeds, it was held that she by so doing ratified the sale and conveyance.

Ratification of Sale by Execution of Instrument.—In Mahony v. Ungrich (Super. Ct.), 14 N. Y. Supp. 375, it was held that a sale by the agent of one of two owners in common of land was ratified by the other by joining in the deed. So in McClintock v. South Penn Oil Co., 146 Pa. St. 144, it was held that a formal assignment executed by a husband and wife, indorsed on an option for the purchase of land held by the wife, which her husband had previously contracted to transfer to the assignee by an agreement indorsed on the option, and which was delivered to the assignee, is such a ratification by her of her husband's agreement as by its own force will validate it without any further acceptance by the assignee, where there has been no previous rescission or exchange of possession. See also State Bank v. McCorkell (Iowa, 1894), 60 N. W. Rep. 197; Townsend v. Kennedy (S. Dak., 1894), 60 N. W. Rep. 164.

St. Rep. 698; Albitz v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 40 Minn. 476; Mayer v. Dean, 115 N. Y. 556; Union Trust Co. v. Phillip (S. Dak., 1895), 63 N. W. Rep. 903; Barnard v. Roane Iron Co., 85 Tenn. 139; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Pittman, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 167; Morse v. Ryan, 26 Wis. 356.

Partial Ratification Not Permitted.—The principal cannot separate the legal power from the illegal elements of the contract and appropriate the advantages it secures, while he rejects the corrupt instrumentalities by which they were obtained. Smith v. Tracy, 36 N. Y. 83. See also supra, this section, Prerequisites to Valid Ratification—Ratification of Whole Act.

Ratification of Agent's False Representations.—In Fairchild v. McMahon, 139 N. Y. 290, it

c. BY SILENT ACQUIESCENCE—(1) General Rule.—As a general rule, silence on the part of the principal for a length of time without a sufficient excuse or explanation will amount to a ratification of the acts of an agent, especially where such acquiescence has a tendency to mislead the agent.¹

Duty to Disavow.—The principal should disavow the unauthorized act within a reasonable time after notice thereof; as to what is a reasonable time, the question will depend upon the circumstances of each case.²

was held that a mortgagee who accepts a mortgage procured by the fraudulent representation of his agent is bound by such representation, even though innocent himself.

And in Mitchell v. Finnell, 101 Cal. 614, it was held that one who authorized another as his agent to effect a settlement with a third person, said to have stolen his property, ratified the agent's act in procuring a note from such third party, by subsequently indorsing the note with full knowledge that it was given in settlement of the supposed claim, and of the manner in which it was obtained by the agent, although the note was obtained by false representations.

Duty of Principal to Make Inquiries.—In Busch v. Wilcox, 82 Mich. 336, 21 Am. St. Rep. 563, it was held that it was the duty of the principal to make all necessary inquiry into the facts, acts and representations of the agent before adopting the contract, and that it was not the duty of the person contracting with the self-constituted agent to inform the principal.

West Virginia.—Curry v. Hale, 15 W. Va. 867.

Wisconsin.—Hall v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 48 Wis. 317; Walworth County Bank v. Farmers' Loan, etc., Co., 16 Wis. 629; Kelly v. Phelps, 57 Wis. 425; Cooper v. Schwartz, 40 Wis. 54; Saveland v. Green, 40 Wis. 431; McWhinnie v. Martin, 77 Wis. 182.

When Silence a Ratification.—Chancellor Kent states the law briefly as follows: "When the principal is informed of what has been done, he must dissent, and give notice of it in a reasonable time; and if he does not, his assent and ratification will be presumed." 2 Kent Com. 616.

In Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Jay, 65 Ala. 113, Somerville, J., said: "It is true that mere knowledge on the part of the principal, of an agent's unauthorized action, will not make silence, or noninterference, in all cases, amount to ratification. But it would in those cases where the party dealing with the agent is misled or prejudiced; or where the usage of trade requires, or fair dealing demands, a prompt reply from the principal. In all such cases the principal, if dissatisfied with the act of the agent and fully informed of what has been done, must express his dissatisfaction within a reasonable time."

In DeLand v. Dixon Nat. Bank, 111 Ill. 396, it was held that although silence was strong evidence of ratification to be given to the jury, yet an instruction that the silence was a ratification was erroneous.

Illustrations—Failure to Object or Disavow Held Ratification.—Where it appears that various shipments were procured by the agent of the principals (commission merchants), which shipments were to be sold by the latter; that as such shipments were forwarded, the agent made advances thereon, of which the principals were informed; but that they made no objection until the agent sued to recover his advances, when they set up as a defense that he had exceeded his instructions in not allowing sufficient margin for protection against loss, it was held that the conduct of the principals was a clear ratification of the agent's acts. Featherston v. Graham, 17 La. Ann. 42.

In Saveland v. Green, 40 Wis. 431, where the owner of a vessel, when informed by a broker that he had procured his vessel to be chartered at a specified rate, did not disaffirm the contract either to the broker or to the charterer, it was held that the jury might infer a ratification.

In Bryce v. Clark (C. Pl.), 42 N. Y. St. Rep. 471, it was held that a principal who, after presentation of a bill for advertising in a certain periodical, the advertisement having been ordered by his agent without authority, permitted such advertisement to appear in subsequent issues of the periodical without notifying the publisher to discontinue, or of the want of authority in the agent, was liable for the advertisement.

In Postmaster Gen. v. Norvell, Gilp. (U.S.) 122, it was held that the retention of a bond from the 15th of July to the 25th of September, without objection to its sufficiency, would authorize the conclusion that it was accepted.

Wrongful Attachment.—In Pollock v. Gantt, 69 Ala. 374, 44 Am. Rep. 519, it was held that where an attachment was sued out by an agent without authority, and the principal did not repudiate the suit, the latter was liable in damages.

Sale of Land—Estoppel.—When the unauthorized act is a contract for sale of land, acquiescence, to bind the principal, must be by such act as will operate as an estoppel when the agreement is required to be in writing. Zimpelman v. Keating, 72 Tex. 318.

Partners.—In Forbes v. Hagman, 75 Va. 168, where one member of a firm was informed by its agent that the latter had, in the firm name and for its use and benefit, instituted a suit against a firm debtor and caused him to be arrested and detained in prison, and such partner made no inquiry as to the grounds of the arrest, gave no directions, and took no steps for the debtor's relief or discharge, it was held that the firm was bound by the acts of its agent and all the partners were responsible for the consequences of such acts.

Silence Not Ratification—Delay in Bringing Suit.—Mere delay in bringing a necessary suit cannot be held to be a ratification of an unauthorized act of an agent, where the principal expressly repudiates the act. See McClure v. Evarston, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 495. And in Holland v. Van Beil, 89 Ga. 223, it was held that ratification of the unauthorized receipt by an agent, of a less amount than the face of a promissory note, in full payment, did not result from a mere failure to bring suit upon the note for any time less than the limitation, in the absence of knowledge on his part.

Agreement Subject to Ratification by Principal.—In Abbe v. Rood, 6 McLean (U. S.) 106, the principle of ratification by silent acquiescence is recognized, but it is held that if the agent has entered into an agreement, notifying the debtor that he will submit it to his principal for ratification, unless he shall ratify it there is no binding obligation.

Sale under Limited Authority.—In White v. Langdon, 30 Vt. 599, the general rule was held not to be applicable without limitation to the case of an agent to whom is given a special and limited authority to sell property. In such a case it was held that, upon hearing of the sale in violation of his orders, the principal was not bound to give notice of his claim, and that his mere silence should not ordinarily be construed as a ratification.

Negligence in Principal in Failing to Prevent unauthorized fraudulent acts does not estop him from disavowing such acts. Schmidt v. Garfield Nat. Bank, 64 Hun (N. Y.) 298; McIntosh v. Battel, 68 Hun (N. Y.) 216.

have full knowledge of the act of his agent, and there can be no ratification if he has had no opportunity to repudiate the unauthorized act.¹

Reasonable Time a Question for Jury.—What is a reasonable time should be left to the determination of a jury in the light of all the circumstances of the case.²

Failure to Disavow Instantly.—Mere failure, however, to repudiate instantly the unauthorized act, is not necessarily a ratification.³

1. Walters v. Munroe, 17 Md. 154, 77 Am. Dec. 328; Williams v. Storm, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 203; Reese v. Medlock, 27 Tex. 120, 84 Am. Dec. 611; Ladd v. Hildebrandt, 27 Wis. 135, 9 Am. Rep. 445. See also supra, this section, Prerequisites to Valid Ratification—Knowledge of Material Facts.

No Opportunity to Disavow.—In McIntosh v. Battel, 68 Hun (N. Y.) 216, it was held that an owner of real estate could not be held responsible for its sale made by his agent upon the ground that for two days after the making of the contract of sale and the departure of the agent without fully explaining his action, he delayed to repudiate the authority and to disavow the contract.

In Saville v. Welch, 58 Vt. 683, where an agent fraudulently obtained possession of goods by ordering them of the plaintiff in the name of his assumed principal, who received a bill and invoice of the goods and delivered the bill to the agent at his request and on being told by the agent that he had ordered the goods as he did that they might not be attached, it was held that the silence of the defendant was not a ratification, it appearing that the agent did not tell him that the goods were bought on his, the defendant's, credit.

Record of Deed of Unauthorized Agent.—The record of a deed executed by an agent without authority is not per se notice to the principal. Reese v. Medlock, 27 Tex. 120, 84 Am. Dec. 611.

2. Minnesota Linseed Oil Co. v. Montague, 65 Iowa 67; Reese v. Medlock, 27 Tex. 120, 84 Am. Dec. 611; Cooper v. Schwartz, 40 Wis. 54.

Reasonable Time.—No strict rule can be laid down as to what is a reasonable time, or what is a sufficient delay to amount to a ratification, but this must be determined by a consideration of all the circumstances. The rule is well stated as follows: "Where, with a knowledge of the facts, the principal acquiesces in the act of the agent, under such circumstances as would make it his duty to repudiate such acts if he would avoid them, such acquiescence is a confirmation of the acts of the agent." Per Johnson, J., in Curry v. Hale, 15 W. Va. 875.

In McWhinnie v. Martin, 77 Wis. 182, where one employed a real estate agent to negotiate a sale of land, authorizing him to get offers, and the agent afterwards informed the principal that he had made a contract for sale at a price named, that the purchaser had made part payment and deposited the balance in bank and taken possession of the land, it was held that by remaining silent two months the principal ratified the sale.

In Hoosac Min., etc., Co. v. Donat, 10 Colo. 529, silence for more than three months after notice of the execution of an unauthorized lease was held to amount to a ratification. And in Alexander v. Jones, 64 Iowa 207, where an agent sold land without authority, but the principal made no objection for four years, during which time the purchasers had improved the land, and during three years of the time the agent had resided in the same town with his principal, but had at length absconded without having paid his principal any of the purchase money, it was held that there was a ratification of the sale.

A Question for the Court—Massachusetts.—In Massachusetts, however, whether the disavowal has been within a reasonable time is held to be a question of law for the court, to be decided upon all the circumstances of the case, unless something equivocal in those circumstances or material facts in dispute require a submission to the jury with instructions. Holbrook v. Burt, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 546; Haskins v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co., 5 Gray (Mass.) 432; Kupfer v. South Parish, 12 Mass. 185. See Bassett v. Brown, 105 Mass. 557.

3. Miller v. Excelsior Stone Co., 1 Ill. App. 273; Caswell v. Cross, 120 Mass. 545; Clarke v. Meigs, 10 Bosw. (N. Y.) 337.

When Failure to Disavow need Not be Instantaneous.—The rule of the text applies especially where the principal receives no direct benefit from the unauthorized act of his agent, and the party dealing with the agent is not misled or prejudiced by his failure to repudiate the act promptly, and a prompt reply is not demanded by fair dealing or the usage of trade, a ratification will not be presumed from his mere silence. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Jay, 65 Ala. 113.

Duty to Disavow, when Imperative.—In Myers v. New York Mut. L. Ins. Co., 32 Hun (N. Y.) 321, it was held that where the unauthorized act of an agent is done in the execution of a power granted, but in a mode not sanctioned by the power and in excess or misuse of it, ratification is implied from slight acts of confirmation on the part of the principal, and his duty to disavow at once is imperative.

The necessity of prompt disavowal of the acts of an agent in excess of his authority is, however, denied in some cases. Lewin v. Dille, 17 Mo. 70.

What is a Prompt Disavowal.—In Clay v. Spratt, 7 Bush (Ky.) 334, it was held that an instruction that if the principal failed to disavow promptly the unauthorized act he would be held to have ratified it, was proper. The court said: "The use of the word 'promptly' in the instructions given at defendants' instance is particularly objected to. It is insisted that [the principal] was not required to use the utmost possible despatch in disavowing the sale. We agree that he was not, but we do not think the word 'promptly'

Prompt Disavowal Demanded by Usage or to Prevent Loss.—But when the usage of trade requires it, or when a delay might mislead the agent or other parties, upon notice from the agent informing his principal of his transaction it is the duty of the latter to repudiate promptly the act if he wishes to avoid liability.¹

Failure to Examine Report of Agent.—A principal should within a reasonable time examine his agent's report, and disavow such acts as are unauthorized; and if he fails to do so, his silence will be deemed good evidence of a ratification.² So it has been held that a ratification may be inferred where the agent has informed his principal of his acts by letter but received no reply.³

Delay in Hope of Gaining Advantage.—When the principal delays in the hope of gaining an advantage, his failure to disavow will be held to be a ratification.⁴

admits of that construction in the connection in which it is used. It implies only that he should not have been dilatory: should have been guilty of no unnecessary delay; and this was a correct exposition of the law."

1. Meister v. Cleveland Dryer Co., 11 Ill. App. 227; Farwell v. Howard, 26 Iowa 381; Ball v. Bender, 22 La. Ann. 496; Oliver v. Johnson, 24 La. Ann. 460; Maddux v. Bevan, 39 Md. 485; Bredin v. Dubarry, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 27.

Illustrations.—So in Law v. Cross, 1 Black (U. S.) 533, it was held that when an agent at a distant port departs from his instructions for the supposed advantage of his principal, the principal must repudiate the act, if at all, as soon as he has information of it.

And in McGeoch v. Hooker, 11 Ill. App. 649, it was held that a principal who, when notified by an agent buying for him on margins of a sale made, does not object thereto, will be held to have ratified the act.

In Oliver v. Johnson, 24 La. Ann. 460, it was held that an agent who exceeded his authority in the collection and investment of the proceeds of notes, was not liable therefor if the principal, on being advised of the collection and investment by the agent himself, fails to notify him promptly that he repudiates his acts.

Wilson* (Buffalo Super. Ct.), 33 N. Y. St. Rep. 503, 11 N. Y. Supp. 565; Ruffner v. Hewitt, 7 W. Va. 585.

Examining Report of Agent.—Where an agent for disbursing funds makes a report to his principal, showing his disbursements, and accompanied with a draft for the balance in his hands, the principal must within a reasonable time (a question for the jury) examine the report, and make known to the agent any objections which he may desire to make thereto. Failing so to do within a reasonable time, his silence will be treated as a ratification of the agent's disbursements. Minnesota Linseed Oil Co. v. Montague, 65 Iowa 67.

In Hawkins v. McGroarty, 110 Mo. 546, it was held that the testimony of the agent that he immediately notified the principal of an unauthorized sale and that the latter expressed no disapprobation, did not justify finding a ratification, where the principal denied that he had seen the agent or heard from him until he had sold to a third party.

3. Teasdale v. McPike, 25 Mo. App. 341; Lindsley v. Malone, 23 Pa. St. 24. But see Bosseau v. O'Brien, 4 Biss. (U. S.) 395.

Retaining Agent's Letters without Reply.—In Cairnes v. Bleecker, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 300, where it was shown that the agent informed his principal by letter on the 18th of July of his action, but the principal did not answer the letter until the 29th of October following, it was held that the delay amounted to a ratification of the agent's conduct.

In Foster v. Rockwell, 104 Mass. 167, where it was shown that on the 21st of October a letter was mailed by the agents giving definite notice of their acts in the purchase and shipment of goods; that no reply was made to this letter; that the first expression of disapprobation on the part of the principal was in a letter dated the 29th of October in reply to one of the 26th stating that the property had probably been lost—it was held that there was sufficient evidence of ratification.

In Francis v. Kerker, 85 Ill. 190, where an agent sold corn of his principal to his own firm and gave the principal a statement thereof, and no objection was made for two years, and the parties had a settlement of accounts in which no allusion was made to the transaction, it was held that the principal thereby ratified the sale so made by the agent.

In Palmer v. Gould (Supreme Ct.), 44 N. Y. St. Rep. 802, it was held that receipt by a principal of a copy of a contract for the sale of land made by an agent without authority, accompanied by a blank power of attorney for his signature, is not sufficient notice for him that his agent has entered into such a contract without authority, to make his retention thereof without objection a ratification, where it bears the signature only of the other party thereto.

4. Speculative Delay.—Featherston v. Graham, 17 La. Ann. 42.

Where a party was informed on May 20th that his broker had sold stock previously purchased on his account, but remained silent, and in September demanded an account of sales, which was received without objection, and several months later brought an action against the broker, claiming that such sales were premature, it was held that if he did not intend to assent to this transaction of the broker he should have notified him at once, and not having dissented within a reasonable time a ratification of the broker's acts would be presumed. Hanks v. Drake, 49 Barb. (N.

Silence Accompanied with Possession of Property.—Where the silent acquiescence is accompanied with the possession of property the presumption of ratification is naturally increased.¹ So if with full knowledge the principal holds doubtful notes for an unreasonable time, this failure to repudiate his agent's act in receiving them will be held a ratification.²

Act Done in the Presence of Principal.—If an act is done by the agent in his presence his silence or failure to repudiate will amount to a ratification.³

Agent Failing to Notify Principal Estopped to Claim Silence a Ratification.—An agent may forfeit his right of construing the silence of his principal as an implied acquiescence, by delaying in the giving of notice to his principal until an election to approve or disapprove would be attended with no benefit to the latter.⁴

Silence of One of Two Joint Agents.—The rule of ratification by silent acquiescence applies to principals only, and not to joint agents. So the failure of one of two joint agents to repudiate the separate act of his fellow does not ratify the same.⁵

Silent Acquiescence by Corporation.—The principle of ratification by silence is applicable to corporations in the same manner as to natural persons.⁶ But in

Y.) 186. So also in McGeoch v. Hooker, 11 Ill. App. 649.

In Meyer v. Morgan, 51 Miss. 21, 24 Am. Rep. 617, where an agent sold without authority cotton of his principal, it was held that the principal was entitled to no more time than was needful to examine the tendency of the cotton market, and to bring his mind to the conclusion whether he had better accept the price for which his factor had sold or take the chance of a rise, and that he could not keep that subject open for nearly three months and then repudiate the sale.

1. McConnell v. Bowdry, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 392; Miles v. Ogden, 54 Wis. 573. See also supra, this section, Implied Ratification—By Accepting Benefits.

The principal may, however, upon learning that the agent exceeded his authority, repudiate the act without restoring the property, if, before he learned of the unauthorized act, he had disposed of the property so that he could not restore it, or if its restoration would be of no practical value to the other party. Humphrey v. Havens, 12 Minn. 298.

2. Plano Mfg. Co. v. Buxton, 36 Minn. 203.

So in Jennison v. Parker, 7 Mich. 355, where, in the principal's absence, his clerk received of his debtor a draft, and accepted the same, to be applied, when paid, on the debtor's account, and after the draft fell due the plaintiff wrote the debtor respecting it, not repudiating the act of the clerk, and, on subsequently seeing the debtor, offered to return the unpaid draft, it was held that this was sufficient evidence from which a jury might infer a ratification by the plaintiff of the act of the clerk.

Offer to Surrender Note of No Avail at Trial.—In Southern Oil Works v. Jefferson, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 581, it was held that the plaintiff's conditional or unconditional offer at a trial, to surrender a draft which formed part of the contract sued upon, will not rebut the inference from long acquiescence and retention of the draft that the holder ratified the contract made by his agent.

3. Owsley v. Woolhopter, 14 Ga. 124.

So where one stands by and hears a contract made for him by another, he is bound by such contract. James v. Russell, 92 N. Car. 194; Bronson v. Chappell, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 681.

4. Williams v. Merritt, 23 Ill. 623; Amory v. Hamilton, 17 Mass. 109.

5. Penn v. Evans, 28 La. Ann. 576.

Full knowledge and acquiescence therein however, by another agent the scope of whose authority covers the unauthorized act, will amount to a ratification. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Belgart, 84 Ala. 519.

6. Melledge v. Boston Iron Co., 5 Cush (Mass.) 158, 51 Am. Dec. 59; Hoyt v. Thompson, 19 N. Y. 207; Sheldon Hat Blocking Co. v. Eickemeyer Hat Blocking Mach. Co., 90 N. Y. 607; Kelsey v. Crawford County Nat. Bank, 69 Pa. St. 426.

Act of Corporation Officer Ratified by Silent Acquiescence.—"When the president of a corporation executes in its behalf and within the scope of its charter a contract which requires the concurrence of the board of directors, and the board, knowing that he has done so, does not dissent within a reasonable time, it will be presumed to have ratified his act." Per Gray, J., in Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Keokuk, etc., Bridge Co., 131 U. S. 371. See also Fitzgerald, etc., Constr. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 137 U. S. 109; Augusta, etc., R. Co. v. Kittel, 52 Fed. Rep. 63.

In Belleville Sav. Bank v. Winslow, 35 Fed. Rep. 471, where the president of a bank attempted to compromise in behalf of the bank with a debtor of the bank, and the bank rejected the compromise, but the debtor was not notified of this, and the collaterals relinquished by the debtor were sold by the bank, and the bank, by its transactions for seven years, so acted as to justify a belief in its acquiescence in the compromise, it was held that the bank, by its action, had ratified the compromise.

the case of corporations, especially governmental bodies, it would seem to be reasonable not to require as prompt a disavowal as in the case of an individual, the operations of such bodies being more complex.¹

(2) Where Act is Done by a Stranger.—A distinction is made in some cases between acts which are done by a duly appointed agent in excess of his authority, and acts of a mere stranger or volunteer done in behalf of an alleged principal, it being maintained that in the latter class of cases it is not incumbent upon him for whose benefit the act is done to disavow promptly such act—indeed, that he is required to take no notice thereof and can be bound only by an affirmative answer.²

In Kelsey v. Crawford County Nat. Bank, 69 Pa. St. 426, where a question arose as to the ratification of the acts of a bank cashier by the corporation, Williams J., said: "In delivering the opinion of the court [in Pennsylvania Bank v. Reed, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 101] Rogers, J., said: 'It is a very clear and salutary rule in relation to agencies, that when the principal, with the knowledge of all the facts, adopts or acquiesces in the acts done under an assumed agency, he cannot be heard afterwards to impeach them under the pretense that they were done without authority or even contrary to instructions. * * * When the principal has been informed of what has been done, he must dissent and give notice of it in a reasonable time; and if he does not, his assent and ratification will be presumed.' If, then, the directors of the bank were informed that the cashier had offered the reward, it was their duty promptly to disavow the act if they did not intend that the bank should be bound by it. * * * Nor was it necessary, in order to bind the bank by their acquiescence, that notice should have been given to the directors when sitting in their official capacity as a board. If they were personally cognizant of the offer made by the cashier, it was their duty to call a meeting of the board and disavow the act if they were unwilling that the bank should be bound by it."

In Indianapolis Rolling Mill v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 120 U. S. 256, it was held that when a board of directors with knowledge of their agents' acts, did not disaffirm their action within six months, they ratified the same.

So in Walworth County Bank v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 16 Wis. 629, where a sale of property belonging to a railroad company was made by its president in part payment of a debt due from the company, and which sale was in fact unauthorized, it was held that if the fact of the sale had been communicated to its board of directors and was openly talked of at one of their meetings, but they did nothing to disaffirm it, this would be deemed a ratification of the sale.

Employment of Physician by Railroad Company.—A company impliedly ratifies the act of a conductor or other officer in employing a physician, if, after a full knowledge of all the facts, it does not disaffirm the employment. Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. Stockwell, 118 Ind. 100; Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Mahoney, 82 Ill. 75, 25 Am. Rep. 299; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Rodrigues, 47 Ill. 188; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Prince, 50 Ill. 26.

So in Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Morris

67 Ill. 295, where the conductor of the defendant railway company brought a brakeman who had received a serious injury while in defendant's service, to the plaintiff's house to be cared for, and immediately thereafter telegraphed to the officers of the company the facts, and they did not notify the plaintiff that the company would not be responsible, it was held that the company by their silence ratified the acts of their agent.

1. In School Dist. No. 6 v. Aetna Ins. Co., 62 Me. 330, Peters, J., said: "A presumption from the nonaction of a corporation like a school district would be less readily inferable than in the case of individuals, who can more readily act. A district can be bound only by some recorded vote, or some act, or an acquiescence upon their part as a corporation, equivalent thereto." See also Davis v. School Dist. No. 2, 24 Me. 349.

In Delafield v. Illinois, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 175, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 192, Bronson, J., said: "Under particular circumstances, the silence of the principal for a very few days, after he is advised of an act done by his agent, may amount to strong presumptive evidence of ratification, especially where such silence has a tendency to mislead the opposite party. But it will never do to apply so rigorous a rule where a state is the principal."

2. Ward v. Williams, 26 Ill. 447, 79 Am. Dec. 385; Searing v. Butler, 69 Ill. 575; Foster v. Rockwell, 104 Mass. 167; Kelly v. Phelps, 57 Wis. 425. See also Powell v. Henry, 27 Ala. 612; White v. Langdon, 30 Vt. 599.

View that Silence No Ratification of Act of Volunteer.—This doctrine is maintained by a learned writer as follows: "Where the relation of principal and agent does in fact exist, although in the particular transaction the agent has exceeded his authority, an intention to ratify will always be presumed from the silence of the principal who has received a letter informing him what has been done on his account. But when the person doing the business is a mere volunteer, who has officiously interfered in the affairs of another person, and has effected an insurance or made a purchase for him, I do not conceive that the other person is bound to answer a letter from the intermeddler informing him of the contracts so made in his name, nor that his silence can be construed into a ratification. Certainly no case has gone this length, and the opinion of the great Cujas is that this is no ratification." 1 Livermore on Agency, p. 50.

Silence Ratification as to Third Parties.—But it has been held that mere inaction may operate as a ratification so far as concerns third parties, yet not amount to that in favor of the agent.¹

Silence Some Evidence of Ratification.—The better rule, however, seems to be that although the relation of the parties as principal and agent is an important consideration, yet in the case of a mere stranger or volunteer, the silence of the alleged principal, when fully informed of the unauthorized act, is evidence of a ratification, though far less strong.²

Silence Likely to Mislead.—But in the case of a mere stranger, as well as in the case of an agent exceeding his authority, silence with notice on the part of the party for whose benefit the act is done, which is likely to cause injury to or mislead other parties, should be held to amount to a ratification.³

d. BY SUIT.—Implied ratification arises also where the alleged principal claims and seeks to enforce by suit rights based upon the unauthorized acts of an agent or other person acting in behalf of the principal.⁴ Ratification

Silence Evidence of Ratification for Jury.—In Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Cowell, 28 Pa. St. 329, 70 Am. Dec. 128, these principles are fully discussed by Woodward, J. In delivering the opinion of the court he said: "To say that silence is no evidence of it [ratification] is to say there can be no implied ratification of an unauthorized act, or at the least to tie up the possibility of ratification to the accident of prior relations. Neither reason nor authority justifies such a conclusion. A man who sees what has been done in his name and for his benefit, even by an intermeddler, has the same power to ratify and confirm it that he would have to make a similar contract for himself; and if the power to ratify be conceded to him, the fact of ratification must be provable by the ordinary means." The learned judge, continuing, criticised the statement of Livermore quoted in the note above, and generally the view of the civil law writers. "It is to be remembered," said he, "that such writers are not laying down a rule of evidence to govern trials by jury, but are declaring rather the effect upon the judicial mind of the party's silence. It is one thing to say that the law will not imply a ratification from silence, and a very different thing to say that silence is a circumstance from which, with others, a jury may imply it."

Failure to Disclose a Forgery.—In Duconge v. Forgay, 15 La. Ann. 37, it was held that the failure to denounce a forgery as soon as advised of it did not render a person liable upon the forged note or others subsequently disposed of.

When Agent Acts for Himself, Not as Agent.—In Hamlin v. Sears, 82 N. Y. 327, it was held that where an agent has wrongfully taken the property of his principal and sold it, not as agent, but on his own account, mere silence on the part of the owner does not confirm the sale. The owner, upon discovery of the wrong, is not required to make immediate efforts to regain his property; and silence, short of the time prescribed by the statute of limitations, will not bar his claim.

After Revocation.—In Kelly v. Phelps, 57 Wis. 425, it was held that after revocation of an agent's authority the principal is not bound, as between himself and the agent, to notify the latter of his dissent from acts done by such agent in pursuance of the original authority.

3. In Heyn v. O'Hagen, 60 Mich. 157, this view is adopted. Champlin, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Whether silence operates as presumptive proof of ratification of the act of a mere volunteer, must depend upon the particular circumstances of the case. If those circumstances are such that the inaction or silence of the party sought to be charged as principal would be likely to cause injury to the person giving credit to and relying upon such assumed agency, or to induce him to believe such agency did in fact exist, and to act upon such belief to his detriment, then such silence or inaction may be considered as a ratification of the agency." A similar rule is stated by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin in the case of Saveland v. Green, 40 Wis. 438.

may arise also from the nature or kind of defense to an action.¹

Suit to Enforce Contract.—If one seek to enforce a contract made on his behalf, he will be deemed to have authorized or subsequently ratified it;² thus in trying to enforce the payment of notes received by an agent, the principal ratifies the agent's act.³

Suit to Recover Price of Goods.—An action by the owner of goods to recover the price thereof, either from the agent⁴ who has disposed of them without

New York.—Wilmot v. Richardson, 4 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 614.

Ohio.—Woodward v. Suydam, 11 Ohio 363.

Suit on Agent's Unauthorized Contracts, etc.—Where a principal appeared in court and presented an attachment which had been sent out in his name by a person assuming to act as his agent, it was held that this was a full recognition of the authority to execute the bond. Dove v. Martin, 23 Miss. 588; Augusta Bank v. Conrey, 28 Miss. 667.

Where, during a creditor's absence from the country, an attorney, without the creditor's knowledge, accepted from a debtor a confession of judgment, and afterwards the partner of the creditor requested the attorney to issue execution, it was held that this was sufficient to show acceptance of the judgment by the creditor, as against subsequent judgment creditors. Johnston v. McAusland, 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 214.

By bringing suit, however, the principal does not release the agent from a claim for negligence. Owensboro Bank v. Western Bank, 13 Bush (Ky.) 526, 26 Am. Rep. 211.

Suit for Money Received without Authority.—In Benson v. Liggett, 73 Ind. 452, where an agent without authority received money for his principal and subsequently loaned the money, it was held that an action by the principal against the administrators of the agent ratified the receipt, but not the loan made by him.

Suit to Recover Loan—Insufficient Security.—In St. Mary's Bank v. Calder, 3 Strobb. (S. Car.) 403, it was held that where an agent is authorized to lend money, but he takes insufficient security therefor, the fact that the principal commences a suit against the borrower to recover the money lent is not necessarily a ratification and approval of the security taken. In this case Wardlaw, J., said: "By testing the value of the security which was taken, the plaintiff did not assent to its sufficiency, or acknowledge the propriety of its being taken. He was entitled to the use of all the securities which his agent took; if he was not wanting in diligence, the agent has suffered nothing from his use of them. If the agent was liable for taking insufficient security, collection of part of the money by the principal would have been a relief to him pro tanto. Entire failure to collect after effort made leaves the loss of the principal and liability of the agent as they were before the effort made."

Recording Levy.—Where a return by a sheriff showed that he delivered seisin and possession of land taken in execution to the agent instead of the attorney of the creditor, the recording thereof was held to amount to a subsequent ratification. Pratt v. Putnam, 13 Mass. 364. See also Herring v. Polley, 8 Mass. 113.

Suit to Try Title.—In Gillis v. Bailey, 17 N. H. 18, it was held that a suit prosecuted by a corporation in the lessee's name was not a ratification of a lease made by their agent, the suit being brought merely to try the title.

2. Cake's Appeal, 110 Pa. St. 65; Dodge v. Lambert, 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 570.

Illustrations—Suit to Enforce Contract as Ratification.—An action against the mortgagor to recover possession of land is a ratification of the act procuring the mortgage. North Brookfield Sav. Bank v. Flanders, 161 Mass. 335.

So an action for goods, claiming under a mortgage, was held to ratify the act of an attorney in taking the mortgage in the plaintiff's name. Partridge v. White, 59 Me. 564. And in Eaton v. Knowles, 61 Mich. 625, it was held that a wife whose husband had assumed to act as her agent in purchasing a mortgage, ratifies his act by bringing suit for breach of covenant in the deed of assignment.

Where an officer, having served a writ of replevin, allowed, as the special agent of the plaintiff, the property replevied to remain in the possession of a third person, who made an agreement in writing, not under seal, with the officer, to redeliver the property to him on demand, and to guarantee to him, as the agent of the plaintiff, a reasonable rent for the use thereof in the mean time, and the plaintiff brought an action on the contract in his own name, it was held that the contract was made with the officer as the agent of the plaintiff, and that the bringing of the action thereon was a ratification of the agency. Fiedler v. Smith, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 336.

Pleading Contract—Proof of Ratification.—In Tingley v. Bellingham Bay Boom Co., 5 Wash. 644, it was held that the act of the assumed agent of a corporation was ratified by the corporation in pleading, in a mandamus proceeding in which it was plaintiff, the existence of the contract made by the agent.

In Beloit Bank v. Beale, 34 N. Y. 473, it was held that where a principal, with full knowledge of a fraud perpetrated by his authority, or from the vendee,¹ as for debt due, is prima facie evidence of ratification of the unauthorized sale.

6. Ratification of Instruments under Seal.—It is a rule of common law that the authority to execute a contract must be of the same dignity as is required in the execution of the authority conferred, and so the ratification of an unauthorized act, the authority for which might have been by parol, may be made in any manner expressing assent; but a deed or other sealed instrument cannot be ratified except by writing under seal.² agent in the disposition of property purchased with his money, elects to prosecute to judgment for the money so misappropriated, he affirms the acts of his agent, and cannot afterwards pursue the property which he had elected to treat as that of his agent. See also Morris v. Rexford, 18 N. Y. 552.

Assumpsit for Value of Goods.—The owner of the goods may, however, bring suit to recover the value of goods upon an implied promise to pay, and such action will not necessarily ratify the unauthorized contract of sale made by the agent. So where a salesman in a store sold goods, and at the same time agreed to take back damaged goods previously sold by him to the purchaser, and his principal, denying his authority to make such a promise, repudiated the agreement, and notified the purchaser that he would not take back the former goods, the bringing of a subsequent action by the principal to recover the price of the goods last sold does not necessarily ratify the agent's unauthorized agreement, so as to prevent the plaintiff from recovering without performing that agreement; but in such case the authority of the agent to make the promise, and the ratification of his promise by the principal, are both questions of fact for the determination of the jury; and a charge which assumes that he had authority, or that there was a sufficient ratification to bind the principal, was properly refused. Carew v. Lillenthall, 50 Ala. 44.

And in Gould v. Blodgett, 61 N. H. 115, it was held that an action of assumpsit against a person to whom the agent has delivered his principal's property in payment of his own debt is not a ratification of the unauthorized delivery.

An Action of Trover, however, is not such a suit as ratifies the unauthorized act of the agent, but on the other hand, being expressly for the recovery of the goods themselves, such an action disaffirms the unauthorized disposition of the chattels. Smith v. Hodson, 4 T. R. 211. In this case it was held that if a bankrupt on the eve of his bankruptcy fraudulently delivers goods to one of his creditors, the assignees may disaffirm the contract and recover the value of the goods in trover.

Sale of Land—California.—Under the California Civ. Code, §§ 2309-10, which provides that when a particular mode or form is necessary to confer authority, ratification can be made only in the same manner, it is held that acceptance of part of the purchase money paid for land and bringing suit for the balance are not a ratification. See Salfield v. Sutter County Land Imp., etc., Co., 94 Cal. 546.

Suit for Price No Ratification of Warranty.—Bringing a suit for the price of a horse, which the agent had sold, was held not a ratification of an unauthorized warranty. Cooley v. Perrine, 41 N. J. L. 322, 32 Am. Rep. 210.

Sale Made on Unauthorized Terms.—In Shoninger v. Peabody, 59 Conn. 588, it was held that the ratification of an agent's sale on the terms on which he testifies it was made was not shown by continuing an action for the purchase price after his testimony, when this is contradicted by the other party.

Where Authority Required to be in Writing.—In Ragan v. Chenault, 78 Ky. 545, it was held that an agent could not bind his principal as surety for another unless his authority so to do was in writing, the statute requiring it, and that a subsequent parol ratification by the principal, of such act, did not make the original signing effective.

Principal Estopped to Deny Deed.—But such a deed may become binding upon the principal on the ground of estoppel.¹

Ratification by Partnership.—In the case of a partnership, however, it is now well established in most of the states of the Union that a sealed contract relating to the partnership business, executed by one of the several partners, is binding on all, although without authority under seal, if they subsequently ratify it by giving their assent, which may be proved by the acts of the parties and the circumstances of the case, or by their verbal declarations or admissions.²

Seal Surplusage.—When, however, no seal was required, the mere fact that the instrument has been so executed will not necessitate a ratification under seal.³

Antedated Power of Attorney.—Where an attorney appointed by parol executed a bond in the name of the principal and afterwards the principal gave him a regular power of attorney, dated prior to the bond, this was held a good ratification of the bond. Milliken v. Coombs, 1 Me. 343, 10 Am. Dec. 70.

Assignment of Mortgagee's Interest.—Where a sheriff sold certain mortgaged premises under an order of court, void by reason of want of authority in the court to make the order, and by direction of the mortgagee made a deed by which he undertook to convey the fee of the lands, it was held, in a suit in equity against the mortgagee and others, that the sheriff must be regarded as acting as the private agent of the mortgagee, that the deed would be upheld to the extent of the mortgagee's interest, and would operate as an assignment of his legal estate in the premises, and that the fact that the authority from him to the sheriff was by parol would not render the instrument void under the statute of frauds, since the mortgagee's admission of the facts in his answer to the bill in which the transaction was relied upon, was a ratification. Stoney v. Shultz, 1 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 465, 27 Am. Dec. 429.

Contract for Sale of Land.—As it is not necessary that a contract for the sale of land be in writing, an unauthorized contract for the sale may be ratified in any manner showing an assent thereto. Powell v. Gossom, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 179; Hammond v. Hannin, 21 Mich. 374, 4 Am. Rep. 490; Brown v. Eaton, 21 Minn. 409; Dickerman v. Ashton, 21 Minn. 538; Goss v. Stevens, 32 Minn. 472; Breithaupt v. Thurmond, 3 Rich. (S. Car.) 216.

Parol Acknowledgment of Authority under Seal.—In Blood v. Goodrich, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 525, 27 Am. Dec. 152, it was held that a subsequent parol acknowledgment that an agent had authority under seal to execute a prior deed was competent, but that if the agent had no such authority the subsequent parol acknowledgment and ratification of the deed would not bind the principal.

1. Palmer v. Williams, 24 Mich. 328; Hyatt v. Clark, 118 N. Y. 563.

Deeds Binding Principal by Estoppel.—In Zimelman v. Keating, 72 Tex. 318, it was held that if the principal adopt the sale and receive the purchase money, with full knowledge of the facts, it would be a ratification by estoppel.

So in Grove v. Hodges, 55 Pa. St. 504, it was held that the principal, by accepting the proceeds of the unauthorized execution of a deed, was bound by it as if he had signed and sealed it. And in Fouch v. Wilson, 59 Ind. 93, it was held that a principal, after taking possession of land mortgaged, could not deny the unauthorized act of his agent in securing the mortgage.

2. Holbrook v. Chamberlin, 116 Mass. 155, 17 Am. Rep. 146; Smith v. Kerr, 3 N. Y. 144; Mackay v. Bloodgood, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 285; Skinner v. Dayton, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 513, 10 Am. Dec. 286, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 351; Bond v. Aitken, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 165, 40 Am. Dec. 550; Drumright v. Philpot, 16 Ga. 424, 60 Am. Dec. 738; Peine v. Weber, 47 Ill. 41; Pike v. Bacon, 21 Me. 280, 38 Am. Dec. 259; Swan v. Stedman, 4 Met. (Mass.) 548; Cady v. Shepherd, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 400, 22 Am. Dec. 379; McNaughten v. Partridge, 11 Ohio 223, 38 Am. Dec. 731; Purviance v. Sutherland, 2 Ohio St. 486; McDonald v. Eggleston, 26 Vt. 154, 60 Am. Dec. 303. See also the title PARTNERSHIP.

In some jurisdictions, however, this strictness of the rule at common law is adhered to. See Tappan v. Redfield, 5 N. J. Eq. 339; Turbeville v. Ryan, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 113, 34 Am. Dec. 622; Smith v. Dickinson, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 261, 44 Am. Dec. 306. See also the title PARTNERSHIP.

Dec. 330; Lawrence v. Taylor, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 107; Evans v. Wells, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 340; State v. Spartanburg, etc., R. Co., 8 S. Car. 129. But see Pollard v. Gibbs, 55 Ga. 45.

Lease Ratified by Parol.—And in McDowell v. Simpson, 3 Watts (Pa.) 129, 27 Am. Dec. 338, it was held that a parol ratification of a lease for seven years gives to the tenant an estate at will, and if it continue more than a year, an estate from year to year, of which he cannot be dispossessed except upon having received three months' notice.

In California it is expressly provided by statute that a ratification can be made only in the manner that would have been necessary to confer an original authority, or where an oral authorization would suffice by accepting or retaining the benefit of the act, with notice thereof. Cal. Civ. Code, § 2310. See Bordeferre v. Den, 106 Cal. 594; Goetz v. Goldbaum (Cal., 1894), 37 Pac. Rep. 646.

Exception to General Rule—Massachusetts.—A notable exception to the general rule obtains in Massachusetts, where it is held that in other cases, as well as in the case of partnership, a sealed instrument may be ratified by parol.¹

7. Effect of Ratification—a. IN GENERAL.—By the ratification of the unauthorized act the relation of principal and agent, with all the rights and duties incident thereto, is as fully established as if the authority had been conferred originally; the ratification relates back to the time of the performance of the acts, as expressed in the familiar maxim, *Omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato priori æquiparatur.*²

Torts.—And this rule is applicable to cases of tort as well as to cases of contract.¹

Ratification Irrevocable.—A ratification once made is irrevocable.²

b. AS BETWEEN PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.—The ratification operates per se as an adoption of the act of the agent, and not merely as presumptive evidence of previous authority.³

Ratification Releases Agent.—And by the act of ratification the principal assumes all responsibility for the act or contract, and the agent is thereby relieved if his act has been done as agent merely.⁴ The principal in ratifying the act confirms it as done, and so cannot hold the assumed agent responsible for not doing the act in the manner in which he would have been bound to perform it if authorized.⁵

Entitles Agent to Expenses.—And the agent is entitled to all expenses incurred as if he had acted with full authority.⁶

c. LIABILITY OF PRINCIPAL AND AGENT TO THIRD PARTIES.—By the act of ratification the principal assumes the same liability with respect to third parties as if he had conferred authority in the beginning.⁷ Upon ratifying the putting of his name to a note the principal becomes as liable as if he had made the note originally.⁸

Distinction between Ratification of Contracts and Torts.—As to the liability of the agent to third parties subsequent to the ratification, a distinction must be observed between contracts and torts. The ratification of the agent's unauthorized contracts transfers all the rights and liability therein to the alleged principal.⁹ But the ratification of the agent's tortious acts, although it relieves him of all liability to his principal, does not remove his personal liability to the party injured.¹⁰

Vermont.—Whitwell v. Warner, 20 Vt. 425; Bigelow v. Denison, 23 Vt. 564; Brooks v. Fletcher, 56 Vt. 624.

Virginia.—Downer v. Morrison, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 237.

Wisconsin.—Weiseger v. Wheeler, 14 Wis. 101; Brown v. La Crosse City Gas Light, etc., Co., 21 Wis. 51; Stewart v. Mather, 32 Wis. 344.

Effect is Given to the Specific Act Only.—As was held in Baldwin v. Burrows, 47 N. Y. 199, the ratification is not retroactive to the extent of binding the principal for other acts in excess of the authority of the agent.

Third Party's Rights against Agent.—But in Rossiter v. Rossiter, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 494, 24 Am. Dec. 62, it was maintained that the subsequent ratification of an unauthorized note did not relieve the agent of his liability thereon. Certainly this would be the law where the authority was so executed as to render the agent liable thereon. Lucas v. Barrett, 1 Greene (Iowa) 510; Palmer v. Stephens, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 471.

10. Stephens v. Elwall, 4 M. & S. 259; Featherstonhaugh v. Johnston, 8 Taunt. 237, 4 E. C. L. 86; Perminter v. Kelly, 18 Ala. 716, 54 Am. Dec. 177; Richardson v. Kimball, 28 Me. 463.

Act in Behalf of Government.—There is an exception to the general rule, however, in the case of the crown or government; for it is held that if the crown ratifies an act, the character of the act becomes altered; the ratification does not give the party injured the double option of bringing his action against the agent who committed the trespass or the principal who ratified it, but he has a remedy against the crown only. Buron v. Denman, 2 Exch. 167. See also McKeel v. Bass, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 151; Waller v. Parker,

d. AS TO INTERVENING RIGHTS.—An exception to the general rule as to the retroactive effect of the ratification of an unauthorized act prevails in the interest of third parties who have acquired rights in the mean time; in such case the ratification will not be permitted to disturb the vested rights of outside parties.¹ So a ratification cannot defeat an attachment levied on the property of a debtor after a sale by or to the agent.²

Vested Rights—Where, however, the doctrine of relation is applied merely for the protection of a clearly superior equity, such an application would be consistent with recognized legal principles, even though it should interfere with the claims of third persons resting upon an inferior equity.³

XI. TERMINATION—1. By Act of Parties—a. IN ACCORDANCE WITH AGREEMENT.—Where the agreement constituting the agency provides or contains a stipulation or reservation that the agency may be revoked by the principal he may do so in accordance therewith, even though it is coupled with an interest.⁴

5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 476, where it was held to be a good defense that the tortious acts were done by order of the defendant's military superior.

1. Parmelee v. Simpson, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 81; Johnson v. Johnson, 31 Fed. Rep. 700; Stoddard's Case, 4 Ct. of Cl. 511; Wittenbrock v. Bellmer, 57 Cal. 12; Lampson v. Arnold, 19 Iowa 479; Fiske v. Holmes, 41 Me. 441; McMahan v. McMahan, 13 Pa. St. 376, 53 Am. Dec. 481; Planters Bank v. Sharp, 4 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 75, 43 Am. Dec. 470.

On this point Mr. Justice Story says: "Where an act is beneficial to the principal and does not create an immediate right to have some other act or duty performed by a third person, but amounts simply to the assertion of a right on the part of the principal, there the rule [that ratification binds the principal, not only as to his agent, but as to third persons, and gives the ordinary rights and remedies both for and against him] seems generally applicable.  On the other hand, if the act done by such person would, if authorized, create a right to have some act or duty performed by a third person, so as to subject him to damages or losses for the non-performance of that act or duty, or would defeat a right or an estate already vested in the latter, there the subsequent ratification or adoption of the unauthorized act by the principal will not give validity to it so as to bind such third person to the consequences." Story on Agency, §§ 245, 246.

As was said in McCracken v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 624: "If an individual pretending to be the agent of another should enter into a contract for the sale of land of his assumed principal, it would be impossible for the latter to ratify the contract, if between its date and the attempted ratification he had himself disposed of the property. He could not defeat the intermediate sale made by himself, and impart validity to the sale made by the pretended agent, for his power over the property or to contract for its sale would be gone. So, also, contracts made upon an assumed agency for a single woman cannot be ratified by her, after marriage, without the consent of her husband; for her power to contract alone ceases with her marriage."

2. Norton v. Alabama Nat. Bank (Ala., 1894), 14 So. Rep. 874, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 436; Taylor v. Robinson, 14 Cal. 396; Pollock v. Cohen, 32 Ohio St. 525; Conner v. Littlefield, 79 Tex. 76.

Intervening Rights of Third Parties Protected.—In Wood v. McCain, 7 Ala. 800, 42 Am. Dec. 612, it was held that the subsequent ratification of an assignment, by the principal, did not defeat the lien of a creditor who had caused a garnishment to be served.

In Kempner v. Rosenthal, 81 Tex. 12, it was held that the ratification of the receipt by an agent to collect a debt, of a conveyance of property in satisfaction of the debt, will not relate back to the time of the receipt of such conveyance, so as to defeat the lien of an attachment, levied in the mean while upon the property, although the deed was recorded before the levy.

3. Williams v. Butler, 35 Ill. 552. In this case it was held that the creation of a partnership by an agent without authority, if ratified by the person so made a partner, establishes that relation, and will cut off the intervening rights of third persons, if the doctrine is applied for the protection of a superior equity.

4. Oregon, etc., Mortg. Sav. Bank v. American Mortg. Co., 35 Fed. Rep. 22.

Termination in Accordance with Contract.—In Doyle v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 25 Nova Scotia 436, it was held that under a contract of employment of a general agent for an insurance company providing that each party might terminate the agreement by giving the other written notice to that effect, and that the agent should not be entitled to any commission upon premiums collected or received after the expiration of such notice, either party might terminate it at a moment's notice.

A provision in an agreement between the owner of certain real estate, and a broker authorized to sell it upon certain terms, that the principal may withdraw the authority by giving the broker thirty days' notice and by paying him the agreed commissions if the property was sold within thirty days after the withdrawal, was held to be equivalent to a stipulation that it shall not be withdrawn otherwise. Witherell v. Murphy, 147 Mass. 417.

Tacit Renewal from Continuances.—In Stand-

Agreement for Term, if Satisfactory.—An agreement to employ one for a definite time, provided he prove satisfactory to the principal, may be terminated by the latter when in his judgment he is justified.¹

b. REVOCATION BY PRINCIPAL—(1) In General.—If no term of service has been agreed upon, the principal may at any time revoke the authority of his agent so far as it relates to things to be done and remaining unexecuted, unless the authority is coupled with an interest, or conferred for a valuable consideration to the principal.²

Authority to Sell Lands—To Appropriate Funds.—So an authority to sell land or other property, when not coupled with an interest, may be revoked at any time before the actual sale takes place,³ as may also an authority to appropriate funds for a purchase, or the payment of debts.⁴

ard Oil Co. v. Gilbert, 84 Ga. 714, it was held that where a written contract creating an agency for one year, at a fixed compensation, had been continued for successive years, there was a tacit renewal from year to year, and the agency could not be revoked so as to deprive the agent of monthly compensation for an unexpired portion of a year. See also Sines v. Superintendents of Poor, 58 Mich. 503.

1. Tyler v. Ames, 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 280.

And, on the other hand, a provision authorizing the termination for neglect or refusal, etc., dishonesty, or noncompliance with rules does not deprive the principal of the power to determine the employment so long as the agent is not in default. Stier v. Imperial L. Ins. Co., 58 Fed. Rep. 843.

A Mere Stipulation as to Compensation, that it is to be so much a year or month, does not constitute a contract for the time mentioned. Tatterson v. Suffolk Mfg. Co., 106 Mass. 56; Palmer v. Marquette, etc., Rolling Mill Co., 32 Mich. 274; Haney v. Caldwell, 35 Ark. 156; Franklin Min. Co. v. Harris, 24 Mich. 115.

But in Norton v. Cowell, 65 Md. 359, it was held that an offer to give employment upon terms stated, stipulating that "if you give me satisfaction at the end of the first year, I will increase your salary accordingly," was an agreement for one year.

Authority of Agent to Effect a Contract.—In Warwick v. Slade, 3 Campb. 127, it was held that the authority of a broker employed to effect a policy of insurance may be revoked after the underwriters have signed the slip till such time as they have actually subscribed the policy. And in Farmer v. Robinson, cited in 2 Campb. 339 note, it was held that although the agent had entered into a verbal agreement for the sale, but no written contract had been signed, as required, the principal might revoke the agency.

Client may Change Attorney.—A client has a right to change his attorney at his own volition, whatever may be his motive. Trust v. Repoor, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 570. See the title ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

Revocation in Bad Faith.—In Michael v. Nashville Mut. Ins. Co., 10 La. Ann. 737, it was held that a foreign insurance company, doing business through an agent here, cannot frustrate a claim in our courts on a contract with it by revoking its agent's power on the eve of the suit for a loss of which it has been notified. Such a proceeding, it was said, savored of bad faith; and an exception by the agent, when cited, that he was no longer such, would be overruled.

Remittance by Debtor to His Agent.—But a remittance of money or goods by a debtor to his agent, to be delivered to a creditor in discharge of his debt, is irrevocable after the creditor has assented thereto and signified his assent to the agent. Creager v. Link, 7 Md. 259.

Money Intrusted to Agent to Settle Suit.—In Phillips v. Howell, 60 Ga. 411, it was held that where one without consideration intrusted an agent with a sum of money to settle a lawsuit she had the power of revocation until the settlement was complete.

Stipulation against Revocation.—This power of revocation exists even though it be expressly stipulated that the agency is irrevocable¹ or exclusive.²

Authority Executed Wholly or in Part.—Of course if the authority has been executed it cannot then be revoked.³ As to revocation after partial execution, an eminent author states as the true principle, that if the authority admits of severance, or of being revoked as to the part which is unexecuted, either as to the agent or to third persons, then the revocation will be good as to the part unexecuted, but not as to the part already executed.⁴

Revocation after Sale Effected by Agent.—The agent cannot be deprived of the fruits of his labors; and when a sale is virtually effected by a duly authorized agent, if the principal takes the matter into his own hands he is still liable for the commission to his agent, since the latter is the procuring cause.⁵

(2) When Agency is Coupled with an Interest.—But an exception to the general rule as to the power to revoke exists where the authority or agency is coupled with an interest, given for a valuable consideration, or is part of a security.⁶

What Constitutes Authority Coupled with Interest.—To constitute a power coupled with an interest, a property in the thing which is the subject of the agency or power must be vested in the person to whom the agency or power is given,

Authority to Attorney to Collect Claims.—A direction to an attorney having claims in his hands for collection, to pay a part thereof in payment of the debt of a third person, may be revoked at any time before execution. Beers v. Spooner, 9 Leigh (Va.) 153.

So in Swartz v. Earls, 53 Ill. 237, it was held that this was merely an authority to the attorney to dispose of the proceeds of the claim in that manner, and such authority could at any time be revoked.

Authority to Pay Out Certain Moneys.—A subcontractor received money of the general contractor in excess of what was due him, as the agent of the general contractor, to pay debts due to laborers and materialmen, whereby to protect the principal from liability from the enforcement of liens, but instead of paying out the money deposited it with another for safe keeping, under a promise of the latter to pay the same only to the depositor, or upon his written order. The depository, on the demand of the principal to whom the money belonged, delivered the same to him. It was held that the depository was not liable to the agent for a breach of his contract, the principal having the right to revoke the agency of the subcontractor at any time before he paid out the money as directed. In such case the delivery of the money to the true owner will relieve the depository of liability to the agent from whom he received it. Solomon v. Nicholas, 113 Ill. 351.

Indorsees of Bill Agent for Payee.—An indorsee who holds a bill merely as the payee's agent has no interest therein, and his agency may be revoked. Barker v. Prentiss, 6 Mass. 430.

1. Smart v. Sandars, 5 C. B. 895, 57 E. C. L. 895; Walker v. Denison, 86 Ill. 142; MacGregor v. Gardner, 14 Iowa 326; Knapp v. Alvord, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 205, 40 Am. Dec. 241; Blackstone v. Buttermore, 53 Pa. St. 266; Peacock v. Cummings, 46 Pa. St. 434.

2. Chambers v. Seay, 73 Ala. 372; Sanborn v. Rodgers, 33 Fed. Rep. 851.

3. So in People v. North River Sugar Re- fining Co., 121 N. Y. 582, 18 Am. St. Rep. 843, affirming 54 Hun (N. Y.) 354, it was held that the revocation of an authority, after it had been executed, could not avail to annul a contract made in conformity thereto.

Expenses Incurred by Agent before Revocation.—It may be stated generally, that if the agent, in the prosecution of the business of his principal, has fairly and in good faith, before notice of the revocation, entered into any engagements or come under any liability, the principal will be bound to indemnify him. U. S. v. Jarvis, Dav. (U. S.) 274.

In Meister v. Cleveland Dryer Co., 11 Ill. App. 227, where the goods to be sold had been offered to a customer at an authorized price and the agent had agreed to sell at the stated price, it was held that the principal was bound by the agent's acts. See supra, this title, Duties and Liabilities Inter Se—Of Principal to Agent; also the title BROKERS.

Failure of Consideration.—Where, however, the consideration fails, the agency becomes revocable. Ex p. Smither, 1 Deac. 413; Dunbar v. Foreman, 40 S. Car. 500, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 446.

so that he may deal with it in his own name;¹ such that in the event of the principal's death the authority could be exercised in the name of the agent.² There must be an interest in the subject of the agency itself, and not a mere interest in the result of the execution of the authority.³ So an interest arising from commissions or the proceeds of a transaction is not an interest which will prevent revocation.⁴

Agency for Protection of Party Authorized.—But where the agency is created for the protection of the party authorized, where it is a part of the security or necessary to effectuate it, it is then coupled with an interest and irrevocable,⁵ as

1. Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 203; Oregon, etc., Mortg. Sav. Bank v. American Mortg. Co., 35 Fed. Rep. 25; Brookshire v. Vonnannon, 6 Ired. (N. Car.) 231.

Chief Justice Marshall, in Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174, said: "The power must be engrafted on an estate in the thing. The words themselves seem to import this meaning. 'A power coupled with an interest' is a power which accompanies or is connected with an interest. The power and the interest are united in the same person. But if we are to understand by the word 'interest' an interest in that which is to be produced by the exercise of the power, then they are never united. The power, to produce the interest, must be exercised, and by its exercise is extinguished. The power ceases when the interest commences, and therefore cannot, in accurate law language, be said to be 'coupled' with it."

2. Bonney v. Smith, 17 Ill. 531; Mansfield v. Mansfield, 6 Conn. 559, 16 Am. Dec. 76.

Partners.—The partnership of the parties does not of itself constitute a power coupled with an interest. Travers v. Crane, 15 Cal. 12.

Power to Receive without Assignment of Debt.

—To authorize the execution of a power, after the death of the principal, there must be an interest in the subject of the power; where a creditor has power to receive a debt, for liquidating his own claim, without an assignment of the debt, or any security to which the power is ancillary, the power is revoked by the death of the principal. But where a person pays money to another and receives as a security an order on a third person for the amount so paid, such order is a power coupled with an interest in the subject of the power, and is not revoked by the death of the principal, and the fact that the principal is administrator does not alter the rule. But if the holder of such order, after the death of the maker, and knowing of such death, pays money to a creditor of the maker, upon the faith of such order, he does so in his own wrong and without authority. Houghtaling v. Marvin, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 412.

Auctioneer.—An auctioneer who is employed to sell goods has not such an interest as will prevent revocation. Taplin v. Florence, 10 C. B. 744, 70 E. C. L. 744.

Interest Conferred by Contemporary Contract.—The interest in the subject matter may be one conferred by a contract contemporaneous with the act creating the agency. Sanborn v. Rodgers, 33 Fed. Rep. 851.

3. Mansfield v. Mansfield, 6 Conn. 559, 16 Am. Dec. 76.

4. Authority to Sell on Commission.—Raleigh v. Atkinson, 6 M. & W. 670; Walker v. Walker, 125 U. S. 339; Chambers v. Seay, 73 Ala. 372; Barr v. Schroeder, 32 Cal. 609; McGriff v. Porter, 5 Fla. 373; Gilbert v. Holmes, 64 Ill. 549; Alworth v. Seymour, 42 Minn. 526; Simpson v. Carson, 11 Oregon 361; Blackstone v. Buttermore, 53 Pa. St. 266; Coffin v. Landis, 46 Pa. St. 426.

Power to Lend Money for Commission.—The power to lend money and collect interest for an annual commission is not a power coupled with an interest. Oregon, etc., Mortg. Sav. Bank v. American Mortg. Co., 35 Fed. Rep. 22.

Agency to Sell Land on Commission.—An agreement to pay an agent for the sale of land, according to price obtained from purchase, is revocable. Hamilton v. Frothingham, 59 Mich. 253; In re Shisler's Estate, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 588.

Agency to Solicit Insurance on Commission.—An insurance agent soliciting insurance under an agreement for a commission upon the premiums received and renewals has no such interest in the subject matter as will take away the right of the principal to terminate the agency. Stier v. Imperial L. Ins. Co., 58 Fed. Rep. 843.

Power of Attorney to Operate a Patent.—An instrument by which a patentee appoints another his "sole agent" for the purpose of working and developing the business of the patent, in consideration of a payment to be made by the latter to the former as royalty of a specified sum for each article, with power to negotiate the sale of the patent, gives the agent no interest in the patent. Johnson R. Signal Co. v. Union Switch, etc., Co., 59 Fed. Rep. 20.

An Authority to Collect a Debt upon a Commission of one half of the amount to be collected may be revoked at any time. Hartley's Appeal, 53 Pa. St. 212, 91 Am. Dec. 207; Oregon, etc., Mortg. Sav. Bank v. American Mortg. Co., 35 Fed. Rep. 22.

So in Flanagan v. Brown, 70 Cal. 254, where the owner of a promissory note delivered it, indorsed in blank, to another, with power to manage, transfer, or dispose of it, under an agreement whereby its proceeds were to be equally divided between them, it was held that the transferee was a mere agent for collection, and a release of the note subsequently executed by the owner to the payee was a defense to an action by the agent.

5. Walsh v. Whitcomb, 2 Esp. 565; Skinner v. Ft. Wayne, etc., R. Co., 58 Fed. Rep. 55; Barr v. Schroeder, 32 Cal. 609.

A Warrant of Attorney to Confess a Judgment is not revocable, and the court may grant where the power to collect a debt is given as a security for the purpose of reimbursing the agent.¹ A power to sell, where the property is delivered to the agent to dispose of it for the protection of himself and other creditors, is an authority coupled with an interest, and therefore irrevocable.²

(3) How Effected.—Revocation may be effected in any manner showing the intention of the principal to withdraw his authority, either expressly or by implication; even though the authority be in writing or under seal, it is held that it may be revoked by parol.³

leave to enter up the judgment though the party does revoke it. Odes v. Woodward, 2 Ld. Raym. 849; Eneu v. Clark, 2 Pa. St. 234, 44 Am. Dec. 191; Kindig v. March, 15 Ind. 248. But a simple power from a principal to his attorney, authorizing him to confess judgment in favor of a third person, which is unsupported by a consideration and is not given as a security for a debt, is held to be revocable. See Evans v. Fearn, 16 Ala. 689, 50 Am. Dec. 197.

Order of Debtor to Agent to Pay Creditor.—In Goodwin v. Bowden, 54 Me. 424, it was held that if a debtor having funds in the hands of his agent verbally orders him to pay a creditor, and the agent promises to execute the order, and the creditor relies upon the agent's promise, the debtor's power to control so much of the funds as is necessary to redeem such promise is gone.

Agency Conferred on Surety.—In Hynson v. Noland, 14 Ark. 710, it was held that the authority to act as agent in the receipt, control, and disbursement of the public moneys, given by an officer having charge of public moneys, to one of his securities, for the protection of himself and co-securities, is in the nature of a power coupled with an interest, and irrevocable.

1. A Power of Attorney to Collect and receive money to secure previous advances is not revocable, Farrell v. Amberg, 8 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 220; but, so far as the agent is concerned, only to the amount of the advances, Marziou v. Pioche, 8 Cal. 536. In the latter case Burnett, J., said: "It makes no difference whether the advances he made before or after the power is given, so they are approved by the principal. And when the principal, as in this case, expressly gives the power, for the very purpose of providing the means to return the advances made by the agent, there would seem to be no doubt as to the irrevocable character of this power."

2. Hodgson v. Anderson, 3 B. & C. 842, 10 E. C. L. 247; Gaussen v. Morton, 10 B. & C. 731, 21 E. C. L. 157; Watson v. King, 4 Campb. 272; Knapp v. Alvord, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 205, 40 Am. Dec. 241; Bergen v. Bennett, 1 Cal. Cas. (N. Y.) 1, 2 Am. Dec. 281; Raymond v. Squire, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 47; Marfield v. Douglass, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 360; Smyth v. Craig, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 14.

A agreed with B to deliver some cotton at the gin of C, to be ginned, and then taken by B and sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of a debt which A owed B, and some other debts which A was owing, and the balance, if any remained, to be paid over by B to A. After the cotton was delivered at the gin of C, A gave notice to C not to let B have the cotton, but C notwithstanding delivered it to B, and A then brought an action against C for the cotton. It was held that B had a power to take and sell the cotton, coupled with an interest irrevocable by A, and that A could not therefore maintain an action against C for delivering it to him. Denson v. Thurmond, 11 Ark. 586.

Advances by a Factor.—As to the effect on the revocability of the authority of a factor, of the fact that advances have been made by the factor on goods intrusted to him, see Smart v. Sandars, 5 C. B. 895, 57 E. C. L. 895; Brown v. M'Gran, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 480; Marziou v. Pioche, 8 Cal. 536; and for a discussion of this subject see the title COMMISSION MERCHANTS OR FACTORS.

3. Copeland v. Mercantile Ins. Co., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 198; Rochester v. Whitehouse, 15 N. H. 468; Brookshire v. Brookshire, 8 Ired. (N. Car.) 74, 47 Am. Dec. 341.

Disposition of Subject Matter.—Any disposition of the subject of the agency inconsistent with the authority conferred may operate as a revocation. Simonton v. Minneapolis First Nat. Bank, 24 Minn. 216.

The Sale of the Property by the principal or the execution of the power conferred will amount to a revocation. Walker v. Denison, 86 Ill. 142; Gilbert v. Holmes, 64 Ill. 548; Torre v. Thiele, 25 La. Ann. 418; Elliot v. Barrett, 144 Mass. 256.

An Assignment of a Judgment is held to be a revocation of the authority of the plaintiff's attorney to control the same. Trumbull v. Nicholson, 27 Ill. 149.

A Demand for Property sent to an agent terminates the agency. Potter v. Merchants' Bank, 28 N. Y. 641, 86 Am. Dec. 273; Comley v. Dazian, 114 N. Y. 161.

Bringing Suit.—In Walker v. Barrington, 28 Vt. 781, it was held that the bringing of an action on book account is not per se a revocation of an authority previously given by the plaintiff to the defendant to pay to a third person certain items contained in the plaintiff's account.

Appointment of Another Agent, when Revocation.—The mere appointment of another agent to execute the purpose will not operate as a revocation of the first appointment when not incompatible therewith. Jones v. Commercial Bank, 78 Ky. 413; Hatch v. Coddington, 95 U. S. 48.

So a landowner may employ several different agents to act for him in the sale of his land. Ahern v. Baker, 34 Minn. 98. And an authority given by a principal to an agent, to collect debts, is not necessarily revoked by the appointment of another to collect the same. Davol v. Quimby, 11 Allen (Mass.) 208.

Subagents.—The revocation of the authority of the primary agent operates as a revocation of the authority of the subagent.¹

(4) When Effective—Notice of Revocation—As to the Agent.—The act of revocation, so far as the agent is concerned, becomes operative from the time he has actual notice thereof; notice to third parties without notice to the agent will not effect a revocation as to him.²

As to Third Persons.—On the other hand, although notice is given to the agent, the revocation is effective as to third parties only when it is made to them, and acts of the agent in dealing with third parties without notice are binding on the principal.³ Where an agent is appointed in a particular busi-

But in Copeland v. Mercantile Ins. Co., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 198, it was held that an authority to sell given to one was revoked by a joint authority conferred on this one and another.

Sale by One of Two Independent Agents.—But a sale by one will operate as a revocation of the authority of the others. Ahern v. Baker, 34 Minn. 98.

General Superseding Special Agent.—The appointment to a general agency has been held to be a revocation of a special agency from the same principal. Rapier v. Louisiana Equitable L. Ins. Co., 57 Ala. 101.

Severance of Interest of Joint Principals.—Where the principals jointly appoint an agent to act in a matter in which they are jointly interested, a severance of their interest revokes the authority. Rowe v. Rand, 111 Ind. 206.

Dissolution of Partnership.—So the dissolution of a partnership effects a revocation of an agency therefor. Schlater v. Winpenny, 75 Pa. St. 321.

Payment for Services as agreed may operate as a termination of the authority. Reed v. Latham, 40 Conn. 452.

Repeal of Statute Authorizing Public Agent.—An appointment of an agent of the state is revoked by a repeal of the statute under which the appointment is made. State v. Walker, 88 Me. 279; Dudley v. Greene, 35 Me. 14.

Louisiana.—In this state a power of attorney is revoked by the interdiction of the principal, but continues in force until the judgment to that effect has been rendered. The mandate does not expire by the seclusion of the principal or his confinement for treatment in an insane asylum, but it does by his seclusion. Phelps v. Reinach, 38 La. Ann. 547.

1. Jackson Ins. Co. v. Partee, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 296.

In Lehigh Coal, etc., Co. v. Mohr, 83 Pa. St. 228, 24 Am. Rep. 161, it was held that the death of an agent acting under a letter of attorney containing a power of substitution was a revocation of the authority of an agent substituted by him under the power.

Subagent Deriving Authority from Principal.—But where the authority of the subagent emanates from the principal it is not affected by the revocation of the authority of the agent from whom he received his appointment. Smith v. White, 5 Dana (Ky.) 383.

2. Salte v. Field, 5 T. R. 215; Weile's Case, 7 Ct. of Cl. 535; Fellows v. Hartford, etc., Steamboat Co., 38 Conn. 197.

In North Chicago Rolling Mill Co. v. Hyland, 94 Ind. 448, a foreign corporation having leased its works to its agent, and he, without authority from such corporation, continuing to operate the works in its name and retaining in his service an employee of the corporation without notice to him of the change, it was held that the corporation was liable to the employee.

Revocation by Letter.—If the revocation is made by letter it takes effect from the time of his receipt of the letter, and not from the date of mailing. Robertson v. Cloud, 47 Miss. 208. And his authority cannot be affected by a letter never received by him. Sayre v. Wilson, 86 Ala. 151.

Demand by Person without Evidence of Authority.—In Tingley v. Parshall, 11 Neb. 443, where by written contract A constituted B his agent to loan money and take securities for the payment of the same, and expressly provided that the authority could be revoked at A's written request, it was held that a demand for the securities, in writing, signed by a party claiming to be an attorney of A, without a written order, or proof of his authority, was not sufficient to authorize A to maintain an action for the face value of the securities.

ness, parties dealing with him in that business have a right to rely upon the continuance of his authority until in some way informed of its revocation.¹

Statutes Requiring Record of Revocation.—In some states the revocation of a power is required to be deposited for record in the proper office; and where the revocation is recorded according to the statute, the authority is terminated although the agent has no actual notice.² This principle, however, does not apply to a case where the agent had only a special authority to do a particular act.³

Constructive Notice.—Whatever is sufficient to put the party on inquiry is equivalent to actual notice.⁴

Rule as to Notice Substantially Same as on Dissolution of Partnership.—It is well settled that where a general authority has once been conferred its revocation takes effect as to third persons only after it becomes known to them, unless indeed the principal has done his full duty in making it known; and when an authority is revoked, it is in general the duty of the principal to notify those persons who have had dealings with the agent as such; the rule on this subject being substantially the same as those relating to the dissolution of a copartnership and the power of a partner after the dissolution to bind the firm. Per Seymour, J., in Fellows v. Hartford, etc., Steamboat Co., 38 Conn. 197.

Rule that Loss should Fall on One Enabling Agent to Act.—This rule of law is clearly in accordance with the principle that the one whose acts have contributed to enable another to do an act causing loss should suffer the loss rather than an innocent third party. Caldwell v. Neil, 21 La. Ann. 342, 99 Am. Dec. 738.

Payment to Agent without Notice.—So if without notice of revocation one makes a payment to an agent he cannot be held liable by the principal. Meyer v. Hehner, 96 Ill. 400; Ulrich v. McCormick, 66 Ind. 243; Howe Mach. Co. v. Simler, 59 Ind. 307; Packer v. Hinkley Locomotive Works, 122 Mass. 484.

Where one has been accustomed to pay premiums upon an insurance policy to an agent and to obtain proper receipts, and has paid his last premium to such agent but has not obtained a receipt, he must have actual notice of the revocation of an agent's authority to receive the premiums before he can be charged with default. Braswell v. American L. Ins. Co., 75 N. Car. 8.

Power to Represent Principal in Lawsuits.—Though a power to represent the principal in lawsuits, granted by public act, be revoked by private letter, courts and suitors without notice may consider the mandate as still subsisting. Girard v. Hirsch, 6 La. Ann. 651.

Corporation Succeeding Company of Same Name

—Where the defendant carrying on business under a corporate name authorized an agent to draw bills on his factor, and subsequently transferred the business to a company organized under the same name, it was held that he was liable to the factor for money paid or bills drawn by the agent after the transfer, and paid, without notice of the transfer. Rice v. Isham, 4 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 37.

Revocation of Authority to Honor subsequent to Acceptance, but before Presentation.—The defendant authorized the plaintiff to honor drafts of a certain party, but shortly after he revoked the authority. Before the revocation, however, drafts were drawn on the plaintiff which were honored, but the drafts were not presented until after the notice of revocation was received, and could not have been so presented; it was held that defendant was liable to plaintiff for amount of drafts so made. Gelpcke v. Quentell, 74 N. Y. 599.

Service of Process on Agent of Corporation in Ignorance of Revocation.—In Capen v. Pacific Mut. Ins. Co., 25 N. J. L. 67, 64 Am. Dec. 412, it was held that service of process upon an agent of a corporation, duly appointed to accept service of all lawful process against the corporation, but whose authority had been determined, was sufficient, and bound the corporation, the plaintiff being ignorant of the termination of the agency.

But the recording of the revocation where it is not necessary does not amount to a constructive notice. Williams v. Birbeck, Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 368; James v. Morey, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 296, 14 Am. Dec. 475.

3. Watts v. Kavanagh, 35 Vt. 34.

4. Williams v. Birbeck, Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 359. See the title NOTICE.

Constructive Notice.—Notice by the principal of the contents of a written agreement with his agent which terminates the agency is sufficient notice of the termination of the agency. Van Dusen v. Star Quartz Min. Co., 36 Cal. 571, 95 Am. Dec. 209.

Constructive Notice—How Far Question of Law or Fact.—If the evidence relied on is doubtful or controverted, the question of notice should be left to the jury;¹ but the question whether the circumstances were sufficient to put the parties on inquiry, that is, whether they amount to constructive notice, is a question of law.²

Effect of Revocation and Notice.—After revocation and due notice the principal cannot be held liable for acts of his agent subsequent thereto.³

c. RENUNCIATION BY AGENT.—The agent also has the power to put an end to the agency, and may at his will and pleasure, upon reasonable notice, renounce the power conferred upon him by his principal.⁴

Renunciation on Account of Conduct of Principal.—As the principal is justified in terminating the agency for the misconduct of the agent, so where the principal's conduct is calculated to interrupt the relation, the agent may terminate the agency with a full reservation of his rights.⁵

Implied Renunciation—Rights of Principal.—And, on the other hand, where the agent by his words or acts shows a clear intention to renounce, or give up his agency, the principal may treat it as abandoned.⁶

When Agent Renouncing Liable to Principal.—But after accepting an agency for a definite time, the agent cannot renounce it without incurring liability to his principal for any loss that may result to him from this cause.⁷

2. By Operation of Law—a. DEATH OF PRINCIPAL.—It is a well-established rule of the common law that the death of the principal puts an end to the

It is immaterial from what source the notice comes; the notice may be given by the agent as well as by the principal. Vail v. Judson, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 165.

Notice of the appointment of another agent is sufficient notice of the revocation of the authority of the former one when the execution of the agency by both is incompatible. Johnson v. Youngs, 82 Wis. 107; Clark v. Mullenix, 11 Ind. 532.

3. Gunter v. Stuart, 87 Ala. 196; Groneweg v. Kusworm, 75 Iowa 237; Satterthwaite v. Loomis, 81 Tex. 64; Blair v. Sheridan, 86 Va. 527.

And there is no necessity for the principal to disavow the unauthorized act as between himself and the agent. Kelly v. Phelps, 57 Wis. 425.

4. Barrows v. Cushway, 37 Mich. 481; U. S. v. Jarvis, Dav. (U. S.) 274; Story on Agency, § 478.

If an agent acts under an authority conferred upon him, this amounts to a tacit acceptance of the agency although he writes to his principal refusing the agency and requesting him to appoint another agent. George v. Sandel, 18 La. Ann. 535.

Agent Repudiating Agency and Acting for Self.—And if one who is clearly an agent for another to purchase property repudiates the agency and acts for himself, using his own funds, he cannot be declared a trustee for his principal although the latter may have been misled by conduct of the former. First Nat. Bank v. Bissell, 2 McCrary (U. S.) 73.

5. Conrey v. Brandegee, 2 La. Ann. 132.

6. Principal Treating Agency as at an End.—In Stoddart v. Key, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 137, where an agent wrote his principal that "I have determined to sell out and give up this business; if you want it, come or send on, and I will give you the figures which I will take; this is final"—it was held that the principal, after having made a fair attempt to settle, and having reason to suspect the agent's good faith, was justified in treating the agency as abandoned, and in appointing another agent; and that a sale of the list of subscribers afterwards by the former agent, or an attempt on his part to release them, was invalid.

In Safford v. Kinsley, 40 Vt. 506, where the principal furnished money to an agent for the purpose of buying certain goods, and the agent made the purchase, but also bought other goods which he was not authorized to buy, and when the principal came to take his goods the agent claimed that he should take the whole lot and refused to designate the goods bought in accordance with instructions, it was held that this refusal had the same effect as an absolute refusal, and that the principal was entitled to treat it as an entire repudiation by the agent of his agreement.

In Case v. Jennings, 17 Tex. 661, where an agent having authority to sell a negro slave attempted to run off, dispose of, and conceal the negro, it was held that his conduct amounted to an absolute abandonment and renunciation of his agency.

7. Per Ware, J., in U. S. v. Jarvis, Dav. (U. S.) 274; Cannon Coal Co. v. Taggart, 1 Colo. App. 60.

When Founded upon a Valuable Consideration an agency cannot be renounced without subjecting the agent to a liability for any damages the principal may sustain thereby. So in White v. Smith, 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 5, it was held that stockbrokers are liable for damages sustained by their employer by reason of a renunciation of the agreement.

agency when the authority is not coupled with an interest. and no act of agency subsequent thereto is binding upon the estate of the principal, for no one can do an act in the name of one who is dead.¹

Death of One Joint Principal.—And in the case of joint principals the death of one revokes the agent's authority;² not, however, when they are joint and several principals as trustees.³

Death of Client.—So the authority of an attorney at law is revoked by the death of his client, and without a new retainer from the personal representative he has no authority.⁴

Authority Coupled with an Interest.—But where the power is coupled with an interest in the subject matter of the agency, the agent may execute the authority, as his rights survive the death of the principal.⁵

Illustrations—Revocation by Death.—So the power to sell real estate or other property, unless coupled with an interest, is determined by the death of the principal, Scruggs v. Driver, 31 Ala. 274; and the authority to occupy land is revoked by the death of the principal. Lincoln v. Emerson, 108 Mass. 87; Coney v. Sanders, 28 Ga. 511. Darr*, 59 Iowa 81, where an agent received for collection certain notes, but before the notes fell due the principal died and the makers became insolvent, it was held that the agent's power ceased with the death of the principal, after which he had no authority to collect the notes.

2. Travers v. Crane, 15 Cal. 12; Johnson v. Wilcox, 25 Ind. 182; Marlett v. Jackman, 3 Allen (Mass.) 287.

Death of Partner.—In New York Bank v. Vanderhorst, 32 N. Y. 553, where an agent of a firm, authorized to draw checks against the firm's bank account for the use of the firm, continued so to do after the death of one of the members of the firm, both he and the bank being in ignorance of the death, checks so drawn were held to bind the firm. The authority continued in a qualified form. In this case the parties had the right to draw the money of the firm, and not having objected thereto, nobody else could do so. But see Tasker v. Shepherd, 6 H. & N. 575.

3. Wilson v. Stewart, 5 Pa. L. J. 450.

An authority delegated to an attorney from three trustees having a power coupled with an interest, and from the survivors or survivor of them, to sell and convey lands, is not revoked by the death of one of the trustees. Such delegation being joint and several, the attorney is invested with the full powers of the surviving trustees so as to pass both the beneficial and legal estates. Wilson v. Stewart, 5 Pa. L. J. 450.

4. Palmer v. Reiffenstein, 1 M. & G. 94, 39 E. C. L. 370; Turnan v. Temke, 84 Ill. 286; Risley v. Fellows, 10 Ill. 531; Gleason v. Dodd, 4 Met. (Mass.) 333; Stirnermaun v. Cowing, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 275. See also the title ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

5. See supra, this section, When Agency is Coupled with an Interest. Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174; Travers v. Crane, 15 Cal. 12; Gilbert v. Holmes, 64 Ill. 548; Bergen v. Bennett, 1 Cal. Cas. (N. Y.) 1, 2 Am. Dec. 281.

The Contrary Doctrine seems to be established in England. See Watson v. King, 4 Campb. 272, where it was ruled by Lord Ellenborough that a power coupled with an interest is necessarily revoked by the death of the principal.

Power Coupled with Interest Irrevocable by Death.—In Merry v. Lynch, 68 Me. 94, where, by the terms of the agency, the agent was to sell the goods and out of the proceeds pay

Exception to Rule as to Authority Coupled with Interest.—The rule is otherwise, however, even in the case of an authority coupled with an interest, where it is expressly conditioned that the authority is to be executed within the principal's lifetime.¹ So upon an indorsement and delivery for the purpose of collection, as the legal title is passed to the agent, he may continue his authority notwithstanding the death of the principal.²

Acts Done Bona Fide without Notice of Principal's Death.—The rule has been held not to apply to those acts which must be done in the name of the agent.³ But the certain liens, and other claims and notes which he held against the principal, it was held that the power was not extinguished by the death of the principal.

Stock as Collateral, Power to Sell.—Where a broker had sold stock short for a customer, and in accordance with the usual custom had borrowed the stock for delivery, becoming himself obligated to return the borrowed stock, and borrowing from time to time as required to replace the stock previously borrowed, and while the transaction was so kept alive the customer died, it was held that the broker had authority, acting in good faith, to continue it in the same manner until the appointment and qualification of a legal representative of the estate of the deceased, upon whom the proper notice could be served in order to close it. Hess v. Rau, 95 N. Y. 359.

Power to Sell and Dispose of Proceeds Revoked by Death.—A mere naked power to sell and dispose of the proceeds, even to pay claim of the agent, is determined by the death of the grantor, as there is no interest created in the subject of the agency. So in Houghtaling v. Marvin, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 412, it was held that where there is merely given a power to a creditor to receive a debt expressly for the purpose of liquidating the claim of the creditor, but unaccompanied by an assignment of the debt or by any security to which the power might have been ancillary, it is revoked by the death of the principal. If the power to collect is given expressly as security for the debt, it is irrevocable.

In McGriff v. Porter, 5 Fla. 373, it was held that a mere power to enter upon certain premises and carry away and sell property thereon upon default in payment of a certain debt was not coupled with an interest, and was revoked upon the death of the debtor. See also Huston v. Cantril, 11 Leigh (Va.) 142.

In Garber v. Myers, 32 Ill. App. 175, it was held that a power of attorney to collect certain rents and apply them to the payment of a note when due was only a naked power of attorney revoked by the death of the principal.

In Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Wilson, 139 N. Y. 284, it was held that the power of an agent to collect and receive rents falling due to his principal ceases upon the death of the latter where the agent was entitled merely to commissions on rents collected.

1. Staples v. Bradbury, 8 Me. 181, 23 Am. Dec. 494.

2. Moore v. Hall, 48 Mich. 143; Boyd v. Corbitt, 37 Mich. 52.

But the mere power to collect certain notes, given into the hands of the agent, will be determined by the death of his principal. So in Darr v. Darr, 59 Iowa 81, it was held that in such a case the agent was not liable for failure to collect, though during the delay the makers became insolvent.

3. Acts Effective in Agent's Name Held Binding though Done after Principal's Death.—Dick v. Page, 17 Mo. 234, 57 Am. Dec. 267; Cassiday v. M'Kenzie, 4 W. & S (Pa.) 282. And in Ish v. Crane, 13 Ohio St. 574, it was held that a bona fide transaction by an agent not necessarily to be done in the name of the principal, as a deed, but a matter in pais merely, done after the death of the principal, but in ignorance of the event, is nevertheless valid and binding on the personal representative.

These cases are certainly contrary to the weight of authority both in England and the United States. But the views announced in them agree with the civil law and have received the sanction of eminent writers. Story in his work on Agency, §§ 494-5, upholds in reason the rule of the civil law, but acknowledges the contrary rule as established in England and the United States. See also Wharton on Agency, § 104.

In Travers v. Crane, 15 Cal. 12, speaking of Cassiday v. M'Kenzie, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 282, and pointing out that the opinion, except so far as it related to the particular facts, was a mere dictum, Baldwin, J., said: "The opinion, therefore, of the learned judge may be regarded more as an extrajudicial indication of his views on the general subject than as the adjudication of the court upon the point in question. But according all proper weight to this opinion as the judgment of a court of great respectability, it stands alone among common-law authorities, and is opposed by an array too formidable to permit us to follow it." See also Clayton v. Merrett, 52 Miss. 353.

Chancellor Kent says: "By the civil law, and the law of those countries which have adopted the civil law, the acts of an agent done bona fide after the death of his principal, and before notice of his death, are valid and binding on his representatives. But this equitable principle does not prevail in the English law, and the death of the principal is an instantaneous and absolute revocation of the authority of the agent, unless the power be coupled with an interest." 2 Kent Com. 646.

Contract by Letter Sent prior to Death.—In Garrett v. Trabue, 82 Ala. 227, where the agent sent an order by mail, on the day before the death of his principal, to a non-resident merchant, with whom he had a general arrangement for goods to be supplied on weight of authority maintains the doctrine of the common law that the death of the principal operates as an instantaneous revocation, and that acts of agency done after the death of the principal are void even though the death is unknown to the agent.¹

Payment to or Purchase by Agent after Principal's Death.—So the payment to an agent after the death of the principal will not operate as a discharge, even though made in actual ignorance of the principal's death;² and a purchase of goods by an agent for his principal, made after his death, but before the agent has notice thereof, is not binding upon the estate of the principal.³

Liability of Agent for Acts Done after Principal's Death.—Where the death of the principal is unknown to both parties the agent cannot be held responsible.⁴ But if orders during the year, and the merchant filled the order within a reasonable time, in ignorance of the death of the principal, it was held that the contract was binding as of the day on which the order was deposited in the mail. See also Hatchett v. Molton, 76 Ala. 410.

1. Death of Principal Held Instantaneous Revocation—England.—Farrow v. Wilson, L. R. 4 C. P. 744; Houstoun v. Robertson, 6 Taunt. 448; Blades v. Free, 9 B. & C. 167, 17 E. C. L. 351; Smout v. Ilbery, 10 M. & W. 1; Campanari v. Woodburn, 15 C. B. 400, 80 E. C. L. 400.

Illinois.—Rapp v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 113 Ill. 390, 55 Am. Rep. 427.

Iowa.—Lewis v. Kerr, 17 Iowa 73; Royal Ins. Co. v. Davies, 40 Iowa 469, 20 Am. Rep. 581.

Maine.—Green v. Young, 8 Me. 14, 22 Am. Dec. 218.

Mississippi.—Clayton v. Merrett, 52 Miss. 353.

New York.—Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Wilson, 139 N. Y. 284.

Tennessee.—Jenkins v. Atkins, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 294, 34 Am. Dec. 648.

Vermont.—Michigan Ins. Co. v. Leavenworth, 30 Vt. 11; Davis v. Windsor Sav. Bank, 46 Vt. 728.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in Galt v. Galloway, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 344, said that "no principle is better settled than that the powers of an agent cease on the death of his principal. If an act of agency be done subsequent to the decease of the principal, though his death be unknown to the agent, the act is void." See Long v. Thayer, 150 U. S. 522.

Where an agent has merely authority to convey certain real estate in his principal's name, and has no vested interest in the property, a sale made by him after the death of his principal, in ignorance of that event, is absolutely void, and cannot be made valid by the assent of the party to whom the land descends. Lewis v. Kerr, 17 Iowa 73.

Statutory Changes.—In view of its apparent hardship, the common-law rule has been modified by statute in several states in conformity to the civil law. So in Georgia, as early as 1785, it was provided by statute that the power of an agent should not be determined by the death of the principal until notice. It was held, however, that this applied only to powers made outside the state. See Coney v. Sanders, 28 Ga. 511.

In Maryland it is provided that the dealings of an agent within the scope of his authority, subsequent to the principal's death, are valid in favor of parties having no notice. Md. Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 10, § 25, p. 91. See Eichelberger v. Sifford, 27 Md. 330.

So in South Carolina. Gen. Stat. 1882, § 1302.

In the Louisiana Code, §§ 3027-3034, it is provided, as in the civil law, that if the attorney is ignorant of the death, the transactions done by him during this state of ignorance are considered as valid.

In the California Civ. Code, §§ 6996-7003, as in the Dakota Civ. Code, §§ 1150, 1151, it is provided that the agency is terminated by notice to the agent of the death of the employer, etc.

2. Long v. Thayer, 150 U. S. 520; Clayton v. Merrett, 52 Miss. 353; Michigan Ins. Co. v. Leavenworth, 30 Vt. 11.

Payment of Bank Deposits.—So the authority to pay out bank deposits is revoked by the death of the principal, and subsequent payments are at the expense of the bank. Davis v. Windsor Sav. Bank, 46 Vt. 728.

Agency for Specified Time.—In Yerrington v. Greene, 7 R. I. 589, 84 Am. Dec. 578, it was held that where a clerk had been hired for three years at a stipulated salary to carry on a branch store for his employer, the death of the latter before the expiration of the three years put an end to the contract. But in Ferreira v. Sayres, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 210, it was held that the death of one partner did not discharge the firm from subsisting contracts with an agent of the firm for a period of time not then expired.

3. Rigs v. Cage, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 350, 27 Am. Dec. 559.

4. Smout v. Ilbery, 10 M. & W. 1; Blades v. Free, 9 B. & C. 167, 17 E. C. L. 351; Carriger v. Whittington, 26 Mo. 311, 72 Am. Dec. 212.

In Smout v. Ilbery, 10 M. & W. 1, a leading case on this question and one much discussed, a husband who had been in the habit of getting provisions from a merchant went abroad, leaving his wife and family in England. It was held that the wife was not liable for goods supplied to her after her husband's death, but prior to the time when she had notice thereof, as the agency was terminated an agent presumes to act after the death of the principal he may be treated as trustee, and is liable as such to the estate of his assumed principal.¹

b. DEATH OF AGENT.—The death of the agent of course puts an end to the agency;² and where two or more agents are appointed to act jointly, the death of one operates to revoke the authority of the others.³

Subagents.—As to subagents also, the death of the agent puts an end to their authority.⁴

c. INSANITY OF EITHER PARTY—Insanity of Principal.—As a general rule, it may be stated that where a principal becomes insane after appointing an agent this operates per se as a revocation or suspension of the agent's authority, except in cases where a consideration has been given, or the power is otherwise coupled with an interest.⁵ But it has been held that until the insanity has been properly established by an inquisition, it will not operate as a revocation.⁶ by no fault of hers. Nor are his executors bound. Blades v. Free, 9 B. & C. 167, 17 E. C. L. 351.

1. Lowrie v. Saltz, 75 Cal. 349.

2. Adriance v. Rutherford, 57 Mich. 170; Gage v. Allison, 1 Brev. (S. Car.) 495, 2 Am. Dec. 682; Charleston v. Duncan, 3 Brev. (S. Car.) 386; Jackson Ins. Co. v. Partee, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 296.

Effect of Death of Agent.—A contract between a planter and a factor or commission merchant, whereby the latter binds himself to furnish supplies for the working of the plantation, and to receive and sell the products of the place for the benefit of the planter, is a contract of agency, and terminates at the death of the agent; and by such death the planter is absolved from all obligations to continue the contract, and the heirs of the agent are not bound by the contract. Such an agreement is personal, and not heritable. Shiff v. Lesseps, 22 La. Ann. 185.

Upon the death of his agent the principal may take possession of all his goods and replevy them from the agent's administrator. Adriance v. Rutherford, 57 Mich. 170. So the price of goods sold by a factor is payable, not to his administrator, but to the merchant who consigned them to him. Burdett v. Willett, 2 Vern. 638; Whitecomb v. Jacob, 1 Salk. 160; Merrick's Estate, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 402. If the administrator of the agent receive the fund, he receives it as the agent of the principal. Jackson Ins. Co. v. Partee, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 296.

3. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Wilcox, 57 Ill. 180; Salisbury v. Brisbane, 61 N. Y. 617.

Death of Partner where Firm is Agent.—So in Martine v. International L. Ins. Co., 53 N. Y. 339, 13 Am. Rep. 529, it was held that where a firm is appointed to an agency, such agency ceases upon the death of one of the members of the firm, and the principal is not bound by the subsequent acts of a surviving member.

4. Subagents.—Lehigh Coal, etc., Co. v. Mohr, 83 Pa. St. 228, 24 Am. Rep. 161. In this case it was held that the death of an agent acting under a letter of attorney containing a power of substitution acts as a revocation of the authority of an agent substituted by him under the power. To the same effect is Watt v. Watt, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 371; Peries v. Aycinena, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 64.

Where, however, the authority of the sub-agent emanates from the principal, it is not affected by the death of the agent, from whom he merely receives the appointment. Smith v. White, 5 Dana (Ky.) 376.

5. Bunce v. Gallagher, 5 Blatchf. (U. S.) 481; Berry v. Skinner, 30 Md. 567; Matthies-sen, etc., Refining Co. v. M'Mahon, 38 N. J. L. 537; Hill v. Day, 34 N. J. Eq. 150; Blake v. Garwood, 42 N. J. Eq. 276; Wallis v. Manhattan Co., 2 Hall (N. Y.) 495.

Effect of Insanity of Principal Discussed.—

The law and the reason therefor is clearly stated by Parker, C. J., in Davis v. Lane, 10 N. H. 156. He said: "Upon the constitution of an agent or attorney to act for another, where the authority is not coupled with an interest and not irrevocable, there exists at all times a right of supervision in the principal, and power to terminate the authority of the agent at the pleasure of the principal. The law secures to the principal the right of judging how long he will be represented by the agent and suffer him to act in his name. So long as, having the power, he does not exercise the will to revoke, the authority continues. When, then, an act of Providence deprives the principal of the power to exercise any judgment or will on the subject, the authority of the agent to act should thereby be suspended for the time being, otherwise the right of the agent would be continued beyond the period when all evidence that the principal chose to continue the authority had ceased; for after the principal was deprived of the power to exercise any will upon the subject there could be no assent or acquiescence, or evidence of any kind, to show that he consented that the agency should continue to exist. And, moreover, a confirmed insanity would render wholly irrevocable an authority which, by the original nature of its constitution, it was to be in the power of the principal at any time to revoke. * * * If, on the recovery of the principal, he manifests no will to terminate the authority, it may be considered as a mere suspension. And his assent to acts done during the suspension may be inferred from his forbearing to express dissent when they came to his knowledge."

6. Whether Inquisition of Lunacy Necessary.—Wallis v. Manhattan Co., 2 Hall (N. Y.) 495. In this case the court reasoned thus: "There would be no safety in admitting any other

Estoppel to Set Up Insanity.—And if the principal has enabled the agent to hold himself out as having authority, and the insanity of the principal is not known to those who deal with the agent within the scope of the authority he appears to possess, the principal and those who claim under him may be precluded from setting up the insanity as a revocation.¹

The Insanity of the Agent would seem to constitute a natural as well as a necessary revocation of his authority, for the principal cannot be presumed to intend that acts done for him and to bind him shall be done by one who is incompetent to understand or to transact the business which he is employed to execute.²

d. BANKRUPTCY OF EITHER PARTY—Principal.—By an act of bankruptcy the principal loses control of the subject matter of the agency, and therefore the agency, unless coupled with an interest, is thereby determined.³

Power to Do Mere Formal Act.—But a power to do a mere formal act, as a power of attorney to sign an indorsement on the certificate which the bankrupt himself might have been compelled to execute, is not revoked by the bankruptcy of the principal.⁴

Agent.—The bankruptcy of the agent revokes his authority,⁵ except where evidence of a fact which is to have an operation so extensive, and sound policy requires us to adopt this rule. * * * If the mere fact of lunacy operated, like death, to revoke the power instantly, then any acts done under it, during the existence of the disease, would be void, even if the parties were ignorant of the principal's situation."

But in Bunce v. Gallagher, 5 Blatchf. (U. S.) 489, Shipman, J., said, referring to the general rule: "This is well-settled doctrine, though it has been intimated that before the authority of an agent can be suspended by the insanity of the principal occurring after the execution of the power, the fact of lunacy must be established under an inquisition. Still, I apprehend that whether the fact were formally established or not, the agent could not justify or support an act under the authority originally given, done after the agent had knowledge of the incapacity of his principal."

In Motley v. Head, 43 Vt. 633, it was held that where a person loses power to bind himself by his own acts, it is true as a general principle that that works a like loss in all those upon whom he has conferred the power to bind him; but being put under guardianship for insanity would not warrant the court to hold that that terminated an agency previously created by him, it not appearing that the insanity was of that character which disqualified a person from entering into a valid contract. Effect of Bankruptcy of Foreign Principal.—But it has been held that the bankruptcy of the principal in England will not affect the validity of a bill drawn by his duly authorized agent in New York without notice of the bankruptcy of the principal, inasmuch as the operation of the English assignment of bankruptcy is not extraterritorial, and does not operate as a legal transfer of property in the United States. Ogden v. Gillingham, 1 Baldw. (U. S.) 38.

When Revocation by Bankruptcy Takes Effect.

—In Ex p. Snowball, L. R. 7 Ch. 548, the court, by Mellish, L. J., said: "We are of opinion that though, no doubt, as a general rule, a power of attorney must be treated as revoked by an act of bankruptcy committed by the giver of the power as against the trustee under a subsequent bankruptcy, still if after the act of bankruptcy but before the adjudication property is conveyed under the power to a bona fide purchaser, who has no notice of the act of bankruptcy, the purchaser may hold the property as against the trustee. It is obvious that a power of attorney is not revoked for all purposes by an act of bankruptcy committed by the giver of the power, because, if no adjudication follows, a sale under the power is binding on the giver himself; and wherever a sale would be binding on a bankrupt, if no adjudication follows, it is binding on the trustee under a subsequent adjudication if the purchaser had no notice of an act of bankruptcy having been committed by the seller at the time of the sale." See also In re Daniels, 6 Biss. (U. S.) 405.

In England a factor after his act of bankruptcy may, representing his assignee, enforce the lien on his principal's property. Hudson v. Granger, 5 B. & Ald. 27, 7 E. C. L. 10; Drinkwater v. Goodwin, Cowp. 251.

The Insolvency of an agent to sell merchandise terminates his authority. Audenried v. Betteley, 8 Allen (Mass.) 302.

Bankruptcy of Agent.—With respect to the effect of the bankruptcy of the agent, and the principal's rights, the English authorities are thus summarized by Mr. Evans in his work on the act to be performed by the agent is merely formal.¹

e. MARRIAGE OF FEME SOLE.—The marriage of a feme sole would, at common law, operate to revoke the agency conferred by her;² and so now where the execution of the agency would dispose of property or rights in which her husband acquires an interest, an agency created by her is revoked by subsequent marriage.³ But an agency with respect to property over which she, though married, may execute sole authority, is in no way affected by her marriage.⁴

f. EFFECT OF WAR.—The existence of a state of war as between the citizens or subjects of the respective belligerents, ipso facto dissolves all commercial partnerships, agencies, and contracts executory, requiring for their continual existence commercial intercourse or communication.⁵

Certain Agencies Not Revoked.—But limited agencies which may be exercised without intercourse or communication between the citizens of the belligerent powers may lawfully continue.⁶

Agency (Ewell's Evans on Agency, p. 123): " (1) The order and disposition clause of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (sect. 15, subsect. 5), does not apply: (a) To property in possession of a person as factor, Whitfield v. Brand, 16 M. & W. 282; (b) To property, money, bills, or goods in the hands of the bankrupt for a specific purpose, Tooke v. Hollingworth, 5 T. R. 227. (2) If the person in possession of the property remitted to him for a special purpose has a lien upon it, the trustee has a good claim against the remitter to the extent of such lien. Drinkwater v. Goodwin, Cowp. 256. (3) If such property has been wrongfully disposed of, the principal may follow the proceeds so long as they are distinguishable. Frith v. Cartland, 34 L. J. Ch. 301. (4) If the property is mixed by the agent with his own, the whole becomes liable to satisfy the trusts. Frith v. Cartland, 34 L. J. Ch. 301. (5) Notice of the trust or of a specific appropriation will defeat the title of third parties who deal with the property inconsistently with such trust or appropriation. Steele v. Stuart, L. R. 2 Eq. 84. (6) When a person pays money into a bank to be applied in a specific manner, and the banker stops payment before taking any step towards applying it to the purpose, the payer cannot recover the money paid, but has merely a right of proof as a general creditor. Re Barnard's Banking Co., 39 L. J. Ch. 635. But where the country bank has applied the money, and the town agent has received it for the specific purpose, the payer may recover. Farley v. Turner, 26 L. J. Ch. 710."

Authority Coupled with Interest.—The revocation is not effected when the authority is coupled with an interest. So in Eneu v.

Clark, 2 Pa. St. 234, it was held that if a feme sole gives a warrant of attorney to confess judgment on his bond, and afterward marry, the warrant is not revoked.

Marriage of Single Man Held Revocation.—In Henderson v. Ford, 46 Tex. 627, it was held that the power of attorney to sell land, the home of a single man, was revoked by his marriage. But see Joseph v. Fisher, 122 Ind. 399.

4. Where a woman retains the right to administer her paraphernal property without her husband's assistance, her marriage will not revoke the powers of an agent previously intrusted with its administration. Reynolds v. Rowley, 2 La. Ann. 890. See also, as to the husband's right, Joseph v. Fisher, 122 Ind. 399.

Civil War.—This principle is applicable to civil as well as to international wars. Billgerry v. Branch, 19 Gratt. (Va.) 393, 100 Am. Dec. 679.

Power of Attorney to Sell Land Revoked.—In Conley v. Burson, 1 Heisk (Tenn.) 145, it was held that a power of attorney from a person in the United States to one in the Confederate States to sell land was revoked by the existence of the war. So in Howell v. Gordon, 40 Ga. 302.

6. Ward v. Smith, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 447; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 95 U. S. 425; Mayer's Case, 3 Ct. of Cl. 249; Stoddart's Case, 6 Ct. of Cl. 340; Queyrouze's Case, 7 Ct. of Cl. 402; Buford v. Speed, 11 Bush (Ky.) 338; Small v. Lumpkin, 28 Gratt. (Va.) 832.

Unauthorized Investments by Agents.—Such an agency continues, with all its rights, duties, and obligations, as to the property of the principal. The investment of moneys collected in Confederate bonds could not have been made without the sanction of the principal. Botts v. Crenshaw, Chase Dec. (U. S.) 224; Anderson v. The Bank, Chase Dec.

Agencies to Collect and Preserve Property.—So an agency for the purpose of collecting debts, or for the protection and preservation of property, is not affected by the existence of war, but may be lawfully continued, provided it does not necessitate the transfer of such property to the principal who is a belligerent.¹

Time of Creation of Such Agency.—It has been held, however, that such an agency must have been created before the war began.²

Assent of Parties Necessary to Continuance.—In order to the subsistence of the agency, during the war, it must have the assent of the parties thereto.³

g. ACCOMPLISHMENT OF PURPOSE—LAPSE OF TIME.—Where the agency is by agreement limited to a definite time, or is conferred for the accomplishment of some definite object, it will be determined in due course by the expiration of the time or by the conclusion of the transaction for which it was created.⁴

(U. S.) 535. See also Maloney v. Stephens, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 738.

In U. S. v. Quigley, 103 U. S. 595, where a merchant residing in Georgia removed at the commencement of hostilities, leaving an agent for the collection of debts due him, who collected the money, but invested it in cotton, which was afterwards captured and destroyed, it was held that he might recover from his agent.

As to the right to make such unauthorized investments, Davis, J., in Fretz v. Stover, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 108, said: "If it were otherwise, then, as long as the war lasted, every Northern creditor of Southern men was at the mercy of the agent he had employed before the war commenced."

Confiscation of Property of Principal.—An agent is not responsible, however, for the confiscation of the property by his government, if he has used due diligence. Newton v. Bushong, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 628; Mauran v. Alliance Ins. Co., 6 Wall. (U. S.) 1; Garrison v. Kings, 35 Tex. 183.

1. United States.—Conn v. Penn, 1 Pet. (C. C.) 496; Denniston v. Imbrie, 3 Wash. (U. S.) 396; U. S. v. Grossmayer, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 72.

Louisiana.—Monsseax v. Urquhart, 19 La. Ann. 482.

Mississippi.—Shelby v. Offutt, 51 Miss. 128.

New York.—Robinson v. International L. Assur. Soc., 42 N. Y. 54, 1 Am. Rep. 490; Sands v. New York L. Ins. Co., 50 N. Y. 626, 10 Am. Rep. 535.

Tennessee.—Jones v. Harris, 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 98; Darling v. Lewis, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 125; Maloney v. Stephens, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 738.

Virginia.—King v. Hanson, 4 Call (Va.) 259; Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Warwick, 20 Gratt. (Va.) 614, 3 Am. Rep. 218; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Atwood, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 497, 18 Am. Rep. 652; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Hendren, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 536.

But see Blackwell v. Willard, 65 N. Car. 555, 6 Am. Rep. 749.

Agency to Collect for Alien Enemy.—As was said by Kent, C.J., in Clarke v. Morey, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 70: "If aliens are ordered away in consequence of the war, they are still entitled to leave a power of attorney, and to collect their debts by suit." And in Ward v. Smith, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 447, Field, J., said: "When an agent appointed to receive money resides within the same jurisdiction with the debtor, the latter cannot justify his refusal to pay the demand, and of course the interest which it bears. It does not follow that the agent, if he receives the money, will violate the law by remitting it to his alien principal. * * * Nor can the rule apply when one of several joint debtors resides within the same country with the creditor, or with the known agent of the creditor."

In Murrell v. Jones, 40 Miss. 565, where a party resident in Mississippi, a short time before the fall of New Orleans, intrusted bills of exchange to an agent to sell, which after the surrender were sold for Confederate currency, it was held that the surrender did not revoke the agent's authority.

2. Power to Create Ceases with Beginning of War.—U. S. v. Grossmayer, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 72. In this case Davis, J., said: "We are not disposed to deny the doctrine that a resident in the territory of one of the belligerents may have in time of war an agent residing in the territory of the other, to whom his debtor could pay his debt in money or deliver to him property in discharge of it; but in such a case the agency must have been created before the war began, for there is no power to appoint an agent for any purpose after hostilities have actually commenced, and to this effect are all the authorities."

3. Per Bradley, J., in New York L. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 95 U. S. 429. Continuing, he said: "It [the continuance of such agency during war] is not compulsory, nor can it be made so, on either side, to subserve the ends of third parties. If the agent continues to act as such, and his so acting is subsequently ratified by the principal, or if the principal's assent is evinced by any other circumstances, then third parties may safely pay money, for the use of the principal, into the agent's hands; but not otherwise."

4. Blackburn v. Scholes, 2 Campb. 341; Cliquot's Champagne, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 140; Irby v. Lawske, 62 Ga. 216.

Illustrations by Accomplishment of Purpose.—So in Benoit v. Conway, 10 Allen (Mass.) 528, it was held that the authority conferred on the town treasurer to borrow money for the adjustment of a state tax was terminated by the adjustment of the tax without the necessity of making the loan.

Power delegated to an agent to "fix and determine" a matter over which he has no original power outside of the agency is expended when he has once acted. Douvielle v. Manistee County, 40 Mich. 585.

Authority to Find Purchasers.—So an authority to find a purchaser is terminated so soon as this is accomplished.¹

Authority to Purchase.—And a delivery of property to the principal is a termination of the authority of the agent employed to purchase.²

Agency to Procure Insurance.—The authority of a broker employed to procure insurance for his principal, such broker not being a general agent to place and manage insurance on his principal's property, terminates with the procurement of the policy. Hermann v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 100 N. Y. 413, 53 Am. Rep. 197.

Authority to Receive Payment.—An agent employed to sell property has no authority to receive payment on securities after he has parted with their possession, sending them to his principal. Strachan v. Muxlow, 24 Wis. 21.

Authority to Secure Debt.—In Wallace v. Gould, 91 Ill. 15, it was held that where an agent is employed to secure a debt of his principal, which he does by taking the indorsement of notes by the debtor to his principal, his agency does not cease while he still holds the notes, and his acts have not been approved by his principal.

But upon surrender of the notes to the principal his agency ceases; and parol evidence is inadmissible to show that on taking such a note he verbally agreed, the maker might pay it to himself when due. Strachan v. Muxlow, 24 Wis. 21.

1. Agent to Sell Lands.—In Short v. Millard, 68 Ill. 292, where the owner of land employed an agent to sell, agreeing, if the latter would find a purchaser at a certain price, to pay him five hundred dollars, it was held that as soon as the agent procured the purchaser his agency ceased. See also Moore v. Stone, 40 Iowa 259.

The authority of a real-estate agent and his duty to his principal ceases upon the delivery of the title papers and payment for the property. Walker v. Derby, 5 Biss. (U. S.) 134.

Where an Agent was Appointed for the Sale of Machines, and the only provision in regard to the duration of the agency was an agreement by the principal to furnish the agent such number of machines as he could sell prior to a certain date, it was held that the agency terminated at that date so as to discharge the agent's sureties. Gundlach v. Fischer, 59 Ill. 172.

2. Foster v. Calhoun, Dudley (S. Car.) 75.
